curity for the debt, he may be discharged by the act of God or of the law. Petersd. on Bail 389, 390, 10 Law Libr. In Wood v. Mitchell, 6 T. R. 247, it was held that after a defendant had been convicted of felony and sentenced to transportation, the bail were entitled to their discharge.

704 *The bail in this case then had a good legal defence to the scire facias; and if he had availed himself of it regularly, by plea, he would have been discharged by verdict and judgment. He did not so avail himself of it. But he brought the fact on which it was founded fully to the notice of the court by petition, on the day after he demurred to the scire facias, and a year before the demurrer was overruled and judgment rendered against him. The petition was sworn to in open court, and the facts therein stated were admitted in writing to be true by the attorney for the commonwealth. It was, in effect, a case agreed between the plaintiff in error and the commonwealth. The facts being admitted, there was no issue to be tried and no necessity for a jury. Nothing remained to be done but for the court to pronounce the law upon the facts; as upon a special verdict or a case agreed. No objection was made by the court or the attorney for the commonwealth to the form in which the defence was made: It would have been made by plea, if either had so required. The petition did not formally pray for a discharge from the recognizance, but in effect it did so. The petitioner wanted all the relief to which the facts entitled him. The court might, and ought to have entered a judgment for an exoneretur, and discharged the petitioner from his recognizance. In the People v. Manning, cited supra, it was contended that relief in such cases should be obtained by motion, and not by plea. The court said, "Perhaps it might be obtained in that way; but this is no reason against pleading the defence, if it be a bar to the action." In the case of Wood v. Mitchell, cited supra, the proper course for obtaining relief was held to be, "to move for permission to enter an exoneretur on the bail piece."

Instead of discharging the petitioner from the recognizance on the facts agreed, the court directed the petition to be filed,

705 and the matter thereof continued *until the prisoner Drew should have had his trial on the indictment against him. The trial was accordingly had about a year thereafter, and the prisoner was acquitted. Instead of then discharging the petitioner from his recognizance, as he insisted, the court a few days thereafter overruled his demurrer to the scire facias, and rendered judgment against him for the penalty, with interest and costs. And when, during the same term, the petitioner moved the court to set aside the judgment, and grant him a rule against the commonwealth to show cause why he should not be exonerated and discharged from the penalty of said recognizance, by reason of the matters and things set forth in the petition, and in an addendum thereto, stating that the prisoner had been tried and acquitted, the court overruled the motion, and refused to allow such exoneration and discharge, either in whole or in part, assigning reasons for such refusal, which, in my opinion, are wholly inadequate. If the only ground for the motion had been the facts stated in the addendum to the petition, that the prisoner had been tried on the indictment and acquitted, it would strongly have addressed itself to the discretion of the court, and would have justified the exercise of that discretion in favor of the petitioner. "The object of a recognizance (said Ch. J. Marshall in The United States v. Feely, 1 Brock. R. 255) is not to enrich the treasury, but to combine the administration of criminal justice with the convenience of a person accused, but not found to be guilty. If the accused has, under circumstances which show that there was no design to evade the justice of his country, forfeited his recognizance, but repairs the default as much as is in his power by appearing at the succeeding term and submitting himself to the law, the real intention and object of 706 the recognizance *are effected, and no injury is done." In that case, a motion was made to stay proceedings on a scire facias which had been sued out by the United States against Feely and his security, on a recognizance conditioned for the appearance of Feely on the first day of the preceding term, to answer an indictment against him. Feely did not appear, and his default was recorded. He afterwards appeared, and was in custody when the motion aforesaid was made. The report does not show whether he offered any, and if any, what excuse for his non-appearance according to his recognizance. It was contended on the part of the United States, that the court possessed no power over the recognizance: that being forfeited, it had become a debt due to the United States, which was no more subject to the control of the court than a debt upon contract. It was admitted that in England the Court of exchequer exercises this power; but it was contended that the statutes of the 33 Hen. 8, ch. 39, and of 1 Geo. 2, expressly delegated it, and that from these statutes alone the authority of the Court of exchequer is derived. The chief justice reviewed the authorities, and came to the conclusion, that entirely independent of the statute, the courts of England exercised the power which the court in that case was required to exercise. And accordingly, all proceedings on the recognizance were ordered to be stayed until it should appear whether the accused should continue to submit himself to the law, or should attempt to evade the justice of the nation.

In the Commonwealth v. Craig, &c., 6 Rand. 731, there was a recognizance to appear and answer an indictment for felony. The accused failed to appear, and his default was recorded. A rule was then entered against him and his sureties, to show cause why a scire facias should not be

Digitized by Google

707 awarded against them. At *the following term the accused appeared, and was taken into custody. The sureties offered to prove that by reason of wounds received in a rencontre the accused had been rendered unable to attend according to his recognizance. The court adjourned to the General court, among others, the question, whether, if the above mentioned fact were proved, the sureties ought to be discharged from their recognizance? Brockenbrough, J., delivering the opinion of the court said, "It appears clear that the courts of oyer and terminer have the right, at any time before a recognizance is estreated, either to estreat or spare it. This is a discretion vested in them for the obvious purpose of remitting the obligation in a hard case. Estreats are, strictly speaking, not known in this state, but by analogy to the practice in England, the courts here have certainly the power to spare the recognizance, at least, at any time before the scire facias awarded. If the court of Montgomery (from which the question was adjourned) was satisfied, by competent evidence, that the recognizor was disabled by his wounds from attending the court, it is reasonable and just that his misfortune should not be visited upon him and his sureties; particularly as, by his appearance afterwards, the ends of public justice will be answered: and in such case, the court ought not to award any sci. fa. against them."

These cases show that our courts, at common law, possessed and exercised a power of discharging recognizance before the same were adjudged to be forfeited. The statute has extended this power, and provided that "when, in an action of scire facias on a recognizance, the penalty is adjudged to be forfeited, the court may, on application of a defendant, and in a county or corporation court, with the consent of the attorney prosecuting, remit the penalty, or any 708 part *of it, and render judgment, on such terms and conditions as it deems reasonable." Code, ch. 211, § 10, p. 785.

The motion of the plaintiff in error in this case, considering it as a mere application addressed to the discretion of the court, in the exercise of its common law or statutory power over the subject of recognizances, was entitled to much more favor than the application in either of the cases before cited from 1 Brockenbrough and 6 Randolph. For besides being sustained by all the grounds for relief which existed in those cases, it is sustained by this further and additional ground, that the plaintiff in error had a good legal defence to the scire facias, which he brought forward in due time, and would have made by plea if he had been required to do so, and had not been induced, by the course pursued by the court, to believe that the benefit of the defence would be secured to him, at least in the event that the accused should stand his trial upon the indictment.

But it is unnecessary in this case to decide, and I therefore express no opinion upon the question, which was much discussed in the argument, whether an appellate court may review a judgment of a court of original jurisdiction, given in the exercise of its discretionary power (whether of common law or under the statute) over the subject of recognizances. The plaintiff in error had a good legal defence, to the benefit of which he was entitled in some form or other. He might have made it by plea. But the facts on which it rested being admitted, there was no necessity for a plea, and he might and ought to have been discharged on petition or motion, as matter of right and not of mere discretion. The Circuit court having refused so to discharge him, and rendered judgment against him upon his recognizance, I am of opin-709 ion *that the judgment is erroneous and ought to be reversed, and a judgment rendered exonerating and discharging him from his recognizance, and dismissing the scire facias.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Moncure, J.

Judgment reversed.

---

710 Pifer v. The Commonwealth.

July Term, 1858, Lewisburg.

Criminal Law—Judgment—Additional Sentence at Subsequent Term.†—On a prosecution for misdemeanor, there is a verdict against the defendant for a fine, and the court enters up a judgment thereon for the fine and costs, and directs a capias ad audiendum against the defendant; and at a subsequent term sentences him to six months' imprisonment in the county jail.—The judgment for the fine and costs was final, and no further judgment could be rendered in the case. The judgment for the imprisonment was therefore error.

The plaintiff in error was indicted for a misdemeanor in the Circuit court of Harrison county. On his appearance he moved

---

For monographic note on Fines and Costs in Criminal Cases, see end of case.

†Amendment of Record.—In Price v. Com., 33 Gratt. 825, the court, quoting from and distinguishing the principal case, said that until the end of the term at which it is rendered, a judgment remains in the breast of the court, subject to revision, alteration, or rescission; no injustice or injury being done thereby to the defendant. And see foot-note to Price v. Com., 33 Gratt. 819, where the principal case is also cited.

See also, monographic note at end of case.

Trial for Misdemeanor—Presence of the Accused.—State v. Conkle, 16 W. Va. 748, and State v. Campbell, 42 W. Va. 249, 24 S. E. Rep. 876, cite the principal case as authorizing the proposition that, in misdemeanors, the personal presence of the defendant is not necessary at the trial.

Trial for Felony—Presence of the Accused.—But a person indicted for felony must be personally present during the trial; and such presence must be shown by the record. State v. Conners, 20 W. Va. 6, citing the principal case. See also, Jackson v. Com., 19 Gratt. 656, and foot-note: Hooker v. Com., 13 Gratt. 763, and foot-note.

Digitized by Google

to quash the indictment. His motion was overruled; and he put in the plea of not guilty. At the trial term he failed to appear in pursuance of his recognizance; but the trial proceeded in his absence, and the jury found him guilty, and assessed a fine of two hundred dollars against him. The court thereupon pronounced judgment against him for the fine and the costs of the prosecution; and on motion of the attorney for the commonwealth, a capias ad audiendum was awarded, returnable at a future day of the same term, to bring him before the court to show if any thing he had to say, why the court should not then proceed to pronounce further judgment against him according to law. The first process being returned not found, further process was awarded, returnable to a succeeding term. At some succeeding term the plaintiff in error having been arrested on a capias ad audiendum, came in his proper person and moved to quash the writ, and to be discharged from custody; which motion was overruled. He thereupon moved the court to set aside the verdict and judgment 711 thereon, *rendered at a former term and grant him a new trial. This motion was overruled, and the plaintiff in error filed an exception to the refusal to grant a new trial, and obtained a writ of error. The exception sets out an affidavit of the plaintiff in error, that he had employed counsel to defend him, but that the trial took place in the absence of himself and his counsel; and that if he had been present or properly represented by counsel at the trial, he could have proved that he was not at the place where the offence was charged to have been committed, at the time it was charged to have been so committed.

Robert Johnston, for the appellant.

The Attorney General, for the commonwealth.

ALLEN, P., after stating the case, proceeded:

There was no valid objection to the indictment; and if the motion for a new trial had been made in time or could have been entertained, the plaintiff in error did not show any good excuse for his failure to defend himself. The motions to quash the indictment and to grant a new trial, were properly overruled. The only question of interest in the case arises upon the motion to quash the capias ad audiendum, and upon the judgment of the court sentencing the plaintiff to imprisonment in the jail of the county for six months.

A judgment, whether in a civil or criminal case, is the sentence of the law pronounced by the proper tribunal, as the result of the proceedings instituted for the redress of injury or the punishment of offences. In civil cases, judgments are either interlocutory or final. Interlocutory, as where the right of the plaintiff is established by a failure to plead or a withdrawal of a plea, but where the damages are not ascertained, and for which the intervention of a jury is necessary. On the return of this enquiry, the right to recover 712 *having been established, final judgment is entered up. But whenever final judgment is entered after the writ of enquiry awarded and executed, or after a verdict on the merits, such final judgment finishes the proceedings, nothing more remains for the court to do, and execution may be done in pursuance of the judgment.

As the judgment is entire, and when a verdict has passed, is the sentence of the law upon the result of the proceedings instituted as aforesaid, it can make no difference whether that sentence is merely for the fine assessed by the verdict, or combined with it and superadded to it, is accompanied with imprisonment; which punishment the law affixes to the finding of the fact, when in the exercise of the legal discretion of the court it is deemed proper to impose it. It becomes when rendered an entire judgment upon the facts as found, and in the language of the books finishes the proceedings; and it would seem to follow that as the judgment is the determination of law upon the verdict or particular state of facts, it cannot be divided, and a part of the final sentence be pronounced at one term, and after having to that extent passed entirely from the control of the court, that it should at a subsequent period, take up the same finding and pronounce another sentence in addition to the one already entered upon the same state of facts. Neither judgment would be interlocutory. The judgment for the fine and costs would be final, and execution could issue and be collected; the defendant, if arrested on a capias pro fine, could at once discharge himself by payment; and he might be inclined to do so, to acquiesce in the judgment imposing a mere fine, but not willing to waive any legal objection he might have to the verdict, if imprisonment was to be superadded. If judgment for the fine may be imposed at one term and for imprisonment at another, either the 713 defendant would *be deprived of a legal right, or the court might be placed in the attitude of upholding a verdict as good for one purpose, and declaring it void for another.

In misdemeanors, the personal presence of the defendant is not necessary at the trial; a verdict and judgment for the fine may be found and rendered in his absence; and after the term he can neither move for a new trial or in arrest of judgment. But until final judgment he may so move. In England, in cases of misdemeanor, the jury merely passed upon the fact of guilt. The amount of the fine against him was fixed by the judgment of the court. In the case of the Queen v. Templeman, 1 Salk. R. 55, it was held that defendants may submit to a fine, though absent, if they have a clerk in court that will undertake for the fine. But where a man is to receive any corporal punishment, judgment cannot be given in his absence: and the reason given is, that there is a capias pro fine, but no process to take a man and put him on a pillory. Duke's Case, Id. 400, is to the same effect. In Rex v. Hann & Price, 3 Burr. R. 1786, the defendants, who had confessed themselves guilty of a misdemeanor, moved for a rule to dispense with their personal appearance, on the undertaking of their clerk in court to answer for their fines. It was agreed by court and counsel, that such motion was subject to the discretion of the court, either to grant or refuse it, where it was clear and certain that the punishment would not be corporal; yet it ought to be denied in every case where it was either probable or possible that the punishment would be corporal.

Digitized by Google

The reason assigned for the decisions shows that the court did not suppose that separate judgments could be given for the fine and for the corporal judgment. They could render judgment for the fine in the absence of the defendant, because he could be arrested on a capias pro fine, but they 714 could not render judgment *for corporal punishment, because there was no process to take a man and set him on a pillory. But if separate judgments could be rendered, the reason was not sound. They considered the judgment an entirety, and if rendered for the fine on the undertaking of the clerk, the whole subject had passed from the jurisdiction of the court, and there could be no sentence for corporal punishment. That there cannot be two judgments for one offence, is affirmed by Hawkins' Pleas of the Crown, ch. 48, § 23, p. 634, who says, that if a judgment of outlawry be voidable only and not void, and the defendant will not bring a writ of error, nor plead in a convenient time, proper execution shall be awarded against him, but no sentence can be pronounced, because the outlawry is a judgment, and no man shall have two judgments for one offence.

The Code, ch. 199, § 42, p. 752, directing that the term of confinement in the jail, of a person found guilty of a misdemeanor, where that punishment is prescribed, should be ascertained by the court, and the fine, except where it is otherwise provided, shall be assessed by the jury, so far as the term of confinement and the amount of the fine are not fixed by law, does not change the character of the judgment. It is still to be a final judgment upon the verdict finding the defendant guilty. The provision authorizing the court to ascertain the term of imprisonment and the jury the amount of fine, does not change or modify the form of the judgment. That remains the same, and is an entirety, the sentence of the law upon the facts found by the verdict.

The forms of writs and entries, as found in Robinson's Forms, p. 49 and 270, show the practice of the state. The writ, after setting out the verdict of guilty and fine assessed, commands the officer to arrest the defendant, &c. to show if any thing for himself he hath or knows to say, why 715 the court should not proceed *to pronounce judgment according to law? And the form of the entry of the judgment on such writ, is for the fine assessed, and that he be imprisoned, &c. There is no foundation for the argument that these forms were adopted before the change in our law requiring the jury, on a conviction for a misdemeanor, to assess the amount of the amercement. That alteration in our law was made as early as 1786, 12 Hen. Stat. 355.

The act in relation to gaming, 1 Rev. Code, p. 563, § 5, directed, that on a conviction for gaming the defendant should be committed to jail until he gave security for his good behavior for twelve months after the conviction. And by another section, p. 569, § 22, it was provided that whenever judgment should be rendered against any offender by virtue of said act, if he be not present, the court might award a capias pro fine, and also to bring the body of the offender to be dealt with as the law directs. If this were held to constitute an exception to what I suppose to be the general rule, and to authorize separate and successive judgments on the same verdict against the same defendant, the exception in the particular case, created by express enactment, would only prove the rule in all other cases. But I do not consider it to be an exception. The offence is punished by the judgment for the fine and costs. That is final, and may be executed, although the defendant is not brought in and recognized to be of good behavior. The court renders no further judgment on the verdict. The provision to recognize the defendant, is not part of the punishment for the offence of which he has been convicted, but is a measure of precaution, the exercise of preventive justice, resulting from the conviction of an offence, and final judgment thereon. After such judgment and the term ended the defendant has no day in court to allege any 716 thing against it. I do not *understand it to be a controverted point, that if no judgment has been pronounced for the fine, the defendant may, whenever he is brought in to hear judgment at the same or any succeeding term, move in arrest of judgment or for a new trial. The form of the writ which may be regarded in this particular as evidence of the law, indicates that when he is brought in to hear sentence for any punishment, pecuniary or corporal, as the result of the verdict of guilty, he may show cause against it. And if when no judgment is pronounced the cause shown may be sufficient to arrest the judgment or set aside the verdict, can the court, by pronouncing judgment for the amercement, preclude the defendant, when about to be sentenced to corporal punishment, from showing that the judgment should be arrested, or that the verdict should be set aside. Either this must be the result, or the judgment for the fine and costs must be regarded as merely interlocutory, and upon which no execution could issue. The judgment, however, in terms is final, so far as it goes; execution may have been issued and levied out of the property of the defendant. And one of the grounds upon which the practice has been vindicated is, that where in the judgment of the court corporal punishment should be added to the pecuniary fine, the party, by removing his property and concealing himself, may escape all punishment, if judgment for the fine and costs may be pronounced and execution issued thereon forthwith.

Digitized by Google

I think when the judgment was rendered for the fine and costs, it was final. There was an end of the proceedings, and nothing remained but to enforce the judgment by proper process. After the term, it could not be modified, or added to or altered by the court; and if erroneous, the defendant's remedy was in a court of error.

It follows, therefore, that the writ
717 of capias ad audiendum *was improvidently awarded, and the court erred in overruling the motion of the defendant to quash the same, and to discharge him from arrest, and in the proceeding to render further judgment against the defendant on said verdict, whereby he was sentenced to be imprisoned in the jail of said county, without bail or mainprize for the term of six months.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Allen, P.

Judgment reversed.

FINES AND COSTS IN CRIMINAL CASES.

I. Introductory.
A. Definition of and Limitation upon Fines.
B. Nature and Origin of Costs.
II. Practice Relating to Fines.
A. In General.
B. Powers of Courts in the Matter of Fines.
C. Joint Prosecutions.
D. Sheriff.
E. Payment and Remission of Fines.
III. Practice Relating to Costs.
A. In General.
B. Informer or Private Prosecutor.
C. Defendant.
IV. Costs in Civil Suits. (See monographic note on "Costs" appended to Jones v. Tatum, 19 Gratt. 720.)

I. INTRODUCTORY.

A. DEFINITION OF AND LIMITATION UPON FINES.

1. DEFINITION.—A fine signifieth a pecuniary punishment for an offence or a contempt committed against the sovereign. 1 Coke Litt. 126b.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LIMITATIONS.—Excessive bail ought not to be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted. Va. Const., art. 1, § 11; U. S. Const., art. VIII; Bullock v. Goodall, 3 Call 44; Jones' Case, 1 Call 555.

And a fine imposed on an officer who has committed no fault, for the benefit of one who has sustained no injury, is superlatively excessive, unconstitutional, oppressive and against conscience, and a court of equity should give relief. Goodall v. Bullock, Wythe's Reports 328.

B. NATURE AND ORIGIN OF COSTS.

1. NATURE.—The general principle is, that costs are considered as an appendage to the judgment, rather than a part of the judgment itself; that they are considered, in some sense, as damages, and are always entered, in effect, "as an increase of damages by the court." McRea v. Brown, 2 Munf. 46.

It is expressly provided by statute, Va. Code 1887, § 3547, that the law of costs shall not be interpreted as penal laws.

2. ORIGIN.—At common law no costs were allowed, the amercement of the vanquished party being his only punishment. They were first allowed, eo nomine, by the statute of Gloucester, 6 Edw. 1, to plaintiffs, and subsequently, 23 Hen. VIII, to the defendant, in like manner as the plaintiff would have had them if he had recovered. 3 Bl. Com. 399; 4 Min. Inst. (3d Ed.) 969.

For general statutory provisions in Virginia, see Va. Code 1887, ch. 173.

II. PRACTICE RELATING TO FINES.

A. IN GENERAL.

Variance between Penalty and Verdict—Effect.—Where the penalty is fine and imprisonment, and the jury in a verdict of guilty, fail to assess the fine, the prisoner may, nevertheless, be imprisoned. Com. v. Frye, 1 Va. Cas. 19.

Constitutionality of a Statute Permitting Oyster Inspectors to Impose Fines.—Va. Code 1887, § 2134, as amended by Acts 1894, p. 778, requiring oyster inspectors to collect "all fines, taxes and all sums due, or would be due," on oyster ground rented, or used and not rented, and conferring "the same powers to collect the same which a county treasurer has for the collection of taxes," and also giving said inspectors power to remove enough oysters to pay the same, is not unconstitutional, as allowing the inspector to impose fines, as the fine is imposed by the statute itself. Thomas v. Rowe (Va.), 22 S. E. Rep. 157.

Municipal Corporations—Ordinances—Power to Fine Does Not Include Commitment.—A power conferred on a muncipal corporation to adopt ordinances and to enforce violations thereof by prescribed fines, does not confer the power of imprisonment before trial for a violation of the ordinance, nor after trial for failure to pay the fines. Bolton v. Vellines, 94 Va. 393, 26 S. E. Rep. 847.

Retroactive Effect of Statute Relating to Gaming Laws.—A statute enacting "that in all recoveries hereafter had for the violations of the gaming laws, the fee recovered shall be ten dollars for the commonwealth's attorney, and the sum of thirty dollars shall be paid to the literary fund in lieu of the sum as at present provided," has no application whatever to offences committed before its passage, but such offences remain liable to prosecution and punishment under the pre-existing law, in the same manner as if the statute had never been passed. Pitman v. Com., 2 Rob. 800.

Trial—Procedure—Jury Find the Verdict, and the Court Renders Judgment Accordingly.—On an indictment charging that the defendant did aid, abet and assist a certain male slave to escape from his owner, it is a proper procedure for the jury to find the defendant guilty, ascertain the term of his imprisonment, and assess his fine, and then for the court to render judgment according to verdict. House v. Com., 8 Leigh 755. See, in this connection, the case of Harvey v. Com., 23 Gratt. 941, in which the court, p. 948, affirms the above procedure to be correct even in the absence of statute so providing.

Judgment—How Fieri Facias Should Run.—A writ of fieri facias upon a judgment of a circuit court for a fine against a person convicted of a misdemeanor ought to run against goods and chattels and real estate. Gill v. State, 39 W. Va. 479, 20 S. E. Rep. 568.

Digitized by Google

Judgment—Damages Where Fine or Amercement is Imposed.—The statute allowing damages on affirmance (Acts of 1830-31, ch. 11, § 32; Suppl. to R. C. p. 149) does not apply to the affirmance of a judgment imposing an amercement or fine; the amercement or fine not being a debt or damages, within the meaning of that act. But though the judgment of affirmance in such case award damages according to law for retarding the execution, yet as no specific damages are thereby adjudged, and the law gives none, the error is merely formal, and the appellate court will disregard it. Abrahams v. Com., 1 Rob. 675.

Judgment—Contempt—Appeal.—An appeal may be taken to the court of appeals from a judgment of the circuit court imposing a fine upon a person for a contempt of the court, in aiding to obstruct the execution of a decree of the court. Wells v. Com., 21 Gratt. 500.

Judgment Confessed for Fine—Evidence in Civil Action.—In Virginia, where the defendant on an indictment for a misdemeanor, without pleading, confesses a judgment for a specific sum as a fine, the record is not evidence in a civil action for the same cause, to prove the fact. Nor is it evidence to enhance the damages. Honaker v. Howe, 19 Gratt. 50.

B. POWER OF COURTS IN THE MATTER OF FINES.

When the Court Assesses Fine.—In the courts of the United States, the court and not the jury should assess the fine. U. S. v. Mundel, 6 Call 245. See Va. Code 1887, § 3904.

Power of a Court to Add Imprisonment to a Verdict Laying a Fine.—Where a person is indicted for feloniously and maliciously cutting, striking, wounding, etc., with intent to maim, disfigure, disable and kill, the indictment charging that the accused made the assault feloniously and maliciously, cutting, etc., and the jury find "the prisoner not guilty of the malicious cutting and wounding as charged in the within indictment, but guilty of an assault and battery as charged in the within indictment, and assess his fine at certain figures," it was held proper for the jury to assess a pecuniary fine upon the prisoner but not proper to add the punishment of imprisonment. But upon such conviction the court may sentence the prisoner to be imprisoned in the county jail, in addition to the pecuniary fine. Canada v. Com., 22 Gratt. 899.

When a Court Cannot Impose a Fine in Addition to Confinement in the Penitentiary.—Where a verdict is rendered on an indictment for an injury done with intent to maim, etc., under W. Va. Code 1899, ch. 144, § 9, finding the defendant not guilty of doing an act maliciously, but guilty of unlawfully doing an act charged, the court cannot, under the statute, sentence the prisoner to confinement in the penitentiary, and also impose a fine. State v. Mooney, 27 W. Va. 546.

Judgment Set Aside at Same Term—Prisoner Absent.—Where upon a trial for murder, the jury finds the prisoner not guilty of the murder, but guilty of involuntary manslaughter, and assesses upon him a fine, and the court thereupon enters a judgment discharging him, and then at the same term of the court sets aside the judgment, and enters a judgment against him for the fine, and a certain term of imprisonment, and directs him to be arrested and committed, it is proper, although the prisoner was not present in court at the time the second judgment was entered. Price v. Com., 33 Gratt. 819.

But on a prosecution for a misdemeanor, if there is a verdict against the defendant for a fine, and the court enters up a judgment thereon for fine and costs, and directs a capias ad audiendum against the defendant, the judgment for the fine and costs is final, and no further judgment can be rendered in the case, and therefore a sentence, at a subsequent term, to imprisonment in the county jail, is erroneous. Pifer v. Com., 14 Gratt. 710; Price v. Com., 33 Gratt. 819; Barnes' Case, 92 Va. 794, 23 S. E. Rep. 784.

Indictment—Amendment during Absence of Prisoner—Arrest.—Where defendants are indicted jointly for a misdemeanor, and having been duly summoned, fail to appear, the court may, in their absence, amend the indictment, and order their arrest and imprisonment for non-payment of a fine before a fieri facias has been issued. Shiflett v. Com., 90 Va. 386, 18 S. E. Rep. 838.

Superior Courts—Separation of Punishments.—Where an offence is punishable with fine and imprisonment, a superior court may render judgment for the fine only. Com. v. Crump, 1 Va. Cas. 171.

Justices' Court—Departure from Statutory Authority.—In the construction of Va. Code 1887, § 3796, regarding Sabbath violation, the question arose, in Ex parte Marx, 86 Va. 40, 9 S. E. Rep. 475, as to whether upon a fine being imposed by a justice of the peace, and defendant's refusal to pay same, the justice's committal of the defendant to jail, "for one year unless the fine be sooner paid," was valid. Held, that the commitment was a departure from the terms of the statute, from which the justice derived his authority, the letter whereof must be strictly followed, and by which no particular term of imprisonment is prescribed, and was therefore defective and invalid. Jones' Case, 20 Gratt. 848.

C. JOINT PROSECUTIONS.

Joint Indictment—Separate Fines.—Two or more persons may be jointly indicted or proceeded against, by information, for retailing ardent spirits without a license, and upon their conviction there should be a separate fine against each for a specified sum. Com. v. Harris, 7 Gratt. 600.

And in conformity to this principle, it is held that, a husband and wife may be jointly indicted for a single act of retailing ardent spirits; but in such case if they are convicted, a fine must be assessed, and a judgment rendered against each separately. Com. v. Hamor, 8 Gratt. 698.

And in an indictment for assault against several, a joint award of one fine aginst all, is erroneous; it should be several against each defendant. Jones v. Com., 1 Call 555.

Therefore, it is error to assess joint fines against two defendants, although such assessment be against husband and wife and for the same offence. Com. v. Ray, 1 Va. Cas. 262.

But where there is an indictment against two or more persons for an assault, and they plead severally, and there is a verdict rendered finding them guilty, and assessing several fines on each, an attorney's fee is not to be taxed against each, but only one attorney's fee against all the defendants. Com. v. Sprinkles, 4 Leigh 650.

D. SHERIFF.

Execution—Omission to Make Return—Fine.—Not more than one fine can legally be imposed on the sheriff, or other officer, for failing to return one execution. Tomkies v. Downman, 6 Munf. 557.

Digitized by Google

But a sheriff neglecting to return an execution, at the request of the plaintiff, is not liable to a fine. Bullock v. Goodall, 3 Call 44.

Execution—Judgment by Default.—A judgment by default against a sheriff, for fines collected upon executions in behalf of the commonwealth, may be sustained, although his receipt for the executions be not inserted in the record. Segouine v. Auditor, 4 Munf. 398. See, in this connection, Va. Code 1887, § 721.

Execution—Judgment for Aggregate Receipts.—A notice that a motion will be made for a judgment against a sheriff, for the amount of his receipt for sundry executions for fines, "as appears by the copy of said receipt," is sufficient, without mentioning the aggregate sum due, the separate amount of each execution, or the time when delivered to the sheriff. And the judgment thereupon, for the aggregate sum due, without distinguishing the amount of each execution, will be sustained, if conformable to law in other respects. Segouine v. Auditor, 4 Munf. 398. See, in this connection, Va. Code 1887, § 721.

E. PAYMENT AND REMISSION OF FINES.

1. PAYMENT.

Statutes Imposing Fines—To Whom Payable—How Recoverable.—Where any statute imposes a fine, unless it be otherwise expressly provided, or would be inconsistent with the manifest intention of the general assembly, it shall be to the commonwealth and recoverable by presentment, indictment, or information. Where a fine without corporal punishment is prescribed, the same may be recovered, if limited to an amount not exceeding twenty dollars, by warrant, and if not so limited, by action of debt, or action on the case, or by motion. The proceeding shall be in the name of the commonwealth. Va. Code 1887, § 712; Com. v. Collins, 9 Leigh 666.

Married Woman—Fieri Facias—Separate Estate.—A fieri facias upon a judgment of a circuit court for a fine against a married woman convicted of a misdemeanor may be levied upon her separate estate, real or personal. Gill v. State, 39 W. Va. 479, 20 S. E. Rep. 568. See, in this connection, W. Va. Code 1899, ch. 35, § 5.

When Fine Can Be Paid in Coupons.—Fines imposed for a violation of law are embraced in the act of 1871 (Va. Code 1887, ch. 22), known as the funding act, and a person upon whom such a fine is imposed, may discharge it by the over-due coupons taken from the bonds mentioned in said acts. Clarke v. Tyler, 30 Gratt. 134; Williamson v. Massey, 33 Gratt. 249. See Va. Code 1887, § 406.

Sabbath Violation—Fine—How Recovered.—Va. Code 1887, § 3799, makes punishable as an offence the violation of the Sabbath, and prescribes the penalty. Upon a breach of this statute the question arose as to whether the fine under such section could be imposed by a justice of the peace, under Va. Code 1887, § 2939, relating to the jurisdiction of justices of the peace. The court held that such a fine is recoverable before a justice of the peace, and by a civil warrant; and that the constitutional right to trial by jury do not extend to such offence. Ex parte Marx, 86 Va. 40, 9 S. E. Rep. 475. See Va. Code 1887, § 717.

Mandamus—Fines Collected by Sheriff or Sergeant—Auditor.—Fines collected by the sheriffs of counties, or the sergeants of cities or towns, are to be paid by him to the treasurer of his county, city, or town, and not to the auditor of accounts of the state; and thereupon a mandamus will not lie at the suit of a sheriff or sergeant, to compel the auditor to receive coupons which have been paid to him in the discharge of a fine. Va. Code 1887, § 736. Tyler v. Taylor, 29 Gratt. 765.

Insolvent Debtor's Act Does Not Embrace Fines for Misdemeanors.—In the absence of express statutory provision a person convicted of a misdemeanor, and committed until he shall pay the fine against him, cannot discharge himself therefrom, under an act made and provided for the relief of insolvent debtors. Com. v. Chapman, 1 Va. Cas. 138. See also, Quinling v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 494.

2. REMISSION.

Power of Executive to Remit Fines.—The governor shall not remit in whole or in part, any fine or amercement assessed or imposed by any court of record, court-martial, or other authority having jurisdiction to assess or impose the same, except that whenever a judgment shall have been rendered against any person for a contempt of court, other than a non-performance of or disobedience to some order, decree, or judgment, the governor shall have power to pardon the offence and remit the punishment, whether corporal or pecuniary, either in whole or in part. Va. Code 1887, §§ 4199-4200; Wilkerson v. Allan, 23 Gratt. 10.

Equitable Relief against Fines.—A court of equity will relieve against a fine on the same principles upon which it relieves against forfeitures and penalties. Goodall v. Bullock, Wythe's Reports, 328.

III. PRACTICE RELATING TO COSTS.

A. IN GENERAL.

Limitation upon Jury's Discretion in Laying Fines.—Under a statute it was expressly declared that in actions for assault and battery, if the jury should find under a certain sum, the plaintiff should not recover any costs. Construing this provision in Bills v. Harris, 2 Va. Cas. 26 (1815), the court held that this act limited the discretion of the jury, and they had no right to give costs where the law said they should not be given.

A State, City, or Town Is Not Liable for Costs.—W. Va. Code 1899, ch. 161, § 13 provides that in no instance, in criminal cases, shall there be a judgment against the state for costs. And in prosecutions for the violation of public ordinances of cities, towns and villages, costs are not recoverable against such cities, towns or villages. City of Charleston v. Beller, 45 W. Va. 44, 30 S. E. Rep. 152. See Va. Code 1887, § 3556.

B. INFORMER OR PRIVATE PROSECUTOR.

Informer—Liability for Costs When a Volunteer.—A volunteer informer ought to be made a prosecutor, and liable for costs in case of failure; but one who is compelled to be an informer, cannot be considered a prosecutor. Wortham v. Com., 5 Rand. 669; Com. v. Dove, 2 Va. Cas. 29.

When, therefore, in a prosecution for a misdemeanor, at the instance of a voluntary prosecutor, the defendant files a plea in abatement, that one of the grand jurors who found the indictment was not a freeholder, and the issue made upon that plea is found for the defendant, and the indictment quashed, the court should give judgment for the costs against the prosecutor. Com. v. St. Clair, 1 Gratt. 556.

And on a trial for a misdemeanor, if the jury find for the defendant, the voluntary informer is liable for the costs, and after verdict the prosecutor cannot show by parol evidence that he was called on by the grand jury, and did not voluntarily give the information. Com. v. Dove, 2 Va. Cas. 29.

Digitized by Google

Informer—Bastardy Process—Liability for Costs.—Where one is accused of being the father of a bastard child, and upon being tried for same, is discharged, he shall recover his costs against the party in whose name the proceedings are had. W. Va. Code 1899, ch. 80, § 4; Swisher v. Malone, 31 W. Va. 442, 7 S. E. Rep. 439; Tennant v. Brookover, 12 W. Va. 337; Barbour Co. Court v. O'Neal, 42 W. Va. 295, 26 S. E. Rep. 182.

Informer—Inability to Pay Costs—Effect on Prosecution.—Under Va. Code 1887, § 3991, regulating criminal proceedings against persons, the prosecutor's insolvency or inability to pay costs is, ordinarily, good cause for ruling him to find security for such payment; but if, in the opinion of the court, public justice requires that the prosecution should proceed, it may refuse to dismiss the indictment, though the prosecutor be insolvent, and security for costs be not given. Com. v. Hill, 9 Leigh 601.

Informer—Witness—Costs.—On an indictment for an assault and battery on the voluntary information of the person assaulted, the informer and prosecutor, being the only witness for the prosecution, is a competent witness, though liable for costs in case defendant is acquitted. Gilliam v. Commonwealth, 4 Leigh 688.

And a prosecutor in an information for assault and battery, who is liable for the costs, is a competent witness for the commonwealth. Baker v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 353.

C. DEFENDANT.

1. LIABILITY FOR FEES AND COSTS.—The Code of 1849, ch. 206, § 10. Va. Code 1887, § 4049, gives to all jurors sitting in criminal cases compensation at one dollar for each day he attends on such jury, and the court, upon the prisoner's conviction, will direct the clerk to include the allowance in the bill of costs. Souther v. Com., 7 Gratt. 673.

But Va. Code 1887, § 4199, expressly declares that the prisoner shall only be subjected to such costs as the commonwealth is bound to pay; and therefore does not embrace the fees of the clerk, sheriff, or attorney for commonwealth, and in the absence of express provision, they cannot be imposed upon the prisoner. Anglea v. Com., 10 Gratt. 696.

As held by JUDGE SAMUELS in Finch v. Com., 14 Gratt. 643, a prisoner who is convicted of a felony, and obtains a writ of error to the court of appeals, where the judgment is affirmed, is not responsible for the fees of the clerk or the attorney general.

But in Abraham's Case, 1 Rob. 675, it was declared that a judgment in a county or corporation court, against a master for permitting a slave to go at large and hire himself out contrary to law, is properly rendered for the costs of the prosecution, including jail fees, as well as for the fine.

2. ENFORCEMENT AND REMISSION OF FINES.

Judgment for Costs—How Enforced.—The payment of costs adjudged against the defendant in criminal proceedings, may be enforced by execution against his property as in other cases; and the execution must issue from the court in which the proceedings are had, and judgment rendered. Anglea v. Com., 10 Gratt. 706.

Capias Pro Fine.—A capias pro fine cannot issue for costs alone. Com. v. Webster, 8 Gratt. 707.

But in Virginia the costs are a part of the fine, and the defendant, being taken in a capias pro fine, can only be released by paying the costs as well as the fine. Com. v. Fields, 33 Gratt. 291.

As held by LOMAX, J., in Re Webster, 8 Gratt. 702, a party who is imprisoned upon a capias pro fine for a fine and costs, can only obtain his discharge from imprisonment by paying the fine and costs. But see statutory limitation as to term of imprisonment, Va. Code 1887, § 4071. Also, in this connection, see Quinling v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 494.

Writ—When Improper to Issue for Costs Alone.—Where there is a judgment in favor of the commonwealth for a fine and costs of prosecution, the writ may issue for the fine and the costs; but where the judgment is for costs without a fine, the writ is not a proper process to enforce the judgment. In re Webster, 8 Gratt. 702.

Executive Pardon Does Not Release Costs.—Where a person is convicted and sentenced for a felony or misdemeanor, and is afterwards pardoned by the executive, which pardon releases him from all fines, penalties and forfeitures incurred by the conviction and sentence, and previous to the pardon an execution has been issued for the costs incurred in his prosecution by the commonwealth, the pardon does not release him from these costs. Anglea v. Com., 10 Gratt. 696; Wilkerson v. Allan, 23 Gratt. 10. See Va. Code 1887, §§ 4199, 4200; W. Va. Code 1899, ch. 14, § 22.

IV. COSTS IN CIVIL SUITS.

See monographic note on "Costs" appended to Jones v. Tatum, 19 Gratt. 720.

Digitized by Google

INDEX.

ACTIONS.

1. In indebitatus assumpsit for work and labor, if there was a special contract, which remains in full force, fixing the price of the work, plaintiffs have no right to prove the value of the work, and can only recover the contract price.
Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Polly, Woods & Co., 447

2. In an action for work and labor by a contractor on a rail road against the company, under a special contract which provides that the final estimate of the engineer shall be conclusive upon the parties, if the plaintiff proves that the final estimate made by the engineer was fraudulently made, he may recover without proving further that he was unable to procure such final estimate as is required by the contract after demand on the company, or other proper exertions on his part. Idem, 447

3. If in an action for work and labor by a contractor on a rail road against the company, under a special contract which provides that upon receiving the full amount of the final estimate made out agreeably to the terms of the contract, he shall give a release under seal from all claims or demands whatsoever, growing out of the said contract; the giving such release is a condition precedent to his recovery, if the final estimate has been properly made out; but not if the final estimate was fraudulently made. Idem, 447

4. If the rail road company has paid to the contractor the whole amount of the final estimate, the contractor cannot maintain an action for the work done under the contract, unless he can prove that there was fraud or intentional misconduct on the part of the engineer making the estimate. Idem, 447

ADMINISTRATION.

Administration granted where deceased lived and died out of the state, and left no estate within it, is not void.
Andrews v. Avory & als., 229

ADVERSARY POSSESSION.

When the possessor of land has acknowledged a title in the claimant, then the possession will not be deemed adverse; and whenever the act of the possessor acknowledges a right in the claimant, the statute of limitations will not operate, because such acknowledgment deduced from circumstances negatives the idea of adverse possession.
Erskine's ex'ors v. North & als., 60

APPELLATE COURTS.

1. An abstract of a patent certified by the register, is prima facie evidence in the appellate court, that such a grant was issued, though the case came up on demurrer to evidence.
Atkins & als. v. Lewis & als., 30

2. If exceptions to an answer are not well founded, it is not ground to reverse a decree, that they were not set down to be argued, but the cause was heard and decided without passing upon them.
Goddin v. Vaughn's ex'x & als., 102

3. The appellate court cannot reverse the judgment for the refusal of the court to send the jury to view the premises, unless it appears from the record that a view was necessary to a just decision.
Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Polly, Woods & Co., 447

5. Where, upon the motion of the prisoner, the venue is changed, and the record sent by the clerk from whence the trial is removed to the court to which it is sent, does not show that the indictment was found by the grand jury; but the prisoner is tried and convicted; upon a writ of error to the Court of appeals, that court may direct a certiorari to the court whence the case was sent, for a better record: and if it appears from the record returned that the indictment was found by the grand jury, the judgment will not be reversed.
Shifflet's Case, 652

6. In such case, if it appears from the record returned with the certiorari, that the prisoner had appeared, and that 720 the *court had on his motion, quashed one of the counts in the indictment; though on his trial he pleaded to the whole indictment, and was tried on the count which was quashed as well as the others, yet this is not cause for reversing the judgment. Idem, 652

7. When in an indictment for felony, the court will quash a faulty count, though it may be good as a count for a misdemeanor. See Criminal Jurisdiction and Proceedings, No. 9, and Scott's Case, 687

ARDENT SPIRITS.

See Indictments, No. 5, and Boyle's Case, 674

ATTACHMENTS.

The estimates of work done by a contractor for a rail road company are made up to the 20th of each month, when they are considered due, though not paid for some days after. As the price of the work done by the contractor after the 20th may be forfeited to the company for several causes, before the 20th of the next month, no debt is due from the company to the contractor until the 20th arrives: and therefore an attachment being served on the company on the 14th of the month, there is nothing then in its hands due to the contractor, which may be attached, though in fact no forfeiture occurs, and on the following 20th of the month the amount of the estimate may be due.

Digitized by Google

Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Gallahue's adm'rs, 563

BONDS.

The proviso in the act of February 28, 1828, Sup. Rev. Code 272, § 1, limiting actions on indemnifying bonds to seven years, does not apply to an action on a bond executed prior to the passage of that act.

Duval, adm'r &c. v. Malone & al., 24

BURGLARY.

1. An entry into a dwelling-house in the day time, through a door that was so closed that it came within the casing, and to open which required some degree of force, constitutes in law a breaking; though there was no fastening of any other kind to the door. Finch's Case, 643

2. The word "break," in the Code, ch. 192, § 12, p. 728, is borrowed from the law in regard to burglary, and is to be understood as it would be when used in a charge of burglary. Idem, 643

CERTIORARI.

To what court a certiorari may be sent from the Court of appeals. See Appellate Courts, No. 5, and Shifflet's Case, 652

COLLATERAL INHERITANCES.

The act of March 2, 1854, § 15, which imposes a tax upon collateral inheritances, is within the constitutional powers of the general assembly, and is still in force.

Eyre v. Jacob, sheriff, 422

COMMISSIONERS IN CHANCERY—To sell land.

1. Commissioners appointed by a court of equity to sell lands, make the sale and take bonds for the purchase money, payable to themselves; and before the money is paid, the commissioners are removed and others are appointed. These last may sue at law on the bonds in the names of the first, to whom the bonds were made payable.

Clarksons v. Doddridge & al., 42

2. Though it is usual to state in the declaration or by endorsement thereon, or on the writ, that the action is brought for the benefit of the parties entitled, yet this is not essential. And if the defendants have any doubt whether the suit is brought for the benefit of the last commissioners, they can by motion have a rule upon them to avow and prosecute or disavow and dismiss the action. Idem, 42

CONDITIONS.

See Actions, No. 2, 3, and
Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Polly, Woods & Co., 447

CONFESSIONS.

1. A young man living in the jailer's family, and who occasionally, in the absence of the jailer, attended on the prisoners and kept the keys of the jail, is not a person in authority, whose threat or promise will exclude the confessions of a prisoner in the jail awaiting his trial.

Shifflet's Case, 652

721 *2. What is not an inducement to a prisoner to make a confession.

Idem, 652

CONTRACTS.

1. The agreement between a rail road company and a contractor provides: And whereas the above work must be inspected and received, it is hereby agreed that the engineer of the company or some one appointed by him, shall be the inspector of said work, shall determine when this contract is complied with according to its just and fair interpretation, and the amount of the same, and all disputes and difficulties arising under the same; and his decision shall be obligatory and conclusive between the parties to this contract, without further recourse of appeal: held:

1st. The decision of the engineer is conclusive upon the parties: and this in relation to the price of a species of excavation not mentioned in the specifications.

2d. Such a contract is legal and binding on the parties.

Condon v. South Side R. R. Co., 302

2. In such a contract, if it is proved that the final estimate has been fraudulently made out, the contractor may recover the value of the work.

Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Polly, Woods & Co., 447

3. Such a contract provides, that upon receipt of the final estimate, the contractor shall give a release under seal from all claims or demands whatever growing out of said contract. In an action by the contractor against the company for work and labor, if he proves that the final estimates were fraudulently made out, he may recover without having executed the release.

Idem, 447

CONVERSION.

H devises a tract of land and grist mill thereon, to his wife during widowhood; and directs that at her death or marriage the same shall be sold; but not until his youngest child comes of age; and the proceeds to be divided equally among all his children. There were four children, the youngest of whom, J, came of age in 1839. A daughter E married L in 1836, who died in 1842; E afterwards married S and died in 1856, S surviving her. T died an infant intestate and unmarried before 1839. M died in 1840, and bequeathed her share to E. L during his marriage with E, and S as guardian or agent of J, rented out the land, and L took one-third of the rents, paid one-third to M till her death, when he took two-thirds, and S as guardian or agent of J took one-third. After the death of L, E and S rented out the land and took the rents in the same way; and after E married S he rented it out and took the rents in the same way until 1850, when W was appointed the agent of J, and took his share of the rents. E left one child by L and two by S. J seems to have lived out of the state. S was the administrator of E, and S S was administrator of T, and administrator de bonis non of M: held:

Digitized by Google

1st. The land and mill is to be considered as money, and to pass as such to and from the legatees of H.

Harcum's adm'r & als. v. Hudnall, 369

2d. Though the legatees might have elected to take the same as land, yet such an intention must have been clearly manifested; and all the parties interested in the property must have united in the election. Idem, 369

3d. The renting out of the land and taking the rents by L during his life, is not sufficient evidence of an election on his part to take the land. Idem, 369

4th. M having in her will spoken of a bill about to be filed for the sale of the land, and having given either the land or the proceeds of sale to E, it is evident she had not elected to take the land as land; and therefore no election by L could change the character of the bequest. Idem, 369

5th. The property having been directed to be sold when J came of age, it will be considered as money from that period: And the interest which E took under her father's will being an interest in money, the proceeds of the sale of the property whenever it should be made, at her death nothing passed to her children as her heirs at law. Idem, 369

6th. M having lived until J came of age, her bequest to E was a bequest of money, the proceeds of the sale of the land. Idem, 369

7th. T having died before J came of age, and therefore before the time fixed for the sale of the property, quære, if his interest passed as real estate to his heirs, or as money to his administrator. Idem, 369

8th. If T's interest descended to his heirs, they took it subject to be converted into money by a sale, just as he held it. Idem, 369

9th. The interest of E was not an estate in the premises, but a mere chose in action, a right to have a sale of the 722 property, *and to receive her two-thirds of the proceeds. The acts of her first husband L in renting out the land and receiving the rents, was not a reduction of the chose in action into possession; and therefore on his death it survived to E; and on her second marriage and death, her second husband is entitled to it as her administrator. Idem, 369

10th. The rents of the property before the sale belonged to the persons who were entitled to the principal subject, and would go to them in common with the moneys arising from the sale, as personal property. And those received by L in his lifetime were thus reduced into his possession, and became his absolute property. Idem, 369

CONVEYANCES.

1. Upon a bill by a creditor to subject land in the hands of the executors of the purchaser, they having in their answer stated that he has always claimed under the title bond of his vendor, a conveyance cannot be presumed.

Erskine's ex'ors v. North & als., 60

2. When a conveyance of the legal title will be presumed in favor of a party in possession under a complete equitable title from the patentee, to prevent a forfeiture under the act of February 27, 1835, in relation to delinquent lands. See Presumptions, No. 4, and

Hale v. Marshall, 489

CONVEYANCES—Fraudulent.

1. A debtor cannot divide his property into parcels, and protect himself in the enjoyment of one parcel, by giving up the other; he cannot require his creditors to accept a part and give up the residue: and when he attempts it, the deed is fraudulent and void.

Quarles & als. v. Kerr & als., 48

2. Though a deed is not fraudulent by reason of a postponement of the time of sale and the reserving the property to the grantor in the meantime, yet where the time of sale may be hastened or postponed by the grantor, so as to enable him to defeat any creditor who should attempt to subject the interest in the property reserved to the grantor, to the payment of his debt, the deed is fraudulent. Idem, 48

3. The including in such deed perishable property which must be consumed or become worthless before the time fixed for the sale, though it may not of itself be sufficient to set aside the deed as fraudulent, yet it is a fact indicative of a fraudulent intent. Idem, 48

CORPORATIONS.

1. The president and acting manager of a private corporation is trustee in a deed of marriage settlement; and as trustee he sells the trust property, in violation of his duty as trustee, and purchases a part of it for the corporation.—The corporation is a participator in the violation of the trust, and is liable therefor.

Barksdale & als. v. Finney & als., 338

2. The cestuis que trust having sued the trustee for an account of the trust subject, and made the corporation a party; and having taken a decree against the trustee for the amount of the purchase money for which the trust property sold, which proves

Digitized by Google

unavailing, may then pursue the property in the hands of the corporation, if it is still in its possession, or have a decree against the corporation for the price at which it was purchased. Idem, 338

3. H owns or controls all the stock of the B corporation, and he contracts with third persons to obtain a charter for another corporation, of which they shall be the corporators, and to transfer to the new corporation all the stock, and to convey all the real estate and other property (except slaves) of B, as also some real estate of his own. The charter is obtained and the stock is transferred, but there is no conveyance of the real estate: but the new corporation takes possession of it, and holds it as its own.—The new corporation is the successor of B, and takes the property subject to pay the debts of the corporation of B, to the value of the property received.

Idem, 338

4. The charter of B made its stock personal estate; but provided that its real estate should only be conveyed as other real estate.—The legal title could only pass by deed from B. Idem, 338

5. Where the stock of a corporation is declared to be personal estate, and the certificates are made transferable on the books of the corporation; and it is authorized to acquire real estate; such estate vested in it as a corporation, and not as individual shareholders. The certificate of stock is evidence of the right of the owner to his proportion of the profits or dividends, and on the expiration of the charter, to his proportion of the assets remaining after the payment of the debts; and every purchaser of the stock takes it subject to the same liabilities. Idem, 338

723 *6. A creditor of a corporation, the whole stock and property of which has been transferred to its successor, which takes it subject to the debts of the first corporation, and which it is ample to pay, is not bound to convene all the creditors before the court, but may prosecute his own claim alone. Idem, 338

7. A creditor of the corporation B prosecuting his claim against the successor to B, is not bound to make the judgment creditors of H, to whom the successor of B has contracted to pay an annual rent, a party to the suit. Idem, 338

COSTS.

A prisoner convicted of felony, and obtaining a writ of error to the Court of appeals, where it is affirmed, is not responsible for the fees of the clerk or the attorney general. See Code, ch. 211, § 10, 11, p. 782. Finch's Case, 643

CRIMINAL JURISDICTION AND PROCEEDINGS.

1. A discharge by an examining court of a prisoner committed on a charge of felony, is not a bar to another prosecution for the same offence, except when the record shows that the discharge was upon an examination of the facts charged.

McCann's Case, 570

2. Under a common law indictment for murder, the prisoner may be found guilty of murder in the first or second degree or manslaughter. Livingston's Case, 592

3. Quære: If a prisoner has been convicted of murder in the second degree or manslaughter, and obtains a new trial, whether he can be put upon his trial again for a higher offence than that of which he has been convicted. Idem, 592

4. Upon a trial for homicide, it is competent for the commonwealth to introduce physicians or surgeons to give their opinions on a state of facts testified to by themselves or other witnesses, in respect to a wound or beating proved to have been inflicted on the deceased, as to whether such wound or beating would be a cause adequate to produce the death, or was the actual cause of the death. Idem, 592

5. In such case the questions put and the answers given should be so put and given as not to elicit or express an opinion by the physician or surgeon on the credit of the witnesses or the truth of the facts testified to. Idem, 592

6. If a party be dissatisfied with an instruction, he ought to state his objection at the time. If no objection be made to an instruction at the time it is given, and no exception taken, or the point saved; but objection be made for the first time, after verdict, and in the form of a motion to set it aside; the court will consider whether, under all the circumstances, the party has been prejudiced by the instruction; and if of opinion that a just verdict has been rendered, according to the law and the evidence, will not set it aside on account of that objection. Bull's Case, 613

7. A presentment for gaming not setting out any offence against the statute, may be quashed on motion.

Huff's Case, 648

8. A prisoner is examined for forging and counterfeiting twenty-four pieces of silver coin, and is sent on to the Circuit court for further trial—He cannot be indicted for feloniously having in his possession ten or more pieces of coin with intent to alter and employ the same as true.

Scott's Case, 687

9. There are counts in an indictment for forging and counterfeiting coin, and also a count for feloniously having in his possession twenty pieces of forged coin, not saying "at the same time." The prisoner having moved the court to quash the last count, which is overruled, there is a verdict and judgment against him, and he obtains a writ of error. This court holding that the count is bad as an indictment for a felony, will not permit it to stand as a count for a misdemeanor, but will reverse the judgment and quash the count.

Idem, 687

10. Quære: If in an indictment counts

Digitized by Google

for a felony and for a misdemeanor may be joined.—It seems not. Idem, 687

11. In a prosecution for a misdemeanor, if there be a conviction and a judgment for the fine and costs, there cannot be, at another court, a judgment of imprisonment. Pifer's Case, 710

DECREES.

Bill by trustee to enforce the deed, and decrees for sale and distribution of the fund. Then bill by a creditor excluded to set aside the deed for fraud on its face:

1st. Fraud in the deed not having been put in issue in the first case, the decree does not bar the second suit.

2d. The decree in the first case being interlocutory merely, it can be no bar to the second suit.

Quarles & als. v. Kerr & als., 48

724 *DEEDS.

1. Under the act of 1819, 1 Rev. Code, ch. 99, § 15, p. 365, the courts of any of the United States had authority to take the acknowledgment of a feme covert to her execution of a deed.

Grove v. Zumbro, 501

2. The certificate of the court of the acknowledgment of a feme covert, should show the privy examination of the wife; her declaration that she did freely and willingly seal and deliver the said writing, and wished not to retract it; and that she then acknowledged the said writing so again shown to her. If it omits the fact, "that she did not wish to retract it," it is fatally defective. Idem, 501

DELINQUENT AND FORFEITED LANDS.

1. A patent for land forfeited for nonpayment of taxes, was unauthorized by any law prior to the Code of 1849; and therefore the entry and survey of land gave the patentee no equity therein.

Atkins & als. v. Lewis & als., 30

2. Though the entry and survey of land was made prior to the sale thereof under a decree of the court as forfeited land, yet the sale having been made prior to the issuing of the patent, and the land having been purchased by the original owner, who paid as the cash payment thereof, more than sufficient to pay all taxes, damages and costs due the commonwealth; and the court having, after the issuing of the patent, directed the balance of the purchase money to be released to the purchaser, and the commissioner of delinquent lands having conveyed the land to him; his title is good against the patentee who never was in possession, and who claimed the commonwealth's title under the act of March 22, 1842. Idem, 30

3. Upon the question whether land has been forfeited under the act of 1835, for the failure of the owner to have it placed upon the books of the commissioner of the revenue and pay the taxes due thereon, or whether it was within the exception to the second section of that act, it appears that a person under whom the defendant claims was in possession of the land at the time of the passage of the act. The defendant may rely on his possession to defeat the forfeiture, if his possession was such as the statute prescribes.

Hale v. Marshall, 489

4. After twenty-five years' possession of land under a complete equitable title derived from the patentee, he living in an adjoining county for years, and neither himself nor any one claiming under him setting up any claim to the land against the equitable title, a conveyance of the legal title may be presumed in favor of the party in possession, to prevent a forfeiture of land; if the legal title is necessary. Idem, 489

5. A party in possession of land claiming it under a good equitable title, is within the exception to § 2 of the act of February 27, 1835, p. 12, concerning delinquent lands. Idem, 489

6. What will not invalidate the proceedings for the sale of delinquent lands in a suit between the purchaser under them and a third party. See Evidence, No. 2, and

Hitchcox v. Rawson, 526

DEMURRER.

See Pleadings at Law, and Practice at Common Law.

DOWER.

1. Testator devises all his land to his different children, giving the wife one of the parcels during her widowhood, which parcel has the improvements upon it. He also gives her his slaves for life, all the rest of his personal property to enjoy and use for the best interests of his children; and the interest on the bonds due him to be used by her for the benefit of his children. —This will be held to be in lieu of dower under the act, Code ch. 110, § 4, 5, p. 474-5.

Craig's heirs v. Walthall & wife, 518

2. In such case the widow having been told that the provision in the will was in lieu of dower, and advised to renounce it, declines to do so, and expresses herself satisfied with the provision; and takes possession of the property and holds it four years, until she marries.—She has elected to take under the will, and cannot then claim dower. Idem, 518

3. The principles applicable to the case of a widow as to the necessity of electing between her right of dower and the provisions of her husband's will, are the same as those applicable to other cases.

Dixon v. McCue & als., 540

4. If the widow's taking dower in the real estate will clearly interfere with the provisions of the will, she must elect. Idem, 540

5. Though the widow took the whole land under the will for five years, and also took a legacy of property to the value of five hundred dollars to aid her in

Digitized by Google

725 *carrying on the farm; still she, having been under a mistake as to her rights under the will, will not be held to have elected to take under it; but may still take her dower. Idem, 540

DYING DECLARATIONS.

On a trial for murder, the commonwealth, to introduce the dying declarations of the deceased, proved that he was told that his physicians thought that unless he could be relieved of the shortness of breath under which he was then suffering, he would die very soon. He then made the statements which were proposed to be introduced as evidence; and he was asked if these were made as his dying declarations; to which he answered they were. The deceased was then told that the doctors were of opinion he was certainly dying, and that he would die very soon; and what he had said was repeated to him, and he was asked if he made that statement again, and did he make it as a dying declaration; and he said that he did. The statement is admissible evidence as dying declarations.
Bull's Case, 613

EJECTMENT.

1. Defendants in possession of land, as against a plaintiff who never was in possession, but claims the commonwealth's title under the act of March 22, 1842, may set up an outstanding title in another to protect their possession.
Atkins & als. v. Lewis & als., 30

2. A declaration in ejectment, which describes the land as part of a larger tract owned by plaintiff, near certain creeks which have no public notoriety, is defective, and may be demurred to.
Hitchcox v. Rawson, 526

3. In such a case a verdict which finds for the plaintiff the land in the declaration mentioned, is too vague to enable the officer to deliver possession; and there must be a venire de novo. Idem, 526

4. What will not affect the validity of the proceedings for sale of forfeited land, as between a purchaser under them and a third party, in an ejectment. See Evidence, No. 2, and Idem, 526

ELECTION.

1. Land being directed to be sold and the proceeds being given—though the legatees may elect to take the same as land, yet such an intention must be clearly manifested; and all the parties interested in the property must unite in the election.
Harcum's adm'r & als. v. Hudnall, 369

2. What not evidence of an election to take the land. See Conversion, No. 3, 4, and Idem, 369

3. What will constitute a case of election for a widow. See Dower, No. 1, and
Craig's heirs v. Walthall & wife, 518

4. What will constitute an election by the widow. See Dower, No. 2, and
Idem, 518

5. The principles applicable to the case of a widow as to the necessity of electing between her right of dower and the provisions of her husband's will, are the same as those applicable to other persons.
Dixon v. McCue & als., 540

6. If the widow's taking dower in the real estate will clearly interfere with the provisions of the will, she must elect.
Idem, 540

7. Though the widow took all given to her by the will, still she, having been under a mistake as to her rights under the will, will not be held to have elected to take under it, but may still take her dower.
Idem, 540

EMANCIPATION.

See Slaves and Free Negroes.

EQUITABLE JURISDICTION AND RELIEF.

A court of equity has jurisdiction in a suit by a high sheriff against his deputy and the sureties of the deputy to have a settlement of the accounts of several administrations upon estates committed to the high sheriff, and which went into the hands of the deputy. And the suit may be maintained though the bill does not allege, and it is not proved, that the high sheriff had paid the balances reported to be due on the settled accounts, or any part of them.
Tyler & als. v. Nelson's adm'x, 214

EVIDENCE.

1. Defendants in ejectment rely upon an outstanding title in a third person, and offer in evidence an abstract of the patent certified by the register, which is received without objection. This is to be regarded in the appellate court as prima facie evidence that such a grant was issued, though the case came up on a demurrer to evidence.
Atkins & als. v. Lewis & als., 30

726 *2. On the trial of an ejectment, plaintiff claims under a conveyance from a commissioner of delinquent lands, and offers the record of the proceedings for the sale of the lands, in evidence. The defendant objects to it for irregularities on its face: 1. That the land was not forfeited, because the forfeiture for non-payment of taxes was in the name of the patentee, who had sold and conveyed the land before it was returned delinquent in 1801 and to 1814; though it was never entered by any other name. 2. Because the decree for the sale was at a special court. 3. Because the decree was conditional upon the purchaser's giving bond. 4. Because the court on petition made an order directing the deed to be made to parties not reported to be purchasers. 5. Because the deed was made by one commissioner of delinquent lands; though there was but one, and the order directed him.—But none of these invalidate the proceedings so as to render them null as between the purchaser and a third party, in a collateral proceeding.
Hitchcox v. Rawson, 526

Digitized by Google

3. Upon a trial for murder, it having been proved that the prisoner had beat the deceased, the complaint of the deceased of pain suffered by her within two hours after the beating, is competent evidence.
Livingston's Case, 592

4. When commonwealth may introduce physicians or surgeons to testify, and to what. See Criminal Jurisdiction and Proceedings, No. 4, 5, and Idem, 592

5. See Dying Declarations, No. 1, and Bull's Case, 613

6. On the trial of a prisoner for burning a mill, the commonwealth proves by the owner of the mill, that a short time previous to the burning the prisoner had made violent threats against him.—It is not competent for the prisoner to ask him or any other witness, whether other persons had not made threats against him.
Shifflet's Case, 652

7. In such case the previous threats being proved, the commonwealth may prove that shortly after the burning, the prisoner violently abused and threatened the owner, and said as he was about to leave, "You have not yet got what I intend to give you." Idem, 652

EXCEPTIONS.

A bill of exceptions taken to the opinion of the court refusing to grant a new trial in a prosecution for a felony, sets out the evidence.—The appellate court will not reverse the judgment, unless, by rejecting all the parol evidence of the exceptor, and giving full faith and credit to that of the adverse party, the decision of the court below still appears to be wrong.
Bull's Case, 613

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

1. The sureties of a deputy sheriff are liable for the amount of bonds taken by the first administrator on an estate, and after his death delivered by his administrator to the sheriff to whom the estate had been committed, as a part of the unadministered assets, after the estate had been committed to the sheriff.
Tyler & als. v. Nelson's adm'x, 214

2. What is sufficient evidence that the deputy had collected the bonds which had been delivered to him. Idem, 214

3. Administration granted where the deceased lived and died out of the state, and left no estate within it, is not void.
Andrews v. Avory & als., 229

4. An administrator appointed in Virginia, whose intestate lived and died in North Carolina, and left no estate in Virginia, goes to North Carolina, and without qualifying there, takes possession of the assets, and brings them to Virginia.—His sureties in Virginia are liable for his faithful administration of these assets.
Idem, 229

5. An administrator having sold slaves under a decree of the court, in a suit by some of the next of kin against himself and others as next of kin, for a sale and distribution, his sureties are not responsible for the proceeds of the slaves; he having sold them as commissioner of the court, and not as administrator. Idem, 229

6. Testator had in his lifetime taken the bond of two men who were partners, for a partnership debt, and it was unpaid at his death. He directed his property to be sold and its proceeds and his other moneys, &c., to be kept at interest for the support of his family; and these debtors being reputed wealthy men, the executor permitted the debt to remain uncollected until one of them died, and the firm as well as its members proved to be insolvent.—The executor is bound to account for the debt.
Southall's adm'r v. Taylor & als., 269

7. In this case one of these partners purchased property at the public sale made by the executor, and executed his bond with his partner as his surety.—The executor having failed to collect the money when he might have collected it, and 727 *the obligors having failed, the executor is bound to account for the amount of the debt. Idem, 269

8. One partner is not such security as an executor is authorized to take in selling the property of his testator. Idem, 269

9. Testator devises land to his wife for life; and at her death to be sold and equally divided among his children. One of these children dies under age, intestate and unmarried. Another dies before a sale of the property, and gives her share to her sister. Years after her death, a suit is brought for a sale of the property and division of the proceeds, and the administrator of the two deceased children is a party. There being no suggestion of any debts due from them, their interests may be decreed to the other children, according to their respective interests.
Harcum's adm'r & als. v. Hudnall, 369

FEES.

A prisoner convicted of a felony, and obtaining a writ of error to the Court of appeals, where the judgment is affirmed, is not responsible for the fees of the clerk or attorney general. See Code, ch. 211, § 10, 11, p. 782. Finch's Case, 643

GAMING.

1. An indictment for playing at cards at a public place, may be sustained by proof that the party bet at faro at the time and place stated in the indictment.
Gibboney's Case, 582

2. An indictment for gaming under the 1st section of ch. 198 of the Code, must charge the playing of one of the games specified; or it must show by averment that the gaming charged is of the like kind as those specified; that is, that the chances of the game are unequal, all other things being equal. Huff's Case, 648

3. A presentment for gaming not setting

Digitized by Google

out any offence against the statute, may be quashed on motion. Idem, 648

4. A room in an out-house within the enclosure of a tavern lot, which had at one time been used in connection with the tavern, and the room over which is still so used, having been rented by a third party, and held and used and controlled by him, independent of the proprietor of the tavern, though the occupier boarded at the tavern, and the servants belonging to it attended to the room, is not a part of the ordinary, nor is it a public place, in the sense of the act, Code, ch. 198, § 4, p. 743.
Purcell's Case, 679

HOMICIDE.

When in a case of homicide it appears that a wound or beating was inflicted on the deceased which was not mortal, and the deceased whilst laboring under the effect of the violence, becomes sick of a disease not caused by such violence, from which disease death ensues within a year and a day, the party charged with the homicide is not criminally responsible for the death, although it should also appear that the symptoms of the disease were aggravated, and the fatal progress quickened, by the enfeebled or irritated condition of the deceased, caused by the violence.
Livingston's Case, 592

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

1. Land directed to be sold and the proceeds divided, until it is sold a husband cannot reduce his wife's interest therein into possession.
Harcum's adm'r & als. v. Hudnall, 369

2. In such case, the husband having received the rents, they are reduced into possession by him, and thereby become his absolute property. Idem, 369

3. A slave having been lent to husband and wife, on their marriage, by the wife's father, he by his will gives the slave and her increase to his daughter for life, with remainder to her children. The husband hving died a few months after the father, leaving his wife surviving him, in the absence of all proof, the court will not presume the assent of the father's executors to the legacy so as to vest the life estate of the wife in the husband; but it will be held to survive to the wife.
Livesay v. Helms & als., 441

4. Testator owning a large tract of valuable land, and leaving a widow and six infant children, describes separate parcels of the land by boundaries, one of which he gives to each of his children. As to one of these he says, "It is my will that the above described part of my farm shall be owned by my son John (about thirteen); and I do bequeath it to him subject to the control of my dear wife during her widowhood, and then to my son John for life."—The widow takes a beneficial interest under the will.
Craig's heirs v. Walthall & wife, 518

*INDICTMENTS.

1. See Gaming, No. 1, and
Gibboney's Case, 582

2. See Criminal Jurisdiction and Proceedings, No. 2, and Livingston's Case, 592

3. In an indictment for murder, the omission of the word "deliberately," will not be fatal on general demurrer.
Bull's Case, 613

4. What an indictment for gaming must show. See Gaming, No. 2, and
Huff's Case, 648

5. An indictment for selling ardent spirits without a license, to be drunk where sold, must allege that the selling was by retail. Boyle's Case, 674

6. An indictment under the statute, Code. ch. 193, § 6, p. 733, for feloniously having in his possession more than ten pieces of forged or base coin, must allege that the prisoner had them in his possession at the same time; and the charge that on a certain day he had them in his possession, is not sufficient. Scott's Case, 687

INFANTS.

M and V are joint owners of real estate, and they enter into an agreement in writing, that if either wishes to sell the property, he may fix the price he will take, and if the other refuses to give it, he may have the whole property sold at auction. And in case of the death of one or both of the parties, their executors and administrators are directed to carry out the agreement as fully as if they were living. V died leaving a widow and several infant children, having made a will previous to the agreement, by which he forbade his executrix to sell any of his real estate. After V's death M had the property sold at auction, on terms which were satisfactory to V's representative, and which were proved to be beneficial to the children. A bill by the widow and children of V against the purchaser, for a specific execution of the contract, will be sustained, and a decree enforcing the sale will pass the title of the infants; though the proceeding does not conform to the act concerning the sale of infants' lands, nor to that concerning partitions.
Goddin v. Vaughn's ex'x & als., 102

INJUNCTIONS.

Where an injunction has been obtained in vacation, the defendant may file his answer, and move the court to dissolve the injunction, without filing the answer either at rules or in term.
Goddin v. Vaughn's ex'x & als., 102

INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Where the plaintiff's case is clearly made out, and the only question is whether the defendant has made out a good defence; it is not deciding upon the weight of evidence to instruct the jury upon the assumption of the facts as true, which the evidence tended to prove if they believe it, that the defence is not sufficient; if the instruction itself is correct.

Digitized by Google

Davis v. Miller, &c., 1

2. Where an instruction to the jury is asked, which is equivocal in its meaning; which upon one construction is correct, but upon another construction is incorrect, it should not be refused, if by so doing the jury may be misled; but should be given with an explanation giving it the meaning which will make it proper.
Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Polly, Woods & Co., 447

3. Where a party asks for an instruction which is itself proper to be given, it is error to refuse to give it as asked; though it is given with an addition which it does not appear is based upon any evidence given at the trial. Idem, 447

4. In such case it is error to substitute for the instructions asked for, another, which, though it may state the law correctly, is long and complicated, calculated to mislead the jury, and does not cover the points of the instructions asked for.
Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Laffertys, 478

5. On a trial for murder, where the evidence repelled the idea of self-defence, the court instructed the jury that if they believed from the evidence the deceased and the prisoner were engaged in a sudden and mutual combat, in which no weapon dangerous in itself was used, and during the progress of the fight the prisoner struck the deceased an ordinary blow or blows with his fists or feet, without any intention either to kill the deceased or to do him great bodily harm, but to repel his attack, and that the death of the deceased was caused thereby accidentally, and apart from the prisoner's intention, then the prisoner is guilty of involuntary manslaughter.—This is not error. Bull's Case, 613

6. In such a case the court further instructs the jury, that though no weapon dangerous in itself is used, but only the fists and feet; yet if the jury are satisfied *from the evidence that the manner of inflicting the blows was cruel and unusual, and exceeded in number and violence what was necessary to repel the deceased, and he died of such beating; then the prisoner is guilty of voluntary manslaughter. This is not error.
729 Idem, 613

7. When objection to an instruction should be taken, and what the consequence of postponing it. See Practice at Common Law, No. 17, and Idem, 613

JURISDICTION.

In a suit for freedom, though detention of the plaintiff where the suit is brought is necessary to give the court jurisdiction, yet as the court has general jurisdiction over the subject matter of controversy, the objection to the jurisdiction in the particular case, for this cause, is matter in abatement of the proceeding, and must be pleaded, or brought to the notice of the court by rule or motion, before the jury is sworn in the cause.
Hunter v. Humphreys, 287

JURORS.

As a general rule, the testimony of jurors is inadmissible to impeach their verdict; especially on the ground of their own misconduct. Bull's Case, 613

LARCENY.

1. Lost property may be the subject of larceny. Tanner's Case, 635

2. To constitute a larceny of lost property, the person finding it must know, or have the means of knowing, the owner, or have reason to believe that the owner may be discovered; and he must intend at the time of finding the property, to appropriate it to his own use. Idem, 635

LIMITATIONS—Statute of.

1. The proviso in the act of February 28, 1828, Sup. Rev. Code 272, § 1, limiting actions on indemnifying bonds to seven years, does not apply to an action on an indemnifying bond executed prior to the passage of the act.
Duval, adm'r &c. v. Malone & al., 24

2. When the possessor of land has acknowledged a title in the claimant, then the possession will not be deemed adverse; and whenever the act of the possessor acknowledges a right in the claimant, the statute of limitations will not operate, because such acknowledgment deduced from circumstances negatives the idea of adverse possession.
Erskine's ex'ors v. North & als., 60

3. A widow qualifies as administratrix of her husband, and takes possession of and holds certain slaves, in which she claims a life estate as having been given to her by her father's will. She is afterwards removed from her office of administratrix; but she continues to hold the slaves, claiming them as her own for life; and she holds them for more than five years after she ceased to be administratrix: held: The statute of limitations will protect her against any claim by the administrator de bonis non and next of kin of her husband. And the fact that one of the next of kin had been a married woman during the whole period will not prevent the running of the statute against her.
Livesay v. Helms & als., 441

MANSLAUGHTER.

See Instructions, No. 5, 6, and Bull's Case, 613

MISDEMEANOR.

1. See Indictments, and Criminal Jurisdiction and Proceedings.

2. On a prosecution for a misdemeanor, there is a verdict against the defendant for a fine, and the court enters up a judgment thereon for the fine and costs, and directs a capias ad audiendum against the defendant; and at a subsequent term sentences him to six months' imprisonment in the county jail.—The judgment for the fine and costs was final, and no further judgment could be rendered in the case.

Digitized by Google

Pifer's Case, 710

MURDER.

In an indictment for murder, the omission of the word "deliberately," will not be fatal on general demurrer.

Bull's Case, 613

PARTIES.

1. Commissioners appointed by a court of equity to sell lands, make the sale and take bonds for the purchase money, made payable to themselves; and before the money is paid the commissioners are removed and others are appointed. The last commissioners are entitled to sue at 730 *law on the bonds, in the names of the first, to whom the bonds were made payable.

Clarksons v. Doddridge & al., 42

2. Whilst a suit for specific execution of a contract against the purchaser is pending, the purchaser conveys the property in trust to secure a debt. The cestuis que trust are pendente lite purchasers, and are not necessary parties.

Goddin v. Vaughn's ex'x & als., 102

3. When suit by high sheriff against deputy and his sureties, on account of the administration of an estate committed to the sheriff, should be revived in the name of the personal representative of the high sheriff.

Tyler & als. v. Nelson's adm'x, 214

PARTITION.

1. In the partition of real estate, each part owner is entitled to have in severalty a part equal to his interest in the whole subject, if this is practicable with a due regard to the interests of all concerned. But if such partition cannot be made without impairing the portions of some others, the property may be divided into shares of unequal values, and the inequality may be corrected by a charge of money on the more valuable in favor of the less valuable portion, or by other means recognized in the law of partition. Code, ch. 124, § 2, p. 526.

Cox & als. v. McMullin, 82

2. The general rule of partition requires an allotment of the several parcels to the part owners; yet it may benefit both classes of owners to assign the parcels; or it may benefit one class without injury to the other, to assign rather than to allot. And in either case the commissioners may avoid the risk of an unfortunate allotment, by resorting to an assignment. Idem, 82

PARTNERS.

One partner is not such security as an executor is authorized to take in selling the property of his testator.

Southall's adm'r v. Taylor & als., 269

PAYMENTS.

When presumption of payment will not arise. See Presumptions, No. 1, 3, and

Erskine's ex'ors v. North & als., 60

PLEADING AT LAW.

1. A declaration on an indemnifying bond in the name of the administrator de bonis non of the high sheriff, sets out the bond as made to himself; and without craving oyer of the bond, the defendants demur.—As there is enough in the declaration to enable the court to proceed to judgment according to law and the very right of the case, the demurrer should be overruled.

Duval, adm'r &c. v. Malone & al., 24

2. A declaration in ejectment, which describes the land as part of a larger tract owned by the plaintiff, near certain creeks which have no public notoriety, is defective, and may be demurred to.

Hitchcox v. Rawson, 526

POWERS.

T conveys land to S and C his wife, to have and to hold the same to S for his life, with reversion to C and her heirs. And S covenants with T and C that she shall have the privilege during coverture to nominate "by last will and testament or power of appointment" in the presence of two witnesses, such person or persons as she might designate for her heir or heirs to the property aforesaid after the death of S. C died in the lifetime of S, having made an olograph will, by which she devised the property:—held:

1st. The deed to S and C conferred on her the power of disposing of the land in the lifetime of S.

2d. The power of disposition was properly executed by an olograph will; the provision for the two witnesses applying not to the disposition by will, but to other modes of executing the power.

Sherman's adm'r & al. v. Hicks & als., 96

PRACTICE AT COMMON LAW.

1. To take advantage by demurrer, of a variance between the declaration and the bond declared on, the defendant should crave oyer of the bond.

Duval, adm'r &c. v. Malone & al., 24

2. What not an expression of opinion on the evidence. See Instructions, No. 1, and

Davis v. Miller, &c., 1

3. The court may refuse to receive a plea which presents an immaterial issue, or may strike it out if it has been filed, or may either during the progress of the trial or after verdict set aside the issue, or in a proper case render judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

Duval, adm'r &c. v. Malone & al., 24

4. Action by one for the benefit of another. Though it is usual to state in 731 the *declaration or by endorsement thereon, or on the writ, that the action is brought for the benefit of the party entitled, yet this is not essential. And if the defendant has any doubt whether the suit is brought for the benefit of the true owner, he can have a rule upon him to avow and prosecute or disavow and dismiss the action.

Digitized by Google

Clarksons v. Doddridge & al., 42

5. How objection to the jurisdiction of the court in a suit for freedom, is to be made. See Jurisdiction, No. 1, and

Hunter v. Humphreys, 287

6. In assumpsit upon the common count for work and labor, &c., defendant offers a special plea setting out a special contract, and averring that the work, &c., sued for was done under it, and the acts to be done by the defendant were done. The special plea, if it contains a defence to the action, only amounts to the general issue; and should be rejected.

Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Polly, Woods & Co., 447

Same v. Laffertys, 478

7. In indebitatus assumpsit for work and labor, defendant has no right to arrest the plaintiffs in the course of making out their case, by an offer to show that the work was done under a special contract, it not having appeared from the plaintiffs' evidence that there was any such contract.

Idem, 447

Idem, 478

8. If it appears in the course of the plaintiffs' evidence, that the work was done under a special contract which remains in full force and ascertains the price; they have no right to prove the value of the work, and can only recover the contract price, upon proving the contract fully executed on their part. Idem, 447

9. If it appears from the plaintiffs' evidence, that the work was done under a written contract, they must, before they go any further, produce it, or duly account for its non-production, and prove its contents. Idem, 447

10. If it appear for the first time, on the cross-examination of the plaintiffs' witnesses, or from the defendant's evidence, that the work was done under a special contract, or that the contract was in writing, the plaintiffs will then be required to proceed in the same way as if the fact had appeared in the course of their own evidence in chief. Idem, 447

11. It is for the judge who tries a cause to determine whether he will give or refuse an instruction asked for, before the argument is commenced or after it is concluded. Idem, 447

12. Where an instruction to the jury is asked which is equivocal in its meaning; which upon one construction is correct, but upon another construction is incorrect; it should not be refused, if by so doing the jury may be misled; but should be given with an explanation giving it the meaning which will make it proper. Idem, 447

13. Where a party asks for an instruction which is itself proper to be given, it is error to refuse to give it as asked; though it is given with an addition which it does not appear is based upon any evidence given on the trial. Idem, 447

Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Laffertys, 478

14. In an action by a contractor on a rail road against the company, for work and labor, the plaintiffs having offered evidence tending to show that certain excavation which was a part of the work in controversy, was solid rock, and the defendant having offered evidence tending to show the contrary; the defendant moved the court to have the jury taken to view the premises, they being about thirty miles off on the line of the road, and offered to send the jury on the train of the company and to defray the expenses. The court having overruled the motion, the appellate court cannot say the court below erred, unless it appears from the record, that a view was necessary to a just decision: and that does not appear. Idem, 447

15. Parties cannot by their consent authorize a jury to render their verdict to the clerk in the absence of the judge, and be discharged. And if a verdict is thus rendered and the jury discharged, it is no verdict. Idem, 447

16. The parties agree to recall the jury to ascertain whether they agree to the verdict as rendered; and it appears from the statement of three of them, that they did not understand it according to its legal effect. As the question before the court was whether the verdict delivered by the jury to the clerk should be made their verdict by their assent in open court, it was proper to hear all that the jurors had to say upon the subject, and be well satisfied whether they understood and fully concurred in the verdict. And under the circumstances the court should have sent the jury to their room to consider further of their verdict, or should have ordered a new trial. Idem, 447

17. If a party be dissatisfied with an instruction, he ought to state his objection at the time. If no objection be made
732 *to the instruction at the time it is given, and no exception taken or the point saved; but objection be made for the first time, after verdict, and in the form of a motion to set it aside; the court will consider whether, under all the circumstances, the party may be prejudiced by the instruction; and if of opinion that a just verdict has been rendered, according to the law and the evidence, will not set it aside on account of that objection. Bull's Case, 613

18. As a general rule, the testimony of jurors is inadmissible to impeach their verdict; especially on the ground of their own misconduct. Idem, 613

PRACTICE IN CRIMINAL CASES.

See Criminal Jurisdiction and Proceedings.

Digitized by Google

PRACTICE IN CHANCERY.

1. Trustee files a bill to enforce the trust deed, and in this suit the court decrees the sale and distribution of the trust subject among the creditors provided for, except one, who is excluded under the provisions of the deed, because he sued out execution on his judgment. This creditor then files a bill to set aside the trust deed, on the ground that it is fraudulent on its face: held:

1st. That the question whether the deed was fraudulent was not put in issue in the first case, and therefore could not be decided: and the decree in that case cannot be a bar to the second.

2d. The decree in the first case being interlocutory merely, it cannot be a bar to the second suit.

Quarles & als. v. Kerr & als., 48

2. When contract for sale of infant's land will be enforced though proceeding does not conform to the act concerning sales of infants' lands, nor to that concerning partitions. See Infants, No. 1, and

Goddin v. Vaughn's ex'x & als., 102

3. It is not error in an interlocutory decree enforcing a specific execution of a contract against a purchaser, that it does not direct a deed to be made and tendered to him. Idem, 102

4. Where a decree for specific execution of a contract against a purchaser, provides that if the purchase money, or a part of it, is not paid by a day certain, the property shall be sold, it is not error to appoint the counsel for the plaintiffs, there being no objection to the person, the commissioner to make the sale; nor is it error to refuse to associate one of the counsel of the purchaser with him. Idem, 102

5. Where all the facts are before the court, and the objection to the title to land purchased is a question of law, it is unnecessary to refer the title to a commissioner. Idem, 102

6. Whilst suit is pending, the purchaser conveys the property in trust to secure a debt. The cestuis que trust are pendente lite purchasers, and are not necessary parties. Idem, 102

7. Where an injunction has been obtained in vacation, the defendant may file his answer and move the court to dissolve the injunction, without filing the answer either at rules or in term. Idem, 102

8. If exceptions to an answer are not well founded, it is not ground to reverse a decree, that they were not set down to be argued, but the cause was heard and decided without passing upon them. Idem, 102

PRESUMPTIONS.

1. As between a creditor of B having a right to subject land, and a purchaser from B, the presumption of satisfaction of the debt as against the purchaser can only begin to arise from the time he had notice of it; and if twenty years have not since elapsed, the legal presumption has not arisen.

Erskine's ex'ors v. North & als., 60

2. Upon a bill by a creditor to subject land in the hands of the executors of a purchaser, they having in their answer stated that he has always claimed under the title bond of his vendor, a conveyance cannot be presumed. Idem, 60

3. Even if the time has elapsed from which the legal presumption of payment may arise, yet the circumstances may repel that presumption; and they do so in this case. Idem, 60

4. After twenty-five years' possession of land under a complete equitable title derived from the patentee himself living in an adjoining county for years, and neither he nor any person claiming under him setting up any claim to the land against the equitable title, a conveyance of the legal title may be presumed in favor of the party in possession, to prevent a forfeiture of the land under the act of February 27, 1835, p. 12, in relation to forfeitures of delinquent lands; if the legal title be necessary.

Hale v. Marshall, 489

733 *PRIVY EXAMINATION.

See Deeds.

PROMISSORY NOTES.

1. Payment by the maker to the payee and endorser of a negotiable note, after it has been protested for non-payment, taken up by the payee and transferred by him to his creditor as collateral security for a larger debt, such payment being without knowledge of the transfer, is not a good defence to an action brought on the note by the transferee and holder against the maker.

Davis v. Miller, &c., 1

2. Payment of a dishonored note by an endorser, does not extinguish its negotiability as to him and all parties liable thereon to him, though it discharges the liability of subsequent endorsers, whose liability will not be revived by his putting the note again in circulation. Idem, 1

3. When an over-due note is transferred, the holder takes it subject to all the defences and equities to which it was subject in the hands of his immediate endorser, whether or not he has any notice thereof: except that an accommodation note in his hands is not therefore invalid. Idem, 1

4. Quære: If the equities to which such overdue note is subject, in the hands of the endorsee, are or are not only such equities as attach to the note itself; as illegality or want of failure of consideration, or a release or payment, or a counter claim agreed to be set off, which is equivalent to payment. Idem, 1

5. A set-off as between the maker and the payee acquired after the transfer of an over-due note, though acquired without notice of the transfer of the note, cannot be set off against the holder. Idem, 1

Digitized by Google

6. By the endorsement of negotiable notes, though after due, the legal title passes without notice to the maker. But in the transfer of choses in action not negotiable, only the equitable title passes, and the maker may make payments to the payee or obligee until he has notice of the transfer. Idem, 1

7. The act, Code, ch. 144, § 14, p. 583, in relation to suits by assignees, does not apply to negotiable paper, though such paper has been transferred after due. Idem, 1

8. The declaration on a negotiable note states the endorsement and delivery as at the time of the making; and the proof is that the delivery was after the note fell due.—This is not a variance; and if it was, could only be taken advantage of at the trial by a motion to exclude the evidence, or to instruct the jury to disregard it. Idem, 1

RECOGNIZANCE.

1. In taking a recognizance, the justice, in putting the name of his county in the caption uses a contraction; but the contraction is so used that it is obviously intended for a county, and there is no difficulty in ascertaining the county intended.—This is not error.
Gedney v. The Commonwealth, 318

2. Though it is not stated in the body of the recognizance of what county the justice was, yet as it states that he was a justice of the said county, that refers to the county named in the caption, and is sufficient. Idem, 318

RICHMOND.

The shares of a rail road company are not liable to be taxed by the council of the city of Richmond, either under the charter of the city, or under § 19, ch. 54 of the Code.
City of Richmond v. Daniel, 385

SCIRE FACIAS.

1. In a scire facias upon a recognizance, a substantive and direct averment that the recognizance was transmitted by the justice to the clerk of the county court, is not necessary. The recital of the recognizance, which purports to be taken by a justice in the county, and the implied averment of the transmission of the recognizance contained in the prout patet per recordum, is sufficient.
Gedney v. The Commonwealth, 318

2. The mistake of the clerk in stating, as by a copy of the recognizance to our said county court transmitted, is not a fatal objection to the scire facias upon a demurrer thereto. Code, ch. 171, § 31, p. 650. Idem, 318

3. One scire facias may issue against several cognizors in one recognizance: But it must treat the recognizance as several, and the judgment must be several. Caldwell's Case, 698

4. The recognizance is that the principal shall appear before the Circuit court at a certain time to answer a charge of felony. At the time he was required to 734 *appear, he was in the penitentiary, having been sent there for another felony. Afterwards and before a judgment on the scire facias against the bail, his time expires, and he is sent back to the jail of the county in which he was to appear for trial before the Circuit court; and he is tried and acquitted.—The prisoner's confinement in the penitentiary having rendered it impossible for him to appear at the court at the time prescribed by the recognizance, it constitutes a good defence to the scire facias. Caldwell's Case, 698

5. In such case, the defence may be made by plea; but it may also be made by petition or motion; and the facts being agreed by counsel for the bail and the attorney for the commonwealth, the question of law may be decided by the court. Idem, 698

SET-OFF.

1. A set-off as between the maker and payee acquired after the transfer of an over-due negotiable note, though acquired without notice of the transfer of the note, cannot be set off against the holder.
Davis v. Miller, &c., 1

2. By the endorsement of negotiable notes, though after due, the legal title passes without notice to the maker. But in the transfer of choses in action not negotiable, only the equitable title passes, and the maker may make payments to the payee or obligee, until he has notice of the transfer. Idem, 1

3. Quære: If the equities to which an over-due note is subject in the hands of the endorsee, are or are not only such equities as attach to the note itself; as illegality, or want of failure of consideration, a release or payment, or a counter claim agreed to be set off, which is equivalent to payment. Idem, 1

SHERIFFS.

1. A court of equity has jurisdiction in a suit by a high sheriff against his deputy and the sureties of the deputy, to have a settlement of the accounts of several administrations upon estates committed to the high sheriff, and which went into the hands of the deputy. And the suit may be maintained though the deputy had settled the administration accounts before the probate court; and though the bill does not allege and it is not proved that the high sheriff had paid the balances reported to be due on the settled accounts, or any part of them.
Tyler & als. v. Nelson's adm'x, 214

2. Upon the death of the high sheriff the suit should be revived in the name of his personal representative, and not in the name of the personal representatives of the different estates; it being his suit against his agent. Idem, 214

Digitized by Google

3. The bond of the sureties of the deputy, which was given during the first year of the sheriffalty, bound them to indemnify the high sheriff for the acts of his deputy during the continuance in office of the high sheriff.—Their liability does not extend to indemnify the high sheriff for the acts of the deputy in relation to an estate committed to the sheriff during his second year of office. Idem, 214

4. The sureties of the deputy are liable for the amount of bonds taken by the first administrator on the estate, and after his death delivered by his administrator to the sheriff in the first year of his sheriffalty, as a part of the unadministered assets, after the estate had been committed to the sheriff. Idem, 214

5. Where an estate has been committed to the sheriff in the first year of his sheriffalty, the sureties of the deputy will be responsible for assets received by him after the end of the year. Idem, 214

6. What sufficient evidence that deputy had collected the bonds which had been delivered to him. Idem, 214

SLAVES AND FREE NEGROES.

1. Testator provides in his will that the slaves loaned his wife for life shall have their choice of being emancipated or sold publicly.—Their emancipation is made by the will to depend upon their election to be free; and as slaves have no legal capacity to choose, the provision is void and of no effect.

Bailey & als. v. Poindexter's ex'or, 132

2. Testator having given by his will a large real estate and also annuities to certain free negroes, then says, "It is my will and desire that my executors hold all the residue of my estate as trustees for the support of F, L and A, and the children of A and L," &c. And should it be necessary in carrying out this clause of my will, to sell my slaves, I desire my executors to sell them privately or publicly as may seem best, selecting them good homes and good masters." The three legatees are free negroes, and about eighty slaves are included in the residue of testator's estate: held:

1st. That the slaves included in the residue cannot be held in trust for 735 the *free negroes, as they cannot be held directly by them.

2d. That though the provision that the slaves shall be held in trust by the executors for the free negroes is illegal, the provision that if necessary the slaves shall be sold, is not invalidated by the illegal provision; but is legal and valid; and the free negroes shall take the proceeds of the slaves.

3d. The whole property in the residue being given to the executors in trust, the addition of the words "for the support and maintenance of the beneficiaries." does not limit the bequest to that object, but the whole beneficial interest passes to the free negroes.

Dunlop & als. v. Harrison's ex'ors & als., 251

3. In a suit for freedom, though detention of the plaintiff where the suit is brought is necessary to give jurisdiction to the court, yet as the court has general jurisdiction over the subject matter of controversy, the objection to the exercise of jurisdiction in the particular case, for this cause, is matter in abatement of the proceeding, and should be pleaded, or brought to the notice of the court by rule or motion before the jury is sworn in the cause.

Hunter v. Humphreys, · 287

4. In July 1829, Mrs. H, of P. G. county, Maryland, by her will emancipated some of her slaves at her death; and then says, "I give to my brother B during his life, all the rest of my slaves; and at his death, those above the age of fifteen years to be immediately free and fully emancipated: and those under the age of fifteen years to be bound out in P. G. county in the state of Maryland, until they arrive at the age of eighteen years, when they and their increase shall be free and fully emancipated. A child of one of the female slaves left to B for life, born during the life of B, is emancipated by the will. Idem, 287

5. Testator gives his whole estate, including lands, slaves, bonds, &c., to his nephew R, of Pittsburg. And then in a postscript, he says, "I wish you to take the negroes to Pennsylvania where they will be free. He appointed no executor, but B qualified as administrator with the will annexed.

1st. Quære, If the will creates a trust in favor of the negroes.

2d. If the negroes are entitled to their freedom, they cannot maintain an action at law for its recovery aginst B the administrator; his duty is to deliver them to R.

3d. Slaves emancipated by will cannot maintain an action at law against the executor to recover their freedom, without proving the assent of the executor to the bequest.

Reid's adm'r v. Blackstone & als., 363

6. Testatrix makes her will in August 1857, by which she emancipates one slave by name. By another clause she says, "I direct in regard to the balance of my negroes, that they shall be manumitted on the 1st day of January 1858." She then directs her executors to raise a fund out of her estate sufficient for the purpose, and use it in settling her said slaves in Liberia, or any other free state or country in which they may elect to live; and then says, "And I further direct, that if any of my said servants shall prefer to remain in Virginia, instead of accepting the foregoing provisions, it is my desire that they shall be permitted by my executors to select among my relations their respective owners:" held: The freedom of the slaves is made dependent on their election; and they having no legal capacity to elect, the will is ineffectual to emancipate them.

Digitized by Google

Williamson & als. v. Coalter's ex'ors & als., 394

SPECIFIC EXECUTION.

1. When contract for a sale of infant's land will be enforced, though proceeding does not conform to the act concerning sale of infants' lands, nor to that concerning partitions. See Infants, No. 1, and
Goddin v. Vaughn's ex'x & als., 102

2. It is not error in an interlocutory decree enforcing a specific execution of a contract against a purchaser, that it does not direct a deed to be made and tendered to him. Idem, 102

3. Where a decree for a specific execution of a contract against a purchaser, provides that if the purchase money, or a part of it, is not paid by a day certain, the property shall be sold, it is not error to appoint the counsel of the plaintiffs, there being no objection to the person, the commissioner to make the sale; nor is it error to refuse to associate with him one of the counsel of the purchaser. Idem, 102

4. Where the facts are before the court, and the objection to the title to land purchased is a question of law, it is unnecessary to refer the title to a commissioner. Idem, 102

STATUTES.

1. The act of February 28, 1828, 736 Sup. *Rev. Code, 272, § 1, limiting actions on indemnifying bonds, construed in
Duval, adm'r &c. v. Malone & al., 24

2. The act, Code, ch. 144, § 14, p. 583, in relation to suits by assignees, construed in
Davis v. Miller, &c., 1

3. The act of March 22, 1842, in relation to forfeited and delinquent lands, construed in
Atkins & als. v. Lewis & als., 30

4. The act, Code, ch. 171, § 31, p. 650, in relation to pleadings, construed in
Gedney v. The Commonwealth, 318

5. The act, Code, ch. 122, § 7, p. 517, in relation to wills, construed in Phaup & als. v. Wooldridge & als., 332

6. The act, Code, ch. 54, § 19, p. 286, in relation to taxation by towns, construed in
City of Richmond v. Daniel, 385

7. The act of March 2, 1854, § 15, in relation to taxes on collateral inheritances, construed in
Eyre v. Jacob, sheriff, 422

8. The act of February 27, 1835, § 2, Sess. Acts 1834-5, p. 12, in relation to delinquent lands, construed in
Hale v. Marshall, 489

9. The act, 1 Rev. Code of 1819, ch. 99, § 15, p. 365, in relation to the privy examination of femes covert, construed in
Grove v. Zumbro, 501

10. The act, Code, ch. 110, § 4, 5, p. 474-5, in relation to dower and jointure, construed in
Craig's heirs v. Walthall & wife, 518

11. The act, Code, ch. 151, § 12, 17, p. 603, in relation to attachments, construed in Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Gallahue's ex'ors, 563

12. The act, Code, ch. 205, § 11, p. 765, in relation to examining courts, construed in McCann's Case, 570

13. The act, Code, ch. 198, § 4, p. 743, in relation to gaming, construed in Gibboney's Case, 582

14. The act, Code, ch. 192, § 12, p. 728, in relation to housebreaking, construed in Finch's Case, 643

15. The act, Code, ch. 211, § 10, 11, p. 782, in relation to costs in cases of felony, construed in Idem, 643

16. The act, Code, ch. 182, § 7, p. 684, in relation to certiorari, construed in Shifflet's Case, 652

17. The act, Code, ch. 208, § 34, p. 778, in relation to defective counts in an indictment, construed in Idem, 652

18. The act, Code, ch. 198, § 4, p. 743, in relation to gaming, construed in
Purcell's Case, 679

19. The act, Code, ch. 193, § 6, p. 733, in relation to forgeries, construed in
Scott's Case, 687

20. The act, Code, ch. 208, § 28, p. 777, concerning verdicts, construed in
Idem, 687

STATUTES—Construction of.

Though the legislature may have authority to make a law to operate retroactively, yet it must clearly appear that such was the intention.
Duval, adm'r &c. v. Malone & al., 24

SUITS FOR FREEDOM.

See Slaves and Free Negroes.

SURETIES.

1. One partner is not such security as an executor is authorized to take in selling the property of his testator.
Southall's adm'r v. Taylor & als., 269

2. See Sheriffs, and
Tyler & als. v. Nelson's adm'x, 214

3. See Scire Facias, No. 4, 5, and Caldwell's Case, 698

TAXATION.

1. The shares of a rail road company are not liable to be taxed by the council of the city of Richmond, either under the charter of the city, or § 19 of ch. 54 of the Code.
City of Richmond v. Daniel, 385

2. The act of March 2, 1854, § 5, which imposes a tax on collateral inheritances, is within the constitutional powers of the general assembly, and is still in force.
Eyre v. Jacob, sheriff, 422

Digitized by Google

TENANTS IN COMMON.

1. There are two tenants in common of land having but an equitable title. One of them cannot appropriate to himself any specific portion thereof, or do any act whatever, in derogation of the right of the other to enjoy equally with himself the common property, and every parcel of it.
Cox & als. v. McMullin, 82

2. The legal title to the land held in common being conveyed to one of the joint owners, he reciting that he owns the whole, conveys one-half of it to a third person, and purports to convey the upper moiety. But it will be held that the deed passed
737 only an equal undivided *moiety of the common subject: and that the other joint owner and the grantee held in common the whole subject, and every part thereof. Idem, 82

3. Although a party holding in common with others, can do nothing to impair or vary, in the slightest degree, the rights of his cotenants; yet if he execute a deed for a specific portion of the common subject, or make a contract in regard to it; and upon partition such portion falls in severalty to the party so making the deed or contract, he will be bound by his act.
Idem, 82

TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.

1. A trustee in a deed of trust to secure a debt falling due at different periods, advances to the debtor money to pay the first installment, and takes a transfer of it.—He can only subject the property to satisfy himself, after the balance of the debt is paid; and his interest does not disqualify him from acting as trustee.
Goddin v. Vaughn's ex'x & als., 102
Same v. Mason & als., 102

2. Whilst suit against the purchaser for a specific execution of the contract is pending, he conveys the property to secure a debt. The cestuis que trust are pendente lite purchasers, and are not necessary parties. Idem, 102

3. A bequest of slaves to trustees in trust for free negroes is illegal and void: But an alternative direction that if necessary the slaves shall be sold, is valid, and the free negroes may take the proceeds.
Dunlop & als. v. Harrison's ex'ors & als., 251

4. Property being left to trustees in trust for certain free negroes, the addition of the words "for the support and maintenance of the beneficiaries," does not limit the bequest to that object, but the whole beneficial interest passes to the free negroes.
Idem, 251

5. The president and acting manager of a private corporation is trustee in a deed of marriage settlement; and as trustee he sells the trust property, in violation of his duty as trustee, and purchases a part of it for the corporation.—The corporation is a participator in the violation of the trust, and liable therefor.
Barksdale & als. v. Finney & als., 338

6. The cestuis que trust having sued the trustee for an account of the trust subject, and made the corporation a party, and having taken a decree against the trustee for the amount of the purchase money for which the trust property sold, which proves unavailing, may then pursue the property in the hands of the corporation, if it is still in the possession of the corporation, or have a decree against it for the price at which it was purchased. Idem, 338

7. All who participate in a breach of trust are jointly and severally liable. And a purchaser concurring in a fraudulent breach of trust, and actively participating in it, and converting the property to his own use, incurs the like liability with the fraudulent trustee. Idem, 338

8. In such case a part of the property sold having been slaves, which having been used in a dangerous occupation, one of them was injured, and this slave and another were returned to the cestuis que trust. On a decree against the purchaser for the price at which he purchased the slaves, he should be credited for those returned at their value when returned. Idem, 338

9. Testator gives all his estate including slaves to his nephew R, of Pittsburg. And then in a postscript he says, "I wish you to take the negroes to Pennsylvania where they will be free." Quære: If the will creates a trust for the negroes.
Reid's adm'r v. Blackstone & als., 363

10. Testator by his will directs his farm shall be kept for five years and cultivated by his widow for the support of his family, and longer if the executor thinks it will promote the interests of the family; and the executor is vested with power to sell at the proper time, say five years. And as each child arrives at the age of twenty-one years, he or she shall have his or her share of his estate. The widow lives on the farm and cultivates it for five years, when the oldest child is within a few months of being twenty-one years old, and then the executor offers the land for sale: held: If it was not the positive duty of the executor to sell the land in time to pay the oldest child his share of the estate, the executor acting in good faith, and being of opinion that the interests of the family require a sale, and that opinion not disproved by the evidence, it would be an uncalled for and improper exercise of power in the chancellor's interfering and undertaking to substitute his discretion in the place of that of the executor.
Dixon v. McCue & als., 540

VARIANCE.

1. The declaration on a negotiable
738 note *states the endorsement and delivery as at the time of the making; and the proof is that the delivery was after the note fell due.—This is not a variance; and if it is, can only be taken advantage of at the trial by motion to exclude the evidence, or to instruct the jury to disregard it.
Davis v. Miller, &c., 1

Digitized by Google

2. To take advantage by demurrer of a variance between the declaration and the bond declared on, the defendant should crave oyer of the bond.
Duval, adm'r &c. v. Malone & al., 24

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

1. Upon a sale of real estate at public or private sale, where nothing is said about the title, the purchaser is entitled to have a clear title with covenants of general warranty.
Goddin v. Vaughn's ex'x & als., 102

2. But where the sale is of such a character and made under such circumstances, as fully to make known to the purchaser the exact nature of the title he is to expect; as where the sale is made avowedly by an executor under the provisions of the will, or by a sheriff or commissioner under an order of court, he can, of course, demand only such title as was in contemplation of the parties when the sale was made.
Idem, 102

3. A purchaser not informed at the time of his purchase of land at auction, that the title to one moiety thereof is vested in infants, and that it can only be obtained by a suit in chancery, may, when informed of the fact, refuse to proceed with the purchase, and abandon it. Idem, 102

4. But if such purchaser, upon being informed of the state of the title immediately after the sale, plainly manifests his intention to proceed with the purchase, content to take a conveyance for the one moiety which can be made at once, and to look to the Court of chancery for the title to the other moiety, he thereby waives the objection which he was entitled to make for the want of a conveyance with general warranty. Idem, 102

VERDICTS.

1. In a special verdict, if the facts found make a case upon which the court may render a judgment upon the merits, the verdict is not defective because other facts exist which might have been found, and which would have made a different case requiring a different judgment.
Hunter v. Humphreys, 287

2. Parties cannot by their consent authorize a jury to render their verdict to the clerk in the absence of the judge, and be discharged. And if a verdict is thus rendered and the jury discharged, it is no verdict.
Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Polly, Woods & Co., 447

3. For what may be done in such case, see Practice at Common Law, No. 16, and
Idem, 447

4. The declaration in ejectment does not describe the land so as to distinguish it; and the verdict finds for the plaintiff the land in the declaration mentioned. This is too vague to enable the officer to deliver possession; and there must be a venire de novo.
Hitchcox v. Rawson, 526

WILLS.

1. See Slaves and Free Negroes, No. 2, and Dunlop & als. v. Harrison's ex'ors & als., 251

2. See Powers, No. 1, and
Sherman's adm'r & al. v. Hicks & als., 96

3. Under the Code, ch. 122, § 7, p. 517, marriage is a revocation of a will, "except a will made in pursuance of a power of appointment, when the estate thereby appointed would not, in default of such appointment, pass to his or her (the testator's) heir, personal representative or next of kin."
Phaup & als. v. Wooldridge & als., 332

4. What is a beneficial interest given by a will. See Husband and Wife, No. 4, and Craig's heirs v. Walthall & wife, 518

WITNESS.

1. It being proved that a witness is a practicing physician, he is a competent witness to express an opinion as an expert upon a medical question.
Livingston's Case, 592

2. Upon a trial for homicide, it is competent for the commonwealth to introduce physicians or surgeons to give an opinion on a state of facts testified to by themselves or other witnesses, in respect to a wound or beating proved to have been inflicted on the deceased, as to whether such wound or beating would be a cause adequate to produce the death, or was the cause of the death. Idem, 592

3. As a general rule, the testimony of jurors is inadmissible to impeach their verdict; especially on the ground of their own misconduct. Bull's Case, 613

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

REPORTS OF CASES

DECIDED IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS

OF

VIRGINIA:

BY PEACHY R. GRATTAN.

VOLUME XV.

FROM OCTOBER 1, 1858, TO JULY 1, 1860.

JUDGES

OF THE

SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS

DURING THE TIME OF THESE REPORTS.

JOHN J. ALLEN, PRESIDENT.

WILLIAM DANIEL, RICHARD C. L. MONCURE,

GEORGE H. LEE, GREEN B. SAMUELS,*

WILLIAM J. ROBERTSON.†

Attorney General: JOHN RANDOLPH TUCKER.

---

*Judge Samuels died on the 5th day of January, 1859.

†Judge Robertson was elected in May, 1859, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Judge Samuels, but did not sit in the cases of the April term of that year, reported in this volume. And having been a director in the Virginia Central Railroad Company prior to his election, he did not sit in the case of the Va. Central R. R. Co. v. Sanger.

Digitized by Google

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty, for the

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA,

In the Clerk's Office of the Eastern District of Virginia.

Digitized by Google

TABLE OF CASES REPORTED.

Alderson v. Miller..... 279
Aler and Pulliam, &c..... 54
Anthony and Claytor..... 518
Anthony and Creasy..... 518
Averett's adm'r v. Booker..... 163
Bennett & als. v. Toler & als..... 588
Booker and Averett's adm'r..... 163
Bossieux and Iaege, &c..... 83
Boyd's adm'r v. City Savings Bank..... 501
Bristow's Case..... 634
Burch and Enders' ex'ors..... 64
Callison v. Hedrick..... 244
Carter v. Ramey..... 346
Chappell and Mason 572
Christian & als. and Davis..... 11
City Savings Bank and Boyd's adm'r... 501
Clarkson v. Read & als..... 288
Claytor v. Anthony..... 518
Clegg v. Lemessurier..... 108
Commonwealth and Bristow..... 634
Commonwealth v. Drewry..... 1
Commonwealth and Monteith, sheriff, & als..... 172
Commonwealth and Shumate..... 653
Commonwealth v. Young..... 664
Cooper v. Hepburn & als..... 551
Creasy v. Anthony..... 518
Crenshaw & Fisher and Delaplane..... 457
Davis v. Christian & als..... 11
Davy and Spengler..... 381
Delaplane v. Crenshaw & Fisher..... 457
Delaplane v. Haxall, Crenshaw & Co..... 457
Drewry and The Commonwealth..... 1
Enders' ex'ors v. Burch..... 64
Evans, trustee, v. Greenhow & als..... 153
Evans v. Pearce & als..... 513
Fulton's ex'ors v. Gracey & als..... 314
Gracey & als. and Fulton's ex'ors..... 314
Greenhow & als. and Evans, trustee..... 153
Ham v. Ham..... 74
Haxall, Brothers & Co. v. Willis..... 434
Haxall, Crenshaw & Co. and Delaplane.. 457
Hedrick and Callison..... 244
Hepburn & als. and Cooper..... 551
Hill & wife v. Huston's ex'ors & als..... 350
Hill & als. and Marks & als..... 400
Hobson & Son and Washington & New Orleans Telegraph Co..... 122
Huston's ex'or & others and Hill & wife.. 350
Iaege, &c. v. Bossieux..... 83
Jeffries & als. and Poindexter & wife..... 363
Lemessurier and Clegg..... 108
Marks & als. v. Hill & als..... 400
Marsh and Stinchcomb..... 202
Mason v. Chappell..... 572
Mauck & als. and Yancey..... 300
Mayo, mayor, and Warwick & Barksdale.. 528
Miller and Alderson..... 279
Miller v. Williams & al..... 213
Monteith, sheriff, & als. v. The Commonwealth..... 172
Mustard v. Wohlford's heirs..... 329
Pearce & als. and Evans..... 513
Poindexter & wife v. Jeffries & als..... 363
Pride and Usher's heirs..... 190
Pulliam, &c. v. Aler..... 54
Ramey and Carter..... 346
Read & als. and Clarkson..... 288
Sanger and Va. Central R. R. Co..... 230
Seaburn's ex'or v. Seaburn & als..... 423
Shue v. Turk, sheriff..... 256
Shumate's Case..... 653
Smith & Sampson and Wortham & Co... 487
Spengler v. Davy..... 381
Stinchcomb v. Marsh..... 202
Toler & als. and Bennett & als..... 588
Turk, sheriff, and Shue..... 256
Usher's heirs v. Pride..... 190
Va. Central R. R. Co. v. Sanger..... 230
Warwick & Barksdale v. Mayo, mayor.. 528
Washington & New Orleans Telegraph Co. v. Hobson & Son..... 122
Williams & al. and Miller..... 213
Willis and Haxall, Brothers & Co..... 434
Wohlford's heirs and Mustard..... 329
Wortham & Co. v. Smith & Sampson.... 487
Yancey v. Mauck & als..... 300
Young's Case 664

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

Abbott and Stuart's ex'ors, 9 Gratt. 255.. 308
Abdy and Ash, 3 Swanst. 664..... 463
Abell v. Warren, 4 Verm. 149..... 335
Abrams v. Winship, 3 Cond. Eng. Ch. 429..... 356
Aclom and Vanderzee, 4 Ves. 771..... 619
Adams and Joyce, 4 Seld. S. C. 291..... 438
Adams v. Stillwell, 14 Ohio 20..... 307
Adam and Wilkinson, 1 Ves. & Bea. 422 ..... 601, 602, 603, 622
Addington v. Etheridge, 12 Gratt. 436... ..... 405, 416
Alden v. Murdock, 13 Mass. 256..... 546
Alexander and Dover, 24 Eng. Ch. 275... ..... 593, 622
Alexander v. Gardner, 27 Eng. C. L. 538 439
Alexander and Jones, 10 Smedes & Marsh. 627..... 89, 95
Alexander & Co. v. Newton, 2 Gratt. 266.. 89
Alker and Goodtitle, 1 Burr. 133..534, 546, 547
Allen and Chadwick, Str. 706..... 167
Allen and Chester Valley Co., 21 Conn. 130..... 406
Allen and Hilliard, 4 Cush. 532..... 91
Allen and Justices of Allen County, 2 A. K. Marsh. 30..... 347
American Exchange Bank v. Inloes, 7 Maryl. 380..... 405, 411
Anderson v. Bullock, 4 Munf. 442..... ..... 109, 112, 113
Anderson and Doe on demise of Thomason, 4 Leigh 118..... 608
Anderson v. Foulke, 2 Har. & Gill 346... ..... 292, 293, 295, 297
Anderson and Hill, 5 Smedes & Marsh. 216..... 340
Anderson v. Pitcher, cited 2 Stark. Evi. 566..... 464
Anderson & Wilkins v. Tompkins & als., 1 Brock. 456..... 28
Andrew v. Dieterick, 14 Wend. 31....438, 445
Andrews and Messenger, 3 Cond. Eng. Ch. 761... ..... 355, 356
Andrews v. Thompson, 6 Cond. Eng. Ch. 525..... 33
Andrew v. Wrigley, 4 Bro. Ch. 125..... 46
Angel and Sherman, 1 Bail. Equ. 351.... 619
Anonymous, 1 P. Wms. 476, 11 Mod. 132. 531
Archer v. Sadler, 2 Hen. & Munf. 370.... 462
Argent v. Durant, 8 T. R. 403..... 248
Armistead and Brown, 6 Rand. 594..... 38
Armistead v. Hundley, 7 Gratt. 52..... 335
Arnold v. Camp, 12 John. 409..... 303
Arnold v. Preston, 18 Ves. 287..... 601
Ash v. Abdy, 3 Swanst. 664..... 463
Ash v. Way, 2 Gratt. 203..... 604
Ashbrook and Cunningham, 20 Missouri 553..... 440, 445
Ashwell v. Ayres, 4 Gratt. 283..... ..... 110, 111, 115, 116, 119
Atkins v. Lewis, 14 Gratt. 30....194, 201, 348
Atkinson and Pritchard, 4 New Hamp. 291..... 532, 533, 543
Attorney General v. Christ's Hospital, 3 Bro. Ch. 165..... 356
Attorney General and Gallego's ex'ors, 3 Leigh 450..... 425, 426, 430, 433
Attorney General North Car. v. Bank of Cape Fear, 5 Ired. Equ. 71..... 462
Austin's adm'r v. Whitlock's ex'or, 1 Munf. 487..... 109, 112, 113
Austin and Young, 6 Pick. 280 438
Ayres and Ashwell, 4 Gratt. 283..... ..... 110, 111, 115, 116, 119
Back and Wilks, 2 East 142..... 211
Bacon & al. and De Forest, 2 Conn. 633. 410
Baddeley v. Leppingwell, 3 Burr. 1533... 356
Badger v. Lloyd, Holt 199..... 220
Badger v. Phinney, 15 Mass. 359.....334, 341
Bagley v. Mallard, 4 Cond. Eng. Ch. 563.. 589
Bagwell and Spence, 6 Gratt. 444..... 405
Bailey v. Burton, 8 Wend. 339..... 406
Bailey v. Poindexter, 14 Gratt. 132..... 273
Baird v. Blaigrove, 1 Wash. 170..109, 112, 113
Baker v. Preston, Gilm. 235..... 196
Baker and Whitlocke, 13 Ves. 511..... 326
Baldwin and Marston, 17 Mass. 606... .. 438
Ballentine and Patrick, 22 Missouri 148. 89
Ballivos, &c., de Bewdley and Regina, 1 P. Wms. 207..... 463
Ball v. Lively, 2 J. J. Marsh. 181..... 284
Ball v. Taylor, 1 Car. & Payne, 417..... 109
Ballou and Murray, 1 John. Ch. 566.. .. 31
Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. and Kidwell, 11 Gratt. 676..... 91, 101
Banbury v. Lisset, 2 Str. 1211..... 166
Bank of Cape Fear and Attorney General North Car., 5 Ired. Equ. 71..... 462
Bank of Columbia v. Lawrence, 1 Peters 578..... 505
Bank of Pennsylvania v. Commonwealth, 17 Penn. 144..... 480
Bannister v. Hopton, 10 Mod. 12..... 532
Baptist Association v. Hart's ex'ors, 4 Wheat. 1..... 426
Barber v. Crisp, 2 T. R. 749..... 347
Barbour and Haxall & Co., 15 Gratt. 454, note..... 438, 440, 452, 453
Barclay v. Howell's lessee, 6 Peters 498 ..... 532, 546
Barham and The King, 8 Barn. & Cress. 99..... 617
Barham and Power, 4 Ad. & Ell. 473, 7 Car. & Payne 356..... 576
Baring v. Reeder, 1 Hen. & Munf. 154... 462
Barker v. Pool, 6 Missouri 260.....464-5
Barnes and Janney, 11 Leigh 100....406, 420
Barnes and Rockbold, 3 Rand. 473..... 225
Barnett v. Stanton, 2 Alab. 181.....575, 579
Barrington and Brandling, 6 Barn. & Cress. 467..... 617
Bartlett v. Kingan, 19 Penn. 341.....89, 95
Bassett v. Notworthy, 2 White & Tudor's Lead. Cas. 1..... 303-4, 343

Digitized by Google

Baugh, &c. and Harper,&c., 9 Gratt. 508... 347
Baxter and Tarling, 13 Eng. C. L. 159.. 444
Bayley and Olivant, 48 Eng. C. L. 287..580, 584
Beachcroft v. Beachcroft, 1 Madd. 234, 430.....603, 623
Beall v. Edmondson, 3 Call 514..492, 493, 495
Beall v. Joseph, Hardin 51..... 265
Beals v. Olmstead, 24 Verm. 114..... 577
Beatty and Blessing's adm'r, 1 Rob. 287 .....89, 90, 422
Beckwith and Hubbard, 1 Bibb 492. 110
Beebee and Fowler, 9 Mass. 231.. 181
Beebe and Weed, 21 Verm. 495..... 335
Beekman and Frost, 1 John. Ch. 288..... 31
Beeler and Kellar, 4 J. J. Marsh. 655.... 187
Beirne's ex'ors v. Campbell, 4 Gratt. 125. 308
Bell and Hendricks, 1 Bibb 138..... 347
Bell's lessee and Wilson, 7 Leigh 22..... 226
Bennett and Buggin, 4 Burr. 2035..... 532
Bennett and Crofoot, 2 Const. 258..... 445
Bennett and Hilyer, 3 Edwards Ch. 322.. .....334–5, 341
Ben and Ruddle's ex'or, 10 Leigh 467.... .....260, 266, 268, 275
Beresford v. Hobson, 1 Madd. 362..... 372
Bernard and Tuberville, 7 Leigh 302 n... .....112, 114
Berry and Hawkins, 5 Gilman 36 576
Berryman v. Wise, 4 T. R. 366..... 248
Bertrand v. Byrd, 4 Pike 195..... 110
Bicknell and Spears, 5 Mass. 125.....533, 543
Birch and Merchants Bank, 17 John. 25.. 507
Birdsall and Conroe, 1 John. Cas. 127.... 340
Bird's adm'r and James, 8 Leigh 510.... 407
Bishop of Lincoln and Rud, Hutton 66... 220
Bishop of London and King, Shower 413.. 469
Black v. Black, 15 Georgia 445. 28
Black v. Cartmell, 10 B. Monr. 188...609, 631
Blackburne and Strode, 3 Ves. 222..... 304
Blackett v. Royal Exch. Asso. Co., 2 Cromp. & Jer. 244..... 469
Blackweller and Foggart, 4 Ired. 238.... 577
Blackwell and Philliskirk, 2 Maule & Sel. 395..... 164
Blaigrove and Baird, 1 Wash. 170..... 113
Blake and Oriental Bank, 22 Pick. 206... 508
Bland v. Lipscombe, 82 Eng. C. L. 712 n. 466
Blay and Street, 22 Eng. C. L. 124..... 439
Blessing's adm'r v. Beatty, 1 Rob. 287... .....89, 90, 422
Blewett v. Tregonning, 30 Eng. C. L. 151.....464, 466
Blocher and Trotter, 6 Porter 269..... 273
Bloomfield and Schoff, 2 Verm. 472..... 462
Blougher and Brewer, 14 Peters 178..... .....605, 610, 632
Bloxom v. Sanders, 10 Eng. C. L. 477.... 440
Boatwright v. Peasley, 2 Leigh 195..... .....109, 112, 114
Bodfish v. Fox, 23 Maine 90.. 462–3
Bogart v. De Bussey, 6 John. 94..... 211
Bolling v. Mayor, &c., of Petersburg, 3 Rand. 563.... .....348, 534, 547
Boody v. McKenney, 23 Maine 517..... 341
Bool & wife v. Mix, 17 Wend. 119..... 335
Body & als. and Owen & Wish, 31 Eng. C. L. 254.....405, 408, 409
Booley v. The State, 4 Yerg. 111..... 644
Boswell and Stover, 3 Dana 232..... 605
Bottomly v. Grace Church, 2 Calif. 90... 91
Bowden and Jones, 4 Taunt. 847..... 579
Bowe v. Evans, 1 Jones & Lat. 264..... 304
Bowles and Winn, 6 Munf. 23..... 91
Bowyer v. Lewis, 1 Hen. & Munf. 553.. 526
Box v. The King, 6 Taunt. 325..... 167
Boyce's adm'r v. Smith, 9 Gratt. 704..... 422
Boyden v. Boyden, 9 Metc. 519..... 340
Boyden v. Town of Brookline, 8 Verm. 284..... 462
Boyle's adm'r v. Overby, 11 Gratt. 202... 397
Brackin and Scruggs, 4 Yerg. 528..... 110
Bradford and Patterson's dev., Hardin 101..... 347
Bradshaw and Herndon, 4 Bibb 45..... 644
Branch v. Burnley, 1 Call 147..... 462
Branch v. The Commonwealth, 2 Call 570..... 186
Brandling v. Barrington, 6 Barn. & Cress. 467..... 617
Brasher v. Cortlandt, 2 John. Ch. 505.... 292
Browner v. Franklin, 4 Gill 463.....335, 342
Breemen v. Buck, 3 Verm. 53..... 576
Brent and Carrington's heirs, 1 McLean 175..... 28
Brewer v. Blougher, 14 Peters 178..... .....605, 610, 632
Brewster and Lloyd, 4 Paige 537..... ... 407
Brien v. Pitman, 12 Leigh 379... 59
Bright and Jones, 5 Bingh. 535..575, 576, 579
Brightman v. Brightman, 1 Rhode Isl. 112..... 27
Brittain v. Kinnaird, 5 Eng. C. L. 137... 534
Brockenbrough v. Ward's adm'r, 4 Rand. 352..... 503
Brooke v. Shacklett, 13 Gratt. 301..... 433
Brooke v. Washington, 8 Gratt. 248..... 30
Brooke v. Young, 3 Rand. 16... 134
Brown v. Armistead, 6 Rand. 594..... 38
Brown v. De Taslet, 4 Cond. Eng. Ch. 133.....356, 357
Brown v. Dye, 2 Root 280..... 605
Brown v. Dysinger, 1 Rawle 408..... 283
Brown v. Edgington, 2 Man. & Grang. 279, 2 Scott N. R. 496.....575, 579, 581
Brown v. Farran, 3 Hamm. 140..... 463
Brown and Fasset, Peake's Cas. 23..... 109
Brown v. Litton, 1 P. Wms. 140..... 356
Brown and Lyon, Gilm. 105..... .. 348
Brown and Thompson, 4 John. Ch. 619... 357
Browning v. Headley, 2 Rob. 340.....368, 372
Bruce & Warfield and Willis, 8 B. Monr. 548..... 265
Brush v. Kinsley, 14 Ohio 20..... 307
Bryan v. Stump, 8 Gratt. 241..... 210
Bryant and Owen, 13 Eng. L. & E. 217 .....603, 619
Buchanan v. Clark, 10 Gratt. 164.....91, 103
Buchan v. Sumner, 2 Barb. Ch. 165..... 28
Buck and Breeman, 3 Verm. 53..... 576
Buckley v. Buckley, 11 Barb. S. C. 43.... 28
Buckman v. Hancy, 6 Eng. Ark. 337..... 576
Buckminster and Warren, 4 Foster New Hamp. 336..... 438
Buckner's adm'r and Green, 6 Leigh 82.. 503
Buckner v. Mackay, 2 Leigh 488..... 109
Buggin v. Bennett, 4 Burr. 2035..... 532
Bull and Jackson, 10 John. 19..... 356
Bullock and Anderson, 4 Munf. 442..... .....109, 112, 113
Bully and Crawford, Wright 453..... 165
Bunnett and Prideaux, 87 Eng. C. L. 613 .....578, 580, 584
Burchell v. Slocock, 2 Ld. Ray. 1545.... 167
Burchin and Jackson, 14 John. 124...336, 338

Digitized by Google

Burdett and Taylor, 11 Leigh 339.....194, 196
Burnaby and Regina, 2 Ld. Ray. 300, Comy. 131.....535, 540
Burnley v. Branch, 1 Call 147..... 462
Burrell and King, 12 Adol. & Ell. 468.... 481
Burrowes v. Lock, 10 Ves. 473..... 109
Burton and Barley, 8 Wend. 339..... 406
Burtus v. Tisdall, 4 Barb. S. C. 571..... 406
Burwell v. Mandeville's ex'ors, 2 How. U. S. 560.....30, 33, 34
Bute and Stuart, 11 Ves. 665..... 28
Butler and Wooster, 13 Conn. 309..... 546
Byrd and Bertrand, 4 Pike 195..... 110
Cabiness v. Martin, 3 Dev. Law 455..... 391
Cain v. Cain, 1 B. Monr. 213..... 644
Calcord v. Seamonds, 6 B. Monr. 265.... 303
Caldwell and Godefroy, 2 Calif. 489..... 91
Calhoun and Wheatley's heirs, 12 Leigh 264..... 28
Camac v. Warringer, 5 Eng. C. L. 354... 580
Camp and Arnold, 12 John. 409..... 303
Campbell and Beirne's ex'ors, 4 Gratt. 125..... 308
Campbell v. Chapman, 13 Gratt. 105..... .....437–8, 448
Cannell v. Curtis, 29 Eng. C. L. 316..... 248
Cannon v. Smallwood, 3 Levinz 203..... .....539, 540, 543
Caperton's ex'or and Lewis, 8 Gratt. 148.. .....157, 302, 307, 308
Carlisle v. Dupree, 3 J. J. Marsh. 542.... 166
Carlos v. Fancourt, 5 T. R. 481..... 164
Carnochan v. Gould, 1 Bailey 179....575, 579
Carpenter and Jackson, 11 John. 539..335, 338
Carpenter and Page, 10 N. Hamp. 77.... 445
Carrington's heirs v. Brent, 1 McLean 175..... 28
Carrington v. Goddin, 13 Gratt. 587..... 339
Carson and Harris, 7 Leigh 632..464, 470, 474
Carter and Jones' dev., 4 Hen. & Munf. 184..... 211
Carter and Sawney, 6 Rand. 173.....265, 275
Cartmell and Black, 10 B. Monr. 188..... .....605, 609, 631
Cartwright v. Vawdry, 5 Ves. 530..... 601
Carver v. Jackson, 4 Peters 83..... 226
Casamajor v. Strode, 1 Cond. Eng. Ch. 195..... 291
Castleman and Graff, 5 Rand. 195..... 48
Cave v. Coleman, 3 Man. & Ryl. 2..... 576
Cawthorn v. Courtney, 6 Gratt. 381..... 90
Chadwick v. Allen, Str. 706..... 167
Chambers v. Donaldson, 11 East 65..... 248
Champneys and Sturgis, 5 Mylne & Craig 97, 9 Law Jour. N. S. 100.....370, 371
Chandelor v. Lopus, Croke Jac. 2..... 578
Chanter v. Hopkins, 4 Mees. & Welsb. 399.....579, 580, 584
Chapman and Campbell, 13 Gratt. 105... .....437–8, 448
Chapman v. Morton, 11 Mees. & Welsb. 533..... 145
Chapman v. Murch, 19 John. 390..... 577
Chapman and Newman, 2 Rand. 93..... 27
Chapman v. Tanner, 1 Vern. 267..... 307
Charlton v. Low, 3 P. Wms. 328..... 304
Chemut v. Shane, 16 Ohio 599..... 463
Chester & Holyhead Railway Co. and Grote, 2 Exch. 251..... 237
Chester Valley Co. and Allen, 21 Conn. 130..... 406
Chichester and Walker, 2 Brevard 67.... 462
Childrey and Siegel, 4 Casey 279..... 418
Christian and Whittington, 2 Rand. 357.. 348
Christ's Hospital and Attorney General, 3 Bro. Ch. 165..... 356
City of Cincinnati v. White, 6 Peters 431 .....532, 546
Clark and Buchanan, 10 Gratt. 164....91, 103
Clarke's lessee v. Courtney, 5 Peters 318.. 211
Clarke v. Hall, 7 Paige 382..... 308
Clarke v. Mayo, 4 Call 374..... 472
Clarke v. Wickes, 8 Paige 161....371, 373, 376
Clay's ex'or and White, 7 Leigh 68..... 525
Clement and Delahay, 3 Scam. 201..... .. 89
Coalter's ex'ors and Williamson, 14 Gratt. 394..... .. 273
Coate & als. and Williams, 9 Eng. L. & E. 481.....409, 410, 414
Cobbs and Tapscott, 11 Gratt. 172..... .....193, 200, 201, 218, 347
Cocke and Coleman, 6 Rand. 618..... 304
Cockerell and Hopkins, 2 Gratt. 88..... 308
Codman's ex'or and Wilson, 3 Cranch 193..... 164
Coleman and Cane, 3 Man. & Ryl. 2..... 576
Coleman v. Cocke, 6 Rand. 618..... 304
Cole's adm'r v. McRae, 6 Rand. 644....91, 103
Colemere's lessee v. Whitroe, 16 Eng. C. L. 409..... 220
Cole and Taylor, 3 T. R. 292..... 221
Colgate and Driver, 4 Burr. 2040..... 532
Colgate and Swett, 20 John. 196..... 578
Collier's Case, 6 Coke 16 a..... 355
Collier and Mountney, 16 Eng. L. & E. 233..... 533
Collins and Crawshaw, 15 Ves. 218, 1 Jac. & Walk. 267..... 356
Collins v. Hood, 4 McLean 186..... 406
Collins v. Hoxie, 9 Paige 81... 619
Collins and The People, 7 John. 549..... 181
Colton v. Ross, 2 Paige 396..... 406
Colvin and Roberts, 3 Gratt. 358..... 187
Combe v. Ingram, 4 Dowl. & Ryl. 211.... 164
Commonwealth and Bank of Pennsylvania, 17 Penn. 144.... 480
Commonwealth and Branch, 2 Call 570.. 186
Commonwealth v. Jackson's ex'or, 1 Leigh 485..... 186
Commonwealth and Southwark Bank, 26 Penn. 446..... 480
Compton and Payne, 2 Younge & Col. Exch. 457..... 304
Conroe v. Birdsall, 1 John. Cas. 127..... 340
Cooke and Pruslau, Freem. Ch. 24..... 304
Cook and Foster, 1 Hawks 509..... 406
Cook v. Holmes, 11 Mass. 328..... 356
Cook v. Moseley, 13 Wend. 277..... 577
Coolidge v. Larned, 8 Pick. 504.....462, 472
Coombe's Case, 9 Rep. 75..... 211
Cooper and Leuckhart, 32 Eng. C. L. 59.. 464
Copeland v. The State, 7 Humph. 479... 645
Cornwal v. Wilson, 1 Ves. sen. 509..... 145
Cortlandt and Brasher, 2 John. Ch. 505.. 292
Coster v. Coster, 9 Sim. 597..... 371
Coster v. Murray, 5 John. Ch. 522, 20 John. 576..... 494
Countess of Rutland's Case, 5 Rep. 25... 120
Courtney and Cawthorn, 6 Gratt. 381.... 90
Courtney and Clarke's lessee, 5 Peters 318.. 211
Coxe and Steiner, 4 Penn. 13.....462, 463
Cox v. Romine, 9 Gratt. 97.....90, 303
Craig v. Sebrell, 9 Gratt. 131..... 344

Digitized by Google

Cralle v. Meem, 8 Gratt. 496..... 568
Crandall and Randall, 6 Hill 342..... 543
Crane v. Drake, 2 Vern. 616..... 46
Craven's ex'or and Haywood, 2 Caro. L. R. 557..... 723
Crawford v. Bully, Wright 453..... 165
Crawford v. McDaniel, 1 Rob. 448..... 523
Crawshaw v. Collins, 15 Ves. 218, 1 Jac. & Walk. 267..... 350
Creber and Right, 5 Barn. & Cress. 866.. 559
Cresinger v. Lessee of Welch, 15 Ohio 156..... 336
Cridland and The Queen, 90 Eng. C. L. 853.....533, 541, 545
Crisp v. Barber, 2 T. R. 749..... 347
Crockett and Trotter, 2 Porter 301..... 303
Crofoot v. Bennett, 2 Const. 258..... 445
Cromwell v. Tate, 7 Leigh 301..... .....109, 110, 111, 112, 114, 116, 117, 120
Culbreath and Field, 2 Call 547..... 347
Culpeper's Case, 2 Freeman 124..... 343
Cunningham v. Ashbrook, 20 Missouri 553.....440, 445
Cunningham v. Freeborn, 11 Wend. 240... 411
Cunningham v. Mitchell, 4 Rand. 189.... 62
Cunningham and Skipwith, 8 Leigh 271 .....156, 157, 406, 402
Curran's Case, 7 Gratt. 619..... 646
Currie v. Martin, 3 Call 28..... 347
Currie v. Page, 2 Leigh 617..... 464
Curtis and Cannell, 29 Eng. C. L. 316.... 248
Curtis and Stiles and others, 4 Day 328.. 532
Cutler v. Dickinson, 8 Pick. 386..... 187
Cuyler and White, 6 T. R. 176..... 211
Dallison and Wigglesworth, Doug. 201.. 471
Damon v. Osborne, 1 Pick. 476..... 440
Dance, &c., v. Seaman, &c., 11 Gratt. 778..... 157
Daniel v. Leitch, 13 Gratt. 195..... 568
Dauncey and Doe, 7 Taunt. 674..... 462
Darby and Edwards, 12 Wheat. 206..... 462
Davies and Evans, 27 Eng. Ch. 498..... 602
Davis and Godfrey, 6 Ves. 43..... 602
Davis and Nichols' adm'r, 1 Bibb 490.... 166
Davis v. Rowe, 6 Rand. 355.....463, 604, 625
Davis and Van Schaick's lessee, 5 Cow. 123..... 220
Davis and Whitley, 1 Swan. 333..... 110
Dawkes v. De Loraine, 3 Wils. 207..... 166
Dawson and The Literary Fund, 10 Leigh 147..... 433
De Bussy and Bogart, 6 John. 95..... 211
Deck & als. and Kirtley, 2 Munf. 10..... 396
De Forest v. Bacon & als., 2 Conn. 633.. 410
De Haber v. Queen of Portugal, 7 Eng. L. & E. 340..... 532
Dehew and Saunders, 2 Vern. 271..... 343
Delahay v. Clement, 3 Scam. 201..... 89
Delancey and McKeen, 5 Cranch 22, 1 Wash. C. C. 525 463
Deloney v. Hutcheson, 2 Rand. 183..... 28
De Loraines and Dawkes, 3 Wils. 207.... 166
Denn v. Meller, 5 T. R. 558, 1 Bos. & Pul. 558, 2 Id. 249..... 356
Denn and Wright, 10 Wheat. 204..... 356
Depriest and Franklin's adm'r, 13 Gratt. 257..... 187
Desha v. Holland, 12 Alab. 513..... 462
De Tastet and Brown, 4 Cond. Eng. Ch. 133.....356–7
Dewes and Marsh, 20 Eng. L. & E. 356.. 533
Dicas and Thompson, 1 Cromp. & Mees. 768..... 531
Diersly and Nevil's Case, 1 Leon. 301.... 248
Dieterick and Andrew, 14 Wend. 31..438, 445
Dilworth's Case, 12 Gratt. 689..... ....644, 645, 646, 647
D. Moleynes and Joyce, 2 Jones & Lat. 374..... 304
Dixon v. Myers, 7 Gratt. 240.....438, 440, 448
Dodd v. Kyffin, 7 T. R. 354..... 248
Dodge and Outwater, 7 Cow. 85..... 438
Dod and Paul, 2 Mah. Gran. & Scott 81.. 91
Dodsley v. Varley, 40 Eng. C. L. 141.... 438
Dodson v. Simpson, 2 Rand. 294..... 48
Doe v. ex dem. Atkyns v. Horde, 2 Crowp. 689..... 221
Doe ex dem. Birtwhistle v. Varnum, 11 Eng. C. L. 366..... 599
Doe v. Cowley, 11 Eng. C. L. 399..... 532
Doe v. Dauncey, 7 Taunt. 674..... 462
Doe ex dem. Humphrey v. Martin, 41 Eng. C. L. 23..... 193–4
Doe ex dem. Leeming v. Skirrow, 34 Eng. C. L. 64..... 194
Doe v. Perryn, 3 T. R. 484..... 559
Doe v. Provost, 3 T. R. 484..... 559
Doe v. Provost, 4 John. 61..... 559
Doe v. Richards, 3 T. R. 356..... 356
Doe on demise of Thomason v. Anderson, 4 Leigh 118..... 608
Doe ex dem. Thorn v. Phillips, 23 Eng. C. L. 178..... 356
Dold's trustee v. Geiger's adm'r, 2 Gratt. 98.....368, 371, 376, 379
Donaldson and Chambers, 11 East 65.... 248
Dorrence and Vanhorne's lessee, 2 Dall. 304..... 464
Dovaston v. Payne, Smith's Lead. Cas. 44 Law Libr. 139.....534, 546
Dover v. Alexander, 24 Eng. Ch. 275..593, 622
Dow and Knowles, 2 Foster 387.....462, 463
Downes and Weston, 1 Doug. 23..... 582
Downman v. Rust, 6 Rand. 557..... 30
Drake and Crane, 2 Vern. 616..... 46
Dresser Manuf. Co. v. Waterton, 3 Metc. 9..... 438
Driver v. Colgate, 4 Burr. 2040..... 532
Drummond v. McLeod, 17 Ves. 153.....46, 48
Dubree and Carlisle, 3 J. J. Marsh. 542.. 166
Dudley and Payne, 1 Wash. 196..... 334
Duffee v. Mason, 8 Cow. 25..... 577
Duke of Devon and Methan, 1 P. Wms. 529..... 601
Dummer v. Selectmen of Jersey City, 1 Spencer 86..... 532
Dundas and Hepburn, 13 Gratt. 219..... 605
Dunham & Dinon v. Waterman, 3 Duer 156..... 411
Dunlap and Logan, 3 Scam. 189..... 91
Dunlop v. Harrison, 14 Gratt. 251..... 273
Dunlop and Pearson, Cowp. 571..... 168
Durand and Hart, cited 2 Jarm. Wills 135..... 601
Durant v. Friend, 11 Eng. L. & E. 2.... 619
Durham and Phippen, 8 Gratt. 457..... 157
Durrant and Argent, 8 T. R. 403..... 248
Dutchess of Kingston's Case, 20 Howel's St. Trials 38..... 204
Dye and Brown, 2 Root 280..... 605
Dysinger and Brown, 1 Rawle 408.... 282
Eagle Bank v. Hathaway, 5 Metc. 212... 505
Earle v. Wilson, 17 Ves. 528.....601, 602

Digitized by Google

Earl of Northumberland v. Marquis of Grandy, 1 Eden 489, 2 Amb. 540..... 356
Earl of Radnor and Talbot, 9 Cond. Eng. Ch. 22..... 356
Eden and Stewart, 2 Caine's R. 121 .....507, 508, 510
Edgar v. Salisbury, 17 Missouri 271..... 91
Edgington and Brown, 2 Man. & Gran. 279, 2 Scott N. R. 496.....575, 579, 581
Edmondson and Beall, 3 Call 514..492, 493, 495
Edwards v. Darby, 12 Wheat. 206..... 462
Edwards, v. Freeman, 2 P. Wms. 435.... 628
Efford and Rice, 3 Hen. & Munf. 225.... 604
Elderton and Landsdown, 14 Ves. 512.... 292
Elias v. Smith, 6 Humph. 33.....263, 275
Elibank and Montolieu, 5 Ves. 737..... 373
Elliott v. Merryman, 1 Lead. Cas. Equ. 40 .....40, 48
Ellis v. Thilman, 3 Call 3..... 396
Ellzey v. Lane's ex'x, 2 Hen. & Munf. 589..... 526
Elwell v. Shaw, 16 Mass. 42..... 211
Ely and Greene, 2 Greene (Iowa) 508.... 91
Embry & als. and Robins & als., 1 Smedes & Marsh. Ch. 207..... 411
Emerick v. Tavener, 9 Gratt. 220..... 218
English v. Foote, 8 Smedes & Marsh. 444..... 91
English v. Helms, 4 Texas 228..... 110
Etheridge and Addington, 12 Gratt. 436.....405, 416
Evans and Bowen, 1 Jones & Lat. 264... 304
Evans v. Davies, 27 Eng. Ch. 498..... 602
Evans v. Massey, 8 Price Exch. 22..... 602
Evans and Smith, 5 Hump. 70.....304, 341
Everhart and Trasher, 3 Gill & John. 234..... 110
Ex parte Knott, 11 Ves. 609..... 304
Fagg's Case, 1 Vern. 52.....334, 343
Fairlie and Freeman, 11 Jur. 447..... 371
Fancourt and Carlos, 5 T. R. 482..... 165
Faris v. Starke, 3 B. Monr. 4..... 391
Farmers Bank at Petersburg and Mason, 12 Leigh 84..... 397
Farran and Brown, 3 Hamm. 140..... 463
Farr and Meredith, 21 Eng. Ch. 525..... 603
Fasset v. Brown, Peake's Cas. 23..... 109
Fawell v. Heelis, Amb. 724..... 306
Featherstonhaugh v. Fenwick, 17 Ves. 298..... 356
Fenwick and Featherstonhaugh, 17 Ves. 298..... 356
Ferguson and Foshay, 2 Denio 617..... 391
Ferris and Heaton, 1 John. 146..... 543
Ferris and Wilkes, 5 John. 335..... 440
Ferson v. Monroe, 1 Foster New H. 462.. 406
Fidgeon and Laing, 4 Camp. 169, 6 Taunt. 108..... 575
Field v. Culbreath, 2 Call 547..... 347
Field and Keeler, 1 Paige 312..... 438
Field v. Schieffelin, 7 John. Ch. 150..... 47
Findlay v. Smith, 6 Munf. 134..... 462
Fitzpatrick and Kinley, 4 How. Miss. 59 576
Flack and Van Vacter, 1 Smedes & Marsh. 393..... 165
Flanagan v. Grimmet, 10 Gratt. 427..... 226
Fletcher and Garr, 2 Stark. 71..... 248
Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch 87..... 464
Fletcher v. Seekell, 1 Rhode Isl. 267..... 464
Flinthan v. Holder, 1 Dev. Equ. 345..... 605
Flowers and Martin, 8 Leigh 158..... 211
Fly and Harris, 7 Paige 471..... 356
Foggart v. Blackweller, 4 Ired. 238..... 577
Foote and English, 8 Smeedes & Marsh. 444..... 91
Ford v. The State, 1 Spear 150..... 645
Foreman v. Loyd, 2 Leigh 284..... 159
Foshay v. Ferguson, 2 Denio 617..... 391
Foster v. Cook, 1 Hawks 509..... 407
Foster v. The Saco Manufacturing Co., 12 Pick. 441..... 411
Foulke and Anderson, 2 Har. & Gill 346 .....292, 293, 295, 297
Fowler v. Beebee, 9 Mass. 231..... 181
Fowler v. Shearer, 7 Mass. 14..... 211
Fox and Bodfish, 23 Maine 90.....462-3
Fox v. Mountjoy, ex'or, 6 Munf. 36..... 525
Fragano and Long, 10 Eng. C. L. 313... 439
Franklin and Brawner, 4 Gill 463....335, 342
Franklin's adm'r v. Depriest, 13 Gratt. 257..... 187
Frazer v. Pigot, 1 Younge 354.....603, 623
Frazier v. Frazier's ex'ors, 2 Leigh 642 187
Freeborn and Cunningham, 11 Wend. 240 411
Freeman and Edwards, 2 P. Wms. 435... 628
Freeman v. Fairlie, 11 Jur. 447..... 371
Freeman and Shattuck, 1 Metc. 10..... 404
French v. Loyal Company, 5 Leigh 627.. 27
Friend and Durant, 11 Eng. L. & E. 2... 619
Frisbie v. Larned, 21 Wend. 450..... 303
Frontin v. Small, 1 Str. 705, 2 Ld. Ray. 1418..... 211
Frost v. Beckman, 1 John. Ch. 288..... 31
Frost v. Wolverton, 1 Str. 94..... 338
Gallaher v. Waring, 9 Wend. 28.....575, 579
Gallego's ex'ors v. Attorney General, 3 Leigh 450.....425, 426, 430, 433
Gallego v. Gallego's ex'ors, 2 Brock. 285.. 368
Gardner and Alexander, 27 Eng. C. L. 538..... 439
Gardner v. Gardner, 3 Mason 178..... 356
Gardner v. Gray, 4 Camp. 144..... 579
Gardner v. Newburgh, 2 John. Ch. 161... 464
Garland, ex parte, 10 Ves. 110.....33, 34
Garland v. Harrison, 8 Leigh 368..... .....598, 604, 605, 606, 612, 625, 628, 629, 632
Garland v. Rives, 4 Rand. 282..... 156
Garnett v. Jones, 4 Leigh 633..... 521
Garnett v. Macon, 2 Brock. 185..... 46
Garr v. Fletcher, 2 Stark. 71..... 248
Garth's Case, 3 Leigh 761.....465, 482
Gateward's Case, 6 Rep. 60..... 446
Gatliffe's adm'r v. Rose, 8 B. Monr. 629.. 266
Gaylord's adm'r and Parsons, 3 John. 463..... 303
Geiger's adm'r and Dold's trustee, 2 Gratt. 98. .....371, 376, 379
Gibbs and James, 1 Pat. & Heath 277.... .....371, 379
Gibson v. Horton, 5 Harr. & John. 177... 356
Gibson and Jones, 1 N. Hamp. 266..... 184
Gill v. Shelley, 13 Cond. Eng. Ch. 63, 2 Jarm. 136..... 601, 602
Girard's ex'ors and Viddal, 2 How. U. S. 127..... 426
Gist and Relph, 4 McCord 267.....109, 110
Givens and Wiley, 6 Gratt. 277..... 226
Glassell and Pollock, 2 Gratt. 439..... .....109, 110, 111, 115, 117
Glazer and Taylor, 2 Serg. & Rawle 502.. 110
Goddard's Case, 2 Coke 5..... 109

Digitized by Google

Goddin and Carrington, 13 Gratt. 587.... 339
Goddin v. Vaughn, 14 Gratt. 102..... 568
Godefroy v. Caldwell, 3 Calif. 489..... 91
Godfrey v. Davis, 6 Ves. 43..... 602
Gomersal and Bishop's Case, 1 Leon 128 .....531, 533
Goodtitle v. Alker, 1 Burr. 133...534, 546, 547
Goodwin and Rogers, 2 Mass. 475..... 463
Gordon v. Gordon, 1 Meriv. 141..... 602
Gordon and The King, 2 Leach. C. C. 15 248
Gordon and Tramwell, 11 Alab. 056..... 662
Gordon v. Sims, 2 McCord's Ch. 151..... 292
Gordon's ex'ors and Williamson, 5 Munf. 257..... 304
Gough and Shine, 1 Ball & Beat 436..... 304
Gould and Carnohan, 1 Bailey 179...575, 579
Governor for Liggatt v. Withers, 5 Gratt. 24..... 464
Grace Church and Bottomly, 2 Calif. 90. 91
Graff v. Castleman, 5 Rand. 195..... 48
Gray and Gardner, 4 Camp. 144..... 579
Gray's ex'ors and Spring & als., 6 Peters 151..... 494
Green and Buckner's adm'r, 6 Leigh 82.. 503
Greene v. Ely, 2 Greene (Iowa) 508..... 91
Green v. Judith, 5 Rand. 1..... 574
Green v. Slayter, 4 John. Ch. 38.....45–6
Green v. Watkins, 7 Wheat. 27..... 348
Green and Willis, 5 Hill N. Y. 232..... 508
Greer and Williams, 12 Georgia 459..... 110
Gregorie and Young, 3 Call 446..... 396
Gregory's adm'r v. Marks' adm'r, 1 Rand. 355..... 368
Grellier v. Neale, Peak's Cas. 146..... 109
Grimmet and Flanagan, 10 Gratt. 427... 226
Grimstead v. Marlow, 4 T. R. 717..... 466
Gross v. Pearcy, 2 Pat. & Heath 483..... 297
Grote v. Chester & Holyhead Railway Co., 2 Exch. 251..... 237
Hafner v. Irwin, 1 Tred. Law 490..... 405
Haggerty v. Palmer, 6 John. Ch. 437..... 438
Haigh and Inglis, 8 Mees. & Welsb. 781. 494
Haldane v. Harvey, 4 Burr. 2484..... 347
Hale and Walton, 9 Gratt. 194...225, 226, 347
Hall and Clarke, 7 Paige 382..... 308
Hall and Ingram, 1 Hayw. 193.....109, 110
Hall v. Suydam, 6 Barb. S. C. 83..... 391
Hamilton v. Marsden, 6 Binn. 45..... 283
Hamilton v. Myrick, 3 Pike 541..... 165
Hamlet and Sumner, 12 Pick. 76..... 445
Hammock and Hankey, 3 Madd. 148..... 33
Hammond and Wellock, Croke Eliz..204. 356
Hancy and Buckman, 6 Eng. Ark. 339... 576
Handly and Nickell & Miller, 10 Gratt. 336..... 407
Handly v. Snodgrass, 9 Leigh 484..... 422
Handy v. The State, 7 Missouri 607..... 465
Hankey v. Hammock, 3 Madd. 148..... 33
Hannah and Hannon, 9 Gratt. 146..... 348
Hanna v. Mills, 21 Wend. 90..... 91
Hanna v. Wilson, 3 Gratt. 243....91, 308, 309
Hannam and The Margate Pier, 5 Eng. C. L. 278..... 184
Hannon v. Osborn, 4 Paige 336..... 559
Hannon v. Hannah, 9 Gratt. 146..... 348
Hanson v. Keating, 30 Eng. Ch. 1...370, 379
Harcourt v. Knowel, 2 Vern. 159..... 343
Hardeman, adm'r, and Pillow, 3 Humph. 538..... 509
Harding v. Harding, 18 Eng. Ch. 514.... ..... 292, 297
Harlow v. Humiston, 6 Cow. 189..... 141
Harper, &c., v. Baugh, &c., 9 Gratt. 508.. 347
Harris v. Carson, 7 Leigh 632... 464, 470, 474
Harris v. Fly, 7 Paige 471..... 356
Harris v. Jays, Cro. Eliz. 699..... 184
Harris v. Loyd, 11 Cond. Eng. Ch. 174... .....602, 622
Harris and McClure, 12 B. Monr. 265.... 303
Harris v. Nicholas, 5 Munf. 483..... 463
Harris v Smith, 3 Serg. & Rawle 20..... 438
Harris and Tatlock, 3 T. R. 163..... 303
Harris and Warren, 2 Gilm. 307..... 90
Harris and Withers, 7 Mod. 64..... 220
Harrison and Dunlop, 14 Gratt. 251..... 273
Harrison and Garland, 8 Leigh 368..... .....598, 604, 605, 606, 612, 625, 628, 629, 632
Harrow's Case, 7 Mod. 113..... .....531, 533
Harsen and Meriam, 2 Barb. Ch. 232..... 463
Hart's ex'ors and Baptist Association, 4 Wheat. 1..... 426
Hart v. Durand, cited 2 Jarm. Wills 135.. 601
Hart's devisees v. Hawkins' heirs, 3 Bibb 502..... 28
Hartsinck and Haussoullier, 7 T. R. 733.. 168
Harvey and Haldane, 4 Burr. 2484..... 347
Hatcher's Case, 6 Gratt. 667..... 669
Hatcher's adm'r v. Hatcher's ex'ors, 1 Rand. 53..... .....307, 308
Hatch v. Trayes, 39 Eng. C. L. 207..... 164
Hatch v. Vermont Cent. R. R. Co., 25 Verm. 49..... 463
Hathaway and Eagle Bank, 5 Metc. 212.. 505
Haussoullier v. Hartsinck, 7 T. R. 733... 168
Hawkins v. Berry, 5 Gilman 36..... 576
Hawkins' heirs v. Hart's devisees, 3 Bibb 502..... 28
Haxall & Co. v. Barbour, 15 Gratt. 454 n. 438, 440, 452, 453
Haydock v. Lynch, 2 Ld. Ray. 1563..... 166
Haywood v. Craven's ex'or, 2 Caro. L. R. 557..... 273
Hazey and Myrick, 27 Maine 9..... 463
Hedley and Browning, 2 Rob. 340....368, 373
Heaseman and Moone, Willis 138..... 356
Heathcote v. Hulme, 1 Jac. & Walk. 122.. 356
Heath's Case, 1 Rob. 735..... ....645, 646
Heath v. White, 5 Conn. 228..... 605
Heaton v. Ferris, 1 John. 146..... 543
Heck v. Skener, 4 Serg. & Rawle 249...89, 90
Heelis and Fawell, Amb. 724..... 306
Heiskell and Jackson, 1 Leigh 257..... 159
Helms and English, 4 Texas 228..... 110
Hendricks v. Bell, 1 Bibb 138..... 347
Hepburn v. Dundas, 13 Gratt. 219..... 605
Herle and Jenny, 1 Str. 591, 2 Ld. Ray. 1361..... 166
Herndon v. Bradshaw, 4 Bibb 45..... 644
Hewlett and Parks, 9 Leigh 511..... .....109, 110, 111, 115, 116, 117, 119
Heydon's Case, 3 Coke 7 b..... 463
Hibbert v. Shee, 1 Camp. 113..... 579
Higgins and Jolliffe, 6 Munf. 3..... 166
Higgins and Lawson & als., 1 Mich. 225.. 91
Higgins and Regina, note D, 55 Eng. C. L. 147..... 534
Hill v. Anderson, 5 Smedes & Marsh. 216.. 340
Hilliard v. Allen, 4 Cush. 532..... 91
Hillman v. Wilcox, 30 Maine 170..... 576
Hill v. Simpson, 7 Ves. 152.....46, 48, 49
Hills and Kemion, 1 Louis. Ann. 419..... 462
Hillyer v. Bennett, 3 Edwards Ch. 222.. .....334–5, 341

Digitized by Google

Hind v. Whitehouse, 7 East 558..... 440
Hobson and Beresford. 1 Madd. 362..... 372
Hoey and Howard, 23 Wend. 350.....375, 579
Hog and The King, 1 T. R. 721 463
Holder and Flintham, 1 Dev. Equ. 345... 605
Holland and Desha, 12 Alab. 513.... ... 462
Hollins and Sorresby, 9 Mod. 223..... 463
Holmes and Cook, 11 Mass. 528..... 356
Holmes v. Shands, 26 Miss. 639..... 91
Holt and Moore, 10 Gratt. 184..... 59
Hood and Collins, 4 McLean 186..... 406
Hover v. Wheeler, 23 Miss. 314..... 89
Hopkins and Chanter, 4 Mees. & Welsb. 399.....580, 584
Hopkins v. Cockerell, 2 Gratt. 88..... 308
Hopkins and Wells, 5 Mees. & Welsb. 7.. 450
Hopton and Bannister, 10 Mod. 12..... 532
Horner and Lett, 5 Black. 296..... 465
Horton and Gibson, 5 Har. & John. 177.. 356
Houdlet and Oliver, 13 Mass. 237..... 335
Houghton v. Rushby, Skinner 257..... 463
Howard v. Hoey, 23 Wend. 350.....575, 579
Howard and Negro Cato, 2 Har. & John. 323..... 265
Howard and Williamson's ex'or, 2 Rob. 39..... 422
Howell's lessee and Barclay, 6 Peters 498 .....532, 546
Howe v. Nappier, 4 Burr. 1944..... 532
Howland and Selph, 23 Miss. 264..... 91
Hoxie and Collins, 9 Paige 81..... 619
Hubbard v. Beckwith, 1 Bibb 492..... 110
Hudgins v. Right, 1 Hen. & Munf. 134.. 324
Hudnut and Kinney, 2 Scam. 172.....89, 95
Hudson v. Johnson, 1 Wash. 10..... 462
Hulme and Heathcote, 1 Jac. & Walk. 122..... 356
Humiston and Harlow, 6 Cow. 189..... 141
Hundley and Armstead, 7 Gratt. 52..... 335
Hunter and Hutchinson, 7 Pa. Barr. 140.. 438
Hunter v. Trustees of Sandy Hill, 6 Hill N. Y. 407..... 532
Hunt v. Silk, 5 East 449..... 582
Hurt's comm'rs and Jenkins, 2 Rand. 446 .....109, 112, 114
Hutcheson and Deloney, 2 Rand. 183 ... 28
Hutchins v. Olcott, 4 Verm. 549..... 303
Hutchinson v. Hunter, 7 Pa. Barr. 140.. 438
Hutchinson & wife v. Rust, 2 Gratt. 394.. 89
Hutchinson v. Smith, 7 Paige 26.....405, 406
Hutson v. Lowry, 2 Va. Cas. 42.....531, 532
Inglis v. Haigh, 8 Mees. & Welsb. 781... 494
Ingram and Combe, 4 Dowl. & Ryl. 216.. 164
Ingram v. Hall, 1 Hayne 193.....109, 110
Inloes and American Exchange Bank, 7 Maryl. 380..... .....405, 411
Irwin and Hafner, 1 Ired. Law 490..... 405
Isaacs v. Steel, 3 Scam. 97..... 462
Isabel and Pegram, 2 Hen. & Munf. 193.. 322
Jackson v. Bull, 10 John. 19..... 356
Jackson v. Burchen, 14 John. 124..335, 336, 338
Jackson v. Carpenter, 11 John. 539...335, 338
Jackson and Carver, 4 Peters 83..... 226
Jackson v. Heiskell, 1 Leigh 257..... 159
Jackson v. Martin, 18 John. 31..... .. 356
Jackson and Ralston, 1 Sneed 128..... 391
Jackson's ex'or and The Commonwealth, 1 Leigh 485..... .. 186
Jackson v. Updegraffe, 1 Rob. 107..... 49
Jackson v. Wetherill, 7 Serg. & Raw. 482..... 578
James v. Bird's adm'r, 8 Leigh 510... .. 407
James, &c. v. Gibbs, &c., 1 Pat. & Heath 277.....368, 371, 379
James and Mayo, mayor, 12 Gratt. 18.... 533
Janes v. Whitbread, 5 Eng. L. & E. 431 ..... 405, 406, 409, 410, 414
Janney v. Barnes, 11 Leigh 100.....406, 420
Jays and Harris, Cro. Eliz. 699..... 184
Jeffery v. Underwood, 1 Pike 108..... 110
Jenkins v. Hurt's comm'rs, 2 Rand. 446 .....109, 112, 114
Jenny v. Herle, 1 Str. 591, 2 Ld. Ray. 1361..... 166
Jerrard v. Saunders, 2 Ves. jr. 454..... 304
Johns and Middleton, 4 Gratt. 129..... .....193, 200, 201
Johnson and Hudson, 1 Wash. 10 462
Johnson and Poling, 2 Rob. 255..... 62
Johnson v. Kennett, 3 Myl. & Keene 624, 10 Cond. Eng. Ch. 332..... 52
Johnson v. Thompson, 4 J. J. Marsh. 380 303
Johnston's Case, 5 Gratt. 660..... 645
Johnstone v. Sutton, 1 T. R. 493..... 387
Jolliffe v. Higgins, 6 Munf. 3..... 166
Jones v. Alexander, 10 Smedes & Marsh. 627.....89, 95
Jones v. Bowden, 4 Taunt. 847..... 579
Jones v. Bright, 5 Bing. 535, 3 Moore & Paine 155..... .....575, 576, 679
Jones' dev. v. Carter, 4 Hen. & Munf. 184..... 211
Jones' Case, 1 Leigh 598..... ....645, 646
Jones and Garnett, 4 Leigh 633..... 521
Jones v. Gibson, 1 N. Hamp. 266. 184
Jones v. Jones, 6 Mees. & Welsb. 84..... 164
Jones and Kennaird, 9 Gratt. 183..... 437
Jones v. Logwood, 1 Wash. 42..... 109
Jones and Richardson, 3 Gill & John. 163 .....292, 295
Jones v. Smart, 1 T. R. 44..... 617
Jones v. Smith, 2 Bulstr. 36..... ... 469
Josceline v. Lasserre, Fortesc. 281, 10 Mod. 294..... 166
Joseph and Beall, Hardin 51... 265
Joyce v. Adams, 4 Seld. S. C. 291..... 438
Joyce v. D. Moleynes, 2 Jones & Lat. 374..... ... 304
Judith and Green, 5 Rand. 1..... 574
Justices of Allen County v. Allen, 2 A. K. Marsh. 30..... 347
Keanlake and Morgan, 5 T. R. 514..... 303
Keating and Hanson, 30 Eng. Ch. 1..370, 379
Keeler v. Field, 1 Paige 312..... 438
Keeling and Stones, 5 Call 543..... .....604, 610, 625, 629
Keen and McCandlish, 13 Gratt. 615..... 303
Keezee v. Leece, referred to, 10 Gratt. 427..... 226
Kellar v. Beeler, 4 J. J. Marsh. 655..... 187
Kelly and Tomlin & als., 1 Wash. 190.... .....491, 493, 494, 495, 496
Kemion v. Hills, 1 Louis. Ann. 419..... 462
Kemp v. Prior, 7 Ves. 237..... 145
Kendall and Smith, 6 T. R. 123..... 167
Kendall v. The New England Carpet Co., 13 Conn. 383..... 410
Kennaird v. Jones, 9 Gratt. 183..... .. 437
Kennerly and Swaine, 1 Ves. & Bea. 469.. 601
Kennett and Johnson, 3 Myl. & Keene 624, 10 Cond. Eng. Ch. 332..... 52
Kenyon v. Nichols, 1 Rhode Isl. 106..464, 466

Digitized by Google

Ketcham and Van Winckle, 3 Caine's Cas. 323..... 340
Kidwell v. Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co., 11 Gratt. 676.....91, 101
Kilgore and Shotwell, 26 Miss. 125..... 91
Kingan and Bartlett, 19 Penn. 341.....89, 95
King v. Barham, 8 Barn. & Cress. 99..... 617
King v. Bishop of London, Shower 413.. 469
King v. Box, 6 Taunt. 325..... 167
King v. Burrell, 12 Adolph. & Ell. 468... 481
King v. Gordon, 2 Leach C. C. 15..... 248
King v. Hog, 1 T. R. 721..... 463
King v. Lisle, Andr. 164, 2 Str. 1090..... 180
King v. Milnrow, 5 Maule & Sel. 248.... 531
King v. Poor Law Commissioners, 6 Adolp. & Ell. 1..... 481
King v. St. Bartholomew, 22 Eng. C. L. 128..... 464
King v. Win, 22 Eng. C. L. 60..... 464
Kinley v. Fitzpatrick, 4 How. Miss. 59.. 576
Kinnaird and Brittain, 5 Eng. C. L. 137.. 534
Kinney v. Hudnut, 2 Scam. 472.....89, 95
Kinney and Watts, 3 Leigh 272..... 310
Kinsley and Brush, 14 Ohio 20..... 307
Kirby v. Schoonmaker, 3 Barb. Ch. 46. . 406
Kirkpatrick and United States, 9 Wheat. 720..... 185
Kirtley v. Deck, &c., 2 Munf. 10..... 396
Knavel and Harcourt, 2 Vern. 159..... 343
Knight and Paxton, 1 Barr. 314..... 532
Knisely v. Williams, 3 Gratt. 265..... .....302, 308, 309
Knivan and O'Brian, Cro. Jac. 552..... 184
Knott ex parte, 11 Ves. 609..... 304
Knowles v. Dow, 2 Foster 387.....462, 463
Kyffin and Dodd, 7 T. R. 354..... 248
Lade v. Shepherd, 2 Strange 1004.....546, 547
Laillard v. Palmer, 13 John. 14..... 438
Laing v. Fidgeon, 4 Camp. 169, 6 Taunt. 108..... 595
Laird and Stuart, 1 Cranch 299..... 463
Lancaster and Shanks, 5 Gratt. 110..... 210
Lane's ex'x and Ellzey, 2 Hen. & Munf. 589..... 526
Lang v. Lee, 3 Rand. 410.....405, 416
Langley and Perley, 7 New Hamp. 233.. 466
Lansdown v. Elderton, 14 Ves. 512..... 292
Larned and Coolidge, 8 Pick. 504.....462, 472
Larned and Frisbie, 21 Wend. 450..... 303
Lasserre and Josceline, Fortesc. 281, 10 Mod. 294..... 166
Lawless and Reese, 4 Bibb 394..... 532
Lawrence and Bank of Columbia, 1 Peters 578..... 505
Lawson & als. v. Higgins, 1 Mich. 225... 91
Leavitt and Nicholson, 4 Sanf. S. C. 252 .....404, 406, 407
Lecky and McClung, 3 Penr. & Watts 83.. 404
Leece and Keezee, referred to, 10 Gratt. 429..... 226
Leeds and Redd, 19 Conn. 182..... 546
Lee, governor, and Stuart, 3 Call 421.... 186
Lee and Lang, 3 Rand. 410.....405, 416
Lee and Parkinson, 2 East 314..... 278
Lee and Wallwyn, 9 Ves. 24..... 304
Leighton and Weeks, 5 N. Hamp. 348.... 334
Leitch and Daniel, 13 Gratt. 195..... 568
Leland and Wilkinson, 2 Peters 627. ... 464
Le Messurier and Logan, 6 Moore Priv. Conn. 116.....438, 445
Leppingwell and Baddeley, 3 Burr. 1563 356
Lesher v. Levan, 2 Dall. 96..... 109
Lester v. McDowell, 18 Pa. 91..... 438
Lett v. Horner, 5 Blackf. 296..... 465
Leuckhart v. Cooper, 32 Eng. C. L. 313 464
Levasser v. Washburn, 11 Gratt. 572.... 348
Levy and Steam Boat D. H. White, 10 Ark. 411..... 91
Lewis and Atkins, 14 Gratt. 30..194, 201, 348
Lewis and Bowyer, 1 Hen. & Munf. 553.. 526
Lewis v. Caperton's ex'or, 8 Gratt. 148 .....157, 302, 307, 308
Lewis Martin & Co. and Wickham, &c., 13 Gratt. 427..... 157
Lewis and Osgood, 2 Har. & Gill 495.. 576
Lewis v. Simonton, 8 Humph. 185....263, 275
Leyfield's Case, 10 Coke 88, 94 b..... 532
Liggat and Tate, 2 Leigh 84..... 405
Lilley and Waters, 4 Pick. 145..... 466
Lilly's Case, 1 Leigh 525..... 463
Lipscombe and Bland, 82 Eng. C. L. 712 n 466
Lipscomb's adm'r v. Littlepage's adm'r, 1 Hen. & Munf. 454..... 334
Lisle and The King, Andr. 164, 2 Str. 1090..... 180
Lisset and Banbury, 2 Str. 1211..... 166
Literary Fund v. Dawson, 10 Leigh 147.. 433
Littlefield v. Maxwell, 31 Maine 134..... 464
Littlepage's adm'r and Lipscomb's adm'r, 1 Hen. & Munf. 454..... 334
Litton and Brown, 1 P. Wms. 140..... 356
Lively and Ball, 2 J. J. Marsh. 181..... 284
Lloyd and Badger, Holt 199..... 220
Lloyd v. Brewster, 4 Paige 537..... 407
Lloyd and Harris, 11 Cond. Eng. Ch. 174 .....602, 622
Lock and Burrows, 10 Ves. 473..... 109
Lockwood v. Wood, 51 Eng. C. L. 59..... 464
London & Northwestern Railway Co. and Reedie, 4 Exch. 244..... 242
Logan v. Dunlap, 3 Scam. 189..... 91
Logan v. Messurier, 6 Moore Priv. Conn. 116.....438, 445
Long and Fragano, 10 Eng. C. L. 313... 439
Long v. Ramsey, 1 Serg. & Rawle 72... 109
Lopus and Chandelor, Coke Jac. R..... 578
Lord Lovelace's Case, Wm. Jones 270... 469
Lowden's lessee v. Watson, 2 Stark. 230.. 220
Lowry and Hutson, 2 Va. Cas. 42....531, 532
Low and Charlton, 3 P. Wms. 328..... 304
Lowther v. Lowther, 13 Ves. 95..... 46
Loyal Company and French, 5 Leigh 627. 27
Loyd and Foreman, 2 Leigh 284..... 159
Luckett and Allen, 3 J. J. Marsh. 165.... 187
Luer and Waydell, 3 Denio 410..... 303
Lynch and Haydock, 2 Ld. Ray. 1563.... 166
Lyman and Wiseman, 7 Mass. 286. 303
Lyons v. Brown, 1 Gilm. 105..... 348
Machie and Rapeley, 7 Cow. 250..... 438
Mackay and Buckner, 2 Leigh 488..... 109
Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. 330, 1 White & Tudor's Lead. Cas. 245....306, 309
McLeed v. Snee, 2 Str. 762..... ....164, 168
Macoy and Garnett, 2 Brock. 185..... 46
Mallard and Bagley, 4 Cond. Eng. Ch. 563..... 589
Mandeville's ex'or and Burwell, 2 How. U. S. 560.....30, 33, 34
Mands v. Dupont, 2 Wash. C. C. 31..... 388
Mann and Wood, 3 Sumn. 318..... 291

Digitized by Google

Margate Pier v. Hannam, 5 Eng. C. L. 278. 184
Marks' adm'r and Gregory's adm'r, 1 Rand. 355..... 368
Marlow and Grimstead, 4 T. R. 714..... 466
Marquis of Granby and Earl of Northumberland, 1 Eden 489, 2 Amb. 540.. 356
Marsden v. Wardle, 25 Eng. L. & E. 146. 532
Marsdon and Hamilton, 6 Binn. 45..... 283
Marshall and Miller, 1 Va. Cas. 158...533, 542
Marshall and Woodward, 22 Pick. 468.... 411
Marsh v. Dewes, 20 Eng. L. & E. 356.... 533
Marston v. Baldwin, 17 Mass. 606..... 438
Martin and Cabiness, 3 Dev. Law 456... 391
Martin and Currie, 3 Call 28..... 347
Martin and Doe ex dem. Humphrey, 41 Eng. C. L. 23..... ...193, 194
Martin and Flowers, 8 Leigh 158..... 211
Martin and Jackson, 18 John. 31..... 356
Martin v. Strachan, 5 T. R. 107, 110 note 347, 348
Mary Portington's Case, 10 Rep. 35..... 220
Mason's Case, Foster's Cr. Law 290..... 645
Mason and Duffee, 8 Cow. 25..... 577
Mason v. Farmers Bank at Petersburg, 12 Leigh 84..... 397
Massey and Evans, 8 Price Exch. 22..... 602
Matthewson and Satterlee, 2 Peters 380.. 464
Mauro and Moore, 4 Rand. 488..... 493
Mayo and Clarke, 4 Call 374..... 462
Mayo, mayor, v. James, 12 Gratt. 18..... 533
Mayo v. Murchie, 3 Munf. 258..... 532
Mayor, &c., of Petersburg and Bolling, 3 Rand. 563.....348, 534, 547
Maxwell and Littlefield, 31 Maine 134.... 464
McBriar and Miller, 14 Serg. & Rawle 382 283
McCandlish v. Keen, 13 Gratt. 615..... 303
McClallan v. Smith, 11 Cush. 238...89, 95, 96
McClure v. Harris, 12 B. Monr. 265..... 303
McClurg v. Lecky, 3 Penr. & Watts 83... 404
McComber v. Parker, 13 Pick. 178..... .....440, 445, 447, 449, McCullough v. Somerville, 8 Leigh 415.. .....157, 406
McDaniel and Crawford, 1 Rob. 448..... 523
McDill v. McDill, 1 Dall. 63..... 109
McDonald and Thompson, 2 Dev. & Bat. Equ. 460.....609, 619
McDowell and Lester, 18 Penn. 91..... 438
McElroy & wife v. Nashua & Lowell R. R. Corp., 4 Cush. 400 236
McFarland v. Newman, 9 Watts 55..... 578
McGahey v. Alston, 2 Mees. & Welsb. 206 248
McGhee and Woods, 7 Ohio 127..... 438
McGregor v. Penn, 9 Yerg. 74..... 576
McGuire and McRaven, 9 Smedes & Marsh. 34..... 110
McKeen v. Delancy, 5 Cranch 22, 1 Wash. C. C. 525..... 463
McKenny and Boody, 23 Maine 517..... 341
McKim and Moody, 5 Munf. 374.....194, 201
McKinley and Parrell, 9 Gratt. 1..... 335
McKinley v. Smith, Hardin 167..... 644
McLeod v. Drummond, 17 Ves. 153.....46, 48
McMichael and Northwest Railway Co., 5 Exch. 123..... 334
McRae and Cole's adm'r, 6 Rand. 644..91, 103
McRaven v. McGuire, 9 Smedes & Marsh. 34..... 110
Meem and Cralle, 8 Gratt. 496..... 568
Meller v. Denn, 3 T. R. 558, 1 Bos. & Pul. 558, 2 Id. 249..... 356
Melvin v. Whiting, 10 Pick. 295..... 462
Mendyke v. Stint, 2 P. Wms. 272..... 531
Merchants Bank v. Birch, 17 John. 25... 507
Meredith v. Farr, 21 Eng. Ch. 525..... 603
Meriam v. Harsen, 2 Barb. Ch. 232..... 463
Merryman and Elliot, 1 Lead. Cas. in Equ. 40.....40, 48
Mershon v. Withers, 1 Bibb 503..... 166
Messinger v. Andrews, 3 Cond. Eng. Ch. 761.....355, 356
Methan v. Duke of Devon, 1 P. Wms. 529 601
Middleton v. Johns, 4 Gratt. 129..193, 200, 201
Miller v. Marshall, 1 Va. Cas. 158....533, 542
Miller v. McBriar, 14 Serg. & Rawle 382.. 283
Miller and Mowry, 3 Leigh 561..... 388
Mills and Hanna, 20 Wend. 90 91
Milne & wife and Ross, 12 Leigh 204..61, 397
Milnrow and King, 5 Maule and Sel. 248 531
Mitchell and Cunningham, 4 Rand. 189.. 62
Mitchell and Pettitt, 41 Eng. C. L. 233.. 438
Mix and Bool & wife, 17 Wend. 119..... 335
Monday and Yarborough, 2 Dev. 493, 3 Id. 420..... 110
Mondell v. Steel, 8 Mees. & Welsb. 858.. 450
Monroe and Ferson, 1 Foster New H. 462 406
Monroe v. The State of Georgia, 5 Georgia 85..... 644
Montolieu and Elibank, 5 Ves. 737..... 373
Moody v. McKim, 5 Munf. 374.....194, 201
Moone and Heaseman, Willis 138..... 356
Moore v. Holt, 10 Gratt. 284..... 59
Moore v. Mauro, 4 Rand. 488.....493, 494
Moore and Pollexfen 3 Atk. 272..... 306
Moore and Williams, 3 Munf. 310..... 438
Moreland and Tucker, 10 Peters 58..... .....336, 337, 338
Morgan and Kearslake, 5 T. R. 514..... 303
Morgan and Roberts, 2 Cow. 438..... 576
Morrison and Smith, 3 A. K. Marsh. 1... 482
Mortimer v. West, 3 Cond. Eng. Ch. 439 .....600, 622
Morton and Chapman, 11 Mees. & Welsb. 533..... 145
Morton and Vernon & al., 8 Dana 247.... 404
Moseley and Cook, 13 Wend. 277..... 577
Mott and Striker, 6 Wend. 465..... 543
Mould v. Williams, 48 Eng. C. L. 472.... 534
Mountjoy, ex'or, and Fox, 6 Munf. 36... 525
Mountney v. Collier, 16 Eng. L. & E. 233 ....., 533
Mourain and Poydras, 9 Louis. 492..... 264
Mowry v. Miller, 3 Leigh 561..... 388
Mullen & wife v. Pullen, 12 Leigh 434... 90
Munn and Sigourney, 7 Conn. 11, 324.... 356
Murch and Chapman, 19 John. 290..... 577
Murchie and Mayo, 3 Munf. 258..... 532
Murdock and Alden, 13 Mass. 256..... 546
Murray v. Ballou, 1 John. Ch. 566..... 31
Murray and Coster, 5 John. Ch. 522, 20 John. 576..... 494
Murrill v. Neill, 8 How. U. S. 414..... 406
Mussen v. Price, 4 East. 147..... 91
Mutual Assurance Society v. Stone, 3 Leigh 218..... 304
Myers and Dixon, 7 Gratt. 240...438, 440, 448
Myers, &c. and Sanders' heirs, 7 Dana 506 340
Myrick and Hamilton, 3 Pike 541..... 165

Digitized by Google

Myrick v. Hazey, 27 Maine 9..... 463
Napier v. Napier, 1 Drew. & Walk. 407.. 371
Nappier and Howe, 4 Burr. 1944..... 532
Nashua & Lowell R. R. Corporation and McElroy & wife, 4 Cush. 400..... 236
Neale and Grellier, Peake's Cas. 146 109
Negro Cato v. Howard, 2 Har. & John. 323..... 265
Neill and Murrill, 8 How. U. S. 414..... 406
Newburgh and Gardner, 2 John. Ch. 161 .....464, 466
New England Carpet Co. and Kendall, 13 Conn. 383..... 410
Newenham v. Pemberton, 17 Law Jour. Equ. N. S. 99, 1 D. G. & Sm. 644...371, 373
Newman v. Chapman, 2 Rand. 93..... 27
Newman and McFarland, 9 Watts 55.... 578
Newton and Alexander & Co., 2 Gratt. 266 89
Nicholas and Harris, 5 Munf. 483..... 463
Nichol's adm'r v. Davis, 1 Bibb 490..... 166
Nichols and Kenyon, 1 Rhode Isl. 106.... .....464, 466
Nicholson v. Leavitt, 4 Sanf. S. C. 252 .....404, 406, 407
Nickell & Miller v. Handly, 10 Gratt. 336 407
Northwest Railway Co. v. McMichael, 5 Exch. 123..... 334
Notworthy and Bassett, 2 White & Tudors' Lead. Cas. 1.....303-4, 343
O'Brian v. Knivan, Cro. Jac. 552..... 28
Olcott and Hutchins, 4 Verm. 549..... 184
Olivant v. Bayley, 48 Eng. C. L. 287.... .....580, 584
Oliver v. Houdlet, 13 Mass. 237..... 335
Oliver and Piott, 3 McLean 28..... 28
Olmstead and Beals, 24 Verm. 114..... 577
Onondago Common Pleas and People, 2 Wend. 263.....533, 543
Oriental Bank v. Blake, 22 Pick. 206..... 508
Osborn and Damon, 1 Pick. 476..... 440
Osborn and Hannan, 4 Paige 336..... 559
Osgood v. Lewis, 2 Har. & Gill 495..... 576
Outwater v. Dodge, 7 Cow. 85..... 438
Overhill's Trusts, 17 Eng. L. & E. 323... 619
Overby and Boyle's adm'r, 11 Gratt. 202 397
Owen v. Bryant, 13 Eng. L. & E. 217.... .....603, 619
Owen & Wish v. Body & als., 31 Eng. C. L. 254. .....405, 408, 409
Packard v. Richardson, 17 Mass. 122..... 462
Page v. Carpenter, 10 N. Hamp. 77..... 445
Page and Currie, 2 Leigh 617..... 464
Painter and Town of Plymouth, 17 Conn. 585..... 180
Palmer and Haggerty, 6 John. Ch. 437... 438
Palmer and Laillard, 13 John. 14..... 438
Palmer and Parker, 6 Eng. C. L. 455.... 439
Parker and McComber, 13 Pick. 178..... .....440, 445, 447, 449
Parker and Palmer, 6 Eng. C. L. 455.... 439
Parkinson v. Lee, 2 East 314 .. 578, 580, 584
Parks v. Hewlett, 9 Leigh 511..... .....109, 110, 111, 115, 116, 117, 119
Parramore v. Taylor, 11 Gratt. 220..... 463
Parrell v. McKinley, 9 Gratt. 1..... .. 335
Parsons v. Gaylord's adm'rs, 3 John. 463.. 303
Parsons and Zouch, 3 Burr. 1794... 334
Patrick v. Ballentine, 22 Missouri 143... 89
Patterson's dev. v. Bradford, Hardin 101. 347
Pattison and Tinniswood, 54 Eng. C. L. 243. .....539 540
Paul v. Dod, 2 Man. Gr. & Scott 800... 91
Paxton v. Knight, 1 Burr. 314 532
Payne v. Compton, 2 Younge & Col. Exch. 457..... 304
Payne and Dovaston, Smith's Lead. Cas. 44 Law Libr. 139.....534, 546
Payne v. Dudley, 1 Wash. 196..... 334
Payne v. Whale, 7 East 274..... 582
Peake and Roberts, 1 Burr. 323..... 165
Pearcy and Gross, 2 Pat. & Heath 483... 297
Peasley v. Boatwright, 2 Leigh 195.... . .....110, 112, 114
Peck and Fletcher, 6 Cranch 87..... 464
Peck v. Smith, 1 Conn. 103.....545, 546
Peers' Case, 5 Gratt. 674..... 669
Pegram v. Isabel, 2 Hen. & Munf. 193... 322
Pemberton and Newenham, 17 Law Jour. Equ. N. S..... 99
Pendleton and Pleasants, 6 Rand. 423.... .....438, 440, 447
Penn and McGregor, 9 Yerg. 74..... 576
People v. Collins, 7 John. 549..... 183
People of Illinois and Sellers, 3 Scam. 412..... 624
People v. Onondago Common Pleas, 2 Wend. 263..... ....533, 543
People and Supervisors of Niagara, 7 Hill N. Y. 504..... 480
People and Wynehamer, 3 Kernan N. Y. 378..... 464
Perkins and Morgan, 1 Jones Law N. C. 171..... 445
Perley v. Langley, 7 New Hamp. 233.... 446
Perryn and Doe, 3 T. R. 484..... 559
Peters and United States, 3 Dall. 121.... 531
Pettitt v. Mitchell, 41 Eng. C. L. 233.... 438
Phillips and Doe ex dem. Thom, 23 Eng. C. L. 178..... 356
Philliskirk v. Blackwell, 2 Maule & Sel. 395..... 164
Phinney and Badger, 15 Mass. 359...334, 341
Phippen v. Durham, 8 Gratt. 457..... 157
Pierson v. Dunlop, Cowp. 571..... 168
Pigott and Frazer, 1 Younge 354.....603, 623
Pilcher and Anderson, referred to, 2 Stark. Ev. 566..... 464
Pillow v. Hardeman, adm'r, 3 Humph. 538..... .. 509
Piott v. Oliver, 3 McLean 28..... 28
Pitkin v. Pitkin, 7 Conn. 307 28
Pitman and Brien, 12 Leigh 379 59
Planters Bank v. White, 2 Humph. 112.. 508
Pleasants v. Pendleton, 6 Rand. 423... . .....438, 440, 447
Plymouth, Town of, v. Painter, 17 Conn. 585..... .. 180
Poindexter and Bailey, 14 Gratt. 132..... 273
Poling v. Johnson, 2 Rob. 255..... 62
Pollexfen v. Moore, 3 Atk. 272..... 306
Pollock v. Glassell, 2 Gratt. 439..... .....109, 110, 111, 115, 117
Pool and Barker, 6 Missouri 260.....464-5
Poor Law Commissioners and The King, 6 Adolph & Ell. 1..... 481
Poplewell v. Wilson, 1 Str. 264..... 164
Porter and Taylor, 4 Hill N. Y. 140..... 464
Powell v. Wells, 2 Cowp. 818.. 582
Powers v. Barham, 4 Ad. & Ell. 473, 7 Carr. & Payne 356 576

Digitized by Google

Poydras and Mourain, 9 Louis, 490..... 264
Preston and Arnold, 18 Ves. 287..... 601
Preston and Baker, Gilm. 235..... 196
Preston v. Tubbin, 1 Vern. 286. 28
Price and Mussen, 4 East. 147..... 91
Price and Siebert, 5 Watts & Serg. 438.. 391
Prideaux v. Bunnett, 87 Eng. C. L. 613 .....578, 580, 584
Prime and Silk, 2 Lead. Cas. Eq. 72, 331.. 418
Pritchard v. Atkinson, 4 N. Hamp. 291.. 543
Provost and Doe, 4 John. 61..... 559
Pruslau v. Cooke, Freem. Ch. 24..... 304
Pryor and Kemp, 7 Ves. 237. 145
Pryor v. White, 16 B. Monr. 605.....89–95
Pullen v. Mullen & wife, 12 Leigh 434... 90
Puryear v. Taylor, 12 Gratt. 401..... 158
Pybus and Shepherd, 3 Man. & Grang. 868, 4 Scott N. R. 434.....575, 576
Quarles v. The State, 5 Hump. 561..... 662
Queen v. Cridland, 90 Eng. C. L. 853.... .....533, 541, 545
Queen of Portugal and De Haber, 7 Eng. L. & E. 340..... 532
Queen of Spain and Wadsworth, 7 Eng. L. & E. 340..... 532
Race v. Ward, 82 Eng. C. L. 700.....464, 466
Rolston v. Jackson, 1 Sneed 128..... 391
Ramsey and Long, 1 Serg. & Rawle 72... 109
Rand and Screws, 22 Alab. 675..... 438
Randall v. Thornton, 43 Maine 230..... 576
Rapeley v. Machie, 7 Cow. 250..... 438
Raymond and Staniels, 4 Cush. 314..... 463
Rea and Requa, 2 Paige 341..... 291
Reed and Leeds, 19 Conn. 182..... 546
Reeder and Baring, 1 Hen. & Munf. 154.. 462
Reedie v. London & Northwestern Railway Co., 4 Exch. 244..... 242
Reese v. Lawless, 4 Bibb 394..... 532
Reese v. Williams, 16 Illinois 69..... 576
Regina v. Ballivos, &c., de Bewdley, 1 P. Wms. 207..... 463
Regina v. Burnaby, 2 Ld. Ray. 900, Comy. 131.....533, 540
Regina v. Higgins, note D, 55 Eng. C. L. 147..... 534
Regina v. Speed, 1 Ld. Ray. 583.....538, 540
Regina v. Whitaker, 61 Eng. C. L. 635.. 481
Relph v. Gist, 4 McCord 267..... 109, 110
Requa v. Rea, 2 Paige 341..... 291
Rice v. Efford, 3 Hen. & Munf. 225..... 604
Richards and Doe, 3 T. R. 356..... ... 356
Richardson ex parte, 3 Madd. 138..... 33
Richardson v. Jones, 3 Gill & John. 163 .....292, 295
Richardson and Packard, 17 Mass. 122... 462
Richmond & York River R. R. Co. v. Wicker, 13 Gratt. 375..... 464
Riddle and Varnum, 20 Pick. 280.....440, 445
Ridgway, Rudd & Co.'s Appeal, 15 Penn. 177..... 28
Right v. Creber, 5 Barn. & Cress. 866.... 559
Rights and Hadgins, 1 Hen. & Munf. 134..... 324
Rives and Garland, 4 Rand. 282..... 156
Roberts v. Colvin, 3 Gratt. 358..... 165
Roberts v. Morgan, 2 Cow. 438..... 576
Roberts v. Peake, 1 Burr. 323..... 165
Roberts v. Wiggin, 1 N. Hamp. 73..... 334
Robins & als. v. Embry & als., 1 Smedes & Marsh. Ch. 207..... 411
Rockbold v. Barnes, 3 Rand. 473. 225
Rogers v. Goodwin, 2 Mass. 475..... 463
Rome and Davis, 6 Rand. 355....463, 604, 625
Romine and Cox, 9 Gratt. 27.....90, 303
Roof v. Stafford, 7 Cow. 184..... 334
Rose and Gatliffe's adm'r, 8 B. Monr. 629..... 265
Ross v. Milne & wife, 12 Leigh 204....61, 397
Rowan's ex'ors v. Town of Portland, 8 B. Monr. 239..... 532
Rowland & Russell's lessee v. Rowland, 6 Wend. 666..... 220
Royal Exch. Ass. Co. and Blachett, 2 Cromp. & Jer. 244..... 469
Rud v. Bishop of Lincoln, Hutton 66.... 220
Ruddles's ex'or v. Ben, 10 Leigh 467.... .....260, 266, 268, 275
Ruffin ex parte, 6 Ves. 119..... 418
Russell's lessee v. Rowland, 6 Wend. 666. 220
Rust and Downman, 6 Rand. 557..... 30
Rust and Hutchison & wife, 2 Gratt. 394 89
Saco Manufacturing Co. and Foster, 12 Pick. 451..... 411
Saddler and Archer, 2 Hen. & Munf. 370.. 462
Salisbury and Edgar, 17 Missouri 271.... 91
Salmon v. Ward, 2 Carr. & P. 211..... 576
Sanders and Bloxam, 10 Eng. C. L. 477 .....440, 447
Sands & Crump v. Taylor & Lovett, 5 John. 395..... 145
Sanders' heirs and Myers, 7 Dana 506... 340
Satterlee v. Matthewson, 2 Peters 380... 494
Saunders and Dehew, 2 Vern. 271..... 344
Saunders and Jerrard, 2 Ves. jr. 454..... 303
Saunders v. Wilson, 15 Wend. 338..... 543
Savile v. Savile, 1 P. Wms. 745..... 295
Sawney v. Carter, 6 Rand. 173..... .265, 275
Schieffelin and Field, 7 John. Ch. 150.... 47
Schoff v. Bloomfield, 8 Verm. 472..... 462
Schoomaker and Kirby, 3 Barb. Ch. 46... 406
Schooner Paulina's cargo v. United States, 7 Cranch 52..... 481
Schooner Reeside, &c., claimant, 2 Sumner 567..... .....464, 469
Scott v. Tyler, 2 Bro. Ch. 430..... 46
Scott v. Wells, 6 Watts & Serg. 357..... .....440, 447
Scott and Whallon, 10 Watts 237..405, 411, 412
Screws v. Rand, 22 Alab. 675.....438, 445
Scruggs v. Brackin, 4 Yerg. 528..... 112
Seamonds and Calcord, 6 B. Monr. 265... 203
Seaman and Dance, 11 Gratt. 778..... 157
Sebrell and Craig, 9 Gratt. 131..... 344
Seixas v. Wood, 2 Caines' R. 48..... 578
Seekell and Ketcher, 1 Rhode Isl. 267.... 464
Selectmen of Jersey City and Dummer, 1 Spencer N. Jer. 86..... 532
Selph v. Howland, 23 Miss. 264..... 91
Sellers v. The People of Illinois, 3 Scam. 412..... 644
Shacklett and Brooke, 13 Gratt. 301..... 433
Shackelford and Wilson, 4 Rand. 5..... 576
Shaeffer v. Weed, 3 Gilm. 511.....91, 105
Shands and Holmes, 26 Miss. 639 91
Shane and Chestnut, 16 Ohio 599.. 463
Shanks v. Lancaster, 5 Gratt. 110..... 210
Shattuck v. Freeman, 1 Metc. 10..... 404
Shaw and Elwell, 16 Mass. 42..... 211
Shaw v. Ward, 7 Wend. 404.....438, 445
Shearer and Fowler, 7 Mass. 14..... 211
Shee and Hibbert, 1 Camp. 113..... 579
Shelley's Case, 1 Rep. 93..... 220

Digitized by Google

Shelly and Gill, 13 Cond. Eng. Ch. 63... .....601, 602
Shepherd and Lade, 2 Strange 1004...546, 547
Shepherd v. Pybus, 3 Man. & Grang. 868, 4 Scott N. R. 434.....575, 576
Sheppard's ex'or v. Starke & ux., 3 Munf. 39..... 526
Sheppards v. Turpin, 3 Gratt. 373....405, 416
Sherman v. Angel, 1 Bail. Equ. 351..... 619
Shine v. Gough, 1 Ball & Beat. 436..... 304
Shirley and Whitley, 3 A. K. Marsh. 131.. 347
Shotwell v. Kilgore, 26 Miss. 105..... 91
Sibley v. Smith, 2 Mich. 486..... 463
Siegel v. Childrey, 4 Casey 279..... 418
Sigourney v. Munn, 7 Conn. 11, 324..... 356
Silk and Hunt, 5 East 449..... 582
Silk v. Prime, 2 Lead. Cas. Eq. 72, 331.. 418
Simonton and Lewis, 8 Humph. 385..263, 275
Simpson and Dodson, 2 Rand. 294..... 48
Simpson and Hill, 7 Ves. 152.....46, 48, 49
Sims and Gordon, 2 McCord 151..... 292
Singleton and Stevenson, 1 Leigh 72..265, 275
Skener and Heck, 4 Serg. & Rawle 249.. .....89, 90
Skirrow and Doe ex dem. Leeming, 34 Eng. C. L. 64..... 194
Skipwith's ex'or v. Cunningham, 8 Leigh 271.....156–7, 406, 420
Slade and Syburn's lessee, 4 T. R. 681..219–20
Slayter and Green, 4 John. Ch. 38..... 456
Sleigh v. Strider, 5 Call 439.....604, 629
Slocock and Burchell, 2 Ld. Ray. 1545... 167
Smallwood and Cannon, 3 Levinz 203... .....539, 540, 543
Small and Frontin, 1 Str. 705, 2 Ld. Ray. 1418..... 211
Smart and Jones, 1 T. R. 44..... 617
Smith and Boyce's adm'r, 9 Gratt. 704... 422
Smith and Elias, 8 Humph. 33.....263, 275
Smith v. Evans, 5 Humph. 70.....334, 341
Smith and Findlay, 6 Munf. 134..... 462
Smith and Harris, 3 Serg. & Rawle 20... 438
Smith and Hutchinson, 7 Paige 26.....405–6
Smith and Jones, 2 Bulstr. 36..... 469
Smith v. Kendall, 6 T. R. 123..... 167
Smith and Libey, 2 Mich. 486 463
Smith and McClallan, 11 Cush. 238..89, 95, 96
Smith and McKinley, Hardin 167..... 644
Smith v. Morrisson, 3 A. K. Marsh. 81... 494
Smith and Peck, 1 Conn. 103.....545, 546
Smith and Wilcox, 5 Wend. 231..... 182
Smith and Wood, 4 Carr. & P. 45, 5 Man. & Ryl. 124..... 576
Snee and Macleed, 2 Str. 762.....164, 168
Snodgrass and Handly, 9 Leigh 484..... 422
Somerville and McCullough, &c., 8 Leigh 415. .....157, 406
Sorresby v. Hollins, 9 Mod. 223..... 463
Sothern and Swanwicke, 36 Eng. C. L. 321..... 440
Southwark Bank v. Commonwealth, 26 Penn. 446..... 480
Southeastern Railway Co. v. Steel, 32 Eng. L. & E. 366..... 242
Southworth and Watrous, 5 Conn. 305 ..... 546, 547
Sears v. Bicknell, 5 Mass. 125.....533, 543
Speed and Regina, 1 Ld. Ray. 583..... 538
Spence v. Bagwell, 6 Gratt. 444.....405, 416
Sprague and Toland, 12 Peters 300..... 494
Spraker v. Van Alstyne, 18 Wend. 200... 356
Spring & als. v. Gray's ex'ors, 6 Peters 151.. 494
Stafford and Roof, 7 Cow. 184.....334, 341
Staniels v. Raymond, 4 Cush. 314..... 463
Stanton and Barnett, 2 Alab. 181.....575, 579
Starke and Faris, 3 B. Monr. 4..... 391
Starke & ux. and Sheppard's ex'or, 3 Munf. 29..... 526
State and Booly, 4 Yerg. 111..... 644
State and Copeland, 7 Humph. 479..... 645
State v. Ford, 1 Spears 150..... 645
State of Georgia and Monroe, 5 Georgia 85..... 644
State of Georgia and Williams, 3 Georgia 453..... 644
State and Handy, 7 Missouri 607..... 465
State and Quarles, 5 Humph. 561..... 662
Steamboat O. H. White v. Levy, 10 Ark. 411..... 91
Steel and Isaacs, 3 Scam. 97..... 462
Steel and Mondel, 8 Mees. & Welsb. 858.. 450
Steel v. Southeastern Railway Co., 32 Eng. L. & E. 366..... 242
Stevenson v. Singleton, 1 Leigh 72..265, 275
Stevenson v. Sullivant, 5 Wheat. 207..605, 627
Stewart v. Eden, 2 Caines 121...507, 508, 510
Stillwell and Adams, 14 Ohio 20..... 307
Stiles & others v. Curtis, 4 Day 328..... 532
Stint and Mendyke, 2 P. Wms. 272..... 531
Stockton v. Turner, 7 J. J. Marsh. 192.. 187
Stones v. Keeling, 5 Call 143....610, 625, 629
Stone and Mutual Assurance Society, 3 Leigh 218..... 304
Stover v. Boswell, 3 Dana 232.....605, 627
Strachan and Martin, 5 T. R. 110, note (a).....347, 348
Strange and Tyler, 21 Barb. S. C. 198... 445
Street v. Blay, 22 Eng. C. L. 124....438, 445
Strider and Sleigh, 5 Call 439.....604, 629
Striker v. Mott, 6 Wend. 465..... 543
Strode v. Blackburne, 3 Ves. 222..... 304
Stuart's ex'ors v. Abbott, 9 Gratt. 255... 308
Stuart v. Bute, 11 Ves. 665..... 28
Stuart v. Laird, 1 Cranch 299..... 463
Stuart v. Lee, Governor, 3 Call 421..... 186
Stump and Bryan, 8 Gratt. 241..... 210
Sturgis v. Champneys, 5 Mylne & W. 97, 9 Law Jour. N. S. 110.....370, 371
Sullivant and Stevenson's heirs, 5 Wheat. 507.....605, 627
Sumner and Buchan, 2 Barb. Ch. 165.... 28
Sumner v. Hamlet, 12 Pick. 76..... 445
Supervisors of Niagara v. The People, 7 Hill N. Y. 504..... 480
Sutton and Johnstone, 1 T. R. 493..... 387
Sutton and Whitney, 10 Wend. 413..... 576
Sutherland and Wills, 4 Exch. 211..... 531
Suydam and Hall, 6 Barb. S. C. 83..... 391
Swaine v. Kennerley, 1 Ves. & Bea. 469.. 601
Swanwicke v. Sothern, 36 Eng. C. L. 321.. 440
Swett v. Colgate, 20 John. 196..... 578
Syburn's lessee v. Slade, 4 T. R. 681..219, 220
Symmons and Mackreth, 15 Ves. 330..306, 309
Talbot v. Earl of Radnor, 9 Cond. Eng. Ch. 22..... 356
Tanner and Chapman, 1 Vern. 267 306
Tansley v. Turner, 29 Eng. C. L. 288.... 440
Tapscott v. Cobbs, 11 Gratt. 172. ....193, 200, 201, 218, 347
Tarling v. Baxter, 13 Eng. C. L. 159.... 445
Tate and Cromwell, 7 Leigh 301..... .....109, 110, 111, 112, 114, 116, 117, 120

Digitized by Google

Tate v. Liggat, 2 Leigh 841.....405, 416
Tatlock v. Harris, 3 T. R. 163..... 303
Tavener and Emerick, 9 Gratt. 220..... 218
Taylor ex dem. Atkyns v. Horde, 1 Burr. 60..... 221
Taylor and Ball, 1 Car. & Payne 417..... 109
Taylor and Burdett, 11 Leigh 339....194, 196
Taylor v. Cole, 3 T. R. 292..... 221
Taylor v. Glazer, 2 Serg. & Rawle 502... 110
Taylor & Lovett and Sands & Crump, 5 John. 395..... 145
Taylor and Parramore, 11 Gratt. 220.... 463
Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill N. Y. 140....464, 466
Taylor and Puryear, 12 Gratt. 401..... 158
Tead and Thirby, 13 Metc. 149..... 91
Thaxter v. Williams, 14 Pick. 9..... 89
Thilman and Ellis, 3 Call 3 396
Thirby and Tead, 13 Metc. 149..... 91
Thompson v. Andrews, 1 Myl. & Keene 116, 6 Cond. Eng. Ch. 525..... 33
Thompson v. Brown, 4 John. Ch. 619.... 356
Thompson v. Dicas, 1 Cromp. & Mees. 768..... 531
Thompson and Johnson, 4 J. J. Marsh. 380 303
Thompson v. McDonald, 2 Dev. & Bat. Equ. 460.....609, 619
Thompson v. Wilmot, 1 Bibb 422..... 265
Thornton and Randall, 43 Maine 230.... 576
Tinniswood v. Pattison, 54 Eng. C. L. 243.....533, 539
Tisdall and Burtis, 4 Barb. S. C. 571..... 406
Toel's Case, 11 Leigh 714..... 645
Toland v. Sprague, 12 Peters 300..... 494
Tomlin & als. v. Kelly, 1 Wash. 190..... .....491, 493, 494, 495, 496
Tompkins & Co. and Anderson & Wilkins, 1 Brock. 456..... 25
Town of Brooklin and Boyden, 8 Verm. 284..... 462
Town of Portland and Rowan's ex'ors, 8 B. Monr. 239..... 532
Townroe and Wrightman, 1 Maule & Sel. 412 357
Tramwell v. Gordon, 11 Alab. 656 .. 662
Trasher v. Everhart, 3 Gill & John. 234.. 110
Trayes and Hatch, 39 Eng. C. L. 207.... 164
Tregonning and Blewett, 30 Eng. C. L. 151.....464, 466
Trotter v. Blocher, 6 Port. 267..... 273
Trotter v. Crockett, 2 Porter 401..... 303
Trustees of Sandy Hill and Hunter, 6 Hill N. Y. 407..... 532
Tubbins and Preston, 1 Verm. 286..... 28
Tucker v. Moreland, 10 Peters 58..... .....335, 336, 337, 338
Tuberville v. Bernard, 7 Leigh 302 n..... .....112, 114
Turner and Stockton, 7 J. J. Marsh. 165.. 187
Turner and Tansley, 29 Eng. C. L. 288.. 440
Turpin and Sheppards, 3 Gratt. 373..405, 416
Tyler and Scott, 2 Bro. Ch. 430..... 46
Tyler v. Strang, 21 Barb. S. C. 198..... 445
Underwood and Jeffery, 1 Pike 108..... 110
United States v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheat. 720..... 185
United States v. Peters, 3 Dall. 121..... 531
United States and Schooner Paulina's Cargo, 7 Cranch 52..... 481
Updegraffe and Jackson, 1 Rob. 107..... 49
Van Alstyne and Spraker, 13 Wend. 200 356
Vanblaricum v. Yeo, 1 Blackf. 50..... 110
Vanderzee v. Aclom, 4 Ves. 771..... 619
Van Duzer v. Van Duzer, 6 Paige, 366.. .....371, 376
Vanhorne's lessee v. Dorrence, 2 Dall. 304..... 464
Vanmeter v. Vanmeter, 3 Gratt. 148..... 356
Van Schaick's lessee v. Davis, 5 Cow. 123..... 220
Van Vacter v. Flack, 1 Smedes & Marsh. 393..... 165
Vanwinckle v. Ketcham, 3 Caine's Cas. 323..... 340
Vardill and Doe ex dem. Birtwhistle, 11 Eng. C. L. 266..... 999
Varley and Dodsley, 40 Eng. C. L. 141... 438
Varnum and Riddle, 20 Pick. 280.....440, 445
Vaughan and Goddin, 14 Gratt. 102..... 568
Vawdry and Cartwright, 5 Ves. 530..... 601
Vermont Cent. R. R. Co. and Hatch, 25 Verm. 49..... 460
Vernon & al. v. Morton, 8 Dana 247..... 404
Vidal v. Girard's ex'ors, 2 How. U. S. 127 426
Waddell and Watts, 6 Peters 389..... 406
Wakefield and White, 10 Cond. Eng. Ch. 116..... 303
Walker v. Chichester, 2 Brevard 67..... 462
Walton v. Hall, 9 Gratt. 194.....226, 347
Walwyn v. Lee, 6 Ves. 24..... 304
Ward's adm'r and Brockenbrough, 4 Rand. 352.....637, 503
Ward and Race, 82 Eng. C. L. 700..... 466
Ward and Salmon, 2 Carr. & P. 211..... 516
Ward v. Shaw, 7 Wend. 404..... 438, 445
Wardle and Marsden, 25 Eng. L. & E. 146..... 532
Wardsworth v. Queen of Spain, 7 Eng. L. & E. 340..... 532
Waring and Gallaher, 9 Wend. 28....575, 579
Warren and Abell, 4 Verm. 149..... 335
Warren v. Harris, 2 Gilm. 307..... 90
Warriner and Camac, 50 Eng. C. L. 354 580
Washburn and Levasser, 11 Gratt. 572... 348
Washington and Brooke, 8 Gratt. 248.... 30
Waters v. Lilley, 4 Pick. 145..... 466
Waterton and Dresser Manuf. Co., 3 Metc. 9..... 438
Watkins and Green, 7 Wheat. 27..... 348
Watkins and Willison, 3 Peters 43 218
Watrous v. Southworth, 5 Conn. 305..... 546
Watson ex parte, 2 Ves. & Bea. 414..... 357
Watson and Lowden's lessee, 2 Stark. 230..... 220
Watts v. Kinney, 3 Leigh 272..... 310
Watts v. Waddell, 6 Peters 389..... . 406
Way and Ash, 2 Gratt. 203..... 604
Waydell v. Suer, 3 Denio 410..... 303
Weed v. Beebe, 21 Verm. 495..... 335
Weed and Shaeffer, 3 Gilm. 511.. ....91, 105
Weeks v. Leighton, 5 N. Hamp. 348..... 334
Welch's lessee and Cresinger, 15 Ohio 156..... 336
Wellock v. Hammond, Croke Eliz. 204... 356
Wells and Hopkins, 5 Mees. & Welsb. 7.. 450
Wells and Powell, 2 Cowp. 818..... 582
Wells and Scott, 6 Watts & Serg. 357.... .....440, 447
West and Mortimer, 3 Cond. Eng. Ch. 439.....600, 622
Weston v. Downes, 1 Doug. 23..... 582

Digitized by Google

Wetherill and Jackson, 7 Serg. & Rawle 482..... 578
Whale and Payne, 7 East 274..... 582
Whallen v. Scott, 10 Watts 237..405, 411, 412
Whealey's heirs v. Calhoun, 12 Leigh 264..... 28
Wheeler and Hoover, 23 Miss. 314..... 89
White v. Clay's ex'ors, 7 Leigh 68..... 525
White v. Cuyler, 6 T. R. 176..... 211
White and Heath, 5 Conn. 228..... 605
White and Planters Bank, 2 Humph. 112..... 508
White and Pryor, 16 B. Monr. 605....89, 95
White v. Wakefield, 10 Cond. Eng. Ch. 116..... 303
Whitbread and Janes, 5 Eng. L. & E. 431 ..... 405, 406, 409, 410, 414
Whitehouse and Hind, 7 East 558..... 440
Whitelocke v. Baker, 13 Ves. 54 326
Whiting and Melvin, 10 Pick. 295..... 462
Whitley v. Davis, 1 Swan 133..... 110
Whitley v. Shirley, 3 A. K. Marsh 131.. 347
Whitlock's ex'or and Austin's adm'r, 1 Munf. 487.....109, 112, 113
Whitney v. Sutton, 10 Wend. 413..... 576
Whitroe and Colemere's lessee, 16 Eng. C. L. 409..... 220
Whittaker and Regina, 61 Eng. C. L. 635..... 481
Whittington v. Christian, 2 Rand. 353... 348
Wicker and Richmond and York River R. R. Co., 13 Gratt. 375..... 464
Wickes v. Clarke, 8 Paige 161.....371, 376
Wickham, &c. v. Lewis Martin & Co., 13 Gratt. 427..... 157
Wiggin and Roberts, 1 N. Hamp. 73.... 334
Wigglesworth v. Dallison, Doug. 201.... 471
Wilcox and Hillman, 30 Maine 170..... 576
Wilcox v. Smith, 5 Wend. 231..... 182
Wiley v. Givens, 6 Gratt. 277..... 226
Wilkes v. Teris, 5 John. 335..... 440
Wilkinson v. Adam, 1 Ves. & Bea. 422 .....601, 622
Wilkinson v. Leland, 2 Peters 627..... 464
Wilks v. Back, 2 East 142..... 211
Williams and Coate, 9 Eng. L. & E. 481 .....409, 414
Williams v. Greer, 12 Georgia 459..... 110
Williams and Knisely, 3 Gratt. 265..... .....302, 308, 309
Williams and Mould, 48 Eng. C. L. 472.. 534
Williams and Reese, 16 Ill. 69..... 576
Williams ex parte, 11 Ves. 3..... 418
Williamson v. Coalter's ex'ors, 14 Gratt. 394..... 273
Williamson v. Gordon's ex'ors, 5 Munf. 257..... 304
Williamson's ex'or v. Howard, 2 Rob. 39.. 422
Willis v. Bruce & Warfield, 8 B. Monr. 548..... 265
Willis v. Green, 5 Hill N. Y. 232..... 508
Willis and Wilson, 7 East 121..... 466
Willison v. Watkins, 3 Peters 43..... 218
Willoughby v. Willoughby, 1 T. R. 763.. 304
Wills v. Sutherland, 4 Exch. 211..... 531
Wilmot and Thompson, 1 Bibb 422..... 265
Wilson v. Bell's lessee, 7 Leigh 22..... 226
Wilson v. Codman's ex'or, 3 Cranch 193.. 164
Wilson and Cornwal, 1 Ves. sen. 509..... 145
Wilson and Earle, 17 Ves. 528.....601, 602
Wilson and Hanna, 3 Gratt. 243...91, 308, 309
Wilson and Poplewell, 1 Str. 264..... 164
Wilson and Saunders, 15 Wend. 338..... 543
Wilson v. Shackelford, 4 Rand. 5..... 577
Wilson and Willis, 7 East 121..... 466
Winn v. Bowles, 6 Munf. 23..... 91
Winshup and Abrams, 3 Cond. Eng. Ch. 422..... 356
Wise and Berryman, 4 T. R. 366..... 248
Wiseman v. Lyman, 7 Mass. 286..... 303
Withers and Governor for Liggatt, 5 Gratt. 224 464
Withers v. Harris, 7 Mod. 64..... 220
Withers and Mershon, 1 Bibb 503..... 166
Wix and King, 22 Eng. C. L. 128..... 464
Wolveston and Frost, 1 Strange 94..... 338
Wood and Seixas, 2 Carne's R. 48 578
Wood v. Smith, 4 Carr. & P. 45, 5 Man. Ryl. 124..... 576
Woods v. McGee, 7 Ohio 127..... 438
Woods and Yeatman, 6 Yerg. 20..... 28
Woods and Mann, 3 Turner 318..... 291
Woodward v. Marshall, 22 Pick. 468..... 411
Wright v. Dean, 10 Wheat. 204..... 356
Wrigley and Andrew, 4 Bro. Ch. 125.... 49
Wyatt's adm'x and Wynn, 11 Leigh 584.. 62
Wynn v. Wyatt's adm'x, 11 Leigh 584... 62
Yarborough v. Monday, 2 Dev. 493, 3 Id. 420..... 110
Yeatman v. Woods, 6 Yerg. 20..... 28
Yeo v. Vanblaricum, 1 Black. 50..... 110
Young v. Austin, 6 Pick. 280..... 438
Young and Brooke, 3 Rand. 16..... 134
Zouch v. Parsons, 3 Burr. 1794..... 334

Digitized by Google

CASES

DECIDED IN THE

Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.

Commonwealth v. Drewry & als.

October Term, 1858, Richmond.

1. Statute Extending Office of Sheriff—Constitutional.—The act of March 15, 1856, Sess. Acts 1855-56, ch. 8, § 2, p. 8, extending the term of the sheriff from July 1, 1856, to January 1, 1857, is constitutional.

2. Same—Embracing Two Subjects—Case at Bar.—The act does not embrace two subjects in the sense of the constitution, article 4, § 16.

3. Bond of Sheriff—Failure to Execute Bond for Term Extended by Statute—Liability of Sureties.†—The sheriff elected in May 1854, executed his official bond and entered upon his office and continued to act until January 1857, but did not execute a bond under the act of March 15, 1856. His successor, elected in May 1856, executed his official bond in June following, but did not enter upon his office until January 1857. If the said act was unconstitutional, still the first sheriff held over after the 1st of July under the constitution, article 6, § 23; and having collected the state taxes of 1856, his sureties in the bond of 1854 are liable for them.

This was a motion in the Circuit court of the city of Richmond, by the auditor of public accounts, on behalf of the commonwealth, against John M. Drewry,
2 *late sheriff of Norfolk county, and Elizabeth Drewry and four others as his official sureties, to recover the land, property, capitation, free negro and September license taxes of 1856, due from Drewry as sheriff, and the interest and damages thereon according to law.

The case came on for trial in January 1858, when there was a judgment against John M. Drewry for twenty-six thousand six hundred and three dollars and seventy-one cents, with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum from the 15th of November 1856 until paid, and three thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine dollars and fifty-

*Statutes—Embracing More Than One Object—Effect.—In Cutlip v. Sheriff of Calhoun County, 3 W. Va. 596, the act of January, 1867, locating the county seat at another place in the county, which was entitled "An act locating the county seat of Calhoun county," the third section of which act authorized the Board of Supervisors to sell the county property at Arnoldsburg, was construed by the majority of the court and held to be repugnant to art. IV, § 36 of the constitution, which provides, that "No law shall embrace more than one object which shall be expressed in its title." MAXWELL, J., in a dissenting opinion says, that the construction of this act should not have been considered in the case upon habeas corpus, but proceeds to give his impression upon the question; he proceeds as follows, "Without deciding whether the construction given by the Ohio and California courts or that given by the court of Maryland be correct, to apply the construction of the Maryland court to the act of January 22d, 1867, the main body of the act is valid, and the third section only would be void, while to apply the construction of the Ohio and California courts the entire acts would be valid. The constitution of Virginia of 1851, has the provision in it in the precise form it is found in the constitution of this state.

"The supreme court of appeals of Virginia had the construction of the provision under consideration in the case of the Commonwealth v. Drewry and others, 15 Gratt. 1.

"The title of the act which was brought in question was, 'An act concerning sheriffs and commissioners of the revenue, their duties and compensation,' while the act itself was apparently inconsistent with its title.

"JUDGE SAMUELS, delivering the opinion of the court, touches the subject very cautiously, and disposes of it as follows: 'It may be difficult to declare the effect of this provision if, at any time hereafter, an act of assembly shall be found to conflict therewith, it is enough for the purposes of this case to say that no such conflict exists therein. The act is in reference to a single object, to wit: county organization.'

"The judge says the act is in reference to a single object, which he says is 'county organization,' but it seems to me a great stretch of imagination to find any such object expressed in the title of the act, yet the act was held valid.

"It looks to me very much like a determination to maintain the act, notwithstanding the object is not expressed in the title.

"The act passed March 4th, 1869, entitled, 'An act to repeal chapter 1, of the acts of 1867, was intended to repeal the act passed January 22d, 1867, entitled 'An act locating the county seat of Calhoun county,' and it might be a question of very serious consideration in a proper case whether the act is not unconstitutional and void, because its object is not expressed in its title, if the provision of the constitution is not to be construed as merely directory to the legislature, as it is held in Ohio and California."

†Bond of Officer—Failure to Obtain Court's Approval—Effect upon Sureties.—In State v. Proudfoot, 38 W. Va. 746, 18 S. E. Rep. 953, citing the principal case, it is held that the failure of an officer to obtain an approval of his official bond as required by statute does not affect his liability or that of his sureties, if it was otherwise legally executed and delivered.

See also, Monteith v. Com., 15 Gratt. 172.

Offices—Incumbents—Failure of Successor to Qualify—Effect.—In Johnson v. Mann, Judge, 77 Va. 278, it is held that under the constitution and laws of this five cents for damages thereon; subject to a credit of four thousand two hundred and eleven dollars and fourteen cents, as of the 16th of July 1856, and a further credit of seven hundred and fifty-one dollars.

Digitized by Google

The cause as to the sureties was continued, and came on to be tried on the 4th day of February 1858, when the court held that there was no liability on the defendants as sureties of Drewry; and therefore dismissed the motion. To this opinion and judgment of the court the commonwealth excepted.

It appeared that John M. Drewry had been duly elected the sheriff of Norfolk county in May 1852, and had qualified and acted as such for the term extending from July 1st, 1852, to July 1st, 1854. That he had been re-elected in May 1854, and had qualified and acted as sheriff from the end of his first term to January 1st, 1857. That in July 1854 he had executed a bond with the defendants as his sureties, with condition for the faithful performance of his duties. That he had given no new bond under the provisions of the act of March 15th, 1856, ch. 8, Sess. Acts 1855-56, but that he collected the taxes for the year 1856. That Thomas D. Butt was elected, in May 1856, sheriff of Norfolk county, and on the 21st of June following executed a bond with sureties, with condition
3 for the *faithful performance of the duties of the office: And on the same day appeared in open court of said county, and took the several oaths prescribed by law; and entered upon his duties as sheriff on the 1st of January following.

It appeared further, that there were three commissioners of the revenue in the county of Norfolk, and their books were certified in the usual form to have been delivered to Drewry the sheriff on the 14th of June 1856; and these books were received by the auditor at Richmond, one of them on the 30th of June, one other on the 1st, and the third on the 28th of July. But the defendants proved that though one copy of each of the books had been returned to the clerk's office, and was examined by the clerk before the 15th of June, and so probably were all the copies of the books of one of the commissioners; that as to the books of the other commissioners, all the copies were not examined before that date, and that these last books were not delivered to the sheriff before the 1st of July. The amount appearing to be due on the land and property books of each of the commissioners was stated: And the attorney for the commonwealth withdrew the account against the sheriff for the license tax; and moved for a judgment for the amount appearing to be due for other taxes. And the court having dismissed the motion, the commonwealth applied to this court for a supersedeas to the judgment, which was awarded.

The Attorney General, for the commonwealth.

Hubard and Murdaugh, for the appellees.

SAMUELS, J. By the constitution of Virginia, article 6, § 30, it is ordained, amongst other things, that the voters of each county shall elect a sheriff, who shall hold his office for two years. By § 23
4 of the *same article, it is ordained that judges and all other officers, whether elected or appointed, shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices after their terms of service have expired, until their successors are qualified. By article 4, § 38, it is ordained that the manner of conducting and making returns of elections, of determining contested elections, and of filling vacancies in office, in cases not specially provided for by the constitution, shall be prescribed by law.

In obedience to the mandates of the constitution, the general assembly enacted the statute of April 22, 1852, ch. 71, p. 64, of Sessions Acts. By the first section of this statute it was enacted, amongst other things, that a sheriff should be elected on the fourth Thursday of May then next, and on the same day in every second year thereafter. By the eighteenth section of the statute, the term of the office of sheriff began on the first day of July next succeeding the election. By the nineteenth section the sheriff, before entering upon the discharge of his duties, was required to take the oaths prescribed by the Code of Virginia, and to give all such official bonds as were then required of him. Under this law John M. Drewry was elected sheriff of Norfolk county on the day named in 1852; and again elected on the same day in the year 1854; and having taken the oaths required by law, and given the bond in which the defendants here are sureties, and which is the subject of controversy in this case, on the first day of July 1854 he was inducted into office as sheriff, and entered upon the discharge of its duties. No successor of Drewry, in his office of sheriff, qualified so as to enter upon the duties of the office on the first day of July 1856, nor at any time before January 1st, 1857. Drewry continued to discharge the duties of his office in so far as state incumbents continue to discharge the duties of their offices, after their terms of office have expired, until their successors have qualified, and the court further says in commenting on the principal case: "But it is insisted that the case of the Commonwealth v. Drewry, 15 Gratt. 1, is conclusive authority in this case for the petitioner.

---

"That case arose under a statute passed by the legislature in 1856, to extend the then current term of sheriffs from the first day of July, when the term would expire, to the first day of January succeeding. That act was passed under the constitution of 1851. This court held that act not in violation of the constitution then in force.

"There is no statute under our present constitution extending the term of any office, and it might well be a matter of grave doubt whether the legislature could, under the present constitution, exercise any such power. This circumstance is sufficient to show that that case can have no influence as authority in the case under consideration."

See also, Lawhorne, ex parte, 18 Gratt. 91, and note, citing the principal case.

Digitized by Google

to collect the commonwealth's revenue in his county for the year 1856, the subject of contest in *this suit. In this state of things (if nothing else existed) it would seem that Drewry's term commencing July 1st, 1854, by its original limitation endured to the last day of June 1856, and thereafter, by the provision of the constitution, until his successor qualified.

It is alleged on behalf of the defendants that the action of the general assembly in enacting the statute of March 15, 1856, Sess. Acts, ch. 8, § 2, p. 8, has in some way changed Drewry's term of office, and of consequence the liability of his sureties, which is co-extensive in point of time with his term. This objection I conceive is not well taken, upon the true construction of the constitution. In the partition of power between the three departments of government, the power of making laws is conferred on the general assembly; some laws they are compelled by mandate to make; other laws they are forbidden to make; these are the only limits to their powers; all subjects of legislation not affected by mandate, nor by prohibition, are within the discretion of the general assembly. It is conceded by all that the act of April 22, 1852, fixing the commencement of the sheriff's term on the first of July next after his election, was a legitimate exercise of power. It is earnestly insisted, however, that the act of March 15th, 1856, is unconstitutional in fixing the first of January next after the election as the beginning of the sheriff's term for Drewry's successor. If we yield to this objection we must hold that the act of April 22, 1852, has in effect become part of the constitution; that it would require the sovereign authority of the people assembled in convention to change this, a mere act of legislation: that a single exercise of legislative power exhausts and destroys the power. Such was not the intention of the framers of the constitution, nor of the people when they adopted it. The power of legislation over this subject, as over many others, was intended to be exercised *from time to time to meet the exigencies of the public service. There is no prohibition to forbid on the 15th March 1856, an exercise of power because at a previous tie, April 22d, 1852, the power had been exercised. If, however, this act of March 15th, 1856, should be held unconstitutional in whole or in part, it is not perceived how the defendants could be relieved by such decision. Drewry was duly elected in May 1854, and duly inducted into office July 1854. Under the constitution and law at that time, there was a possibility that the term of two years might be prolonged until a successor should qualify: and for this whole term, whatever it might be, the sureties were bound.

It was insisted by the defendants, that if the act of March 15th, 1856, was warranted by the constitution, still as Drewry did not give the bond required by that act, the prolongation of the term was without warrant of law. I have already said that the constitution of itself required Drewry to continue in the discharge of his duties until a successor was qualified. It directs such continuance without reference to any particular cause of delay in the successor, but upon the fact that the delay has occurred; it fixes no limit of time beyond which the delay shall not have its effect to prolong the term of the incumbent.

It would be conceded that if a successor, from sickness, casualty, or inability to comply with the requisition to give security, should not qualify, the incumbent would continue in office. If it be admitted that Drewry might have been his own successor for the period between July 1st, 1856, and January 1st, 1857, by giving the bond required by the act of March 1856, yet such bond was not given, and he did not qualify as such successor. I attach no weight to the argument that the general assembly might prolong the office of an incumbent for a long period of time, by postponing the term of his successor. The existence of a power *is not to be questioned only because it may be abused. The most salutary powers, plainly granted, may be perverted; yet it would be unreasonable to hold that therefore these powers do not exist. If in any case the general assembly keeping within the letter of its charter, shall yet enact laws from sinister motives, it might be difficult for the courts to interfere. But any speculation as to what the court could do in such a case, would be disrespectful to the general assembly; as there is nothing to justify any suspicion of improper motive in passing the law of March 1856. On the contrary, the law, as it stood prior to that time, was inconvenient and of doubtful construction. The commissioners of the revenue were required by law to deliver their books on the 15th of June to the sheriff; at the end of every second year the sheriff went out of office on the 30th of June, if a successor qualified; a sheriff had no authority to receive voluntary payment of taxes before the 1st of July; nor authority to distrain for taxes until a later day. If it should be held that the outgoing sheriff was chargeable with the duty of receiving and accounting for taxes, he would be charged with a duty beginning only after he was out of office; if the incoming sheriff might be charged with the duty of receiving the books from commissioners of the revenue on the 15th of June, this would be a duty existing before the term of office commenced. It would be improper to express any opinion whether the outgoing or the incoming sheriff should be chargeable with the duty of collecting the taxes when the office passed from the one to the other on the first of July; the subject is referred to solely for the purpose of showing the propriety of removing all doubt; as is done by the act of March 1856. If the beginning of the term of Butt, the successor of Drewry was lawfully postponed, then the constitution required Drewry the incumbent to continue to discharge its duties. There is nothing *in the constitution to make this case an exception from the general terms of that instrument; and we are not justified in interpolating at the end of section 23, article 6, an addition to this effect, "but if the qualification of a successor in the office of sheriff shall be postponed by the action of the general assembly, then the sheriff incumbent shall not continue to discharge the duties of his office beyond his term of two years."

Digitized by Google

It has been said that the act of March 1856, § 2, is in violation of article 4, section 16 of the constitution, which is in these words: "No law shall embrace more than one object, which shall be expressed in its title; nor shall any law be revived or amended by reference to its title; but the act revived or amended shall be re-enacted and published at length." It may be difficult to declare the effect of this provision, if at any time hereafter an act of assembly shall be found in conflict therewith; it is enough for the purposes of this case to say that no such conflict exists therein; the act is in reference to a single object, to wit, county organization. The constitution itself, article 6, § 30, treats the organization of counties as one object, under the head of "county officers"; and amongst these are named "a sheriff" and "commissioners of the revenue." A large and important part of the duties of either office is performed in co-operation with the other. If it should be held that the common duties, so far as they are devolved on commissioners, must be prescribed by one series of laws, and so far as devolved on the sheriff, in another series of laws, we should fall upon the inconvenience guarded against by the second clause of article 4, § 16; that is, the inconvenience of referring to different laws for a connected reading of the law on one subject. It is said, moreover, that the law in question is in conflict with the second clause of article 4, § 16, which is in these words: "Nor shall any law be 9 revived or amended by *reference to its title, but the act revived or amended shall be re-enacted and published at length." The act in question does not revive any law whatever; nor does it amend any law: it neither revives nor amends any law by reference to its title, but is complete in itself, and perfectly intelligible, without reference to any thing beyond its own terms. By section 18 of the act of March 1856, all laws in conflict therewith are repealed.

In the events which have happened, touching the succession to the sheriffalty in Norfolk county, it must be said that the act of March 1856 was an ineffectual attempt to fill the office from July 1, 1856 to January 1, 1857; Drewry failed to give the bond required, and no other provision was made, but the subject was left to the operation of a general provision of the constitution.

I have thus, in deference to the learned counsel who argued the case, considered the several objections to the act of March 1856, on the ground of its alleged unconstitutionality; but I have not been able to perceive how their clients could be relieved if the act should be put out of the case; the provision of the law of April 22d, 1852, in force when Drewry was elected and inducted into office, fixed his term of two years from July 1, 1854, to July 1856; the constitution prolonged it until a successor qualified; which in our case was January 1st, 1857. Their bond bound them for Drewry's official acts whilst in office.

The record does not show for what amount the defendants here are liable. As the court below decided that they were not liable at all for Drewry's default, they were not concerned to contest the question as to the amount of that default, nor is its amount shown by the record.

The judgment should be reversed with costs, and the cause remanded for the 10 purpose of having the amount *of Drewry's default ascertained, and of rendering a judgment according to law.

ALLEN, P., and DANIEL and LEE, Js., concurred in the opinion of Samuels, J.

MONCURE, J., dissented.

Judgment reversed.

---

11 Davis v. Christian & als.

January Term, 1859, Richmond.

1. Partnerships—Terminated by Death of One Partner—How Continued.—Though, as a general rule, a partnership, whether for a definite or indefinite period, is terminated by the death of one of the partners: yet it may be continued longer by express agreement between the partners, or under the provisions of the will of the deceased partner, with the consent of the surviving partner. But in the latter case, if the testator merely direct that the partnership be continued after his death, the responsibility of his estate will be limited to the funds already embarked in the trade: Though he may make it cover his whole estate, if he chooses so to direct.

2. Same—Direction in Will of Deceased Partner to Sell Property to Carry on Business—Effect.—Testator directs his partnership with C to be continued if C will consent to it, and gives him full power over his interest in the partnership for carrying it on; and also authorizes his executors to sell all his estate to enable C to carry on the business to greater advantage, or to pay the debts which may be due and owing from the partnership at any time during its continuance. The effect of this provision was not to give the executors a mere discretion to sell the real estate or not at their pleasure during the continuance of the partnership, but to create a trust in favor of creditors of the partnership.

3. Same—Partnership Realty—Nature of.†—Real estate may, in equity, be converted out and out into personalty by the agreement of the partners, or

---

*JUDGE SAMUELS died on the 5th day of January, and the vacancy occasioned by his death, was not filled until near the end of the May term.

†Partnerships—Partnership Realty—Nature of.—The principal case lays down the rule, that real estate

Digitized by Google

the manner in which it is conveyed to them. So real estate bought with partnership effects for partnership purposes, though conveyed to the individual partners, is thereby converted into personalty, at least to the extent that may be necessary for the purpose of paying the debts of the partnership, and adjusting the accounts between the partners: QUÆRE: If it is converted to any further extent, or out and out.

4. Same—Conversion of Realty—How Conveyed.‡—But every such conversion of real estate into personalty, whether express or implied, complete or partial, is equitable only; and the property can only be conveyed as real estate, and by each partner, in order to pass the whole to the grantee.

5. Executors—Powers of—Right of Survivor to Execute.—It seems that a power given to executors by name, if the will does not point to a joint exercise of it, may be executed by the survivor.

12 *6. Same—Discretion in Exercising a Power—Survival of Power.—A power given to executors will survive, though a discretion is given to them in regard to the exercise of the power.

7. Same—Discretionary Power to Sell—Purchasers—Application of Purchase Money.§—Where a discretionary power to sell is given to executors, a purchaser from them, if he acted bona fide, will not be affected by the manner in which they exercised their discretion. And if the power is to sell for the payment of debts generally, the purchaser is not bound to see to the application of the purchase money.

8. Lis Pendens—When Applies.—The doctrine of lis pendens only applies where there is a suit to affect the property purchased, and can have no effect upon it unless a decree may be made in the suit to affect it, nor until such decree is made.

9. Pendente Lite Purchaser—Facts in Record of Suit at Time of Purchase—Effect.¶—A purchaser having constructive or actual notice of a pending suit, can only be held chargeable with knowledge of the facts of which the record in the suit, as it existed at the time of his purchase, would have informed him. If these facts inform him that the vendor is committing a fraud in making the sale, he becomes a party to the fraud. But he cannot be charged with the knowledge of facts afterwards brought into the case.

10. Breach of Trust by Executors—Purchasers for Rights and Liabilities.—To convict a purchaser of a fraudulent participation in a breach of trust by an executor having authority to sell, the evidence of notice of the fraudulent intent on the part of the executor, ought to be very strong. The purchaser has a right to presume, in the absence of all direct or plain proof to the contrary, that the executor is exercising his power fairly and faithfully, in conformity to his duty.

---

may, in equity be converted out and out into personalty by the agreement of the partners, or the manner in which it is conveyed to them. It is also laid down that real estate bought with partnership effects for partnership purposes, though conveyed to the individual partners, is thereby converted into personalty. The principal case is cited and followed for the above proposition, in Cunningham v. Ward, 30 W. Va. 579, 5 S. E. Rep. 650. See discussion in 4 Va. Law Reg. 312, where the principal case is cited. The principal case leaves it as a quære whether real estate purchased for partnership purposes with partnership funds is converted into personalty for any other purposes than paying the debts of the partnership and adjusting the accounts between the partners, but in Parrish v. Parrish, 88 Va. 529, 14 S. E. Rep. 325, and Deering v. Kerfoot, 89 Va. 491, 16 S. E. Rep. 671, it is held that the realty is so far considered as personalty that the widow of the deceased partner is not entitled to dower therein, but only to her distributive share. See, further on the subject of Conversion, Diggs v. Brown, 78 Va. 292; Pierce v. Trigg, 10 Leigh 406; Hardy v. Norfolk M'f'g Co., 80 Va. 404; Wheatley v. Calhoun, 12 Leigh 264, 37 Am. Dec. 654, and note; 2 Min. Inst. (4th Ed.) 139; Brooke v. Washington, 8 Gratt. 248, 56 Am. Dec. 142, and note; Hancock v. Talley, Va. Law J. 1881, p. 583, vol. 1, Va. Dec. p. —.

‡Same—Conversion of Realty—How Conveyed.—In Zane v. Sawtell, 11 W. Va. 50, the court said: "Real estate bought with partnership effects, for partnership purposes, is, though conveyed to the partners individually impressed with the character of personalty; yet such property is effectually conveyed by a deed executed by the partners describing it as real estate. Davis v. Christian, 15 Gratt. 11. I cannot see why the grantor might not convey land which he had thus impressed with the character of personalty by a deed describing it still as land. Such a deed ought not to be regarded as ineffectual because in it the grantor failed to recite that the land had been previously impressed with the character of personalty. It was so expressly held in the case of Siter, Price & Co. v. McClanachan, 2 Gratt. 280." See also, Cunningham v. Ward, 30 W. Va. 579, 5 S. E. Rep. 650, citing the principal case.

At the time of the death of Josephus B. Colton, which happened between the 15th day of August 1829, the date of his will, and the 3d day of October 1831, when it was recorded, he and his brother in law Henry Clarke were, and for several years before had been, engaged in mercantile §Executors—Power Given to Sell Property for Payment of Debts Generally—Rights of Purchasers.—Where the executor has power to sell for the payment of debts generally, the purchaser is not bound to see to the application of the purchase money; he has a right to presume in the absence of all direct or plain proof to the contrary that the executor is exercising his power fairly and faithfully, in conformity to his duty. For the above proposition the principal case is cited with approval in the following cases: Jones v. Clark, 25 Gratt. 642, and note; Brockenbrough v. Turner, 78 Va. 449: Woodwine v. Woodrum, 19 W. Va. 73, 77. See generally, monographic note on "Executors and Administrators."

---

¶Pendente Lite Purchasers—Facts in Record at Time of Purchase—Effect.—In Stout v. Philippi M'f'g, etc., Co., 41 W. Va. 345, 23 S. E. Rep. 573, it was said: "Next, can fraud be imputed to the Douglasses? Likely not, as an actual, mental fraud in them; but in law they are chargeable with fraud, because, being pendente lite purchasers, they are chargeable with everything alleged in the bill. If the facts in the record tell a pendente lite purchaser that his vendor committed fraud, he becomes a party to the fraud. Davis v. Christian, 15 Gratt. 12, point 9. He has notice of facts disclosed by the record. Benn. Lis Pend. § 92; Arnold v. Casner, 22 W. Va. 444, point 7."

Digitized by Google

business in the city of Richmond, carried on in a house on E street, which had been bought with the funds and for the purposes of the partnership, and is the subject of controversy in this case. The firm was chiefly engaged in the dry goods business. But it was also engaged in selling paper on commission, to a large amount, chiefly if not entirely for D. & J. Ames of Springfield, Massachusetts. Josephus B. Colton left a widow, Abby Colton, who was a sister of Henry Clarke, and three children, 13 to *wit: Jane Eliza, Hannah Maria and Sarah Ann, all of which children were infants of tender years. His will, which was dated and recorded as aforesaid, contains, among others, the following clauses:

"1st. It is my will and desire that all my just debts, both individually and as a partner of the firm of Colton & Clarke of the city of Richmond, be paid; and for that purpose I do hereby subject all my property real and personal, and give full authority to my executors herein after named to sell and convey any and all of my estate real and personal, if necessary, for that purpose."

"4th. It is furthermore my will and desire, if the said Henry Clarke will consent thereto, that the business now carried on under the firm of Colton & Clarke shall be continued under the said name by the said Henry Clarke for the joint and equal benefit of himself and my estate so long as he and my wife Abby Colton shall desire and consent thereto—and to that end that all my property vested in the business remain under the control of the said Henry Clarke for that purpose, to be sold and disposed of and new purchases made in like manner as if I were in full life, and the partnership were continued. And should it at any time, in the opinion of my executors herein after named, be deemed necessary by them to sell any or all of the real estate now held jointly by me and the said Henry Clarke, or by me individually, or jointly with any other person, to enable the said Henry Clarke to prosecute to greater advantage the said business, or to pay the debts which may be due and owing from the same at any time during the continuance of the said business, I do hereby desire and fully authorize my said executors herein after named to sell and convey the same in fee simple for that purpose.

"5th. If at any time my wife Abby Colton or said Henry Clarke shall deter-14 mine to close the said business, *I will and desire that the proceeds of such business and all my estate real and personal, be divided among my said wife and my three daughters Jane Eliza, Hannah Maria and Sarah Ann, as follows, to wit: one-third thereof to my wife, and her heirs and assigns, and the residue to be equally divided between my said daughters and their heirs and assigns.

"6th. If upon the marriage or coming of age of any one or all my said daughters, or at any time after, she or they shall require her or their proportion of my estate to be paid unto her or them, it is my desire that it be done, and the business so far as she or they may be concerned, to cease, but to continue as to those not requiring it, until the marriage or coming of age of all of them, when such an arrangement may be made by all parties as shall suit them.

"7th. I will and desire that so long as my said children or any one of them shall remain unmarried or are under age, that my wife keep them, or such as are unmarried or under age, with her, and that the support of my wife and children, so as aforesaid living together, whether of age or not, be furnished and provided from the business so as aforesaid to be conducted by the said Henry Clarke, so long as the same shall be so conducted, and a joint charge made of the same to my estate, and not to each of them separately."

"10th. I hereby appoint my wife Abby Colton and my brother in law Henry Clarke executors to this my last will and testament; and it is my desire that no security be demanded or required of them or either of them in that capacity."

Abby Colton and Henry Clarke qualified as executrix and executor of the will, giving a joint bond as such without security.

After the death of J. B. Colton, the business which had been carried on under the firm of Colton & Clarke, was continued under the same name by Henry Clarke, 15 *in pursuance of the provisions of the said will. At the close of the year 1834, the stock of dry goods of the firm of Colton & Clarke was sold out by them at auction; and they never did any dry goods business after that time, except that they were in the habit of purchasing and selling a few pieces of broadcloth occasionally. But they continued to sell goods on commission, mostly paper for printing and writing purposes, and especially paper consigned to them by D. & J. Ames aforesaid.

In October 1837 Hannah M., one of the three children of J. B. Colton, intermarried with Patrick H. Fitzhugh. They had issue but one child, which died in July 1839. Shortly thereafter Fitzhugh and wife instituted a suit in chancery in the late Circuit superior court of law and chancery for the county of Henrico and city of Richmond, for the purpose of having their interest in the estate real and personal of the said J. B. Colton, decreed to them. Henry Clarke and Abby Colton, as executor and executrix of J. B. Colton, and in their own right, and Jane Eliza and Sarah Ann Colton were made defendants to the suit. Not long after the institution of the suit, the plaintiff Hannah M. Fitzhugh and the defendants Jane Eliza, Sarah Ann and Abby Colton, all died; to wit: the said Hannah M. in December 1839, aged nineteen years; Jane Eliza in December 1840, aged 22 years and 5 months; Sarah Ann in September 1841, aged 18 years and 1 month; and Abby Colton in May 1843. Before the death of Abby Colton, to wit: in January 1843, she filed her answer to the bill. She left a will, which bears date on the 26th day of December 1842, and was recorded on the 13th day of June 1843. It contains, among other clauses, the following:

Digitized by Google

"Thirdly. It is my will and I do hereby direct that as soon as practicable after my decease, having a just regard to the interests of all concerned, the business 16 *now conducted in the city of Richmond under the firm of Colton & Clarke, be brought to a close. And for that purpose I do hereby authorize, empower and direct my executors hereinafter named to sell, transfer, assign and convey on such terms and in such manner as they may deem most advisable, all my right, title and interest in and to the real and personal property which shall belong to the firm of Colton & Clarke, and shall constitute a portion of the funds of said firm at the time of my said decease; and also to sell or otherwise dispose of all the real and personal property other than the slaves hereinafter named, which I shall stand seized or possessed of at the time of my death, either in my own individual right or conjointly with any other person whomsoever, and to invest the proceeds arising from the sale or disposition of such property real or personal in other productive real estate, or in government stocks of the United States or the state of Virginia, or in both the one and the other."

Henry Clarke and William J. Clarke, executors named in the will, qualified as such, but without giving security; the will directing that none should be required of them.

Henry Clarke also filed an answer to the bill. An order of account seems to have been made in the cause, but the date of it does not appear. After the deaths of the plaintiff Hannah M. Fitzhugh and the defendants Abby, Jane E. and Sarah A. Colton as aforesaid, an amended bill was filed to revive the suit in the name of Patrick H. Fitzhugh, in his own right, and as administrator of his wife Hannah M., as plaintiff, and the following named persons as defendants, viz: Henry Clarke in his own right, and as surviving executor of and trustee under the will of J. B. Colton, Henry and William J. Clarke, as executors of Abby Colton, the personal representatives of Eliza J. and Sarah A. Colton, when any should be appointed. and John J.
17 Shuble *and Elizabeth J. his wife, she being next of kin and heir at law of Sarah A. Colton on the father's side. Henry Clarke also filed an answer to the amended bill.

Commissioner Shore having executed the order of account aforesaid and returned a report thereof, and an exception having been taken thereto by William J. Clarke, executor of Abby Colton, the cause came on to be heard on the 8th day of July 1851, when the court sustained the said exception so far as to withhold for the present any decree against the executor of Abby Colton, confirmed the report as to the defendant Henry Clarke, and decreed that he should pay to Richard A. Christian, assignee of the plaintiff Patrick H. Fitzhugh, administrator of Hannah M. Fitzhugh, eight thousand two hundred and thirty dollars and fifty cents, with interest on seven thousand seven hundred and sixty-seven dollars from the 31st day of December 1849 until paid, reserving liberty to the plaintiff or his said assignee to apply for relief thereafter, as to the executors of Abby Colton, in case the decree against Henry Clarke should prove unavailing.

Before the decree was rendered, to wit, on the 27th day of February 1846, the tenement on E street in the city of Richmond, in which Colton & Clarke had carried on their business, and which had been bought with the funds, and for the purposes of the partnership as aforesaid, was sold and conveyed to Benjamin Davis for nine thousand dollars, by deed of that date executed by Henry Clarke and Mary M. his wife, in their own right, the same Henry Clarke as surviving executor of Josephus B. Colton, the same Henry Clarke and William J. Clarke as executor of Abby Colton, and the same Henry Clarke as surviving partner of the said firm of Colton & Clarke. The receipt of the purchase money was acknowledged in the deed. The deed contained a covenant of general warranty. And as an additional security a bond of indem-
18 nity *bearing the same date with the deed, was executed by Henry and William J. Clarke and Nathaniel C. Crenshaw, to secure Davis, and especially to indemnify him against any claim or demand of Patrick H. Fitzhugh or Shuble and wife, or any person claiming under them, or either of them.

In August 1851 the suit, in which was rendered the decree appealed from in this case, was instituted by Richard A. Christian, assignee of P. H. Fitzhugh, &c., to impeach and set aside, as fraudulent and void, the deed which had been executed to Davis as aforesaid. Davis, the two Clarkes and other proper parties were made defendants to the suit. The plaintiff in his bill, among other things, avers that Colton & Clarke, in the lifetime of Colton, carried on a dry goods business in a tenement on E street in the city of Richmond, purchased by them with the profits of the partnership, for partnership purposes; that Clarke continued after Colton's death to carry on the business in the same tenement, with Abby Colton's consent, until the close of the year 1834, during which time the business was prosperously conducted; that it not having been necessary to pay any debts of the concern of Colton & Clarke or of Colton, or to prosecute the business to greater advantage, to make sale of any of the real estate of the testator, none of it was sold during all the period aforesaid for which it continued. That at the close of 1834, with the common consent of Henry Clarke and Abby Colton, the business was discontinued, and Clarke sold off at public auction the whole stock of goods of the concern, and never after that purchased any more; that this cessation of the business was open and notorious, and well known in the city of Richmond and to the public generally; for Clarke thereafter embarked in other totally different business, and among other things, in coal mining and shipping coal in the county of Chesterfield, which 19 *turned out disastrously. But that he was still allowed by Abby Colton his coexecutor (her daughters being infants living under the protection of their mother, and thus having no voice or control in the matter), to retain the control and management of the whole estate of Colton, and in flagrant violation of the duties and obligation of both, to pervert the funds of the estate of Colton and of the concern into these new and unauthorized channels of employment and speculation until, before the death of Abby Colton, much of the estate and of the partnership funds had been by Clarke squandered and misspent; and he himself had become insolvent, as was then well and publicly known; nor had Abby Colton, at her death, wherewithal to make good the default of Clarke, she having no estate other than what she was entitled to under the will of her husband. The plaintiff then (after referring to the marriage of Fitzhugh and wife, the birth and death of the only child of the marriage, the suit instituted by Fitzhugh and wife as aforesaid, and till pending, the assignment by Fitzhugh of all his interest in the estate of Colton to the said Richard A. Christian, the successive deaths of Hannah M. Fitzhugh and Jane Eliza, Sarah Ann and Abby Colton, the revival of the said suit in the names of the personal representatives of the said decedents respectively and of Shuble and wife, in her right as next of kin and heir at law ex parte paterna of the said Sarah Ann, the decree recently rendered therein as aforesaid, and the fact that no decree had been made therein, in regard to the real estate of Colton, although Shuble and wife and Christian as assignee aforesaid, had been and still were pressing for a decree which should adjudge and assign them their rights respectively in the premises), charges that after the death of Abby Colton, and after the institution of the suit of Fitzhugh v. Clarke, and while the same was in the full course of prose-

Digitized by Google

20 cution, *and after the deaths of said Ann Eliza and Sarah Jane, and many years after the concern of Colton & Clarke had closed, Henry Clarke, without the slightest pretence that any debt existed, due either from the estate of Colton or from said concern, to pay which his real estate should be sold, but with a design to pay a private personal debt contracted by him long after the business of Colton & Clarke had been closed, and to place the proceeds of sale under the control and to the personal use of the said Henry Clarke, fraudulently combined and confederated with Benjamin Davis and William J. Clarke joint executor with Henry Clarke of Abby Colton, to sell, and did sell the tenement on E street to Davis, who paid the purchase money to or for the use of Henry Clarke, he the said Davis and said Henry and William J. Clarke then and there well knowing all the facts stated in the bill, which rendered the sale of the testator's interest in the tenement unnecessary, improper and illegal, and that the money was to be paid to or for the personal use of Henry Clarke, well knowing the large indebtedness of Henry Clarke to the estate of Colton, and well knowing the pendency and object of the suit of Fitzhugh v. Clarke, the Clarkes being actually parties to it, and Davis having preparatory to the purchase aforesaid, employed counsel to investigate the state of the title to said tenement, who became fully acquainted with the terms of Colton's will, and the pendency and objects of said suit, and advised him thereof; in consequence of which, Davis obtained from Henry Clarke a bond of indemnity as aforesaid: And then, to consummate their joint fraud, Henry Clarke professing to act in his own right and as surviving partner and executor of Colton, and he and William J. Clarke, as executors of Abby Colton, united in conveying the said tenement to Davis. The plaintiff then prays that the sale may be declared fraudulent and void and the deed set aside, 21 *that an account of rents and profits and all other proper accounts may be taken, and for a discovery and general relief.

The defendant Davis filed his answer; in which he admits that he did purchase the said tenement and paid therefor the sum of nine thousand dollars in cash, and receive a conveyance, of which he exhibits a copy. He also admits that he had heard there was some cloud over the title of a portion of the property, by reason of some claim to it by P. H. Fitzhugh and Shuble and wife; against which claims he required and obtained a bond of indemnity, of which also he exhibits a copy. He says he may have heard before his purchase of the pendency of the said suit, upon the original bill, but he cannot affirm distinctly that he had or had not. He does not admit that any fraud was practiced by the surviving partner, Henry Clarke; but protests that if any such fraud was practiced, the respondent had no participation in it; knew nothing of it, and is in no manner responsible for it. He insists, that whether the said tenement be regarded as real or personal estate, as individual or partnership property, or whether it was sold for the payment of a debt of the partnerhip or not, the deed under which he claims conferred upon him a perfect title, and that he was not bound to see to the application of the purchase money. But in fact, he says the property was sold for and the purchase money applied to the payment of a debt of the partnership. He says that Colton & Clarke, at the time of Colton's death, was engaged, among other things, in a commission business with D. & J. Ames, and were largely indebted on account thereof: that after his death the business was continued under the authority of his will; and in the course of the said dealing, and for the purpose of discharging the debt due to D. & J. Ames, it was necessary that Colton & Clarke should procure large discounts, which 22 *they did by the aid of Davenport & Allen, who became their endorsers; and to secure them against loss by their endorsements, Henry Clarke and Abby Colton, in their own right and as executor and executrix of J. B. Colton, executed a deed of trust on the said tenement. That at the date of the sale to the respondent the debt to D. & J. Ames amounted to at least nine thousand dollars; and that on the 17th of March 1846 the respondent's check for nine thousand dollars, the price of said property, was passed by Henry Clarke to Davenport & Allen, and the amount received by them at the bank. The answer contains other statements, which, however, it is unnecessary to notice.

Digitized by Google

Besides the deeds before mentioned, the defendant Davis also exhibited a copy of the deed from Tate and wife to Colton & Clarke for the tenement in question, a copy of J. B. Colton's will, a copy of Abby Colton's will, and a copy from the books of Colton & Clarke, showing the state at different times of the account of D. & J. Ames for sales of paper made on their account by Colton & Clarke; from which it appears that the account was rendered eighteen times between July 10, 1829, and May 1, 1844, inclusive; that the amount varied in that period between seven thousand three hundred and twenty-six dollars and eighteen cents, the minimum, and seventeen thousand seven hundred and forty-two dollars and seventy-eight cents, the maximum; the amount due on the former day being the minimum, on the latter eight thousand three hundred and twenty-eight dollars and ninety-four cents, and on the 14th of April 1843, which was about the period of Abby Colton's death, eleven thousand eight hundred and fifty-seven dollars and sixty-five cents.

The plaintiff filed as exhibit copies of portions of the record of the suit of Fitzhugh v. Clarke, which have been before referred to.

No other answer was filed than that 23 of Davis, and *one for the infant defendants, to which answers the plaintiff replied generally. As to all the other defendants, the bill was taken for confessed.

Four depositions were taken in the case; two on behalf of the plaintiff, and two on behalf of the defendant Davis.

D. H. Reed, examined on behalf of the defendant, proved, among other things, that he lived with Colton & Clarke as bookkeeper from the 18th of October 1836 to the 1st of May 1848. Their business was selling goods on commission, mostly paper for printing and writing purposes; which was consigned to them almost entirely by D. & J. Ames. Witness kept the books of Colton & Clarke, and did most of the writing in them while he was in their employment. He made the statement from the books, which is filed as an exhibit by the defendant Davis as aforesaid. The purchase money for the tenement sold to Davis was received by Davenport, Allen & Co., through some private agreement, in consequence of a deed of trust having been made upon the property for their benefit, which had not been recorded. The debt to Davenport, Allen & Co. was created in this way: Colton & Clarke were in the habit of giving to D. & J. Ames, on account of balances due them for sales of paper, notes or acceptances, payable in New York. To meet the payment of such notes and acceptances, they were in the habit of obtaining from Davenport, Allen & Co. their drafts on the house of I. Davenport & Co. of New York, for which drafts Colton & Clarke gave in exchange their negotiable notes, payable in Richmond. At the time of the sale of the house, the amount of such notes held by Davenport, Allen & Co. constituted the debt referred to above. This course was pursued, because the drafts spoken of could be readily discounted. When witness left the employment of Colton & Clarke there 24 was a balance still standing on *their books to the credit of D. & J. Ames, of about four thousand dollars.

On cross examination, the witness proved that no dry goods business was done by Colton & Clarke after he went into their employment, except that they were in the habit of purchasing and selling a few pieces of broadcloth occasionally. There were debts and credits on the books to the firm of Pleasants & Clarke, of which Henry Clarke was a member, and which was engaged in the business of buying, growing and selling mulberry trees (principally morus multicaulis), and raising silk worms. There were similar entries on said books to the firm of A. & A. Wooldridge & Co., of which Henry Clarke was also a member, and which was engaged in the mining and selling of pit coal. The estate and effects of that concern were sold out by trustees. Certain lots opposite Rocketts, called the Coalyard island, were purchased at said sale by and in the name of Henry Clarke, for between nine and ten thousand dollars. They were sold by witness as trustee, in 1848, for between twenty-three and twenty-four hundred dollars. When witness lived with Colton & Clarke, they were part owners of two schooners.

William Sinton, examined on behalf of the plaintiff, proved, that he kept the books of Colton & Clarke in 1826, 1827 and 1828. No change took place in their business prior to Colton's death in September 1829. They engaged in no speculations, and were doing a safe and profitable business, having frequently purchased real estate out of the profits of the concern. Witness struck a balance sheet of the books in 1828, and thought each of the partners then worth from twenty to twenty-five thousand dollars, exclusive of bad and doubtful debts. They were in the habit of doing business very cautiously, and not of contracting debts and leaving them long unpaid.

Digitized by Google

25 The tenement *in controversy was purchased by Colton & Clarke out of the profits of their business. Henry Clarke sold out the dry goods of Colton & Clarke at auction at the close of 1834, which was considered by every body as a final close of the dry goods business of that concern: and they never did any dry goods business after that time. Henry Clarke and William J. Clarke have both taken the insolvent oath. Henry Clarke, after Colton's death, engaged in coal mining in Chesterfield, and in speculating in morus multicaulis trees and in vessels, and in 1842 or 1843 became so much embarrassed, that it was pretty generally known about Richmond.

D. H. Reed, re-examined on behalf of the plaintiff, proved, that counsel employed by defendant Davis investigated the title to the property before the conclusion of the purchase; and in consequence of this investigation, the bond of indemnity aforesaid was required and given.

The deed of trust for the benefit of Davenport, Allen & Co., before referred to, was executed in 1845. It was not recorded by agreement between them and Henry Clarke, because he thought it would injure the credit of Colton & Clarke to have it recorded. It was in consequence of this deed that Davenport, Allen & Co. received the purchase money of the property. The debt to Davenport, Allen & Co. commenced after 1840.

Isaac Davenport, examined in behalf of the defendant Davis, proved, that on the 16th of March 1846 Henry Clarke paid Davenport, Allen & Co., Davis' check for nine thousand dollars. They had a deed of trust on the tenement in controversy to secure a debt due to them by Colton & Clarke. It was executed by Henry Clarke, and witness thinks, but is not certain, by Abby Colton also. Thinks it was given a year or more before the payment of the nine thou-26 sand dollars. *When given, Henry Clarke requested that it should not be put upon record, unless something should occur to render it necessary; and therefore it was not put upon record, but retained by Davenport, Allen & Co. until the payment of the nine thousand dollars, and then delivered to Henry Clarke. A portion of the debt to Davenport, Allen & Co. was created three or four years before the payment of the nine thousand dollars: at one time it amounted to ten thousand dollars. It amounted to between seven thousand six hundred dollars and seven thousand seven hundred dollars when the nine thousand dollars were paid. It was for notes issued at various times and for different sums, by Davenport, Allen & Co. to Colton & Clarke for the accommodation of the latter, and discounted at bank. When they were given, witness had seen no notice of dissolution of the firm of Colton & Clarke, and believes it was understood by the mercantile community and the banks that the firm was still in existence. They kept a store on Main street in Richmond, and dealt in paper and some other goods. Henry Clarke used the name of Colton & Clarke in all business transactions with Davenport, Allen & Co., during the period aforesaid.

On the 25th of January 1855 the cause came on to be heard, and the court, being of opinion that the tenement in controversy was partnership assets of Colton & Clarke, and that at the time of the sale the partnership was dissolved, and Henry Clarke was a large debtor to the firm, and made the sale in fraudulent violation of his duty as surviving partner, of which Davis, when he purchased the tenement, had notice, and that the deed to him therefor is, as to the plaintiff and the legatees of the will of J. B. Colton, fraudulent and void, decreed that the said deed be set aside and annulled. And the plaintiff and the other legatees of J. B. Colton being willing and con-27 senting *to receive of the said Davis, if he shall so elect, in full discharge of their claims against him for the property and its profits, the value of the property at the time he acquired it, with interest thereon from that time, and to take as such value the said sum of nine thousand dollars, and to dispense with any account of its value and the profits thereof, the court further decreed that upon the payment by the said Davis of the said sum of money and interest into bank to the credit of the cause, and filing a proper certificate of such payment, he should be forever acquitted, as against the plaintiff and the said legatees, in his title and possession of said property, and as to them discharged of all claim for the same and its profits. But unless the said Davis should fully comply with the terms aforesaid within sixty days after being served with a copy of the order, the court further decreed that the property should be sold at public auction, by a commissioner appointed for the purpose.

From this decree the defendant Davis applied for and obtained an appeal.

William Green and Lyons, for the appellant, insisted:

1st. That the doctrine of lis pendens did not apply to the purchaser in this case. That it only applied where the pending suit was a suit to subject the property, and there was a decree in favor of the claimant; and the only effect of the lis pendens was to make the purchaser take the property subject to the decree. They referred to Newman v. Chapman, 2 Rand. 93; French v. Loyal Company, 5 Leigh 627; Beame's Orders in Chancery 7; Brightman v. Brightman, 1 Rhode Isl. R. 112. And they referred to the record in the first case to show that the bill did not claim to subject the property; and that the only decree was a personal decree against Clarke.

2d. That though the house and lot
28 purchased by *Davis was paid for out of the partnership funds, and was used for partnership purposes, it having been conveyed to Josephus Colton and Henry Clarke individually, it was not partnership property as to third persons dealing with one of the partners. Ridgway, Budd & Co.'s Appeal, 15 Penn. R. 177; Deloney v. Hutcheson, 2 Rand. 183. That as to partners real estate is held to be personal only so far as is necessary to give each partner an equality in the partnership; but as to a deceased partner, it descends to his heirs and not to his administrator. That Judge Tucker is not sustained by the authorities he cites, in saying in Wheatley's heirs v. Calhoun, 12 Leigh 264, that the realty is converted for all purposes into personal estate. They referred to Story Part. § 92, 93; Stuart v. Bute, 11 Ves. R. 665; Hart's devisees v. Hawkins' heirs, 3 Bibb's R. 502; Yeatman v. Woods, 6 Yerg. R. 20; Black v. Black, 15 Georgia R. 445; Buchan v. Sumner, 2 Barb. Ch. R. 165; Buckley v. Buckley, 11 Barb. S. C. R. 43; Anderson & Wilkins v. Tomkins & al., 1 Brock. R. 456, 463; Piott v. Oliver, 3 McLean's R. 28; Carrington's heirs v. Brent, 1 Id. 175; Preston v. Tublin, 1 Vern. 286. And they insisted that this being so, Davis was at least entitled under the deeds from Henry Clarke, the executor of Josephus B. Colton and the executors of Abby Colton, to the one moiety belonging to Clarke and to seven-ninths of the other moiety, of the house and lot; and therefore it was error to make the sale dependent on the payment of nine thousand dollars, which the plaintiff admitted was the full value of the property.

Digitized by Google

3d. That the partnership of Colton & Clarke terminated with the death of Colton, and the rights of the parties in the property were then fixed. That a new partnership was not then formed, but Clarke carried on the business, and he incurred the risk, vested with a trust by Colton, by which Colton's estate was to 29 *share the profits and losses as far as his property would go; but that Clarke's liabilities might extend much further. That partners are joint tenants with the jus accressendi at law and equity, subject to account to the representatives of the deceased partner; but until he is called to account, the deceased partner's representative is not entitled to any particular interest in any particular chose. Clarke, therefore, had in him, until called to account, the whole interest in the property, and could sell to a purchaser without notice, who might hold it as such purchaser. That Davis was a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of any violation of his trust by Henry Clarke, or of his insolvency, the account not having been taken when the purchase was made; that Davis was not bound to see to the application of the purchase money; and that in fact it was applied to the payment of a debt of Colton & Clarke.

R. T. Daniel, for the appellees. Whether the house and lot in controversy is to be considered real estate, or a part of the social effects of Colton & Clarke, is an important question in this case. If social effects, Fitzhugh has the absolute interest in his wife's share, and is entitled to come upon this property to have his debt paid; and if that debt covers the whole value, Clarke had nothing in the property, and could convey nothing to Davis. If it was real estate, Fitzhugh would have but a tenancy by the curtesy in two-ninths of it.

It is not material whether the old partnership continued after Colton's death, or a new one was formed, or there was no partnership existing. The will of Colton gave power to Clarke to carry on the business as if there was a partnership and Colton was alive; and directs all the property therein to remain there. It is this power under which he is to manage and dispose of the partnership property, and not the 30 power *under the will to sell property not then a part of the social effects. This house and lot was bought with partnership effects, and used for partnership purposes at the time of Colton's death, and therefore it was to be kept in the business. For authority for such a business the court is referred to Burwell v. Mandeville's ex'or, 2 How. U. S. R. 560, 576; Pitkin v. Pitkin, 7 Conn. R. 307.

Whatever may be the conflict of opinion elsewhere upon the question whether property such as this is real or personal estate, in Virginia, it is settled by the decisions of this court that it is personal estate to all purposes. Brooke v. Washington, 8 Gratt. 248. And this seems now to be the opinion in England. Bissett Part. ch. 2, p. 26–33. At the date of the decree in Fitzhugh v. Clarke, this was the only partnership property that remained. If we suppose every thing else connected with that partnership closed up, Clarke would be entitled to one moiety, Mrs. Colton to three-ninths of the other moiety, Fitzhugh to two-ninths, and each of the other two children to the same; and Fitzhugh would be a creditor of the firm to the amount of his decree. For this sum Clarke was liable, and Mr. Colton as his coexecutrix and surety, and indeed as his partner and assistant in all his acts, would be liable with and for him. Story Part. ch. 1, § 1 to 6; Collyer Part. ch. 1, § 16 to 19, 44 to 50. The will directed that on the marriage of a daughter she was to have her share of both principal and profits; and in 1837 Fitzhugh married one of them and demanded his wife's interest, which was refused.

Then how does Davis stand? He is a purchaser with actual notice of the matters of the suit, the breach of his trust by Clarke, his waste of Colton's estate, and his insolvency; and the will of Colton gave him notice of the trust. Burwell v. Mandeville's ex'or, 2 How. U. S. R. 560; Dowman v. Rust, 6 Rand. 557;
31 *Frost v. Beekman, 1 John. Ch. R. 288, 302; Murray v. Ballou, Id. 566. On the part of Davis there was an actual participation in the misapplication of the fund. The debt due to Ames at the dissolution of the partnership had been paid off, and yet he sets up another debt to the same parties subsequently contracted.

Digitized by Google

It is admitted that in order to affect a pendente lite purchaser there must be a decree; not a decree for the thing itself, but a decree which affects the title. In this case, however, it is not a question of implied notice, but of actual full information. Before he purchased he had the title examined, and knew how the property was held by Davis; the suit and its objects were all known to him; and he was obliged to know the mala fides of Clarke and his utter insolvency.

MONCURE, J. Let us first enquire, what interest the appellant Davis has in the tenement in controversy, regarding it as real estate, unaffected by any partnership, or by the power of sale contained in Josephus B. Colton's will.

He is certainly entitled to the undivided moiety of Henry Clarke. He is also entitled to the interest of Abby Colton in the other moiety. By her will she empowered her executors to sell all her real estate and invest the proceeds of sale in other productive real estate, or in government stocks. The execution of this power devolved on Henry Clarke and William J. Clarke, her only qualified and acting executors. They duly executed the power by joining in the sale and conveyance to Davis. He was not bound to see to the application of the purchase money. If it was misapplied with his participation or knowledge, he might be liable, as for a fraud, to persons claiming under her will, but to no other person. So far as this case is concerned, Davis must be considered as entitled to her interest in the property. What was that 32 *interest? She was entitled under the will of J. B. Colton her husband to one-third or three-ninths of his moiety. And she became entitled, by the deaths of their three children in her lifetime, to four of the remaining six-ninths, as one of the heirs at law of said children, subject only to any interest of P. H. Fitzhugh as tenant by the curtesy of his wife Hannah Maria's two-ninths. Whether he had such a seizin of the said two-ninths during the coverture as to give him any such interest, it is needless to enquire. Abby Colton's interest in the property, then, was seven-ninths of a moiety, subject only as aforesaid. And, in the view we are now taking of the case, Davis acquired by the sale and conveyance to him an absolute estate in the entire property, except two-ninths of a moiety, to which John J. Shuble and Elizabeth J. his wife were entitled in her right as collateral heir at law, ex parte paterna of Sarah Ann, the survivor of the said three children, who died under age; and except any interest of P. H. Fitzhugh as tenant by the curtesy of two other ninths as aforesaid. In that view of the case, the decree is certainly erroneous in directing a sale of the property, unless the appellant should pay the whole amount of the purchase money and interest into bank.

But let us now consider the case in connection with the partnership of Colton & Clarke, and the power of sale created by J. B. Colton's will.

It is a general rule, that a partnership, whether of definite or indefinite continuance by the terms of its creation, is dissolved by the death of one of the partners. It may be continued longer by express agreement between the partners, or under the provisions of the will of the deceased partner, and with the consent of the surviving partner. In the latter case, however, the testator's assets are not generally liable under all circumstances for the debts of the continued partnership.
33 *The case of Hankey v. Hammock, before Lord Kenyon, when master of the rolls, reported in a note to 3 Madd. R. 148, so far as it may be thought a decision to that effect, has been overruled by subsequent cases, and especially by Lord Eldon in Ex parte Garland, 10 Ves. R. 110. See also Ex parte Richardson, 3 Madd. R. 138, 157; Thompson v. Andrews, 1 Myl. & Keene 116, 6 Cond. Eng. Ch. R. 525; Pitkin v. Pitkin, 7 Conn. R. 307, and Burwell v. Mandeville's ex'or, 2 How. U. S. R. 560. If the testator merely direct that the partnership be continued after his death, his responsibility will be limited to the funds already embarked in the trade. But he may extend his responsibility further, and make it cover his whole estate if he chooses to do so. It has been said, however, "that nothing but the most clear and unambiguous language, demonstrating in the most positive manner that the testator intends to make his general assets liable for all debts contracted in the continued trade after his death, and not merely to limit it to the funds embarked in that trade, would justify the court in arriving at such a conclusion, from the mainfest inconvenience thereof, and the utter impossibility of paying off the legacies bequeathed by the testator's will, or distributing the residue of his estate, without in effect saying, at the same time, that the payments may all be recalled, if the trade should become unsuccessful or ruinous." 2 How. U. S. R. 577.

In this case, the testator plainly manifested his intention, not only that the partnership should be continued after his death, and his property already vested in the business remain so invested, but that all his real estate should be liable for all debts contracted in the business, and his executors should be fully authorized to sell and convey the said estate, to enable the surviving partner to prosecute the said business to greater advantage, or to pay the said debts. The clauses of the 34 *will which relate to the partnership, are the 1st, 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th, which are in these words: [the judge here read them].

By the 10th clause, he appointed his wife Abby Colton, and his brother in law and surviving partner Henry Clarke, his executors, and desired that no security should be required of them as such.

It will be observed that the reason ab inconvenienti, so forcibly assigned by Lord

Digitized by Google

Eldon in Ex parte Garland, and by Judge Story in Burwell v. Mandeville's executor, for not holding the general assets of a deceased partner liable for the debts of a partnership, continued under the provisions of his will, does not apply to this case; inasmuch as the estate was directed, to be kept together during the continuance of the partnership and no legatee could receive her portion of the estate without at the same time dissolving the partnership as to such portion, and exempting it from future liability.

The effect of the will was not to give to the executors a mere discretion to sell the real estate or not, at their pleasure, during the continuance of the partnership, but to create a trust; to subject the real estate to the risks of the business, and to give to creditors a right to look to it, if necessary, for the payment of their claims, whether during the continuance of the partnership or afterwards. The testator seems to have owned little or no personal estate which was not already embarked in the business, and intended that his whole real estate should be kept together to meet its wants and liabilities during its continuance; except that he gave to each child, on her marriage or coming of age, or at any time afterwards, a right to withdraw her portion of the estate from the business, which was then to cease as to her, but continue as to the rest. He relied exclusively on the profits of the business during its continuance for the support of his 35 *family, and directed that at its close the proceeds thereof and all his estate real and personal should be divided in certain proportions between his wife and children. The first clause of the will creates a charge for payment of debts due by the concern at the death of the testator: The fourth, for payment of debts which might arise in continuing the business after his death. The same reason exists for the charge in the one case as in the other.

In pursuance of the provisions of J. B. Colton's will, the business of the firm of Colton & Clarke was continued after his death, under the same name, by the surviving partner Clarke, with the consent of Abby Colton. According to those provisions, it was to be continued so long as he and she should desire and consent thereto. The parties differ as to the actual period of its continuance. It must have been determined at the death of Abby Colton in May 1843, if not before. The appellant contends that it was not determined before, and it appears from Abby Colton's will that she also was of that opinion. It is contended, on the other hand, that the partnership was determined at the end of 1834, when the dry goods of the concern were sold out at auction. But the firm was engaged at Colton's death, not only in the dry goods business, but also in an extensive agency for the sale of paper for D. & J. Ames of Massachusetts. That agency was part of the business which was authorized by Colton's will to be continued after his death; and it was accordingly so continued until the death of Abby Colton. Until that event, therefore, the partnership was not determined.

There has been much contrariety and fluctuation of opinion upon the question, whether and to what extent real estate bought with partnership funds for partnership purposes, is thereby converted into personalty. It may now be considered as 36 well settled *that real estate may, in equity, be converted out and out into personalty by the agreement of the partners or the manner in which it is conveyed to them. It may also be considered as well settled that real estate bought with partnership funds for partnership purposes is thereby, at least partially, converted into personalty, though it be conveyed to the partners in their individual names as joint tenants, and though there be no express agreement between them in regard to its conversion. It is converted into personalty to the extent that may be necessary for the purpose of paying the debts of the partnership and adjusting the accounts of the partners inter se. But whether converted to any further extent, or out and out, is a question which seems to be still unsettled and upon which there is much conflict of decision. It is well settled, however, that every such conversion, whether express or implied, complete or partial, is equitable only, and the property can only be conveyed as real estate. "Each partner (as has been said) is required, both at law and in equity, to join in every conveyance of real estate, in order to pass the entirety thereof to the grantee; and if one partner only execute it, whether it be in his own name or in that of the firm, the deed will not, ordinarily, convey any more than his own share or interest therein." This rule is "founded upon the nature of the property and the provisions of the common law applicable thereto." Story on Part. § 94.

The tenement in controversy was bought by Colton & Clarke with partnership funds for partnership purposes, and was used for such purposes always after its purchase, until the termination of the business; though it was conveyed to them in their individual names. It was therefore in equity, at least partially, converted into personalty. But it could only be conveyed to a purchaser by a deed executed by 37 them, or by those *authorized by them to sell and convey the same as real estate. Whatever may have been the interest of Colton in the subject, by his will he authorized his executors to sell and convey that interest. He directed that all his property vested in the business of Colton & Clarke should remain under the control of Clarke for the purpose of continuing the business, and to be sold, disposed of and new purchases made in like manner as if he were in full life and the partnership were continued. And should it at any time, in the opinion of his executors, be deemed necessary by them to sell any or all of the real estate held jointly by him and Clarke, or by him individually, or jointly with any other person, to enable Clarke to prosecute to greater advantage the said business, or to pay the debts which might be due and owing from the same at any time during its continuance; he desired and fully authorized his executors to sell and convey the same in fee simple for that purpose. This power of sale and conveyance is certainly broad enough to cover his interest in the tenement in controversy. The testator, certainly, could not have intended to withhold from his executors the power to sell and convey his interest in the real estate of the partnership, while he conferred upon them full authority to sell his individual estate, for the purpose of paying the debts of the partnership. The power of sale and disposition conferred on the surviving partner, is referable to the goods embarked in the business. The power of sale and conveyance conferred on the executors, is referable to the real estate, as well of the partnership as of the testator individually; both of which are embraced by the literal terms of the will, and the former is at least as much within the true intent and meaning thereof as the latter.

Digitized by Google

The executors of J. B. Colton, then, were fully empowered by his will to sell and 38 convey his real estate, *including his interest in the tenement in controversy, for the purpose of paying the debts incurred in continuing the business of Colton & Clarke. This power did not cease at the death of Abby Colton, but then devolved on the surviving executor, Henry Clarke. It is laid down in Sug. on Pow. 144, as a principle of the common law, that where a power is given to "executors," and the will does not point to a joint exercise of it, even a single surviving executor may execute it. The power being given to the executors ratione officii, as the office survives, so may the power. He says that where the power is given to them nominatim, although in the character of executors, it is at least doubtful whether it will survive. Hargrave has maintained that in that case also, as the office survives, by parity of reason, so should the power. And Sugden says, that the liberality of modern times will probably induce the courts to hold that the power survives in every case where it is given to executors. Id. 2 Wms. on Ex. 626. This view is confirmed by the act of assembly, 1 Rev. Code, ch. 104, § 52, which seems to regard a surviving executor as being invested with the power in every such case. 3 Lom. Dig. 275 and '6, marg. In this case the power is given to the executors, not nominatim, but by their official designation only, and clearly survived. That a discretion is given to the executors in regard to the exercise of the power, did not prevent it from surviving. See Brown v. Armistead, 6 Rand. 594.

At the time, therefore, of the sale and conveyance to the appellant of the tenement in controversy, Henry Clarke, as surviving executor of J. B. Colton, had authority to sell his testator's interest therein for the purpose of paying the debts of the continued firm of Colton & Clarke. And the appellant maintains, that in fact the sale was made for that purpose, and the purchase money was applied accord-39 ingly. The evidence *seems to sustain this position, to the extent at least of the greater part of the purchase money.

The facts on this subject appear briefly to be these: Colton & Clarke owed a large debt to D. & J. Ames, the balance of which, on the 14th of April 1843, about the period of Abby Colton's death, was eleven thousand eight hundred and fifty-seven dollars and sixty-five cents. It does not appear that there were any new dealings after her death between Henry Clarke and D. & J. Ames. Payments were made on account of this debt by Henry Clarke, from time to time, both before and after the death of Abby Colton. To obtain the means for making such payments, Henry Clarke exchanged the notes of Colton & Clarke with Davenport, Allen & Co. for their notes or drafts, which were discounted at bank. In this way Colton & Clarke became indebted to Davenport, Allen & Co. to the extent of ten thousand dollars; and to secure the debt a deed of trust was executed on the tenement in controversy; which, however, was not recorded, but was retained by Davenport, Allen & Co. until payment of the debt, and then returned to Henry Clarke. The balance due on account of that debt at the time of the sale of the tenement to the appellant, was seven thousand six or seven hundred dollars, and was discharged out of the purchase money; the appellant's check therefor (to wit, nine thousand dollars) having been paid by Henry Clarke on account of Colton & Clarke to Davenport, Allen & Co. It thus appears that, to the extent of that balance at least, the sale was made for the payment of a debt for which the property was liable, and the purchase money was duly applied. And though it does not appear that the residue of the purchase money was required for the payment of debts of the concern, yet the purchaser was not bound to see that only so much of the estate was sold as was necessary for the purposes of the trust. Sug. Vend. 835-6.

40 *But for whatever purpose the sale may have been made, or however the money may have been applied, the purchaser cannot be affected, if he acted bona fide. He was not to judge, at his peril, as to the necessity for a sale. He had no means of ascertaining such necessity. That question was properly referred by the testator to the opinion of his executors, who had the means of deciding it. For the correctness of that opinion, strangers who might become purchasers were not held by him responsible. To have so held them, would have defeated his purpose of having his real estate sold to advantage, if a sale of it should become necessary. Where a trust is for payment of debts generally, as in this case, a purchaser is not bound to see to the application of the purchase money; for he cannot be expected to see to the due observance of a trust so unlimited and undefined. Sug. Vend. 835, 838; Elliot v. Merryman, and the notes thereto, 1 Leading Ca. in Eq. 40, 65 Law Lib. 58.

Digitized by Google

The only ground, then, upon which, if any, the title of the purchaser can be affected in this case is, that he did not act bona fide; but participated in a fraudulent breach of trust committed by Henry Clarke, either in the sale of the property or the application of the purchase money. The appellant in his answer does not admit that any such breach of trust was committed; but if so, denies that he had any participation therein, or knowledge thereof. If the sale was made to pay a debt of Colton & Clarke, and the purchase money was so applied, then there was no such breach of trust. But let it be conceded, for the purposes of this case, that a breach of trust existed; that the sale was improper, and the purchase money misapplied. And then the question is, Did the purchaser Davis participate in the breach of trust? If he did, it is only because he had notice of it at the time he made the purchase or paid the purchase money. Had he such notice?

41 *It is contended that he had; first, because the pendency of the suit of Fitzhugh v. Clarke was equivalent to notice, according to the doctrine of lis pendens; secondly, because he or his counsel actually read the record in that case, and was thus informed of the alleged breach of trust; and thirdly, because the other circumstances of the case, which were or ought to have been known to Davis when he made the purchase, were sufficient to show that Clarke was committing a breach of trust.

As to the doctrine of lis pendens, I do not think it can have any application to the case. If the suit of Fitzhugh v. Clarke be such a suit for specific property as the doctrine requires, there has yet been no decree in it for such property. A purchaser pending a suit for specific property from a defendant to the suit, takes the property subject to any decree which may be rendered for or against it in the suit. And there is generally no necessity for making him a defendant; but the plaintiff, after obtaining his decree, may enforce it against the property in the hands of the purchaser or his assigns. Unless and until such decree be rendered in the suit, the purchaser is unaffected by the doctrine of lis pendens.

But it is immaterial whether the doctrine applies to the case or not, as I think it sufficiently appears from the pleadings and the proofs that the appellant had actual notice of the suit when he made the purchase, and is chargeable with knowledge of all the facts of which the record in the suit, as it existed at that time, would have informed him. So that if it appeared from the facts of which he was thus informed, that the sale was fraudulent on the part of Henry Clarke, then, by making the purchase with such knowledge, he became a party to the fraud. And now the question arises, What information did the record afford, as it then existed?

42 *The purchase was made in February 1846. It does not appear when the bills, original or amended, were filed in the suit of Fitzhugh v. Clarke. We have but a meagre skeleton of the record of that suit embodied in the record of this. It appears that the original bill was filed between the 13th of July 1839, the day of the death of the child of Fitzhugh and wife, and the 25th of December 1839, the day of the wife's death; as she was a plaintiff in the suit, and the death of the child is mentioned in the bill. If so, the suit must have been negligently prosecuted; for the answers of Henry Clarke and Abby Colton to that bill were not filed before the 2d of January 1843, when they appear to have been sworn to—more than three years after the filing of the bill. Afterwards, and after Abby Colton and all her children had died, an amended bill was filed, to which Henry Clarke filed an answer, which was sworn to on the 12th of June 1844. An order of account was afterwards made in the suit, but at what precise time does not appear. It is not copied in the record, and we can only infer what it was from the report of the commissioner. That report bears date on the 30th of May 1850—more than four years after the said purchase; and shows that the execution of the order of account was not commenced until the 23d of October 1846 (the date of the commissioner's notice to the parties), which was eight months after the purchase. In determining, therefore, what information the purchaser could have derived from the record of that suit, we must throw out of view the commissioner's report and the accounts returned therewith, and look only to the bills and answers. What facts did they disclose?

For some time after the intermarriage of Fitzhugh and wife, on the 25th of October 1837, he seems to have acquiesced in the continuance of the partnership. But shortly before his wife's death on 43 the 25th of December *1839, he brought the suit of Fitzhugh v. Clarke, for the purpose of obtaining her proportion of the estate of J. B. Colton, under the 6th clause of the will. That was the only object of the suit. The 6th clause does not provide for a termination of the business when any child should require her part; but only that the business should cease as to such child, and be continued as to the rest. The bill, while it requires the plaintiff's part of the estate, is perfectly consistent with a continuance of the business as to the rest. It charges that Fitzhugh had made repeated applications to Clarke to have his portion of the estate delivered to him, "wishing to have the means of advancing himself in business." But it makes no complaint of any waste of the estate or mismanagement of the business by Clarke, and asks for no injunction nor for the appointment of a receiver. It does not pretend that there had ever been any cessation of the business by a public sale of the stock of dry goods, or otherwise; but on the contrary, admits that the partnership had continued until the institution of the suit, and was still in existence, and prays for an account of its continuance down to that time. It mentions the tenement in controversy as part of the real state of Colton & Clarke, and states that their business was that of dry goods merchants, and was prosperous, and that a large amount of money appeared by the books to have been due to them at Colton's death. The answer of Clarke to the original bill admits that the business of the firm was principally that of dry goods merchants, and was prosperous, but to what extent, could only be ascertained by a fair settlement of accounts, &c.; and that under the powers given in the will and with the consent of Abby Colton, he had continued and still continued to conduct the business of the copartnership for the joint benefit of himself and the estate of J. B. Colton.

Digitized by Google

44 It states that he had, *in all respects, honestly and faithfully endeavored to comply with the wishes of his testator, as expressed in his will, and was ready to submit the books of the concern, which had always been kept with the utmost exactness, to the examination of any commissioner who might be appointed for the purpose, &c.; that in conducting the business of Colton & Clarke, he had deemed it most prudent for the last four or five years to restrict that business, and in part to invest the debts and money in stocks of various descriptions; that in one instance he purchased for the concern a piece of property opposite Rocketts, called the Coalyard island, which, with the improvements thereon, cost ten thousand and fifty-five dollars; and that these stocks and real property, as well as all the other property of the concern, in consequence of the universal depression existing at the time, would, if forced into market, produce heavy and irreparable loss, which would fall, one-half on the respondent, and the other half on the estate of his testator. Abby Colton, in her answer, states, that she had taken no active part in the management of her testator's estate, having left it to the care and judgment of Clarke her co-executor, in whom she always had, and still continued to have the most perfect confidence; and that the business of Colton & Clarke had been, and still was continued, with her consent. The amended bill was filed mainly with the view of reviving the suit against the proper parties after the death of Mrs. Colton and her daughters. It takes the ground (no doubt in consequence of the death of Fitzhugh's wife, whereby he had become entitled to her personal estate absolutely, and to her real estate, at most only, for life), that a valuable portion of the real estate, including the tenement in controversy, had been paid for with partnership funds, and bought and always used for partnership purposes; and, if it is to be regarded as personal 45 property, claims *his wife's portion thereof as her administrator. It makes no complaint of waste of the assets, or mismanagement of the business of the concern, any more than did the original bill; but charges that all the estate of J. B. Colton ever since his death had been and still was in Clarke's possession under the trusts of Colton's will. Clarke in his answer to the amended bill admits that a part of the real estate, including the tenement in controversy, had been paid for with partnership funds, and bought and used for partnership purposes, but insists that as to the complainant, it should be regarded as real and not as personal estate. He says he is advised that the complainant, never having, during the coverture, reduced into possession any portion of the real estate to which his late wife may ultimately have been entitled, had no claim as tenant by the curtesy to such portion; and as regards the personal estate proper, he charges that complainant had already been paid his wife's full share thereof.

I have thus stated, in substance, all the material facts disclosed by the record of the suit of Fitzhugh v. Clarke, as it existed at the time of the appellant's purchase; and I certainly see nothing in them to inform him that the sale was unnecessary or improper, in discharge of the trust created by Colton's will, or was fraudulently made for the private purposes of Clarke. If there had been any waste or mismanagement of the estate of Colton, or of the assets of Colton & Clarke, or any well grounded apprehension thereof, the complainant, on showing the fact, might have obtained an injunction and had a receiver appointed. But there was no allegation of any such fact; and, so far as appeared from the record, it was not only the right but the duty of Clarke to continue to execute the trusts of Colton's will, by selling his real estate whenever deemed necessary by him for the payment of the debts of Colton &

46 Clarke. Green v. Slayter, *4 John. Ch. R. 38. It was neither the object nor the effect of that suit to take the execution of the trust out of the hands of the trustee and transfer it to the court.

Then, was there any thing in the other circumstances of the case, of which Davis had or ought to have had any knowledge at the time of his purchase, to inform him of any fraud or breach of trust on the part of Clarke?

The evidence of notice ought certainly to be very strong to convict a purchaser of a fraudulent participation in a breach of trust in such a case. Confidence being placed in the trustee "by the person who had the sole right to dispose of the property at his will (as was said by Marshall, C. J., in Garnett v. Macon, &c., 2 Brock. R. 185, 231), no other can question the correctness of his proceeding, or can be justifiable in suspecting any intention to violate the trust. He has no right to suspect that the person who has been selected by the testator for its execution, will violate the trust reposed in him, and no collusion between him and the trustee ought to be implied from equivocal acts." "If the executor sells to a person who knows that there are no debts, or that all the debts are paid, and that the sale is not a fair execution of the trust, the purchaser may take the property subject to the trust. 2 P. Wms. R. 148, 150. So too, if the executor sells at such undervalue as to indicate fraud, or for payment of his own debt. Crane v. Drake, 2 Vern. R. 616; Scott v. Tyler, 2 Bro. C. C. 430, 477; Andrew v. Wrigley, 4 Id. 125, 130; Hill v. Simpson, 7 Ves. R. 152, 167; Lowther v. Lowther, 13 Id. 95; McLeod v. Drummond, 17 Id. 153, 169. These cases proceed upon the principle that the executor does not sell in pursuance of his trust, but in violation of it, and that the purchaser knowing this fact, aids him in its execution, by making the contract. The purchaser is not 47 bound to make *any enquiry. The general power of the executor to sell protects him in buying; but if he buys with notice that the sale is a breach of trust, the property remains chargeable with it." Id. 238. Field v. Schieffelin, 7 John. Ch. R. 150, was the case of a sale by a guardian, of bond and mortgage belonging to his ward before the principal money had become payable. The purchaser was held not to be chargeable. This is a strong case, as it is "not in the ordinary course of the guardian's administration to sell the personal property of his ward." Id. 154. "The necessity or expediency of the measure (said Chancellor Kent) rested entirely in the judgment and discretion of the guardian. He was, as between him and the purchaser, the proper and exclusive judge of that expediency. It was not the duty or the business of the purchaser to enquire into the necessity of the assignment, or to see to the application of the purchase money. He had a right to presume, in the absence of all direct and plain proof to the contrary, that the guardian was exercising his power fairly and faithfully, in conformity with his duty." "There is no direct or positive evidence that the guardian has in truth misapplied or wasted the infant's money. It might be inferred from the acknowledged fact of his insolvency, and from the silence of the case; but when it becomes necessary, not only to establish the fact of breach of trust, but of a participation of the plaintiff in the fraud, we ought to have something more decisive than a presumption resting on such a basis. It is very possible, and consistent with every established fact in the case, that the money received by the guardian from the plaintiff, was duly invested in other property, in the name and for the benefit of the infant, and was left untouched amidst the waste and destruction of his own property. But if the presumption of a devastavit is to be admitted, there is no evidence 48 that the guardian *had any abuse of trust in contemplation when he made the assignment; or, if such were his intention at the time, there is no certain and sufficient proof that the plaintiff knew or had information of that intention, or of any purpose or design in the guardian inconsistent with his duty. The proof on the part of the infant is too lame and scanty to justify the conclusion of any breach of trust in the guardian, in which the plaintiff knowingly partook." Id. 153. See also, Dodson v. Simpson, 2 Rand. 294, in which the doctrine on this subject is clearly stated by Judge Green; also McLeod v. Drummond, decided first at the Rolls by Sir William Grant, 14 Ves. R. 352; and afterwards, on appeal, by Lord Eldon, 17 Id. 153; and other cases cited in the notes to Elliot v. Merryman, supra.

Digitized by Google

I am aware of no case which appears to be inconsistent with the doctrine as laid down by Chief Justice Marshall and Chancellor Kent, in the cases cited from 2 Brock. and 7 John. Ch. R. In Hill v. Simpson, 7 Ves. R. 152, the assignees of an executor were held liable on the ground of constructive fraud—in taking an assignment when, if they had examined the will, they would have seen that the executor was guilty of a breach of trust. In deciding the case, Sir William Grant said, "I do not impute to them direct fraud: but they acted rashly, incautiously, and without the common attention used in the ordinary course of business. It was gross negligence not to look at the will, under which alone a title could be given to them. It was not necessary to use any exertion to obtain information, but merely not to shut their eyes against the information which, without extraordinary neglect they could not avoid receiving." This decision rests on a familiar principle —see Sug. Vend. 1056, pl. 63. Graff v. Castleman, 5 Rand. 195, in which the authorities on the subject were reviewed very much at length by Judge Carr, was decided on the same principle which 49 *governed the case of Hill v. Simpson. An executor and trustee assigned a portion of the trust subject as a security for his own debt. The assignment referred to a deed of trust, which referred to the original deed, which referred to the will, where the whole trust was declared. The assignee was held, therefore, to have notice of the trust and of the breach of it, and to be a party to such breach.

In Jackson v. Updegraffe, 1 Rob. R. 107, the evidence clearly brought the case within the well settled principle there laid down, that parties dealing with an executor or trustee and co-operating with him in the misapplication of assets or trust funds, in violation of the duties of the executor, or in breach of the trust, cannot use such transactions as a defence against the claim of creditors, legatees or cestuis que trust. Id. 120. In Pinckard v. Woods, 8 Gratt. 140, bonds due to a decedent's estate, and payable to his administrator as such, were sold by him at a discount of eighteen or twenty per cent. to a person who knew that the condition of the estate did not require the sale. The purchaser was held accountable; and properly so.

Now, let us apply the doctrine thus settled to the facts of this case. The sale was made, as we have seen, in February 1846, less than three years after the termination of the partnership by the death of Abby Colton. It was made by one who had full power to make it for the payment of the debts of the partnership. It was made, apparently at least, for the payment of a debt of the partnership, secured by a deed of trust on the property, and the purchase money, or most of it, was accordingly applied to the payment of that debt. If that was not really a debt of the partnership, there is certainly no evidence in the record tending to prove that the purchaser knew the fact or had any reason to be-50 lieve it; but the contrary. He *gave full value for the property, paid the purchase money in cash, and derived no benefit from its application. It was not the duty or business of the purchaser to enquire into the necessity or expediency of the sale, or to see to the application of the purchase money. He had a right to presume, in the absence of all direct or plain proof to the contrary, that the executor was exercising his power fairly and faithfully, in conformity with his duty. He had no right, it is true, to shut his eyes against information which, without extraordinary neglect, he could not avoid receiving. But where is the evidence that he did so? Where is the direct or plain proof, even that the executor committed a breach of trust in the sale of the property or the application of the proceeds, much less that the purchaser participated therein? Is it to be found in the facts that the executor engaged in various speculations on his own account, and involved the funds of the partnership therein; that in 1842 or 1843 he became so much embarrassed that it was generally known about Richmond; and that he ultimately (though at what time does not appear) took the oath of insolvency? Non constat that the appellant was informed of any of these facts when he made the purchase. But suppose he was informed of them; do they afford that direct or plain proof of fraud which is required in such cases? The fraud of the executor, if any, did not consist in his embarrassment and insolvency, but in the conversion of the property or its proceeds from the purposes of the trust to the individual uses of the executor. A knowledge by the appellant at the time of his purchase that such a fraudulent conversion was intended, would have implicated him in the fraud: but not a knowledge that the executor was engaged in hazardous speculations on his own account, or was embarrassed or insolvent. An embarrassed or even 51 an *insolvent man may be appointed an executor, and a grant to him of probate of the will cannot be refused on account of his poverty or insolvency. 1 Williams Ex'ors 119.

Digitized by Google

Insolvency of an executor happening after his appointment, is not, ipso facto, a vacation of his office nor a suspension of his powers: though it may be one among other reasons for a revocation or suspension of them by a court of competent jurisdiction. Until thus revoked or suspended, they may lawfully and properly be exercised and pass a good title to a bona fide purchaser.

But it is said that the appellant required and received an indemnifying bond; and that this fact shows that he knew he was acquiring a defective title, and, in connection with the other circumstances, is sufficient evidence of fraud on his part. I do not think so. I think it only serves to show his abundant caution. He was about to pay a large sum of money for the tenement in question, and to erect very costly improvements upon it; and prudence required that he should obtain all the security he could against any possible defect of title. He accordingly obtained a deed for the property, executed not only by Henry Clarke in his own right and as surviving executor of J. B. Colton, but also by him as surviving partner of Colton & Clarke, and by him and William J. Clarke as executors of Abby Colton. And to guard against the claim of Fitzhugh and of Shuble and wife, he obtained the indemnifying bond in question. He certainly did not intend to admit their claim by taking the bond, and this act of abundant caution on his part should not operate to his prejudice. It shows that he had heard of such claim, which fact indeed he expressly admits in his answer. But he had doubtless only heard of it as it 52 appeared in the suit of Fitzhugh *v. Clarke; and the nature of the claim asserted in that suit I have already sufficiently considered. In this feature of the case it is very much like that of Johnson v. Kennett, 3 Myl. & Keen 624, 10 Cond. Eng. Ch. R. 332. A testator had charged his real estate with the payment of his debts and legacies. His only son and heir at law, who was his executor, paid the debts out of the personal estate, and sold the real in lots to different purchasers, to whom he gave bonds of indemnity, some of which were conditioned for indemnifying the obligees against the legacies specially, and others were general bonds of indemnity. The suit was brought by the legatees against the executor and purchasers, &c. It was held by Lord Lyndhurst, that where an estate is charged generally with the payment of debts and legacies, and the debts have been paid but not the legacies, the purchaser will not be bound to see to the application of the purchase money, unless it be proved that he knew of the payment of the debts; and that the taking of the said bonds of indemnity did not raise the inference that the purchasers or any of them knew of such payment in that case.

I am therefore of opinion that the appellant acquired a good title to the tenement in controversy by the deed under which he claims. The property belonged to Colton & Clarke. The execution of the deed by Clarke and wife had the effect of conveying his interest; and its execution by him as surviving executor of Colton, had the effect of conveying the interest of the latter. If any thing else were necessary to confirm the title of the purchaser, it would be found in the execution of the deed by Clarke as surviving partner of Colton & Clarke, and by the executors of Abby Colton. The result of my opinion is that the decree be reversed with costs, and the bill dismissed as to the appellant with costs; but 53 without *prejudice to any relief to which the appellee Christian may be entitled against any party other than the appellant.

Digitized by Google

ALLEN, P., and LEE, J., concurred in the opinion of Moncure, J.

DANIEL, J., dissented.

Decree reversed.

---

54 *Pulliam, &c. v. Aler.

January Term, 1859, Richmond.

1. Attachments—May Be Issued Any Time before Return.—An attachment may be issued under the first section of the Code, ch. 151, p. 600, after the action has been commenced, if it be done before the abatement of the suit by the return of the officer.†
2. Same—Failure to Designate in Whose Possession the Property Is—Effect.‡—An attachment is not defective because it does not designate any person in whose possession property or effects of the absent debtor may be found.
3. Same—Service and Return of upon Garnishee Irregular—Waiver of Objection.§—Though the service of an attachment upon garnishees, and the return thereon be irregular, yet if the garnishees appear to the action and defend it, without objecting to the irregularity, they cannot afterwards make the objection in the appellate court.
4. Same—Garnishment—Case at Bar.—Money is left with a person, who is a member of a firm, on a special deposit, and in his absence it is entered on the books of the firm to the credit of the depositor, and paid out by the firm for their own uses, they paying the depositor's checks upon it, by checks in their name upon the bank, and then an attachment is served upon the firm as garnishees in a suit against the depositor; the summons being served on the other member of the firm. The attachment binds the money in the hands of the firm.

A summons in an action of debt was issued from the clerk's office of the Circuit court of the city of Richmond, bearing date on the 16th day of September 1854, in the name of George Aler, plaintiff, against Thomas G. James, defendant. An attachment was also sued out by Aler, bearing the same date, which recites, that "whereas since the institution of a suit 55 *in the Circuit court of the city of Richmond, brought by George Aler, plaintiff, against Thomas G. James, defendant, to recover money for a claim, there has been filed in the clerk's office of the said court an affidavit that the plaintiff's claims amount to," &c. in the usual form. There does not appear to have been any written directions given to the officer as to the service of the attachment; but he returned it with the following endorsement:

The principal case is cited in Claflin v. Steenbock, 18 Gratt. 849, 866, and note; also, in Goodwyn v. Myers, 16 Gratt. 352. See monographic note on "Attachments" appended to Lancaster v. Wilson, 27 Gratt. 624.

Attachments—May Be Issued Any Time before Return.—In the first headnote of the principal case it is held that an attachment may be issued after the action has been commenced, if it be done before the abatement of the suit by the return of the officer. This is approved in Steele v. Harkness, 9 W. Va. 20, and Chapman v. Maitland, 22 W. Va. 343, both citing the principal case, but in these cases the attachment was issued after the return day of the process and therefore void.

†Code, ch. 151, § 1, p. 600. "When any suit is instituted for any debt, or for damages for breach of any contract, an affidavit stating the amount and justice of the claim, that there is present cause of action therefor, that the defendants or one of the defendants is not a resident of this state, and that the affiant believes he has estate or debts due him within the county or corporation in which the suit is, or that he is sued with a defendant residing therein, the plaintiff may forthwith sue out of the clerk's office an attachment against the estate of the non-resident defendant for the amount so stated."

‡Same—Failure to Designate in Whose Possession Property Is—Effect.—The principal case holds that, the failure to designate in whose possession the property may be found does not render the attachment defective. But in Robertson v. Hoge, 83 Va. 127, 1 S. E. Rep. 667, where the principal case is cited, the attachment was quashed and abated because the return of the officer did not show sufficient levy of the attachment.

§Same—Service and Return of Irregular—Waiver of Objection.—In Joseph v. Pyle, 2 W. Va. 451, the court said: "The first cause of error assigned is that the attachment, and the return of the officer thereon, are insufficient. There was no objection of this sort made in the court below, and as the garnishee appeared and denied his indebtedness on the merits of the case it is too late now to make the objection for the first time. Pulliam, &c. v. Aler, 15 Gratt. 54."

See, in accord, Muire v. Falconer, 10 Gratt. 12, and note.

In Coda v. Thompson, 39 W. Va. 73, 19 S. E. Rep. 550, the court said: "It occurred to me at first that we might treat this order to the garnishee, not as process, in the legal sense, but as merely ancillary to the attachment, designed only to warn the garnishee and tie up the effects in his hands, and not to be tested by the strict rules governing process constituting the basis of judicial proceedings. But this theory will not bear reflection. As to the garnishee, it is the only process. Against him, it is the sole basis of judgment. The garnishment is a suit against him; process, in the legal sense, not pleading, and subject to a motion to quash for inherent defects in the order. Upon it may rest important litigation and trial of issues between the garnishee and the plaintiff. It is a suit against the garnishee. Drake, Attachm. § 451c; Wade, Attachm. §§ 333, 340; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law 1100; Middleton Paper Co. v. Rock River Paper Co., 19 Fed. 252. The order to the garnishee to appear is indorsed on the attachment under section 5, c. 106, and the service of both the order of attachment and the order citing the garnishee to appear is the only mode of service on him under that section; and the order to the garnishee to appear must be regarded as part of the

Digitized by Google

"Executed on Pulliam & Davis on the 16th day of September 1854, by delivering to David M. Pulliam, one of the firm of Pulliam & Davis, a true copy of the within writ; and I also explained its purport to him." This endorsement was signed by the officer.

The summons having been served upon the defendant James, there was a verdict and judgment against him at the May term 1855 of the court, for the sum of three thousand four hundred and one dollars and ninety-five cents, with interest thereon from the 15th of September 1854, subject to a credit for eleven hundred and fifty dollars, as of the 19th of September.

On the 13th of June 1855, being the same term of the court, the record says, "Came as well the plaintiff aforesaid as David M. Pulliam, a garnishee summoned by virtue of the attachment aforesaid, who being examined on oath, and it appearing on such examination that at the time of the service of the said attachment there was in the possession of the firm of Pulliam & Davis, of which he is a member, money belonging to said defendant sufficient to pay the amount of the judgment aforesaid, it was therefore ordered that the said Pulliam & Davis pay over to the said plaintiff the amount of said judgment."

Pulliam & Davis excepted to the opinion of the court; and their exception shows, that Davis as well as Pulliam was examined. The facts appeared to be, that the defendant James had deposited with 56 Davis, *before the attachment was served on Pulliam, the sum of four thousand one hundred and twenty dollars and sixty cents, to meet such drafts as might be drawn on him by James. That James had been in the habit of keeping an account with Davis individually, and that Davis had acted as his agent in buying slaves, and had frequently accepted and paid drafts drawn by James upon him out of the funds so deposited with him. That Davis kept an account of his own with James, with which the concern had nothing to do; Maury & Morton being his bankers. That Davis being about to leave Richmond for a week or two, he handed to B. W. Elmore, the clerk of Pulliam & Davis, the money of James in his hands, stating to him that it was the money of James, to be converted into current funds so as to save the discount upon it, said funds being uncurrent. That Elmore placed the money in the desk of Pulliam & Davis, and about a week after Davis left home, he credited James with the amount upon the books of Pulliam & Davis; and the money was passed off by him in the way of business after being so credited. Upon Davis' return, and before the money was paid out by Pulliam & Davis, Elmore informed him that the amount so received had been passed to the credit of James on the books of Pulliam & Davis, and that an attachment had been served upon D. M. Pulliam to attach the effects of James in the hands of Pulliam & Davis. Subsequently the sum put to James' credit on the books of Pulliam & Davis was paid out to James or upon his order, by checks upon the bank by the firm, by the direction of Davis.

Pulliam & Davis applied to this court for a supersedeas; which was allowed.

Crump, for the appellants.

August & Randolph, for the appellee.

57 *ALLEN, P. The defendant in error sued out on the 16th day of September 1854, a summons in debt against Thomas G. James, and on the same day issued an attachment against his estate, under the Code, ch. 151, § 1. The attachment recites, that "whereas since the institution of a suit," &c. "there has been filed in the clerk's office of the said court an affidavit." It is assigned as error, that this garnishee process appearing thus on its face to have been issued since the institution of the suit, was irregularly issued, and that it was the duty of the court before which it came ex officio to quash it.

The section of the Code referred to, was intended as a substitute for the foreign attachment authorized by the 1 Rev. Code, p. 474, ch. 123, § 1, against absent debtors having effects or lands within the state; and it provides, that "when any suit is instituted for any debt or for damages for breach of any contract on affidavit stating the amount and justice of the claim," &c. "the plaintiff may forthwith sue out of the clerk's office an attachment against the estate of the non-resident defendant for the amount so stated."

The second section of the act provides order of attachment, which is certainly process. Hence, we must regard the garnishment order as process, and tested by the law relating to it as such. The language of JUDGE ALLEN in Pulliam v. Aler, 15 Gratt. 61, that the fact that the return of the sheriff was defective, in not showing that he summoned the garnishee to appear at a particular time, was unimportant, is unimportant in the decision of our case. The then existing attachment law simply required the plaintiff to designate a garnishee, and required the sheriff to summon him to appear at the first day of the next term, and did not require any summons by the clerk, as does our law. It was not process under the Virginia law, but it is under ours. And, as JUDGE ALLEN himself said, that was a defect merely in the officer's return of service, and was not a question of the illegality or validity of the garnishment process itself, whereas in this case it is purely a question of the validity of process.

"For these reasons, I reach the conclusion that the order to summon the garnishee is void, not simply irregular. Being void, the motion of the defendant to amend it so as to make it returnable to the May term was properly refused, because, while a process merely irregular may be, under some circumstances, amended, one wholly void is incapable of amendment. Kyles v. Ford, 2 Rand. (Va.) 1; Wade, Attachm. § 358; Drake, Attachm. § 184a; Burk v. Barnard, 4 Johns. 309; Kenworthy v. Peppiat, 6 E. C. L. 488; Middleton Paper Co. v. Rock River Paper Co., 19 Fed. 252; Durham v. Heaton, 81 Am. Dec. 275."

Digitized by Google

for a distinct class of cases, and was intended as a substitution for bail for the defendant's appearance; and authorizes an attachment where the defendant is removing or intends to remove his estate, or any specific property sued for, on affidavit "at the time of, or after" the institution of the suit. Although the attachment in this case was issued under the first section of the act, the second section is referred to, and relied on for the purpose of showing that as the legislature expressly authorized an attachment after the institution of a suit in the second section, for the reasons there set forth, similar phraseology would have been used in the first section, if it had been the intention to authorize the attach-58 ment to issue *after the institution of the suit, upon the affidavit of non-residence alone.

The intention of the legislature will be best ascertained by a reference to the provisions of the former law, for which the first and second sections of the Code before referred to, were intended to be substituted.

The first section, as has been remarked, comes in place of the act in 1 Rev. Code, p. 474, ch. 123, § 1, regulating proceedings against absent debtors.

The Code, p. 643, ch. 170, § 5, provided that process to commence a suit should be a writ commanding the officer to summon the defendant. By ch. 188, § 12, p. 716, the writ of capias ad satisfaciendum was prohibited, except in cases provided for in the preceding section; and as a substitution for the right to demand bail authorized by 1 Rev. Code, ch. 128, § 43, 44, 50, the Code, by the second section referred to, authorized the attachment there provided for.

Under the old law bail could be required under § 43, 44, by endorsement on the writ at the institution of the suit; and by § 50, where bail had not been originally required, the court at any time before final judgment, for good cause shown, could rule the defendant to give special bail.

It is thus apparent that the intention of the legislature was to make the new remedies commensurate with those for which they were substituted. That as by the former law provision was made for bail at any time before final judgment, whenever the exigency of the case rendered it necessary; so by the new rule, if after the suit was instituted, the contingency arose which rendered an attachment essential to the efficacy of any judgment in the case, the party was authorized on proper affidavit to sue it out. This provision in the second section related to matter generally arising after the institution of the suit, and 59 was not intended *to control the construction or limit the operation of the provision contained in the first section in relation to the fact of non-residence; which was the condition of things when the suit was instituted or before abatement by the return of non-residence. In the construction of the act in the Revised Code concerning absent debtors, it was held in Brien v. Pitman, 12 Leigh 379, that the admission of non-residence in an answer rendered the affidavit required by the law unnecessary; and in Moore, &c. v. Holt, 10 Gratt. 284, that it was not necessary that such affidavit of non-residence should be filed before process issued to constitute it, with the endorsement in the nature of an attachment, a lien when served. Under the present law, where the fact of non-residence exists, and the proceeding at law is substituted for the foreign attachment in equity, there can be no reason for a more narrow construction. No purpose of justice is subserved by requiring the affidavit to precede or be simultaneous with the summons. The objection of delay is obviated by the fact that the suit will be abated by the return of non-residence on the summons, unless the garnishee process is sued out before the return day. Nor do I conceive there is any thing in the words of the act imperatively requiring the restricted construction contended for. The word when does not necessarily refer to the instant of time spoken of: it frequently is used in a relative, instead of an absolute sense, referring not to the present, but to a different time; and means, according to the context, "whenever," "upon which," "in case," "if," &c.

Thus we have been referred to numerous instances in this Code, where it is used in the latter sense—"if," "in case," &c.

Code, p. 75, § 14, "When a vacancy occurs, it shall be filled," &c. Of course, when does not here mean at 60 *the same instant of time, but afterwards. It is used in the sense of "if."

Ibid. 109, § 8, it is used in the sense of "in case."

Ibid. 182, § 24, in the sense of "if."

Ibid. 182, § 26, "in case."

Many other instances were cited in argument, showing, as was remarked, that the use of this word in this relative or qualifying sense, seems to have been almost idiomatic with those charged with the preparation of the Code.

In p. 493, § 32, we have a phrase almost identical with the one under consideration: "When any such suit is instituted, the court shall cause publication to be made," &c. Of course it does not mean that publication shall be made at the instant of the institution of the suit.

I think the term was used in a similar sense in the section under consideration, and that in case the proper affidavit is made at any time before the abatement of the suit by the return of the officer, the provision of the law will be satisfied.

It is insisted in the second place, that the attachment was defective in not designating any person in whose hands money or effects of the absent debtor might be found. The provision in the Code, p. 602, § 7, that it shall be sufficiently levied in every case, by a service of a copy of such attachment on such persons as may be designated by the plaintiff in writing, or be known to the officer to be in possession of effects of or to be indebted to the defendant; and as to real estate, by such estate being mentioned and described by endorsement in such attachment, relates not to the form of the attachment and what it should set forth, but is merely directory to the officer as to the mode of service. He is to serve it on the persons designated by the plaintiff in writing, or known to the officer, 61 *and as to real estate, by mentioning and describing it by endorsement on the attachment, without regard to the manner in which he acquired his information. The attachment is sufficient when it appears upon its face that a suit has been instituted and an affidavit filed in due time, conforming to the first section.

Digitized by Google

It is further objected, that the return is defective in failing to summon the garnishee to appear at any particular day or term, as provided for by the Code, p. 603, § 9; and that furthermore, instead of serving it on each of the garnishees personally, the return is that he executed it on Pulliam & Davis on the 16th of September 1854, by delivering to D. M. Pulliam, one of the firm of Pulliam & Davis, a true copy of the writ, and explained its purport to him.

These objections relate to the regularity of the service of the process, and not to the legality and validity of the process itself. In the case of Mantz v. Hendley, 2 Hen. & Munf. 309, where it was held the court ought to quash the attachment ex officio, it appeared by the warrant itself that it had been granted upon an affidavit setting out as the law then was, no sufficient reason for an attachment. The defect was intrinsic in the warrant; being radically defective in point of law as showing no reason for the attachment, the court could give no judgment on it, notwithstanding the objection had not been taken at the first appearance, but the party had pleaded to issue. The principle is similar to the rule acted upon in Ross v. Milne & wife, 12 Leigh 204, where it was held, that upon a declaration which showed that the plaintiff had no right of action, and on the contrary, that the right of action was in another, a verdict being found for the plaintiff, the statute of jeofails did not apply, and the defect was not cured.

In this case, both parties upon whom the attachment was returned executed, ap-62 peared and made no *objection to the mode in which the process was executed or returned. If made at a proper time, the objection might have been obviated by an amended return. The object of the process was to give notice and to restrain the garnishees after such notice, from parting with the attached effects. If they had appeared and moved to quash because the process had been irregularly executed or returned, such an appearance would not have been an appearance to the action. Wynn v. Wyatt's adm'x, 11 Leigh 584. But in this case they made no such motion. By appearing to the action and going to trial on the merits, they dispensed with a more formal service or return, waived any objection to the alleged irregularity, and cannot now raise the objection for the first time in the appellate court. Cunningham v. Mitchell, 4 Rand. 189; Poling v. Johnson, 2 Rob. R. 255.

On the merits the question would seem to be free from doubt. Although it was proved that the absent debtor had made a special deposit of the money with Davis in his individual character and not as a member of the firm of Pulliam & Davis, that Davis had been in the habit of keeping an account with the absent debtor, had acted as his agent in buying slaves, and had accepted and paid drafts drawn by the absent debtor on him out of funds so deposited, and that he handed over the funds of the absent debtor to the clerk and book-keeper of the firm to be converted into current funds as opportunity offered, and did not give any direction for raising an account therefor between the absent debtor and the firm; it was further proved that the funds so handed over to said clerk and book-keeper, were afterwards and before the service of the attachment credited to the absent debtor on the books of the firm, and the money was passed off by the clerk in the way of business, after being so credited. It further 63 appears from the account filed between the *absent debtor and the firm, that the former is charged and the latter credited with two sums paid out of the money so deposited before the date of the attachment; and it was proved that the money for which the firm has been rendered liable was paid out to the absent debtor or upon his order, by checks on the bank drawn by the firm by order of said Davis; and that the same was so paid out after service of said attachment on Pulliam, and personal notice to said Davis that an attachment had been served on Pulliam to attach the effects of the absent debtor in the hands of said firm.

From the facts in evidence it is clear that the money had ceased to be a special deposit of specific funds in the hands of Davis. It had been credited on the books of the firm, and used by the firm in the way of business. The specific funds could no longer be followed, and the absent debtor had a right to recover from the firm the funds so used for the benefit of the firm, regarding the firm as his debtor. The firm so treated the matter both before and after the service of the attachment. The absent debtor was credited with the money in account with the firm, and debited with money paid for him by the firm. Being thus the debtors of the non-resident when the attachment was served and notice given as aforesaid, and having waived all objection to the regularity of the service by appearing to the action, any payments made to the absent debtor after what they conceded was sufficient service and notice, were improperly made, and the firm was properly held responsible for the amount so paid to the attaching creditor to the extent of his claim.

Digitized by Google

I think the judgment should be affirmed.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Allen, P.

Judgment affirmed.

---

64 *Enders' Ex'ors v. Burch.

January Term, 1859, Richmond.

1. Office Judgments—When Become Final.—If the term of the Circuit court lasts more than fifteen days, all office judgments in which no writ of enquiry is ordered become final judgments on the fifteenth day: and cannot be afterwards set aside by the court.†

2. Same—Issuance of Execution on—Effect.—When a court authorizes executions to issue upon judgments recovered during the term, the judgments become final from the time when execution may issue, and cannot afterwards be set aside by the court.

3. Same—When Supersedeas Lies to Judgment Setting Aside.‡—A court having set aside an office judgment and the execution which had issued upon it after the fifteenth day of the term, and permitted the defendant to plead, the plaintiff may have a supersedeas from this order; and though that part of the order setting aside the judgment is interlocutory, the appellate court will reverse the whole order.

On the 24th day of September 1855 a summons was issued in the Circuit court of the city of Richmond, in the name of John Enders and William Palmer, executor of John Enders deceased, against Thomas C. Burch and Thomas T. Johnson, in an action of debt on two notes in writing; which summons was returnable to October rules, and was returned duly executed. At October rules the declaration was filed and a conditional judgment entered against the defendants. At November rules the conditional judgment was confirmed. The cause was placed upon the office judgment docket of the succeeding term, and was called in the regular proceedings of the court. And on the 27th day of November 1855, being the fifteenth day of the term, the office judgment not having been set 65 *aside, final judgment was entered in court accordingly. After that day and during the same term a general order was made allowing executions to issue on judgments and decrees of that term after ten days from their date. Afterwards, to wit, on the 22d day of December 1855, an execution of fieri facias was issued upon the said judgment. The execution having been levied upon the property of the defendant Burch, he appeared in court during the same term, to wit, on the 8th day of March 1856, and moved the court to set aside the office judgment made final in the cause as aforesaid, and to quash the execution issued thereon, and also to allow him to plead to the action; and in support of his motion, introduced his own affidavit and the state-

---

*__Office Judgments—When Become Final.__—For the proposition that an office judgment, in which there is no order of enquiry, becomes final on the last day of the term or the 15th day thereof, whichever may happen first, the principal case is cited and followed in Creigh v. Hedrick, 5 W. Va. 142; Alderson v. Gwinn, 3 W. Va. 231. See, in accord, Lazzell v. Mapel, 1 W. Va. 43; McVeigh v. Bank of Old Dominion, 76 Va. 267; Code of 1887, sec. 3237.

In Wickes v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 14 W. Va. 165, the court said: "According to my judgment in the construction of said sixth section, when the court adjourned on the said 15th day of June, that term of the court was ended quoad the judgment in this case, as much as though the court had adjourned until the first day of the next term, instead of adjourning to the 10th day of July, 1876. See, as bearing upon this subject, Enders' Ex'ors v. Burch, 15 Gratt. 64, and especially the opinion of the court delivered therein by JUDGE MONCURE."

In Hunter v. Snyder, 11 W. Va. 204, 209, it is said that the cases of Enders v. Burch, 15 Gratt. 64, Alderson v. Gwinn, 3 W. Va. 231, and Lazzell v. Mapel, 1 W. Va. 43, as to when office judgments become final are not authority in the decision of the present case. They were decided under Code of Va. 1860, sec. 44, but since then the Code of 1869, of this state has made material changes in the 44th section; and the 46th section corresponding to the 44th section requires that the plaintiff file an affidavit stating the amount of his claim, and that it is quite obvious that an office judgment cannot, under the said section, become a final judgment until such affidavit has been filed.

†See JUDGE MONCURE'S opinion for the provisions of the statutes, Code, ch. 171, § 44, 45, p. 652; ch. 177, § 21, p. 674.

‡__Same—When Supersedeas Lies to Judgment Setting Aside.__—The rule laid down in the third headnote of the principal case that where the lower court set aside an office judgment and the execution which had issued upon it after the 15th day of the term and allowed the defendant to plead, the plaintiff may have a supersedeas from such order, was referred to in James River, etc., Co. v. Lee, 16 Gratt. 433, by MONCURE, J., the same judge who delivered the opinion in Enders v. Burch, 15 Gratt. 64, as possibly erroneous but the court in that case left the question undecided as it was not necessary in that case to decide the point. And the court was therefore of the opinion that a reargument of the question ought to be heard whenever it may come up for decision before a full court. Also, in Ballard v. Whitlock, 18 Gratt. 243, the question was left undecided and the argument against the corrections of that decision was left unnoticed.

In Baker v. Swineford, 97 Va. 115, 33 S. E. Rep. 542, it is said that what fell from the learned judge who delivered the opinion in the principal case as to the power of the courts, after the 15th day of the term, with respect to judgments upon which it permits executions to issue after 10 days from that date was an obiter dictum, entitled to great respect, but not binding as authority. The court finally decides that under section 3600 of the Code the court has authority to direct execution to issue upon judgments under the conditions therein set forth, but such judgments do not thereby become final so as to deprive the court, during the term, of the power to correct, or if need be, annul them, if erroneous.

Digitized by Google

ment of his counsel (permitted by the plaintiffs to be filed without affidavit), tending to show that he had a legal defence to the action, but that the judgment was obtained against him by surprise. The plaintiffs objected to the motion, and introduced evidence tending to sustain their objections. Whereupon the court overruled the said objections and sustained the said motion, on certain conditions as to payment of costs and a trial of the cause, if desired by the plaintiffs during the same term: To which opinion and judgment of the court the plaintiffs excepted. After the order was made setting aside the judgment and quashing the execution, and on the same day, it appears that the defendant Burch, with the leave of the court, pleaded nil debet, and also filed a special plea; upon which pleas issues were thereupon made up. No other order was thereafter made in the cause; but to the said order setting aside the judgment and quashing the execution as aforesaid, the plaintiffs applied to this court for a supersedeas; which was awarded.

Gregory, for the appellants.
Young, for the appellee.

66 *MONCURE, J. It is a rule of the common law, that during the term wherein any judicial act is done the record remains in the breast of the judges of the court and in their remembrance, and therefore the roll is alterable during that term as the judges shall direct; but when that term is past, then the record is in the roll and admits of no alteration, averment or proof to the contrary. 3 Tho. Co. Lit. 323, 1 Rob. Pr. 638 (old). The consequence of this rule, until altered by statute as herein after mentioned, was that no execution could be issued on a judgment until the end of the term at which it was rendered; at least, unless directed by the court to be issued at an earlier period, for special cause. By the act of 1 Rev. Code 1819, p. 508, § 79, it was enacted, that "all judgments by default obtained in the office for want of appearance or plea, in which no writ of enquiry shall be awarded, and which shall not be set aside on some day of the next succeeding term; and all non-suits and dismissions obtained in the office, and not so set aside, shall be considered as final judgments of the last day of the term; and executions may issue thereupon accordingly." However long the term might last, such office judgments did not become final until the last day thereof; and no executions could issue thereon, even by the express order of the court, until the end of the term.

Such was the state of the law on the 6th day of March 1834, when an act was passed reciting, that "whereas the protracted session of the Circuit superior court of Henrico, on account of the chancery business thereof, subjects parties who have obtained judgments on the common law side of the said court, to considerable inconvenience, from the delay of issuing executions on their said judgments until the close of the court," and enacting, "that it shall be lawful for the judge of the said court, 67 by an order to be entered *on the records of said court, on the sixteenth juridical day after the said court shall have commenced its session for the trial of civil causes, at each term thereof, to direct that execution may issue on judgments rendered on or before the said sixteenth day of said term, and that all office judgments, non-suits or dismissions obtained in the office and not set aside, on or before the sixteenth day of the said term, shall be considered as final judgments of the said sixteenth day, and executions may issue thereupon accordingly: provided, that nothing herein contained shall deprive the court of the right heretofore exercised, of directing executions to issue at an earlier period, for special cause." Sess. Acts 1833-4, p. 69, ch. 46, § 2.

On the 15th day of March 1836, an act was passed containing a similar provision in regard to the Circuit superior court of law and chancery for the county of Spotsylvania, except that it adopts the fifteenth instead of the sixteenth juridical day of the term. Acts 1835-6, p. 36, ch. 50, § 3. By section 10 of that act, a change was made of the said act of March 6th, 1834, substituting the twenty-fourth for the sixteenth day of the term in regard to the county of Henrico.

Thus stood the law when the present Code was enacted, which applies to this case, and contains the following provisions on the subject:

P. 652, ch. 171, § 44. "Every judgment entered in the office in a case wherein there is no order for an enquiry of damages, and every non-suit or dismission entered therein shall, if not previously set aside, become a final judgment, if the case be in the General or a Circuit court, of the last day of the next term, or the fifteenth day thereof (whichever shall happen first); and if it be in a County or Corporation court, of the last day of the next quarterly term, and have the same effect by lien or otherwise as a judgment rendered in the court at such term," &c.

68 *§ 45. "If a defendant against whom judgment is entered in the office shall, before it becomes final, appear and plead to issue, it shall be set aside, unless an order for enquiry of damages has been executed; in which case it shall not be set aside without good cause. Any such issue may be tried at the same term, unless the defendant show good cause for a continuance."

P. 674, ch. 177, § 21. "Any court, after the fifteenth day of its term, may make a general order allowing executions to issue on judgments and decrees, after ten days from their date, although the term at which they are rendered be not ended. For special cause it may, in any particular case, except the same from such order, or allow an execution thereon at an earlier period."

Under these provisions of the Code, the fifteenth day of a term of a Circuit court which consists of more than fifteen days, is, in effect, the last day of the term as to cases on the office judgment docket in which there is no order for an enquiry of damages, and in which the office judgment shall not have been set aside on or before that day. The office judgment in such cases becomes as final, to all intents and purposes, on that day, as if it were in fact the last day of the term. The court has no more power over it on a subsequent day of the term than at a subsequent term, and a motion to set it aside would be just as much coram non judice in the one case as the other. It has all the properties of a final judgment. An execution may forthwith be issued upon it, without any order of court, general or special, for that purpose. It can be corrected, set aside or reversed, only by proceedings in error in the same or a higher court. If the defendant has been taken by surprise, and has just ground for relief against the judgment, he can obtain it only in a court of equity.

Digitized by Google

That this is the true construction of 69 the law, is *plainly indicated both by its letter and its spirit. The law expressly declares, that every judgment entered in the office, &c., shall "become a final judgment of the last day of the next term, or the fifteenth day thereof, whichever shall happen first;" thus putting the two days upon precisely the same footing in regard to office judgments which become final on one or the other. And it further expressly declares, that such judgment shall "have the same effect, by lien or otherwise, as a judgment rendered in the court at such term." The act of March 6, 1834, in which, as we have seen, the provisions of the Code on the same subject have their origin, expressly declared that office judgments, &c., not set aside on or before the sixteenth day of the term, "shall be considered as final judgments, of the said sixteenth day, and executions may issue thereupon accordingly." Thus using the same language which had been used in 1 Rev. Code 1819, p. 508, § 79, which declared that office judgments, &c., not set aside during the term, "shall be considered as final judgments of the last day of the term, and executions may issue thereupon accordingly." It would be difficult to place a different construction upon the same words occurring in these two laws in pari materia. There can be no doubt about the construction of the act of 1819, and it would seem there ought to be none about the construction of that of 1834, or of the provisions of the Code.

Again: The preamble of the act of 1834 sheds light upon the meaning of the legislature, and supports the above construction. It recites the mischief designed to be remedied by that act, to wit, the great inconvenience to which parties were subjected by the protracted session of the Circuit superior court of Henrico, on account of the chancery business thereof, from the delay of issuing executions on their judgments until the close of the court.

70 *This construction not only conforms to the letter and spirit of the law, but is reasonable and convenient also. The first fifteen days of a term of a Circuit court consisting of a greater number of days, certainly afford ample time for setting aside office judgments upon plain bonds or notes in writing, and much more than is generally afforded for that purpose, as the terms of the Circuit courts are rarely of so great length. They are usually longer in some counties and corporations; and especially in the city of Richmond, where, as appears from this record, a term is sometimes of more than three months' duration. Would it be reasonable or convenient that an office judgment, which becomes final on the fifteenth day of the term, and on which an execution may immediately thereafter be issued, should be liable to be set aside on motion at any time during the term, however long it may be continued? Is it not much more reasonable and convenient that the defendant in such case should be concluded of all relief against the judgment, except by a proceeding in error or in equity? In the former case, the plaintiff might be unjustly deprived of the lien of his judgment and execution, without any indemnity whatever; whereas in the latter, the lien of the judgment, so far as he may be entitled to it, is preserved to him, and he is generally indemnified against ultimate loss, by a supersedeas or an injunction bond.

This case affords a striking illustration of the inconvenience and injury which might result from the former course. Here the office judgment became final on the 27th of November 1855. The execution issued on the 22d of December, and went into the sheriff's hands on the 18th of January, and was levied: And not until the 8th day of March following, more than three months after the final judgment, was a motion made to set it aside, on the ground of surprise!

71 *But it is said that the legislature, in making office judgments final on the fifteenth day of a term if not set aside on or before that day, only intended to place them upon the same footing with judgments rendered in court; and that as the latter may be set aside on motion, for good cause shown, on any subsequent day of the term at which they are rendered, so may the former. If this were true, it would only show an incongruity in the law. But the legislature has guarded against such an incongruity, by providing that any court, after the fifteenth day of its term, may make a general order allowing executions to issue on judgments and decrees after ten days from their date, although the term at which they are rendered be not ended. Code, p. 674, § 21. The effect of this provision, and the general order which may be made in pursuance of it, is to make all judgments rendered in court final whenever execution is capable of being issued thereon, although the term at which they were rendered be not ended. A capacity to issue execution on a judgment at law implies its finality, unless there be something to repel the implication in the terms of the law which gives the capacity. There is nothing to repel it in the terms of the law in question. Judgments rendered in court, which thus become final after ten days from their date, then possess all the attributes of finality, and stand on the same footing with office judgments after they become final on the fifteenth day of the term, as aforesaid. In neither case has the court, as a court of original jurisdiction, any power over its judgments after they have thus become final.

Digitized by Google

I am therefore of opinion that the Circuit court had no power to make the order of the 8th day of March 1856, setting aside the office judgment made final in this case on the 27th day of November 1855, and that the said order is void.

72 *But it may be said that if the order be void, there can be no occasion to reverse it, and at all events, that the order being interlocutory and not final, the supersedeas thereto has been prematurely and improvidently awarded, and must therefore be dismissed.

There might be some force in this objection, if the order had merely been to set aside the judgment. But it proceeded further, and quashed the execution: And though the court had no power, as a court of original jurisdiction, over the judgment, it had such power over the execution. A court must see to the execution of its judgments, and may order an execution to be issued, or quash one which has been issued. This is its judicial power, which of course it must exercise properly, and its orders in the exercise thereof are subject to the revision of an appellate court. The order to quash the execution in this case, being within the judicial power of the court, is an obstruction which the plaintiffs are entitled to have removed out of their way, in order that they may have execution of their judgment. And they are not bound to wait for that purpose until the case upon the order to set aside the judgment is finally disposed of in the court below. The order quashing the execution is a final order, and the supersedeas thereto was not prematurely awarded. This court therefore has jurisdiction of the case. And the order to set aside the judgment and quash the execution being one entire order, and the quashing of the execution being in consequence of the order to set aside the judgment, this court can properly, I think, revise and reverse the entire order, notwithstanding the interlocutory character of a part of it which is void.

The view which I have taken of the case renders it unnecessary if not improper to express an opinion upon the question, whether the defendant in error made out such a case in the court below as would have entitled him to have the judg-

73 ment set aside if that court had *had jurisdiction to make the order for that purpose. If he is entitled to be relieved against the judgment on the grounds relied on by him in the court below, he can obtain such relief only in a court of equity.

I am therefore of opinion that the said order of the 8th of March 1856 is erroneous, and ought to be reversed with costs, and that the motion of the said defendant in error ought to be dismissed with costs.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Moncure, J.

Judgment reversed.

---

74 *Ham v. Ham.

January Term, 1859, Richmond.

Guardian and Ward—Termination of Guardianship—Election of Infant.*—A County court having regularly appointed a guardian for an infant under fourteen years of age, the infant after he attains that age has not the right, at his mere election, to have his guardian thus appointed displaced, and a new one of his own nomination substituted.†

On the 26th of October 1854 William Ham was appointed by the County court of Elizabeth City guardian of Jacob Ham, an infant then under the age of fourteen years; and he qualified and gave security as such guardian. On the 16th of January 1857 Jacob Ham attained the age of fourteen years; and in October of that year he by his next friend moved the court to be allowed to nominate his grand father James Philips as his guardian to be appointed by the court. There was a rule upon William Ham to show cause why his powers as guardian should not be revoked. And upon the hearing of the motion the County court refused to revoke the powers of William Ham and confirm the nomination of the infant: And thereupon Jacob Ham appealed to the Circuit court of Elizabeth City.

In March 1858 the case was heard in the Circuit court, when the order of the County court was reversed; and Jacob Ham was permitted to nominate his own guardian; and he thereupon nominated James Philips, who was appointed by the court; and qualified as guardian. To this opinion of the court William Ham excepted; and the court certified, that upon the hearing of the appeal, it was both proved and admitted

75 *by the parties, that William Ham was a good and unexceptionable guardian, and had demeaned himself in all things as such. And that James Philips, the grand father of said infant, whom Jacob Ham proposed and nominated as his guardian, was a good and unexceptionable man, and as well qualified as William to be guardian of Jacob Ham. But the court was of opinion, that when an infant to whom a guardian has been appointed while he was under fourteen years of age, arrives at that age, he has the right, without assigning any reason therefor, or showing any

*The principal case is cited in Burdett v. Cain, 8 W. Va. 285.

See monographic note on "Guardian and Ward" appended to Barnum v. Frost, 17 Gratt. 398.

†See JUDGE DANIEL'S opinion, for the provisions of the statute, Code, ch. 127, p. 533.

Digitized by Google

cause, to displace said guardian and elect another, and that it is the duty of the court to confirm such election. From this order of the Circuit court William Ham obtained a supersedeas.

Bowden, for the appellant.
Cosnahan, for the appellee.

DANIEL, J. It appears from the record, that upon the hearing of the case before the Circuit court, it was both proved, and admitted by the parties, that the appellant was a good and unexceptionable guardian, and had demeaned himself as such in all things; and also, that Philips, the grandfather of the infant appellee, whom the said appellee proposed and nominated as his guardian, was a good and unexceptionable man, and as well qualified as the appellant to be guardian of the said appellee. And the record discloses no fact showing or suggesting a reason why the said appellee desired the change which he asked the court to make. The single issue, therefore, which was presented for the decision of the Circuit court, and which is now to be settled here, is, whether a minor, for whom a guardian has been regularly appointed by a County court under the provisions of the Code of 1849, whilst he was within the age of fourteen years, on attaining to 76 *that age, has the right, at his mere election, to have his guardian thus appointed displaced, and a new one, of his nomination, substituted.

That the provisions of the Code on the subject do not, in terms, give or save to the minor such a right, is obvious. By the 1st section of chapter 127, p. 533, power is given to every father, by his last will and testament, to appoint a guardian for his child for such time, during its infancy, as he shall direct. And by the third section, the Circuit, County or Corporation court of any county or corporation in which any minor resides, or, if he be a resident out of the state in which he has any estate; is authorized to appoint a guardian for him, unless he have a guardian appointed as aforesaid by his father. The fourth section then proceeds to declare, that "if the minor is under the age of fourteen years, the court may nominate and appoint his guardian: if he is above that age, he may, in the presence of the court, or in writing acknowledged before a justice, nominate his own guardian, who, if approved by the court, shall be appointed accordingly."

Of the six sections of the chapter concerning the appointment of guardians, the three just cited alone have any bearing on the question. Of the remaining sections, the seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth relate to the powers and duties of guardians, and the eleventh and twelfth concern the power of the chancery courts over the relation of guardian and ward, and declare how infants may sue. And of these, the seventh alone demands present notice. That section declares, that "every guardian who shall be appointed as aforesaid, and give bond when it is required, shall have the custody of his ward, and the possession, care and management of his estate, real and personal; and out of the proceeds of such estate shall provide for his maintenance and education. But the father of the minor, if living; and in case of his death, the mother, 77 *while she remains unmarried, shall, if fit for the trust, be entitled to the custody of the person of the minor, and to the care of his education. And unless the guardian shall sooner die, be removed, or resign his trust (which the court that appointed him may allow him to do), he shall continue in office until the minor, being a male, shall attain the age of twenty-one years; or being a female, shall attain that age or marry; or in the case of a testamentary guardianship, until the termination of the period limited therefor."

The power of the court, by which a guardian has been appointed, to revoke his powers and appoint a new guardian in his place, is conferred by the 11th and 13th sections of chapter 132 of the Code, p. 550. The former of these sections (amongst other things) declares, that the court, under the order of which any fiduciary derives his authority, "may, whenever from any cause it appears proper, revoke and annul his powers;" and the latter provides, that "after the date of any order revoking and annulling the powers of any fiduciary, the court in which he qualified shall exercise such jurisdiction, either by appointing an administrator de bonis non, or a new guardian, or otherwise, as it could have exercised if the said fiduciary had died at that date."

It is obvious, that the right given to the minor to nominate his guardian, by the 4th section of chapter 127, extends, in terms, to the case only where, there being no incumbent in the office under an appointment by the court, or by the will of the father, the court is about to appoint a guardian. In such case, if the minor be under the age of fourteen years, the court appoints one of its own selection. But if the minor is above the age of fourteen years, he has the right to nominate his own guardian, who, if approved by the court (that is, I apprehend, if a fit and proper person, worthy to be approved by the court), is to receive the appointment.

78 *It is equally clear, that there is nothing in the 7th section of said chapter which points to the arrival of the ward at the age of fourteen years as the limitation of the guardian's office, or which can be relied on, in terms, as conferring upon the ward the right, on attaining to that age, to change his guardian. And I cannot see that the argument in favor of the right, derives any support from the provisions of the 11th and 13th sections of chapter 132 (cited at the bar and already referred to), giving to the court making the appointment the power to revoke and annul the powers of the guardian, and appoint a new one, when from any cause it appears proper to such court so to do.

To suppose such a right to be embraced within the provisions of these sections, seems to me necessarily to impute to the legislature a very awkward and immethodical way of legislating upon the subject. For whilst the legislature knew that the right had been extensively recognized and acted upon in the practice of our County courts, they also knew that the laws by which it was supposed to be conferred, were in a confused and unsettled state. In this condition of things, it is difficult to suppose that if the legislature intended to give or save to the ward such a right, they would have omitted all mention of it whilst engaged in fixing the term of the guardian's office, and have left it to be deduced from the power given to the court to revoke the powers of the guardian, for cause. In this connection, it is to be observed too, that the right claimed is one which is, in its very nature, positive, peremptory, decisive; and in a Code systematically arranged, we should hardly expect to find the exhibition of such a right classed as a reason for judicial action with causes whose sufficiency is to be determined by the sense of propriety and discretion of the court. And indeed, I take it, that it is in no degree the office of the provision under consideration to ascertain or define the rights of the 79 ward. The power of the court *to revoke the powers of the fiduciary, for proper cause, is conferred as a means of protecting rights already ascertained, and enforcing the performance of duties already prescribed, and cannot be looked to as the source from whence to deduce any right in the ward which the law has not elsewhere already declared or recognized.

Digitized by Google

We have already shown that there is no express recognition of the existence of the right in question in that part of the Code where (if any where) we should naturally expect to find it. Not only so, but to my mind, the denial of the right involved in the terms of the 7th section of chapter 127 falls very little (if at all) short, in conclusiveness, of a declaration in totidem verbis that henceforth the ward shall have no such right.

The liability of the guardian to be removed from office is, in terms, attached as well to a guardian appointed by the will of the father as to one appointed by the court; and the declaration that (unless removed) a guardian appointed by the court shall continue in office until the minor, being a male, shall attain the age of twenty-one years, is equally explicit with the declaration that the testamentary guardian shall continue in office until the termination of the period limited therefor in the will by which he is appointed. The evidence of an intent in the legislature to deny the right in question, contained in a declaration that the court may appoint a guardian, and that when appointed he is to continue in office until the ward attains the age of twenty-one years, is just as conclusive as that contained in the declaration that the father may by his will appoint a guardian, who is to continue in office until the termination of the period limited in the will. In the case of a guardian appointed by will, the right in question, unless expressly provided for, is, I apprehend, without 80 doubt superseded. *Such is the well settled effect ascribed to the statute, 12 Cha. 2, c. 24, from which the provision of ours, allowing the appointment of a guardian by will, is substantially taken. Thomas' Coke 181, note; 2 Kent's Comm. 235. What room is then left for the argument that the same consequence does not flow from the appointment of a guardian by the court?

The legislative provisions under which the practice of the County courts, already mentioned, grew up, were, in several most essential particulars, wholly different from the provisions of the Code under consideration. There was no statute declaring that a guardian appointed by the court should continue in office till the ward arrived at the age of twenty-one years. Indeed, neither in the act of 1819, nor in the acts of 1785 and 1792, was any authority, in terms, conferred upon the County courts to make original appointments of guardians, as had been done in the act of 1748. And in the 1st section of the act of 1785 (12 Hen. Stat. 195), in the 2d section of the act of 1792 (1 Stat. at large, N. S. 104), and in the 4th section of the act of 1819 (1 Rev. Code 406), power was given to the Chancery courts "to require security from any guardian in socage." Notwithstanding this indirect recognition of the existence of the guardianship in socage, by the legislature, and omission to declare any authority in the County courts to make original appointments of guardians, a practice prevailed in the County courts of making such appointments; and this, without any regard to the rights of the persons entitled to such appointments according to the laws of the guardianship in socage: though the right of the ward, founded in the same laws, to terminate the guardianship on arriving at the age of fourteen years, was (from a supposed analogy doubtless) still recognized and respected. The revisors, in their report (653-4), call the attention of the legis-
81 lature to this state of *things, and to the doubts which existed, on the one hand, as to whether, since the abolishing of all feudal tenures by our act of 1779, guardianship in socage could with propriety (notwithstanding the implied recognition before adverted to) be said to exist in Virginia; and the other, as to whether the County courts had not usurped authority in undertaking to make original appointments; and conclude by saying, that in order, if possible, to remove all ambiguity in the law, they had thought it best "to omit any reference to the guardianship in socage, to retain the provision of the act of 1748, and define the powers and duties of guardians."

The law (with some immaterial alterations) has been enacted as reported by the revisors; and, as we have seen, after giving to the father the right to appoint a guardian for his child by his will, it vests

Digitized by Google

the Circuit and County courts with full power to appoint guardians for all minors who have not testamentary guardians; declares that the guardian appointed by will shall continue in office till the termination of the period limited in the will, and that the guardian appointed by the court shall continue in office till the ward arrives at the age of twenty-one years; omits any reference to the guardianship in socage; and whilst it gives to the guardian the possession, care and management of the ward's estate, real and personal, omits the provisions of the acts of 1794 and 1819, which, in giving to guardians the power to make leases, declared that the same should not exceed the period when the ward should arrive at the age of fourteen years.

I can see nothing on the face of the law, or in the history of the circumstances preceding and attending its passage, from which to conclude that it was the purpose of the legislature to give or save to the ward the right claimed in this case.

82 On the contrary, the *intention to deny the existence of the right is plainly to be deduced, not only from the language of the law, where it has spoken on the subject, but also from the obvious purpose and meaning of its silence where it should have spoken, if it had intended to recognize or save the right.

Upon the whole, it seems to me that the order of the Circuit court is erroneous; and I am for reversing it and affirming that of the County court.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Daniel, J.

Judgment reversed.

---

83 *Iaege, &c. v. Bossieux.

January Term, 1859, Richmond.

1. Mechanics' Liens—Limitation of Action—Decree for Installments Not Due.—Under the statute, Code, ch. 119, § 2, p. 510, creating the mechanic's lien upon the building, the suit may be brought within six months from the time the building is finished, to enforce the lien as to the installments of the contract price due; and though some of them are not due and payable at the time the suit is commenced, the court may in its decree provide for them.†

2. Same—Assignment of—Rights of Assignee.‡—The contract and lien under the statute may be assigned, and the assignee may enforce the lien in the same mode that the mechanic might do it.

3. Contract to Build House—Approval of Referees—Conclusiveness of—Case at Bar.§—By the contract for building a house, the builder is to furnish the materials and to build the house in a workmanlike manner, and the price is to be fixed by referees chosen by the parties. Soon after the work is finished, it is valued and the price fixed; but afterwards defects become apparent by the shrinking of the timber, showing that the work was executed in a very defective and unworkmanlike manner. The valuation does not conclude the owner of the house; but he is entitled to compensation for the defects; and in a suit by the assignee of the builder to enforce the lien for the price for building the house, the owner will only be required to pay what the building was really worth.

Mechanics' Liens—Decree for Installments Not Due.—In Trustees Franklin St. Church v. Davis, 85 Va. 197, 7 S. E. Rep. 245, suit was brought to enforce a mechanic's lien before the installments which were sought to be collected became due, and the court held that the suit was prematurely brought, distinguishing it from the principal case which holds in its first headnote that where suit is brought to enforce a mechanic's lien after the first installment is due decrees for the subsequent installments, as they subsequently fall due, may be rendered in the same suit.

†Code, ch. 119, § 2, p. 510. "If a person owning or having an interest in land, in a city or town, shall by a writing signed by him, contract with another to pay him money for erecting or repairing any building, or the appurtenances of any building on such land, there shall be a lien for such money on the whole interest of the said person in such land, from the time that the said writing is duly admitted to record in the county or corporation wherein the said land lies. But the said lien shall not be in force more than six months from the time when the money, or the last installment of the money to be paid under such contract, shall become payable, unless a suit in equity to enforce the lien shall have been commenced within the said six months. If in such suit the lien be established, the court shall order a sale of such interest in the land, to satisfy the money which ought to be paid under such contract."

‡Same—Assignment of—Rights of Assignee.—The principal case is authority for the proposition that where a perfected mechanic's lien under the statute is assigned, the assignee may enforce the lien in the same mode that the mechanic might do it, and in Bristol Iron & Steel Co. v. Thomas, 93 Va. 403, 25 S. E. Rep. 110, citing the principal case, the court goes further and holds that the assignee may perfect the inchoate lien which existed for the benefit of his assignor.

§Contract to Build House—Approval of Referees—Conclusiveness of.—In Carroll County v. Collier, 22 Gratt. 311, and note, the plaintiff contracted to build a jail for the said county. The work shortly after its completion was examined by commissioners of the court, who reported that the building had been completed according to the contract. This report was entered of record. When sued for the amount promised to be paid for the work, the defendant put in a special plea alleging that the work had been defectively constructed and the plaintiff joined issue on the plea. The defendant introduced a witness to sustain the defence and the plaintiff objected and offered the order as an estoppel. The court held, citing the principal case, that the plaintiff having taken issue on the plea the order could not operate as an estoppel when offered in evidence. See, in accord, Hayes v. Va. Mut., etc., Assn., 76 Va. 225. But in Despard v. County of Pleasants, 23 W. Va. 324, whose facts are similar to the case above and where issue was joined on the plea of non-assumpsit, the court held: "In this action, the defendant filed specifications of sets-off and payments, but gave no notice of any claim for damages on account of any defect in the repairs. It did not assert or offer to prove that there was any imposition, fraud, concealment or mistake in the accept-

Digitized by Google

4. Building Fund Company—Lien for Future Advances—Mechanic's Lien—Priority.—A building fund company agrees to advance to one of its members money to build a house on a lot owned by him, and advances a part of the money and takes a lien upon the lot and the buildings which may be erected upon it, to secure the advances made 84 and to be *made. The member then makes a contract for the building of a house on the lot, with a mechanic who, to raise money faster than it can be gotten from the company, assigns the contract to a person who undertakes to advance the money; and the contract is recorded, so as to create the mechanic's lien. After the contract is recorded, the company advances money from time to time, as it had agreed to do, which is paid to the assignee in part satisfaction of his advances to the mechanic, with a knowledge on his part, that it comes from the company, and that the company claims priority of lien upon the property. The company is entitled to priority over the mechanic's lien, for its advances made after the contract was recorded, as well as for its advances made before.

5. Judicial Sales—Priority of Liens.—Before decreeing a sale of the house and lot, the court should determine the priorities as between the building fund company and the assignee of the mechanic's lien. And it is error merely to decree a sale and direct the proceeds to be brought into court.

6. Deeds of Trust—Wife Joining with Husband in—Dower—Equity of Redemption.¶—The wife of the grantor in the deed of trust to secure the building fund company, having joined in that deed, the property should be sold out and out, and first applied to the payment of the debt due to the company. But she has a contingent dower interest in the equity of redemption, and being a party in the suit, and therefore bound by the decree in the cause, the court should make a proper provision to compensate that interest out of the surplus proceeds of sale, if any, before any part of it is paid over to the assignee of the building contract.

7. Referees—Copy of Valuation—Waiver of Objection to.—A copy of the valuation of the referees, is filed with the bill, and though noticed in the answer, is not objected to. It is received by the commissioner who settles the accounts, as evidence, and no call is made for the original before him: but there is an exception without date, endorsed upon it as being but a copy. The exception either came too late, or was waived by the party.

Lewis Iaege being the owner of a lot of ground in the city of Richmond, on which he desired to erect a small dwelling-house, at a cost of some six hundred or six hundred and fifty dollars, and holding also five shares in the Richmond building fund company, he applied to that company for the loan of a sum of money for the purpose of erecting such a dwelling. The company agreed to lend him the money, upon the terms prescribed in their articles and by-laws, by which the money was to be advanced from time to time as the house progressed, 85 and the whole was to be *secured by a deed of trust on the property. The company advanced Iaege one hundred and twenty dollars, and he and his wife, by a deed bearing date the 20th day of August 1852, duly recorded, conveyed the lot and buildings then or which might be put upon it, for the purpose of securing this sum and ance of the work by the court. If it had offered such proof in connection with the testimony excluded by the court, I am inclined to think it would have been admissible under the plea of non-assumpsit and that said order of acceptance would not have operated as an estoppel even if so formally pleaded. Iaege v. Bossieux, 15 Gratt. 83, 99; Carroll County v. Collier, 22 Gratt. 302. But, having failed to assert or offer to show that there was any imposition or fraud on the part of the plaintiff, or mistake upon the part of the county court in accepting said repairs, I do not think the circuit court erred in excluding the testimony offered by the defendant to prove that the work had not been done according to the specifications set forth in the contract with the plaintiff."

---

Judicial Sales—Priority of Liens.—The 5th headnote of the principal case holds in substance that it is error to decree the sale of lands before ascertaining the priority of liens thereon. For the above proposition the principal case is cited in the following cases: Horton v. Bond, 28 Gratt. 815, and note: Crawford v. Weller, 23 Gratt. 835, and note: Anderson v. Nagle, 12 W. Va. 113; Washington, A. & G. R. Co. v. Alexandria & W. R. Co., 19 Gratt. 617, and note: Lipscombe v. Rogers, 20 Gratt. 658, and note: Tracey v. Shumate, 22 W. Va. 500.

See monographic note on "Judicial Sales" appended to Walker v. Page, 21 Gratt. 636.

But in Pairo v. Bethell, 75 Va. 831, it is said: "The court might, perhaps, in the exercise of a sound discretion, direct an issue or issues under circumstances which would warrant such direction in a regular chancery suit; and so, if the case required it, we see no good reason why there might not be a reference to a commissioner to make inquiries and take and state accounts. Such reference might be necessary in many cases involving conflict of liens, disputed titles and like matters; such, for instance, as the case of Iaege v. Bossieux, 15 Gratt. 83. But there was no necessity for the reference asked for in the present case, as the questions litigated were simple and easy of solution by the judge, as the sequel showed, without the aid of a commissioner, nor was there any necessity for an issue or issues to be tried by a jury."

¶Deeds of Trust—Wife Joining with Husband in—Dower—Equity of Redemption.—For the proposition that where the wife of the grantor in a deed of trust, to secure a building fund company, joined in that deed, the property should be sold out and out, and first applied to the debt due the company, but since the wife has a contingent dower interest in the equity of redemption, the court should make a proper provision to compensate that interest out of the proceeds, the principal case is quoted with approval in Holden v. Boggess, 20 W. Va. 79, 85, 86, but this case criticises the principal case as to the way in which the dower interest should be secured to the wife; holding that if the wife survives the husband and the dower interest becomes consummate, the same in a suit in equity by her is a charge upon the land in the hands of the purchaser. See principal case reported in 76 Am. Dec. 189, and note. See monographic note on "Deeds of Trust."

Mechanics' Liens.—On the subject of Mechanics' Liens, see discussion in 2 Va. Law Reg. 489, where the principal case is cited: also, U. S. Blowpipe Co. v. Spencer, 40 W. Va. 705, 21 S. E. Rep. 769.

Digitized by Google

any further sums which might be lent him for the purposes aforesaid.

Having made the arrangement with the Building fund company for getting the money, Iaege then contracted with William H. Martin, a carpenter, for building the house; but Martin being very much embarrassed, and fearing that his creditors might disturb him if they knew he had the contract for building the house, the name of John Warthen was substituted for his in the written agreement. This agreement, which bears date the 28th day of September 1852, provides that Warthen shall build a house of a given description, "the work to be executed in a workmanlike manner," and when completed, it was to be valued by referees chosen by the parties, and the value of the building so fixed was to be the price thereof. When the roof was upon the building, Iaege was to pay to Warthen two hundred and fifty dollars; and when the building was completed he was to pay two hundred and fifty dollars more; and the residue was to be paid within twelve months from the date of the completion of the building, by equal monthly payments, bearing interest from that date.

As Martin had no money, and required it to enable him to carry on the work faster than Iaege could get it from the Building fund company, an arrangement was made by him with Louis J. Bossieux, who undertook to advance the money; and the contract was assigned to him by Warthen: and on the 29th of September 1852 it was admitted to record in the clerk's office of the Hustings court of the city of Richmond, upon the acknowledgment of Iaege and Warthen.

86 *Martin seems to have proceeded forthwith to build the house; and referees having been chosen as provided in the agreement, they on the 25th of February 1853 made out their estimate, and valued the building at eight hundred and eighty-six dollars and eighty-six cents. Of this sum, Iaege had paid, during the progress of the work, or in March 1852, six hundred dollars. To make these payments, it was known to the parties that he was to receive and did receive money upon loan from the Building fund company; and in addition to the sum of one hundred and twenty dollars received by him before the execution of his deed of trust, after that deed was executed and after the contract between himself and Warthen had been assigned to Bossieux and recorded, he received from the company the further sum of four hundred and sixty-one dollars; which was paid to Bossieux, with the knowledge on his part that it was obtained from the company.

On the 12th day of September 1853 Louis J. Bossieux instituted a suit in equity in the Circuit court of the city of Richmond, against Lewis Iaege and his wife, the Richmond building fund company, and the trustees in the deed to secure the company before mentioned. In his bill he sets out the contract, its assignment to him, and the record thereof, the completion of the building, the appointment of the referees, and their valuation; of which he exhibited a copy, and the payments made by Iaege. He says there is still due to him near three hundred dollars, which Iaege had failed to pay; and he insists that his contract having been recorded, he has a lien upon the property under the statute, Code, ch. 119, § 2, p. 510. He refers to the deed of trust to secure the Building fund company; and says that the company claims a prior lien upon the property; and asks for a sale of the property for the payment of his claim; and for general relief.

87 *Iaege answered the bill at great length. He says that he made the contract with Martin who did the work; that before making the contract he told Martin that he could not pay more than six hundred or six hundred and fifty dollars for the house, and that he would not build at all if it could not be done for that amount; and that Martin assured him it would not cost more. He declares that he never intended to give a lien upon the property by the record of the contract, and was ignorant that such would be its effect. He insists that the contract has been violated, in that the work has not been done in a workmanlike manner; that the materials used were not suitable and properly seasoned; the door panels are split, the facings warped, the chimney piece shrunk, and various defects that could not be so well discovered when the work was valued by the referees, have since become strikingly apparent as the work has become seasoned: And he insists that he has already paid fully as much as the work is worth.

The trustees of the Building fund company also answered, insisting upon their prior lien for the amount they had lent to Iaege; charging that the plaintiff and Martin knew that Iaege was to get the money from the company to build the house, and to give the lien to secure it; and that the plaintiff, when he received the money from the company, was informed that the company claimed a priority of lien for the money so paid to him.

In March 1854 the court made an order in the cause, directing a commissioner to report, first, the amount due from Iaege to the Building fund company at the date of the recordation of the contract with Warthen: second, whether the company had advanced to Iaege any sums of money to the satisfaction of said builder's contract, after the contract was recorded: and if so, how much, and to whom such advances

88 *were made: third, the balance due to the plaintiff: fourth, the value of the real estate in the trust deed mentioned, in its improved condition. And in June 1854 the commissioner reported, that at the date of the recordation of the building contract the Building fund company had advanced to Iaege one hundred and twenty dollars, of which he had repaid, in monthly installments, twenty dollars: that after the recordation of the contract the company had paid, or advanced, on the of December, to L. J. Bossieux and John Warthen two hundred and thirty-two dollars; and in March 1853 to the same parties two hundred and twenty-nine dollars—equal to four hundred and sixty-one dollars: and that there was due from Iaege to Bossieux two hundred and eighty-six dollars and eighty-six cents. On the fourth subject referred, the commissioner returned the depositions of two witnesses, and says, one of them values the property at from six to seven hundred dollars, and the other from six to six hundred and fifty dollars. The balance reported to be due to Bossieux was based on the valuation of the referees, a copy of which was before the commissioner, and seems not then to have been excepted to; though afterwards an exception without date was endorsed upon it.

Digitized by Google

Several witnesses were examined as to the materials and workmanship of the building; the substance of which is stated in the opinion of Judge Lee. The allegations in the answer on that point, seem to be fully sustained.

The cause came on to be further heard on the 27th of November 1855, when, there having been no exception to the commissioner's report, it was confirmed; and it was decreed, that unless within ninety days Iaege or some one for him paid to the plaintiff the sum of two hundred and eighty-six dollars and eighty-six cents, with interest from the 25th of Feb-89 ruary *1853 until paid, and his costs, a commissioner should proceed to sell the house and lot, in the mode and on the terms stated in the decree, and deposit the proceeds in the Bank of Virginia to the credit of the cause, and report his proceedings to the court. From this decree Iaege and the Richmond building fund company applied for and obtained an appeal to this court.

B. B. Minor, for the appellants, insisted: 1st. That the suit was instituted before the right of action had arisen. The payments over the sums provided to be paid during the progress of the work and on its completion, were to be paid in twelve months from the time the building was finished, in equal monthly installments. The whole of this residue was not due until the 25th of February 1854, and when this suit was instituted, had not become payable. And the statute, Code, ch. 119, § 2, p. 510, provides, that the builder's lien shall not continue more than six months from the completion of the building, unless a suit in equity to enforce the lien shall have been commenced within the said six months. He referred to Kinney v. Hudnut, 2 Scamm. R. 472; Jones v. Alexander, 10 Smedes & Marsh. R. 627; Thaxter v. Williams, 14 Pick. R. 9; Heck v. Skener, 4 Serg. & Rawle R. 249; Delahay v. Clement, 3 Scamm. R. 201; Pryor v. White, 16 B. Monr. R. 605; Bartlett v. Kingan, 19 Penn. R. 341; Patrick v. Ballentine, 22 Missouri R. 143; Hoover v. Wheeler, 23 Miss. R. 314; McCallan v. Smith, 11 Cush. R. 238.

2d. That the building contract was not recorded with the intention to create a lien on the property, nor with the knowledge on the part of Iaege that it would have that effect; and therefore no lien was created by it. Hutchison & wife v. Rust, 2 Gratt. 394; Alexander & Co. v. Newton, Id. 266; Blessing's adm'r v.
90 *Beatty, 1 Rob. R. 287; Pullen v. Mullen & wife, 12 Leigh 434, 440; 2 Rob. old Pr. 214.

3d. That the balance reported to be due to Bossieux is erroneous: First, because there was no legal proof of the valuation of the referees, there being only what purported to be a copy of that valuation, and that excepted to. But second, because the proofs are conclusive to show that the house was not built in a workmanlike manner, but that both the materials and the workmanship were very inferior, and were full of defects, which could not be seen or discovered when the valuation was made soon after the completion of the work, and in the winter. That Iaege was therefore not concluded by the valuation of the referees, but had a right to an abatement of the estimated price, and should be charged only what the house was really worth. He referred to Heck v. Skener, 4 Serg. & Rawle R. 249; Chitty Contr. 450-51, 574-75; Cawthorn v. Courtney, 6 Gratt. 381; Warren v. Harris, 2 Gilm. R. 307.

4th. That the Building fund company were entitled to a prior lien for the whole amount of their advances: that the parties had full knowledge that the contract for the building was to be carried out on Iaege's part, and could only be carried out by him, by means of the money to be advanced by the company on the security of the house and lot; and Bossieux himself received the money from the company, with the full knowledge that they claimed to have the prior lien for all their advances, and without then disputing their claim. He referred to 1 Story's Equ. Jur. § 401, 417; 2 Id. § 1257, and note; Cox v. Romine, 9 Gratt. 27.

5th. That the building contract was not assignable so as to give the assignee the mechanic's lien. The statute gives the lien to the person who has done the work, but not to his assignee. Sess. Acts 1842-3, p. 53; Code, ch. 119, § 2, p. 510; Bot-
91 tomly v. Grace *Church, 2 Calif. R. 90; Greene v. Ely, 2 Green's (Iowa) R. 508; Hilliard v. Allen, 4 Cush. R. 532; Logan v. Dunlap, 3 Scamm. R. 189. And there is no lien for money advanced for erecting the building. Godefroy v. Caldwell, 2 Calif. R. 489; Steam Boat D. H. White v. Levy, 10 Ark. R. 411; Lawson & als. v. Higgins, 1 Mich. R. 225; Shotwell v. Kilgore, 26 Miss. R. 125; Holmes v. Shands, Id. 639; Edgar v. Salisbury, 17 Missouri R. 271.

6th. The sale of the property is decreed, without any provision for the widow's right of dower in the equity of redemption, after satisfying the lien of the Building fund company, in which she joined. That equity of redemption includes the buildings put upon the lot. Shaeffer v. Weed, 3 Gilm. R. 511; English v. Foote, 8 Smedes & Marsh. R. 444; Selph v. Howland, 23 Miss. R. 264; Thirby v. Tead, 13 Metc. R. 149. And the sale is also decreed without first adjusting the proprieties of the liens; which this court has held to be error. Cole's adm'r v. McRae, 6 Rand. 644; Buchanan v. Clark, 10 Gratt. 16.

Digitized by Google

Morson, for the appellee: Upon the first point made by the appellants' counsel, to show the right of an assignee to sue in equity to enforce a lien, referred to Hanna v. Wilson, 3 Gratt. 243; Winn v. Bowles, 6 Munf. 23; 2 Story's Equ. Jur. § 1040, 1250. And to show that the assignee may sue before all the installments are due, he referred to 3 Rob. Pr. 361, 362; Paul v. Dod, 2 Man. Gr. & Scott 800; Mussen v. Price, 4 East's R. 147; 2 Parsons' Cont. 486, note k; Hanna v. Mills, 21 Wend. R. 90; 1 Story's Equ. Jur. § 64 k, 67, 68, 457; 2 Id. § 717 a, 718. And he insisted that the provision in the statute referred to, was only intended to prevent delay in enforcing the lien.

2d. That though Iaege swears he did not intend to give a lien by the record of 92 the building contract, *there is no proof of the fact; but the contract was recorded on his acknowledgment; and Bossieux refused to lend the money unless the contract was recorded.

3d. He insisted, that the value of the building was ascertained in the mode prescribed in the contract, and there was no suggestion that the referees had not acted honestly in making their valuation; and the parties were concluded by that valuation. Kidwell v. The Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co., 11 Gratt. 676. That the exception to the copy of the valuation was without date, and was obviously taken after the report of the commissioner had been returned. That copy was filed with the bill as an exhibit; and though referred to by Iaege in his answer, was not objected to.

4th. The Building fund company is not postponed absolutely to Bossieux. The amount due the company when the contract was recorded is held to have priority. According to the general rule, Bossieux is next entitled, and then the company for the money advanced after the contract was recorded. But the decree does not postpone the company to this extent, but simply directs the sale, and that the money be deposited in bank; and the question of priority may be hereafter adjusted. And this is the usual practice; it not being common to settle the priorities in the decree directing the sale.

5th. There is nothing in the cases cited on the other side to sustain the proposition that the assignee of the contract is not entitled to the lien; nor is there any thing in the statute to authorize the proposition. It would be most injurious to the mechanic if it were so, as it would lessen the value of the lien to him, by precluding its use in raising money to enable him to execute the work.

6th. The deed to secure the Building fund company, conveyed the dower interest
93 of Mrs. Iaege; and *the whole property was therefore properly decreed to be sold. She had but a contingent interest in the equity of redemption, and was only entitled to have her interest secured out of the balance of the purchase money; and as she is a party in the suit, that could have been and can yet be done.

LEE, J. The jurisdiction of this court in this case is, I think, clear and unquestionable. Assuming that the matter in controversy is merely pecuniary, it is not confined to the amount claimed by the appellee but embraces also the amounts claimed by the Building fund company and for which as they allege they are entitled to priority of payment out of the proceeds of the subject. These alone exceed the sum necessary to give the jurisdiction.

There is as little doubt, I think, of the jurisdiction of the court of equity in the matter of the bill. Its jurisdiction is denied by the counsel for the appellant upon his construction of our act creating the "mechanic's lien," Code, ch. 119, § 2, p. 510; and if his construction were correct, there would be grave doubt of the right of a party claiming as assignee of such a contract as that which is the foundation of the appellee's demand, to come into equity to obtain payment of such of the installments as had become due merely upon the ground that he was assignee. But I do not think the construction contended for is correct. The act first declares that there shall be a lien for the money agreed to be paid upon a contract for erecting or repairing any building, &c., from the time that the same is duly admitted to record, and then provides that "the said lien shall not be in force more than six months from the time when the money or the last installment of the money, to be paid under such contract, shall become payable, unless a suit in equity to enforce the lien shall have been com-94 menced within *the said six months." The object of this provision was to prescribe a limitation to suits to enforce such a lien by specifying a period after which they might not be brought but not one before which they might not be commenced. It intended to give the mechanic the right to assert the lien for all the installments whenever due (where the contract price was payable in installments) provided he commenced his suit before the expiration of the six months after the last installment became due, but not to prevent him from proceeding for previous installments before the last became payable. His right to sue for these depends on general principles and is not restricted by the act; and no one has ever questioned that a party who has a debt due by bond payable in installments and secured by a lien on real estate may maintain covenant, or file his bill to enforce his lien as soon as any one installment becomes payable, whatever may be the doubt as to the right to maintain debt until all of the installments shall have become due. And where such a bill has been filed another installment shall become due pending the suit, the uniform practice, never questioned so far as I know, has been to decree payment of all the installments that shall have fallen due up to the time of the decree, and if there be any to become due thereafter to provide that the party may come in on the foot of the decree to obtain satisfaction of the same out of the surplus proceeds, if any there should prove to be. To this practice I can see no well founded objection. It would be useless and occasion unnecessary costs and delay to require the party to commence a new suit or even file a supplemental bill whenever another installment shall fall due; and the defendant in making his defence as to the first installment may if he please make it to any or all of the others or may obtain leave to do so in proper time afterwards.

Digitized by Google

95 *I have examined the cases cited by the counsel on this point but have seen in them no reason to doubt the correctness of my construction of the statute. The cases apparently most resembling this case are those of Kinney v. Hudnut, 2 Scamm. R. 472; Pryor v. White, 16 B. Mon. R. 605; Bartlett v. Kingan, 7 Harris Penn. R. 341; McClallan v. Smith, 11 Cush. R. 238; and Jones v. Alexander, 10 Smedes & Marsh. R. 627. But they were upon statutes differing in some respects from ours, and they do not touch the particular point made here. The case of Kinney v. Hudnut merely decides that under the statute of Illinois, there can be no cause of action until the contract is completed and payment is due. In that case there was no special contract as to the time when the work was to be paid for. In Bartlett v. Kingan, the claim was for work done and bricks furnished on an entire contract for the erection of a house, and it was held that under the Pennsylvania statute, the six months' limitation commenced to run from the completion of the contract, and that the party was in time if his claim was filed within that period after the last quantity of bricks was furnished and laid. Here the demand was for an entire sum due in whole upon the completion of the contract. In Pryor v. White, it appears that under the Kentucky statute the lien is to be enforced by bill filed within one year from the completion of the work, and that the party in that case had taken notes for the work some of which would not fall due until after the year: and it was held that as he had thus by his voluntary act placed himself in a position which rendered him unable to bring a suit to enforce the lien as to them within the year, he was to be regarded as having virtually waived it. Jones v. Alexander was a case under the Mississippi statute which required the suit to be brought within twelve months from the time the money was to be paid in 96 order to secure the *lien. The plaintiff had furnished lumber to the defendant for a house in 1844, the proper time of payment for which was the 1st of January 1845; and in May 1845 he had taken the defendant's note for the amount payable one day after date, but the petition to enforce the lien was not filed until April 1846. It was held that the party could not deviate from the original contract and extend the time when according to it the lien would attach, and as the petition had not been filed within twelve month from the time when payment was to be made, it could not be maintained. In McClallan v. Smith, which was a case under the Massachusetts statute, the contract was to do the work during the season ensuring its date, which was the 30th of May 1845; the contractor did part of the work in 1845 but did not complete it until May 1846, and the property having been conveyed to others, he sought to enforce his lien against them. It was held that although he would have been entitled to compensation for the work he did during the season of 1845, because his failure to complete the building was occasioned not by his default but by that of the owner in furnishing materials, and to have his lien enforced to that extent if he had commenced his suit in due time; yet as he had not filed his petition within six months from the time when the amount due for the work done in 1845 would have been payable according to an equitable adjustment under the contract, his lien was lost and the land discharged of the incumbrance: the court being of opinion that the work done after the season in 1845 was to be regarded as done under a subsequent parol agreement, which did not continue the former lien nor create a new one.

Thus it shall be perceived, as I think, that these cases all differ in their distinctive features from our case and give but little aid in settling the true construction of our act. Nor have I seen any sufficient 97 *reason for applying a different rule to the lien which it creates from that which obtains in other cases of lien for money payable in installments. I think the party could come into equity to enforce the lien as soon as either installment became due, and that when he did so, the court could properly make provision for the others. In this view it is unnecessary to enter into the doctrine of assignments for the purpose of determining how far without such lien, the appellee could have maintained himself in that court upon the footing of his assignment alone.

But the counsel for the appellants goes still further and insists that there never was a lien at all because the contract was not acknowledged by Iaege and admitted to record for the purpose of creating a lien, nor did he know that such would be the effect. Or if it must be held that there is a lien, that it is not assignable and consequently the appellee has no footing in court to enforce it for his benefit.

Nothing is said in the act about the intention with which the contract is admitted to record, nor is any certificate required of the purpose for which it may be acknowledged or recorded. The appellee, it appears, who was to advance the money refused to do so unless the contract was recorded, and to overcome this difficulty, Iaege went to the clerk's office and acknowledged it for that purpose. No fraud or imposition is alleged to have been practiced upon him, and his ignorance of the legal consequences of recording the contract cannot prevent the lien from having effect. Otherwise it would be a fraud upon the appellee who has advanced his money upon the faith of the rights thereby acquired. I think it clear therefore that the party must be deemed when he acknowledged the contract and assented to its being recorded, to have known that it would create a lien or at least 98 that *he was content to abide by all the legal effects and legitimate consequences of its being so recorded.

Digitized by Google

Nor do I think that the position taken by the counsel that such a lien is not assignable can be maintained. By the act of 1819 it is declared that assignments of all bonds, bills and promissory notes and other writings obligatory whatsoever, shall be valid; and that an assignee of any such, may thereupon maintain any action in his own name which the original obligee or payee might have brought. 1 Rev. Code 1819, p. 484, § 5. In the Code of 1849, the declaration that such assignments shall be valid is omitted, and it is simply provided that the assignee of any bond, note, or writing not negotiable, may maintain thereupon any action in his own name which the original obligee or payee might have brought; the revisors, I presume, supposing that to give the action to the assignee in his own name sufficiently affirmed the validity of the assignment without any express declaration to that effect. Code, ch. 144, § 14, p. 583. Now I see no reason why the assignee in this case could not maintain an action at law in his own name upon this contract. It seems to me to be fully embraced by the terms of description both in the Code of 1819 and that of 1849. But if this may be questioned, no reason is shown why it may not be regarded as assignable for value in equity. It is said and authorities have been cited to show, that such a statute is to be construed strictly, and it is contended that it is intended exclusively for the benefit of the builder and material-man. No case has been cited affirming that a contract under such a statute cannot be assigned. There is nothing in public policy or in the language or the policy of our act to forbid it; and if the statute be exclusively for the benefit of the builder and material-man it would certainly impair the value of his lien to declare 99 *it non-assignable. It might prejudice him by depriving him of credit which he might otherwise obtain to prosecute his undertaking, and thus also operate a disadvantage to the owner. Whilst the latter can in no respect be injured by the assignment, because the assignee takes the obligation subject to the same equity to which it was subject in the hands of the obligee and must allow all just discounts not only against himself but against the assignor before notice of the assignment.

I can perceive no reason for distinguishing between contracts of this character and other choses in action ex contractu in respect of the right to assign them. And it cannot be doubted that when the assignee takes the contract, he acquires with it the lien as a necessary incident.

I proceed next to consider the complaint made of the amount for which the decree was rendered.

By the contract the work about the house was to be executed in a workmanlike manner, whilst the proofs in the cause tend strongly to show that it was in fact executed in a very defective and unworkmanlike manner. It is proven that the doors were very much cracked (one of the witnesses says "cracked to pieces") and that they were too small from shrinking, were made of green or wet timber and that numerous holes were found in them; that the staircase had given way and the steps had sunk from a half to three-fourths of an inch below the skirting; that the wash-boards had left the floors or the floors had sunk from half an inch to an inch; that the mantles were badly executed and much shrunken; that the plastering was not well done, that the weather-boarding was very much split and shrunken for want of a sufficient lap and that the piazza in the rear was badly and improperly constructed. All the witnesses examined upon the subject agreed that the materials must have been 100 green *or unseasoned and that the work was not done in a workmanlike manner but was very defective; and they all think it was worth much less than was to be paid for it if executed in the manner required by the contract. It is true it was provided that the work when completed was to be valued by referees and the price was to be fixed by their valuation. But such a valuation would of necessity be based upon the condition in which the work appeared at the time it should be made, and it could not have been intended to deprive the party of the right to compensation for material defects in the work that were not discoverable at the time of the valuation but only became apparent afterwards. And as numerous and marked defects were subsequently disclosed the award of the referees as to the value of the work in its apparent condition at the time should not be held conclusive. It appears that the valuation was made by the referees immediately after the completion of the house in February 1853; the work was then just finished, freshly painted and plastered; every thing appeared right except perhaps the defective manner of the construction of the piazza in the rear, and it was not until after the materials used had become seasoned during the ensuing summer and fall that their defective character was exposed in the numerous flaws and defects which became strikingly apparent in various parts of the building, and thus invited attention as well to the materials themselves as to the manner in which they had been wrought.

If the price of the work had been fixed in the contract and the party had paid it immediately on its completion, or if he had been sued and judgment recovered for the amount before the faulty and defective workmanship had discovered itself, it will scarcely be said that he would have been thereby deprived of the benefit of his contract for work done in a workmanlike 101 *manner, and of compensation for material defects which were subsequently disclosed. Nor can I think that the measurement and valuation made by the referees should under the circumstances of this case, have any greater effect.

The case of Kidwell v. The Balt. & Ohio R. R. Co., 11 Gratt. 676, has been cited by the counsel for the appellee upon this point; but it will be found I think upon examination to decide nothing incompatible with the conclusion I have arrived at in this case. That was a bill filed to obtain compensation for extra work and deficiencies in estimates of the value of work done, upon certain contracts for the construction of bridges on the line of the company's road. These contracts provided for monthly estimates to be made of the quantity, character and value of the work by an engineer designated, and when the work should be fully completed and accepted by the engineer, for a final estimate of the same, when the balance appearing to be due was to be paid to the contractor upon his executing a release of all demands against the company. There was a further provision that these estimates should be conclusive between the parties unless altered by the principal engineer to whom power was reserved to review the same and make alterations if he should choose to exercise it. The complaint on this branch of the case was that the estimates had all been made upon an improper and erroneous construction of the contracts, to the great prejudice of the contractor, and that he should not be bound by them on that account and also because of fraud and mistake imputed to the officers in effecting the contracts and making the estimates. The court held that neither fraud nor a mistake was made out in proof, and that in the absence of both, the final estimate of the engineer was conclusive between the parties. It was also held that whatever might be the true construc-102 tion *of the contracts yet as the estimates had been made upon a particular construction of which the contractor was fully informed at the time and had received the monthly estimates based upon it without objection, he must be held to have acquiesced in that construction and to be bound by it; and that if he might have refused to abide by the final estimate, yet having made no objection to the engineer's proceeding to make it, and having attended upon him for that purpose and submitted his charges for the work done, he was concluded by the engineer's action. In this case the very matters sought to be controverted had been formally and directly submitted to and adjudicated by the referee, all the elements which should enter into his estimate were perfectly known at the time and the contractor by his acts and declarations, had acquiesced in the principles upon which he had attained his results. I can perceive nothing in this decision which touches the particular question in the case in judgment.

It is contended on behalf of the Building fund company that they were entitled to priority of payment out of the proceeds of the sale of the property, both as to the one hundred and twenty dollars advanced to Iaege before the building contract was recorded, and the four hundred and sixty-one dollars advanced and paid to the appellee afterwards; and on behalf of both the appellants it is insisted that the Circuit court should have so adjudicated before it directed a sale of the property.

The counsel for the appellee does not contest the priority claimed for the one hundred and twenty dollars, and he contends that upon the face of the commissioner's report and the decree of which it is the basis, this is impliedly conceded and should be regarded as sufficiently recognized: but he does contest the priority claimed as to the four hundred and sixty-one dollars paid after the building contract was recorded, 103 *and he argues that as the money arising from that sale was not disposed of by the decree but directed to be deposited in bank to the credit of the cause, the court could afterwards decide upon the priorities and thus no one would be prejudiced.

It is a well settled rule that where there are conflicting claims to priority of payment out of the proceeds of land about to be sold to satisfy the liens upon it, the court in order to prevent the danger of sacrificing the property by discouraging the creditors from bidding as they probably might if their right to satisfaction of their debts and the order in which they were to be paid out of the property, were previously ascertained, should declare the order of payment before it decrees the sale to be made. Cole's adm'r v. McRae, 6 Rand. 644; Buchanan v. Clark, &c., 10 Gratt. 164. It is therefore not sufficient that the court should direct the fund to be paid into court and should declare the priorities afterwards. The purpose for which it is done requires that it should precede the sale.

I do not see any thing in the report of the commissioner or the decree of the court confirming it which amounts to a declaration or recognition of the priority of the Building fund company even as to the one hundred and twenty dollars. The report simply states the facts, and the decree, after confirming the report, directs that if the balance stated to be due the appellee be not paid within ninety days with interest and costs, the property should be sold and the proceeds after paying the costs and expenses of the sale, paid into bank to the credit of the cause. Nothing is said in it in relation to either claim of the Building fund company, and the failure to adjudicate as to the order of payment is, I think, a material error in the decree.

As to the Building fund company's right to priority as to the one hundred and

Digitized by Google

104 twenty dollars, no objection *is made, nor can its right to such priority as to the four hundred and sixty-one dollars, be successfully contested. When the company advanced the one hundred and twenty dollars to Iaege for and on account of the redemption of a share held by him in the stock of the company, they took from him a deed of trust upon the property to secure the payment of that sum as well as of any other sum or sums they might thereafter advance on account of the redemption of other shares. This arrangement was fully within the terms of the charter and the by-laws of the company, and was the mode in which the main object of the association was carried into effect, and it was well known to Martin, Warthen and the appellee at the time the contract for building the house was executed and when the same was assigned to the appellee. The deed of trust was duly admitted to record before the contract for building was entered into, and when it was made and assigned to the appellee, it was perfectly well known to all these parties that the principal part of the funds to be paid for the work was to come from the Building fund company and to be advanced by it on the security of the deed of trust which they had taken; and accordingly they required Iaege by the contract to give good security for the excess of the cost of the building above the five hundred dollars expected from the company. And when the money was paid to the appellee, he knew that it was paid by the company on the security of the deed of trust, and with the understanding on their part that they were to be indemnified in preference to any other claimant, and it was accepted and received by him in payment for materials furnished and work done upon the very property without objection and without protest as to the justness of the expectation with which it was paid. To permit the appellee now to repudiate his 105 *recognition of the priority of the company's claim would operate a virtual fraud upon them and would be most unjust and inequitable.

I think therefore the Building fund company is entitled to priority in payment of the proceeds of the property as well of the four hundred and sixty-one dollars advanced in redemption of stock as of the one hundred and twenty dollars advanced in that way at the time the deed of trust was executed.

There are two other points which perhaps should be briefly noticed.

An exception was taken to the paper offered as evidence of the measurement and valuation of the work by the referees because it purported to be a copy and not the original. This exception is without date and it does not appear when it was in fact taken. But the paper was filed as an exhibit with the bill and although the answers are very full and elaborate no objection is taken to the paper on that account nor is any call made in them for the original. The paper was also received by the commissioner as evidence, there was no call made for the production of the original before him nor does he report that any objection was made to the paper because it was but a copy. The exception therefore either came too late or must be regarded as having been waived by the parties, and it was properly disregarded by the Circuit court.

The remaining point relates to the contingent dower interest of the wife of the appellant Iaege in the property. It is said that this was not affected by the mechanic's lien, and that the court therefore should not have sold the entire estate, but only the interest of Iaege. That the mechanic's lien does not override the dower interest of the wife is very clear, and if any authority to the point were needed, it would be found in Shaeffer v. Weed, 3 Gilm. 511. But Mrs. Iaege had united with her husband in 106 the deed of trust for the *benefit of the Building fund company, and if a sale takes place it must be to raise the amount due the company as well as that due to the appellee. It would be proper therefore that the property should be sold out and out, but as the wife has a contingent dower interest in the equity of redemption and being a party to the cause, is to be bound by the decree, the court should make a proper provision to compensate that interest out of the surplus proceeds of sale, if any, after satisfying the amounts due the Building fund company before any part of the same shall be paid over to the appellee.

I am of opinion to reverse the decree and remand the cause for further proceedings.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Lee, J.

The decree was as follows:

The court is of opinion that the Circuit court did not err in maintaining the jurisdiction of the court of equity to grant the relief prayed for by the bill, nor in disregarding the exception to the copy of the measurement and valuation of the referees filed as an exhibit with the bill, nor in holding the appellee entitled to a decree for all of the installments of the price of the work although part thereof only became due pending the cause. But the court is of opinion that before decreeing a sale of the property, the Circuit court should have directed an enquiry by a commissioner into the alleged defects in the work done in the execution of said contract which were disclosed and became apparent after the valuation made by the referees, and should have ascertained what would be a just compensation to the appellant Iaege for such defects, and should have caused the same when so ascertained to be accounted for out of the balance due the appellee if sufficient to satisfy the same, before any amount should be decreed to him on said contract.

107 *And the court is further of opinion that before decreeing a sale of the property, the Circuit court should have adjudicated the priority of payment out of the proceeds thereof as between the appellee and the Building fund company, and should have declared the said company entitled to such priority both as to the one hundred dollars balance of what was paid before, as well as to the four hundred and sixty-one dollars paid after the said building contract was admitted to record.

And the court is further of opinion that it was proper the said property should have been decreed to be sold out and out, but that inasmuch as the wife of the said Iaege is entitled to a dower interest in the equity of redemption after satisfying the purposes of the deed of trust, and as she is a party to the cause the court should make a suitable provision for the preservation of such dower interest out of the surplus proceeds of sale after satisfying the demands of the Building fund company, before any part thereof should be paid over to the appellee.

Wherefore the court is of opinion that there is error in said decree.

Therefore reversed with costs and remanded with instructions further to proceed in the same according to the principles hereinbefore declared.

Decree reversed.

---

108 *Clegg v. Lemessurier.

April Term, 1859, Richmond.

1. Sealed Instruments—Scrolls—Failure to Recognize in Body of Instrument—Effect.—A writing for a payment of money or other purpose, which is not required to be by deed, having a scroll at the foot thereof with the word "seal" written therein, but which is not recognized in the body of the instrument as a seal, is not a sealed instrument.

2. Same—Same—Same—Evidence.—Evidence aliunde is not admissible to prove that a scroll at the foot of a writing was intended as a seal.

This was an action of debt in the Circuit court of Petersburg, brought by Nathaniel Clegg against Peter Lemessurier. The first count was in the usual form upon two writings obligatory, of which profert was made. The second count stated that the defendant, by his certain writing subscribed by him, and to which he affixed a scroll by way of seal, of which profert was also made, promised, &c. The defendant craved oyer of the writings, and demurred to each count; and the court sustained the demurrer.

The first paper declared on was as follows:

Pittsboro' Jan'y 1st, 1835.

One day after date, I promise to pay to Nath'l Clegg or order, the sum of two hundred and seventy-seven dollars fifty-one cents. Valued received in lumber.

P. Lemessurier. [Seal.]

The second paper was substantially like the foregoing, and was for one hundred dollars.

There having been a judgment for the defendant, the plaintiff applied to this court for a supersedeas; which was allowed.

Joynes, for the appellant, reviewed
109 the authorities, *English and Amer-

---

*Sealed Instruments—Scrolls—Failure to Recognize in Body of Instrument—Effect.—The principal case is authority for the proposition that, a writing for the payment of money or other purpose, which is not required to be by deed, having a scroll at the foot thereof with the word "seal" written therein, but which is not recognized in the body of the instrument as a seal, is not a sealed instrument and the fact that it was intended as a seal cannot be proved by evidence aliunde.

The following cases hold in accord with the principal case that, a scroll affixed by way of seal must be recognized in the body of the instrument: Baird v. Blaigrove, 1 Wash. 170; Austin v. Whitlock, 1 Munf. 487; Anderson v. Bullock, 4 Munf. 442; Jenkins v. Hurt, 2 Rand. 446; Peasley v. Boatwright, 2 Leigh 195; Turberville v. Bernard, 7 Leigh 302, and note; Cromwell v. Tate, 7 Leigh 301; Gover v. Chamberlain, 83 Va. 286, 5 S. E. Rep. 174; Thomas v. Linn, 40 W. Va. 127, 20 S. E. Rep. 880; Keller v. McHuffman, 15 W. Va. 78, 79, the last two citing the principal case.

In Bradley Salt Co. v. Norfolk Importing, etc., Co., 95 Va. 461, 28 S. E. Rep. 567, citing the principal case, it is held that an actual seal affixed to a contract for the sale of personal property must be recognized in the body of the contract in order to make it a sealed instrument.

But in those cases required by law to be under seal, as conveyances, etc., it may perhaps suffice to have a solemn recognition of the scroll as a seal at the time that the instrument is acknowledged or proved for registry but extrinsic evidence is in no case otherwise admissible to prove that a scroll at the foot of the writing was intended as a seal. 3 Min. Inst. (3rd Ed.) 345; 2 Min. Inst. (4th Ed.) 835; Parks v. Hewlett, 9 Leigh 511; Ashwell v. Ayres, 4 Gratt. 24 Clegg v. Lemessurier, 15 Gratt. 108.

See also, for the first part of the above proposition Cosner v. McCrum, 40 W. Va. 346, 21 S. E. Rep. 741, citing the principal case.

See Reusens v. Lawson, 91 Va. 226, 21 S. E. Rep. 347, where the copy of a paper purporting to be a deed of conveyance of real estate is offered in evidence as a deed, in an action of ejectment and the copy does not disclose anything in the way of scroll or device to show that the original was sealed, it was held, that the fact as to whether the original was a sealed instrument was under the circumstances a question of fact for the jury.

On the question of seals, see 1 Va. Law Reg. 518, 622, 3 Va. Law Reg. 282.

In Freeman v. Eacho, 79 Va. 45, trust property, a house and lot, was settled upon a married woman as her separate estate free from the liabilities of her husband, with power, by a writing under her hand and seal, attested by two witnesses, to direct the trustee to sell or encumber it. But in neither case was the writing under seal by which she directed the trustee to execute the two trust deeds by which the notes were secured. In each case the scroll was annexed to the signatures, but was not recognized as a seal in the body of the instrument. It was manifest, however, from all the surrounding circumstances that she intended to execute the power and that the omission to recognize the scroll in the body of the instrument was the result of mere inadvertence or mistake. The court held, citing Clegg v. Lemessurier, 15 Gratt. 108, that the instrument was not sealed but that it was a case of a defective execution of a power which a court of equity would remedy. See, in accord, Pollock v. Glassell, 2 Gratt. 439.

Digitized by Google

ican, including our own; and deduced the following conclusions:

1st. That though previous to 28 Henry 8, it was necessary to recognize the seal in the body of the instrument, to constitute the writing a deed or bond, yet from that time to the present day it has been held that at the common law, such recognition of the seal was not necessary. He referred to Dyer's R. 196; Goddard's Case, 2 Coke's R. 5; 4 Comyn's Dig. Fait. 2 A; Wentworth's Executors 239; 1 Sheph. Touch. 55, 30 Law Libr.; Coke Litt. 7 a; 2 Thomas' Coke 243, marg.; 5 Bac. Abr. Obligation, C; Grellier v. Neale, Peake's Cas. 146; Fasset v. Brown, Id. 23; Lesher v. Levan, 2 Dall. R. 96; per Grant, M. R., in Burrowes v. Lock, 10 Ves. R. 473; Ball v. Taylor, 1 Car. & Payne R. 417, 11 Eng. C. L. R. 438; Ingram v. Hall, 1 Hayw. R. 193, and books cited there; 1 Phillips' Evi. 474; Tucker, P., in Cromwell v. Tate, 7 Leigh 301; Tucker and Parker, Js., in Parks v. Hewlett, 9 Leigh 511; Baldwin, J., in Pollock v. Glassell, 2 Gratt. 439.

2d. That a scroll was as valid as a seal as wax, if intended as such, independent of the statute. Jones v. Logwood, 1 Wash. 42; Buckner v. Mackay, 2 Leigh 488; Ingram v. Hall, 1 Hayw. R. 193; Relph v. Gist, 4 McCord's R. 267; McDill v. McDill, 1 Dall. R. 63; Long v. Ramsay, 1 Serg. & Rawle R. 72.

3d. That in none of the Virginia cases had the question come up on demurrer; or has the court rejected evidence tendered for the purpose of proving aliunde that a scroll was affixed by way of seal; and in no case has it been declared to be inadmissible. He referred to and analyzed the cases. Baird v. Blaigrove, 1 Wash. 170; Austin's adm'x v. Whitlock's ex'or, 1 Munf. 487; Anderson v. Bullock, 4 Munf. 442; Jenkins v. Hurt's comm'rs, 2 Rand. 446; Peasley v. Boatwright, 2 Leigh 195; Cromwell v. Tate, 7 Leigh 301. And he insisted that such evidence was clearly admissible, according 110 *to the cases of Parks v. Hewlett, 9 Leigh 511; Pollock v. Glassell, 2 Gratt. 439; and Ashwell v. Ayres, 4 Gratt. 283.

4th. That in eleven of the states of the Union, the affixing of a scroll is of itself sufficient evidence of its being intended as a seal; or other evidence either in the instrument or aliunde, is admissible to prove the intention and constitute it a sealed instrument. Ingram v. Hall, 1 Hayw. R. 193; Yarborough v. Monday, 2 Dev. R. 493, 3 Id. 420; Trasher v. Everhart, 3 Gill & John. R. 234; Relph v. Gist, 4 McCord's R. 267; Scruggs v. Brackin, 4 Yerg. R. 528; Bertrand v. Byrd, 4 Pike's R. 195; McRaven v. McGuire, 9 Smedes & Marsh. R. 34; English v. Helms, 4 Texas R. 228; Whitley v. Davis, 1 Swan's R. 333; Williams v. Greer, 12 Georgia R. 459; Hubbard v. Beckwith, 1 Bibb's R. 492; Taylor v. Glazer, 2 Serg. & Rawle R. 502; Vanblaricum v. Yeo, 1 Blackf. R. 50; Jeffery v. Underwood, 1 Pike's R. 108.

J. Alfred Jones, for the appellee, referred to the cases decided in this court, especially Cromwell v. Tate, 7 Leigh 301. He distinguished the cases of instruments for the payment of money, and cases which from their subject matter could only be executed by deeds duly recorded; and he insisted that the decisions upon the first class of instruments were unanimous, not only that the scroll was insufficient of itself to constitute the writing a sealed instrument, but also that proof aliunde to show the intention with which the scroll was annexed was inadmissible: And that he insisted was the reason why no cases can be found in Virginia in which such evidence was offered.

He insisted further, that the cases in Virginia which it is supposed have shaken the rule so long established, were cases of deeds where deeds were necessary to effect the object in view, and were in fact re-111 corded. *They were Parks v. Hewlett, 9 Leigh 511; Pollock v. Glassell, 2 Gratt. 439; Ashwell v. Ayres, 4 Gratt. 283. That it was impossible to suppose that the judges who had so lately decided Cromwell v. Tate, intended to reverse that decision in Parks v. Hewlett, without giving the slightest intimation of their change of opinion; and in fact, Parker, J., says in his opinion in the last named case, that both Cabell and Carr stated there was no conflict between the cases. And in Pollock v. Glassell, Judge Baldwin is careful to distinguish between the two classes of instruments, and the law as applicable to each. And if Judge Tucker, in Cromwell v. Tate, thought the principle of stare decisis forbade the change of the rule at that time, with how much more force might he invoke the application of that principle, at this day, with the added weight of authority which that case gives to the rule.

LEE, J. The action in this case is founded upon a promise in writing simply for the payment of money. The writing is signed with the name of the maker at the end of which is a pair of brackets by way of scroll with the word "seal" written within them. The declaration consists of two counts, the first of which alleges a sealed instrument in the usual form, and the second avers that the paper writing was subscribed by the defendant and a scroll affixed by him thereto by way of seal. Profert was made in both counts, and the defendant having craved oyer, demurred to each count. The court sustained the demurrer to both and rendered final judgment for the defendant, and the case has been brought to this court by a supersedeas.

Two questions are raised upon these demurrers:

1. Is the scroll appearing affixed to the name of the maker of the instrument with the word "seal" written within it, such a recognition or expression that it
112 *was affixed by way of seal as will make the writing a sealed instrument?

2. Could the plaintiff be permitted to prove by evidence aliunde that the maker of the writing intended to adopt the scroll as a seal and thus make it a sealed instrument?

Digitized by Google

Whatever may be the decisions in some of the other states of the Union, I think scarce any counsel could be found in Virginia who speaking of the law at this day as settled in this state would answer the first of these questions in the affirmative. The contrary has been the doctrine universally accepted by the profession and is I think fully sustained by the decisions of this court. I refer to Baird v. Blaigrove's ex'or, 1 Wash. 170; Austin's adm'x v. Whitlock's ex'ors, 1 Munf. 487; Anderson v. Bullock, &c., 4 Munf. 442; Jenkins v. Hurt's commissioners, 2 Rand. 446; Peasley v. Boatwright, 2 Leigh 195; Turberville v. Bernard, 7 Leigh 302, n.; Cromwell v. Tate's ex'or, 7 Leigh 301. In all of these cases except the two first, it distinctly appears from the reports that scrolls were affixed to the instruments in question with the word "seal" or its equivalent written within each. The report of the two cases first named does not show certainly that the word "seal" or any equivalent was written within the scrolls; but I have taken occasion to examine the original records among the archives of this court and found that in Baird v. Blaigrove's ex'or, the word "seal" is written within each of the scrolls, and in Austin's adm'x v. Whitlock's ex'ors, the initials "L. S." are substituted for the word "seal" within the scroll, as in Anderson v. Bullock, importing of course exactly the same thing. I regard this therefore as no longer a question open to discussion in this state, and I will not stop to trace the rule up to its source or attempt now to vindicate its propriety and correctness.

113 *The remaining question is one more fairly perhaps the subject of discussion although I think in respect to an instrument like that in this case there would have been as little room for debate as upon the first question but for certain recent decisions to which I will presently refer more particularly and the remarks of some of the judges in delivering their opinions. For I think it impossible to read the cases above cited without seeing that the decision was rested upon the necessity of the recognition of the scroll in some form on the face of the instrument. In Baird v. Blaigrove's ex'or, Judge Pendleton speaking for the court says, "it is in no part of the instrument expressed to be sealed—the attestation is the same as in common simple contracts not under seal, nor does the declaration speak of it as being of that dignity—it is true there are scrolls annexed but it may nevertheless remain a matter of doubt whether they are to be considered as the seals of the parties." He does not however intimate that such doubt might be resolved by extrinsic evidence. In Austin's adm'x v. Whitlock's ex'ors, the paper was no where stated in its body, to have been sealed, it was attested in the manner appropriate to simple contracts and a consideration was stated in the writing. Held, that it did not appear upon its face to be a sealed instrument but rather the contrary. Judge Tucker says expressly that the omission of the word "seal" in the clause of attestation, precluded, in his opinion, all evidence dehors the instrument of the execution of it in any other manner than was expressed in the body of the instrument. And although Judge Roane does not say in terms that evidence dehors would not be admissible in such a case, yet in what he does say, I think he is plainly looking to the face of the writing itself for the circumstances which are to exalt the instrument into a specialty. In Anderson v. Bullock, &c., the circumstances which were regarded 114 as *evincing the character of the writing were such as appeared on its face, and while it is not said that evidence dehors was inadmissible only such as was intrinsic was alluded to as sufficing to constitute the writing a sealed instrument. In Jenkins v. Hurt's comm'rs, Judge Green speaking for the court, said that the paper in question was a simple contract and that the declaration should have claimed according to the legal effect of the contract. Manifestly, he regarded the character of the instrument as a question of law and considered that its legal effect was to be deduced from what appeared on its face. He could not have thought that it was a question of fact and intention to be left to a jury upon the evidence furnished by the face of the instrument and such evidence aliunde as might be offered. In Peasley v. Boatwright and Turberville v. Bernard, the question as to the character of the instrument, was plainly considered as a question of law to be determined by the court upon what appeared on its face. And in Cromwell v. Tate's ex'or the question was distinctly presented whether the scroll must be recognized as a seal in the body of the instrument in order to constitute it a deed. Judge Tucker delivering the unanimous opinion of the court, held that it was the settled law of Virginia that such recognition was necessary, and he alludes to the mischiefs that might be expected to ensue if the course of the court should be reversed and such recognition should be dispensed with. And although he thought the common law rule was different, yet he declared that he did not think it desirable to restore it and he referred to the abuses which the omission of the clause in cujus rei testimonium might introduce. He said that sealing was a part of the contract itself and that it was contrary to the analogies and principles of the law that an essential term or stipulation of a written contract should be made to depend wholly upon testimony dehors the instrument.

115 *After such a line of decisions ending in one so well considered and so direct to the point and in which all the judges of the court concurred, it might well be supposed that this question also was put to rest. But it is supposed that the doctrine of these cases, if it established the necessity of a recognition of the scroll in the body of the instrument, has been wholly repudiated and overthrown by more recent cases; and the counsel refers to Parks v. Hewlett, 9 Leigh 511; Pollock v. Glassell, 2 Gratt. 439; and Ashwell v. Ayres, 4 Gratt. 283, as conclusively establishing that the sealing may be proved by evidence aliunde.

All of these cases may I think be readily distinguished from those we have been considering, however broad the language of some of the judges whose opinions are given may appear to be, and one may well concur in the result of each of those cases although he might not in all the views taken by the judges. In Parks v. Hewlett, the instrument in question from its very character was intended to be a deed because it was intended to emancipate a slave which could only be effected by deed; and in Ashwell v. Ayres the instrument was intended to be a conveyance of lands (in fee simple it may be inferred) which could only be by deed, and the former was wholly inoperative, and the latter, inoperative as to creditors and purchasers, until recorded upon proof or acknowledgment as the act requires. In the former case, the attestation clause expressed that it was signed, sealed and acknowledged in presence of the witnesses, and it was proved by two witnesses in court and admitted to record. In the latter, the instrument was acknowledged by the grantor and admitted to record; and it was doing no violence to the spirit or terms of the rule to say that in these cases, the recognition of the seal did sufficiently appear on the face of the instrument. See opinion of Judge Allen (speaking for 116 the court) in *Ashwell v. Ayres, 4 Gratt. 283. And as recording was essential to perfect the instruments for the purposes intended, it might be said without impropriety that this was part and parcel of the perfect deed and sufficiently manifested the recognition of the writing as a sealed instrument. The distinction then between instruments of this character which can only be effectual as deeds and a promise in writing simply for the payment of money which might be indifferently an obligation under seal or a promissory note, and as to which neither acknowledgment before witnesses or in court nor recording, was necessary, must be apparent.

It is true that Judge Parker in his opinion in Parks v. Hewlett seems strongly inclined to the views which he must have held when he decided the case of Cromwell v. Tate which was afterwards reversed and he uses various expressions which might embrace promissory notes as well as such instruments as that he was then considering; and he refers to the fact that in none of the previous cases relied on, was there any proof that the instrument had been actually sealed or scrolls annexed by way of seals. But it appears that he had not seen the opinion in the case of Cromwell v. Tate in which all the judges had concurred, and it is impossible to suppose that the same judges who had so recently decided that case intended to disturb the principles on which it rested as to cases of that kind. No allusion whatever is made by any judge who delivered an opinion to any change of views in any respect, and it is plain they regarded the case they were considering as belonging to a distinct class and indeed we are informed by Judge Parker that he had been assured by the judges who were present when Cromwell v. Tate was decided that there was nothing in their opinions affecting the question in the case of Parks v. Hewlett. Judge Brockenbrough and Judge Cabell considered the case as 117 clearly distinguishable *from all the previous cases, and Tucker, president, who had delivered the opinion of the court in Cromwell v. Tate, contented himself with concurring in the result to which Judge Parker had come, for the reason, no doubt that there were some views presented in Judge Parker's opinion which to some extent conflicted with the opinion in Cromwell v. Tate which had not been seen by Judge Parker when Parks v. Hewlett was decided.

Nor is the case of Pollock v. Glassell more difficult to be distinguished from cases like the present. That was the case of a testamentary paper executed by a wife under a power given her to dispose of the settled estate by gift or devise, under her hand and seal, attested by two or more witnesses. There was a scroll affixed to the name of the testatrix with the word "seal" written within it, though it was not recognized as a seal either in the body of the instrument or the clause of attestation. The court however distinguished between such an instrument and one purporting to be a contract. Judge Baldwin said that the question was not whether the instrument was "a sealed instrument with a view to its legal effects and consequences as such. The law does not require a will to be sealed, and it has precisely the same force and effect without as with a seal. The true question is whether in conformity with the power of appointment the testatrix did affix a seal to the paper, and that is a question of evidence." The judge continued "whether a paper be in law a sealed instrument or not, is a question applicable only to contracts. If it has a seal then it is a deed or specialty; if not, it is a simple contract only, and that is a question of law to be determined by inspection of the instrument." And a little further on he says "in contracts the presence or want of a seal makes a wide difference in the general character of the instrument and its legal effects and consequences."
118 * * * * * "But in a testamentary paper it has no bearing whatever upon the legal character or operation of the instrument: no solemnity of sealing could make it a specialty and the act of sealing can amount to nothing more than the performance of a condition."

I think it must be perceived upon an examination of the opinion that Judge Baldwin was distinguishing between a case in which the question was as to the true character of the instrument and its legal effects and consequences, and that in which the act of sealing gave no new or different character to the instrument but amounted only to the performance of a condition, and the question therefore was one of evidence only. In the former case, he says, it is a question of law to be determined by inspection of the instrument and its distinctive character is to be determined by its intrinsic evidence; and he states that in such cases (that is of contracts) the decisions of this court had required that the substitution of a scroll for a seal should be recognized upon the face of the instrument. In the latter he thought evidence aliunde might be admitted, because whilst there were strong considerations of policy and convenience to recommend the exclusion of such evidence as a general rule in actions founded upon contract, there could be none applicable to a case like that then before the court. It is true according to the report of the case, the judge adds "and in no case has it yet been held that in the absence of such recognition evidence is inadmissible to prove that in fact the scroll was affixed to the instrument with intent that it should stand in place of a seal;" but I think either the word "inadmissible" was inadvertently written for "admissible," or that what was said was intended to apply only to cases like that then before the court in which the question was one of evidence as he had before explained and which was 119 not *within the decisions to which he had referred requiring the recognition to appear on the face of the instrument and which he thought recommended by strong considerations of policy and convenience. Those decisions necessarily or by the strongest implication, excluded all evidence dehors the instrument, and to suppose that he meant to affirm that extrinsic evidence had never been held inadmissible in cases like those referred to, would be, it seems to me, to impute to that eminent judge and accurate thinker, a virtual contradiction of the whole scope of his previous remarks.

Judge Baldwin in this opinion also distinguishes between cases like that of Parks v. Hewlett and Ashwell v. Ayres (decided some time afterwards) and the cases to which the decisions he had alluded to should apply; but there is nothing in the opinion when fairly construed and nothing in the case or in that of Parks v. Hewlett or that of Ashwell v. Ayres, which overthrows or in any material respect disturbs the rule established by the previous decisions of this court: and that rule I think may be thus stated; that in cases of contracts in writing like that in the present case which might have been intended to be, indifferently, simple contracts or sealed instruments and in which the question is as to the character of the instrument and its legal effects and consequences, the fact that a scroll may be affixed to the name of the maker with or without the word "seal" written within is not of itself such a recognition of the scroll for a seal as will make the writing a sealed instrument; and that evidence dehors the paper cannot be admitted for the purpose of showing that it was in fact intended to be such an instrument.

That many of our sister states have adopted a different rule, furnishes no sufficient reason in my judgment why we should reverse our course of decisions or change the rule they have prescribed. Con-
120 formity *of decisions in the different states of this Union is, doubtless, desirable and for its sake some concession might be made where no public inconvenience may be involved; but I think the mischiefs that would ensue from reversing our course (some of which are pointed out by Judge Tucker in Cromwell v. Tate) might be very extensive and serious, and would I am confident, be of far greater moment than the casual instances of hardship occurring in individual cases (such as those of which the counsel cites the present case as an illustration) which would be occasioned by our adhering to it. Let us then not change our rule. Jus nostrum magis quam alienum, servemus.

But if the matter were of first impression and free choice were offered between our rule and that adopted in the sister states, for myself, I will say that I am by no means prepared to give the preference to the latter. At this day the chief if not the only practical purpose that would be accomplished by adopting it would be to change the period of the bar of the statute of limitations from five years to twenty, by opening the door to parol testimony of the acts and declarations of the maker of the instrument at the time of executing it and afterwards, and thus trusting the proof of so very important a part of a written contract as sealing, in the language of Lord Coke "to the uncertain testimony of slippery memory." Countess of Rutland's Case, 5 Rep. 25. And very much the same policy which led to the passage of Lord Tenterden's act, and to its adoption into our Code, would prompt to a preference of the rule which would close the door to evidence of that character. The policy of that act was to prevent perjuries by requiring the promise that should revive a debt barred by the statute of limitations, to be in writing and signed by the party to be charged thereby; and the same policy would also be promoted by forbidding that so material an element of a con-121 tract as *sealing which is to have the effect of removing the bar of the statute appearing from the face of the paper, should be proven at perhaps a distant day, out of the mouths of witnesses, and requiring that it should be shown by the paper itself.

I have only to add in conclusion that whether the objection is made on oyer and demurrer or on motion to exclude the paper at the trial, the principle as it seems to me is precisely the same. The counsel has argued that the present case differs from all that have preceded it in the fact that the questions are presented on demurrer; but I do not perceive how their solution is in any manner affected by the manner in which they are raised.

Digitized by Google

I think the Circuit court committed no error in sustaining the demurrers and am of opinion to affirm the judgment.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Lee, J.

Judgment affirmed.

---

122 *Washington and New Orleans Telegraph Co. v. Hobson & Son.

April Term, 1859, Richmond.

(Absent ROBERTSON, J.*)

1. Telegraph Companies—Line Extending through Several States—Objection to Jurisdiction of State Court—How Taken.—In an action against a telegraph company, the line of which extends through several states, though it appears that some of the defendants live out of the state, this is not cause for arresting the judgment against the company: If it is good ground for objection to the jurisdiction of the state court, it must be taken by plea in abatement before the defendants plead in bar. Code, ch. 171, § 19, p. 648.†

2. Appellate Practice—Bills of Exception—Verdict Contrary to Evidence—Failure to State Facts or Evidence—Effect.‡—On an exception to an opinion of the court overruling a motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, if the exception states neither the facts proved nor the evidence introduced on the trial, nor refers to another bill of exceptions in which all the facts or evidence given on the trial is shown to be stated, the appellate court cannot review the judgment of the court below.

3. Same—Same—Time of Taking Exceptions—Waiver.§—It must appear from the record that a point decided by the court has been saved before the jury retires; though the exception may be pre-

*The case was argued before his election.

†Code, ch. 171, § 19, p. 648: "Where the declaration or bill shows on its face proper matter for the jurisdiction of the court, no exception for want of such jurisdiction shall be allowed, unless it be taken by plea in abatement, and the plea shall not be received after the defendant has demurred, pleaded in bar, or answered to the declaration or bill, nor after a rule to plead, or a conditional judgment or decree nisi."

‡Appellate Practice—Bills of Exception—Verdict Contrary to Evidence—Failure to Certify Facts or Evidence—Effect.—For the proposition that, on an exception to an opinion of the court overruling a motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, if the exception states neither the facts proved nor the evidence introduced on the trial nor refers to another bill of exceptions in which all the facts or evidence given on the trial is shown to be stated, the appellate court cannot review the judgment of the court below, the principal case is cited and followed in the following cases: Mann v. Bryant, 12 W. Va. 525; Adams v. Hays, 86 Va. 157, 9 S. E. Rep. 1019. See, in accord, Hunter v. Stewart, 23 W. Va. 549; McArter v. Grigsby, 84 Va. 159, 4 S. E. Rep. 369; Smith v. Walker, 1 Call 28; Edgell v. Conaway, 24 W. Va. 747; Willard v. Overseers, 9 Gratt. 139; Shrewsbury v. Miller, 10 W. Va. 115.

In McVeigh v. Allen, 29 Gratt. 594, citing the principal case, it is held that, where it does not appear that all the evidence given on the issue joined is stated in the bill of exceptions, an instruction to the jury that if they believe certain facts stated they must find for the plaintiff, the appellate court must reverse the judgment, on the ground that the facts are too imperfectly stated to enable the court to decide whether or not the instruction is correct.

§Same—Same—Time of Taking Exceptions—Waiver.—It must appear from the record that the point decided by the court had been saved before the jury retired; though the exception may be prepared, and may be signed by the court, either during the trial or after it is ended, during the same term. If this appears from the whole record, it is sufficient, though it is not expressly stated in the bill of exceptions; but if it does not so appear from the record, the appellate court cannot review the judgment of the court below upon the point. For the above proposition, the principal case is cited and followed in the following cases: Welty v. Campbell, 37 W. Va. 801, 803, 17 S. E. Rep. 314; Gilmer v. Sydenstricker, 42 W. Va. 54, 24 S. E. Rep. 567; Wustland v. Potterfield, 9 W. Va. 441; Cunningham v. Porterfield, 2 W. Va. 448; Wickes v. B. & O. R. Co., 14 W. Va. 165, 171; Danks v. Rodeheaver, 26 W. Va. 293; Core v. Marple, 24 W. Va. 355; Fawcett v. R. Co., 24 W. Va. 761; Hudgins v. Simon, 94 Va. 662, 27 S. E. Rep. 606; N. & W. R. Co. v. Anderson, 90 Va. 10, 17 S. E. Rep. 757; Town of Suffolk v. Parker, 79 Va. 665; Powell v. Tarry, 77 Va. 259, 261; Page v. Clopton, 30 Gratt. 429, and note; Bank v. Waddill, 31 Gratt. 477, and note; Peery v. Peery, 26 Gratt. 324, and note.

In Nadenbousch v. Sharer, 2 W. Va. 295, the principal case is cited and the rule as to the time of taking the exceptions is approved, but the case at bar seems to go further and hold that, where the exception is to the opinion of the court expressed in its charge to the jury after the evidence is closed, such exception may be taken at any time before the verdict is announced. Also, in Neill v. Rogers Bros. Produce Co., 38 W. Va. 228, 18 S. E. Rep. 563, the principal case upon the same point is approved but this case holds that, where the trial judge, during the progress thereof, in overruling objections to the admission of testimony, expresses an opinion as to the material facts in issue, in the presence and hearing of the jury, so prejudicial that the error cannot be cured otherwise than by granting the party injured thereby a new trial, in case the verdict is against him, notwithstanding such opinion was not objected to at the time it was so expressed, it may be taken advantage of on the hearing of a motion for a new trial, and if the motion is overruled, and proper exceptions taken, the judgment will be reversed, and a new trial awarded, for such error alone. See foot-note to Bull v. Com., 14 Gratt. 613.

In Va. Dev. Co. v. Rich Patch Iron Co., 98 Va. 704, 37 S. E. Rep. 280, it is held that after final judgment, and the adjournment of the term, the judge of the court has no power to sign bills of exception to rulings made during the term, even though by agreement of counsel and leave of the court entered of record during the term. See, in accord, Winston v. Giles, 27 Gratt. 537, and note. The principal case is cited in both of the above cases. See pared, and may be signed by the judge, either during the trial or after it is ended, during the same term. If this appears from the whole record, it is sufficient, though it is not expressly stated in the bill of exceptions: but if it does not so appear from the record, the appellate court cannot review the judgment of the court below upon the point.

Digitized by Google

4. Telegraph Companies—Alteration of Message—Liability—Instructions.—In an action against a telegraph company, for damages sustained by the plaintiffs by the alteration of a message
123 sent on their line, *whereby an order to the plaintiffs' factors in Mobile to buy five hundred bales of cotton, was altered to twenty-five hundred, but not charging negligence in the company, an instruction that the defendants are not responsible as common carriers but only as general agents, for such gross negligence as in law amounts to fraud, is not authorized by the pleadings; and properly refused.

5. Same—Same—Measure of Damages—Case at Bar.—In such case the factors having bought two thousand and seventy-eight bales of cotton before the mistake in the message was ascertained, if the company is liable to the plaintiffs for the damages arising from the alteration of the message, the commissions of the factors upon the purchase of the cotton are a part of the damages for which the company is liable: and the plaintiffs are not bound to accept any offer of the company to pay the damages, which excludes these commissions.

6. Same—Same—Same—Same.—In such case, if the company is liable to the plaintiffs for damages arising from the alteration of the message, the measure of these damages is what was lost on the sale at Mobile of the excess of the cotton above that ordered, or if not sold there, what would have been the loss on the sale of the cotton at Mobile in the condition and circumstances in which it was when the mistake was ascertained; including in such loss all the proper costs and charges thereon.

7. Same—Same—Same—Same.—When the mistake was ascertained a part of the cotton was on board of a ship to be sent to Liverpool; a part was under a contract of affreightment to the same place, but not on board. The whole should have been sold as it was at Mobile; and the plaintiffs having sent it to Liverpool and sold it there, the loss to the company is not to be increased by this act of the plaintiffs, but must be based upon an estimate of what it would have sold for, a part on ship-board and a part under contract of affreightment.

8. Same—Same—Same—Same.—If the plaintiffs sent the cotton to Liverpool for purposes of speculation, with the intention of taking to themselves the profits, if any, and in the event of a loss, visiting the loss on the company, they are not entitled to recover for any loss sustained upon it.

9. Same—Same—Same—Same.—But if the plaintiffs sent the cotton to Liverpool, not with a purpose of taking the profits, if any, but only to indemnify themselves out of the proceeds to the extent of the cost and the obligations incurred by them, they do not thereby lose their right to recover from the company the damages which they would have sustained if the cotton had been sold at Mobile.

10. Same—Same—Same—Same.—The plaintiffs, if they intended to hold the company responsible for the excess of the cotton purchased, should, as soon as they were apprised of the purchase, have notified the company of such intention; should have made a tender of such excess to the company on the condition of its paying the 124 price and all the charges incident *to the purchase: and also, that in case of its refusal to accept said tender and comply with its conditions, they would proceed to sell such excess at Mobile, and after crediting said company with the net profits, would look to it for the difference between the amount of such proceeds and the cost of the excess, including all proper charges: And upon the failure of the company, after notice, to accede to their offer, they should have proceeded accordingly.

This was an action on the case in the Circuit court of the city of Richmond, instituted by John C. Hobson & Son against the Washington and New Orleans Telegraph Company. The declaration alleged that the defendants sent messages for hire; that the plaintiffs wishing to send a message or order to a commercial house in Mobile for the purchase on their account of five hundred bales of cotton, on the 2d of March 1854 delivered to the defendants at the city of Richmond a message to Robert W. Smith & Co. at Mobile, to be by the defendants conveyed by telegraph to Smith & Co. and paid the defendants the sum demanded therefor. That by this message the plaintiffs directed Smith & Co. to purchase for the plaintiffs five hundred bales of cotton. That the defendants did not accurately convey and deliver the message, but altered the number five hundred to twenty-five hundred, and the same so altered the defendants delivered to Smith & Co. That by reason of the message so altered Smith & Co. bought for the plaintiffs two thousand and seventy-eight bales of cotton. That due notice was given to the defendants of the error in the message as delivered to Smith & Co. and of their purchase for the plaintiffs of fifteen hundred and seventy-eight bales of cotton more than the plaintiffs had authorized by their message delivered to the defendants; and the defendants were requested to relieve the plaintiffs of the excess of the purchase by paying the costs thereof and the charges and expenses attending the same, or that they would be held 125 bound for any loss or damage *on the sale thereof. That the defendants refused to assume the purchase and relieve the plaintiffs; and that upon a sale thereof by the plaintiffs the loss on the fifteen hundred and seventy-eight bales of cotton was generally, monographic note on "Bills of Exception" appended to Stoneman v. Com., 25 Gratt. 887.

---

But, see Acts of 1901, p. 186, amending § 3385 providing that: Any bill of exceptions may be tendered the judge and signed by him, either during the term at which the opinion of the court is announced, to which exception is taken, or in vacation, within thirty days after the end of such term, or at such other time as the parties, by consent entered of record, may agree upon. See also, W. Va. Code 1899, ch. 131, § 9.

[Telegraph Companies—Alteration of Message—Measure of Damages—Case at Bar.—See the principal case cited in W. U. Tel. Co. v. Reynolds, 77 Va. 176, 187.

Digitized by Google

ten thousand dollars. By reason whereof, the defendants became liable to pay to the plaintiffs the said sum, &c.

The defendants demurred to the declaration; but at the November term 1855 of the court, the demurrer was withdrawn, and the issue was made up on the plea of not guilty. The cause came on for trial on the 19th of November, and was adjourned to the 21st, when the jury found a verdict for the plaintiffs for seven thousand three hundred and forty-one dollars and forty-five cents, with interest thereon from the 26th of March 1855 till paid.

The defendants filed three bills of exception to rulings of the court. One was to the refusal of the court to give certain instructions asked for by the defendants, and to an instruction given by the court. Another was to the refusal of the court to grant them a new trial, which was asked on three grounds: 1st. That the verdict was contrary to the evidence: 2d. That the instructions given by the court were erroneous: 3d. On the ground of newly discovered evidence. The other exception was on the ground of the refusal of the court to arrest the verdict.

An objection was raised in this court, that it did not appear that the exception first above stated was taken before the jury retired to consider of their verdict. The facts on this point are stated by Judge Daniel in his opinion.

The evidence stated in the first bill of exceptions, are letters, and accounts rendered, which were admitted by the defendants as if regularly proved, interrogatories by both plaintiffs and defendants, and the answers thereto by a witness, inter-126 rogatories by the *defendants, and the answers thereto by the plaintiffs, and an agreement of certain facts by the parties. It appears from this evidence, that on the 2d of March 1854 Hobson & Son sent a message from Richmond to Robert W. Smith & Co. at Mobile, by the Washington and New Orleans telegraph company's line, directing them to purchase for the Hobsons five hundred bales of cotton at or under nine cents. This message was altered on the route to twenty-five hundred bales; and owing to some injury to the wires between Macon in Georgia and Mobile, was not delivered at the latter place until the 9th of the month. On the 3d of March Hobson & Son wrote to Smith & Co. advising them of their dispatch of the previous day; but owing to a derangement in the mails, this letter was not received in Mobile until the 13th.

On the receipt of the telegraphic message Smith & Co. sent to the office to know whether it was correct, and received it again: And thereupon they purchased two thousand and seventy-eight bales of cotton before they were informed of the mistake.

On the 16th of March S. Mowry, jr., the president of the telegraph company, telegraphed from Macon to an agent of the company in Mobile, and directed him to say to Smith & Co. "if they hold the company liable for any damages on the two thousand bales of cotton, hold it until I get there or you hear from me. I leave here to-night for your place." Mowry arrived at Mobile prior to the 20th of the month; and in interviews between Smith & Co. and himself, he proposed to take the fifteen hundred and seventy-eight bales at its cost, exclusive of the commission of two and a half per cent. charged by Smith & Co. for the purchase of the cotton. This proposition Smith & Co. declined for their principals, but proposed to lose one-half of their commissions.

At the time these propositions were 127 made, Smith & *Co. had made a contract for the shipment of one thousand bales of the cotton to Liverpool, of which all but two hundred and sixteen bales were on board of the ship prior to the 18th of the month. On the 21st they wrote again to Mowry, and said, they had, since writing to him on the 20th, received a telegraph from Hobson & Son, by which they felt authorized to say that Hobson & Son would take the one thousand bales shipped to Liverpool, provided he would take the one thousand and seventy-eight bales at prime cost with Smith & Co.'s charges. Mowry declined to accept the propositions of Smith & Co. His note is dated March 21st.

The one thousand and seventy-eight bales were sold in Mobile, at a loss of but eighty-seven dollars and seventy-two cents; but the loss on the five hundred bales shipped to Liverpool exceeded seven thousand dollars.

It was admitted by the plaintiffs that Mowry was prepared to carry into effect his proposition to take the cotton if it had been accepted; and that the loss on the cotton shipped to Liverpool arose from a decline in the price. And the defendants contended, from the answers of the plaintiffs to interrogatories filed in the cause, that the plaintiffs shipped the cotton to Liverpool on their own account, intending, if there should be a profit thereon, to appropriate it to themselves.

When both the plaintiffs and defendants had introduced their evidence and rested their case, the defendants moved the court to instruct the jury as follows:

1. The jury are instructed, that the defendants are not in this action to be considered as held responsible as common carriers but as general agents, not responsible for damages, resulting from a mistake or misdelivery of a message, except in cases of such gross and culpable negligence as in law amounts to a fraud.

128 *2. If the jury shall believe, from the evidence in the cause, that S. Mowry in good faith offered to relieve the plaintiffs from all personal and remote loss, charges or damages, and when he made the said offer, proposed so to relieve and indemnify them for all losses, contingencies and resulting damages, by reason of the mistake in this message, at the time the said offer was so made, which was refused by their factors, the Messrs. Smith & Co. solely on account of the refusal of the said

Digitized by Google

Mowry to pay to their factors their commissions, and for no other cause, then the said offer so made and refused destroyed all privity of action as between the plaintiffs and defendants, and left the question of commissions one to be settled between the said Smith & Co. and the defendants. And if the plaintiffs, by their said factors refusing to release them from their liabilities in consequence of the demand by their said factors for commissions of the said Mowry, sustained damages, remote or proximate, the said loss, in damages, was not in law proximate to the mistake in the delivery of the message, but immediately resulted from the refusal of the said factors (the Messrs. Smith & Co.) to release them from the contract of purchase; and they must find on the facts for the defendants in this action.

3. If the jury shall believe, from the evidence, that when the one thousand bales of cotton shipped by the factors of the plaintiffs to a foreign market, it was by them shipped on account and for the plaintiffs, with a view of taking advantage of the fluctuations in the market—and if they shall, from the evidence, further believe that a large profit instead of a loss had been realized on the quantity so shipped, the plaintiffs would not have and in point of fact did not intend to account to and with the defendants for the profits—then, in that case, they must find for the defendants.

The jury are further instructed, that 129 should they believe, *from the evidence, that if the entire quantity of cotton ordered had been by the factors of the plaintiffs sold in Mobile, that there would have been no greater loss than was sustained in the sale of the one thousand and seventy-eight bales—then, in that case, the measure of damages must be the ascertained loss, if any, on the said one thousand and seventy-eight bales—and any loss or damage sustained by the plaintiffs in consequence of the shipment of the cotton to Liverpool, after the offer of S. Mowry to indemnify the plaintiffs, was not in law proximate or referable to the acts of the defendant, but were referable to the unauthorized acts, so far as the defendants are concerned, of the plaintiffs.

And the plaintiffs moved the court to instruct the jury as follows:

If the jury believe, from the evidence, that the message of the plaintiffs directing a purchase of five hundred bales of cotton, was delivered to the defendants to be transmitted, and they undertook to transmit it for the hire of one dollar and seventy-nine cents, and said message was altered by the telegraph company during its transmission, to an order for the purchase of two thousand five hundred bales of cotton, and so delivered by the said company to the agents of the plaintiffs in Mobile as the message of said plaintiffs, and said agents in good faith, and relying on said message as the true and real message of the plaintiffs, purchased a larger quantity than five hundred bales, then, although between themselves and their said agents the plaintiffs recognized themselves as the purchasers of the cotton, and immediately informed the telegraph company of the mistake they had made in transmitting said message, and that they would be held responsible for any damage resulting from said mistake, and held the cotton only for the purpose of enforcing and securing that responsi-

130 bility, the defendants *are liable to the plaintiffs for any damages resulting from said mistake, and that the usual and proper commissions charged by said agents in Mobile for the purchase of cotton are to be considered as a part of the cost of the cotton, as much as that of weighing and brokerage, and the statement by the agents (Messrs. Smith & Co.), after their commissions had been earned by the purchase of the cotton, and after the defendants had refused to indemnify the plaintiffs for the amount of commission, that the said agents would not claim commission, unless the defendants were made liable, was not binding on the said Smith & Co. and did not impair the defendants' liability for the damage resulting from the alteration of the message.

And the court refused to give the instructions moved by the defendants, and to give the instruction moved by the plaintiffs; but instructed the jury that, if the jury believe from the evidence that the message of the plaintiffs, directing the purchase of five hundred bales of cotton, was delivered to the defendants to be transmitted, and they undertook to transmit it for the hire of one dollar and seventy-nine cents, and said message was altered by the negligence and mismanagement of the telegraph company, or its agents, during its transmission, to an order for the purchase of twenty-five hundred bales of cotton, and so delivered by the said company to the agents of the plaintiffs in Mobile as the true message of the said plaintiffs, and said agents, in good faith, and relying on said message as the true and real message of said plaintiffs, purchased a larger quantity than five hundred bales of cotton—then, although between themselves and their said agents the plaintiffs recognized themselves as the purchasers of the cotton, and immediately informed the telegraph company of the mistake they had made in transmitting said message, and that they would be 131 *held responsible for any damage resulting from said mistake, and held the cotton only for the purpose of enforcing and securing that responsibility—the defendants are liable to the plaintiffs for all damage sustained by the plaintiffs by reason of the said negligence, and the usual and proper commissions charged by said agents in Mobile for the purchase of said cotton, and paid by said plaintiffs, are to be considered as a part of the costs of said cotton, as much as the cost of weighing and brokerage.

To which opinion of the court refusing their said instructions, and giving the instructions aforesaid, the defendants excepted.

Digitized by Google

Upon the finding of the verdict by the jury on the 21st of November, the record states, that thereupon the defendants moved the court to set it aside and grant them a new trial: And because the court was not advised of its judgment to be given in the premises, time was taken to consider thereof. Then follows the entry in the record in relation to the list of exceptions above stated.

On the 12th of February 1856, which was during the same term of the court, the court overruled the motion for a new trial. And thereupon the defendants moved the court to correct (arrest) its judgment upon the verdict: which motion was also overruled. And the defendants excepted on both grounds.

The bill of exceptions taken to the refusal to grant a new trial, did not set out either the facts proved or the evidence given on the trial, nor did it refer to the other bill of exceptions in which evidence was set out. The court having expressed no opinion upon the after-discovered evidence, it is unnecessary to state it.

The grounds of the motion in arrest of judgment, is that the state courts had no jurisdiction in the case, but that the suit should have been brought in the United States court. And this on the ground, 132 that *the defendants lived in various states, and that the line of the company extended through the several states from Washington to New Orleans, and could not be subjected to the jurisdiction of any one of the states through which messages were sent.

Upon the application of the defendants, this court granted a supersedeas to the judgment.

The case was elaborately argued by John H. Gilmer of Richmond and Curtis of Boston, for the appellants, and by Macfarland and Patton, for the appellees.

DANIEL, J. I think it is quite clear, that the Circuit court committed no error in overruling the motion to arrest the judgment. Had the fact, upon the assumption of which the motion was grounded, namely, that the parties defendant to the action "were residents of other and different states than Virginia," been fully proved, it would have presented no reason for arresting the judgment. No question of jurisdiction arising upon such supposed fact could be made, except by plea in abatement offered before the defendants had pleaded in bar. Code, ch. 171, § 19, p. 648.

It seems to me, also, free from serious doubt, that we are precluded, by the state of the record, from reviewing the action of the Circuit court in overruling the motion for a new trial, on the score of the verdict being contrary to the evidence. In the bill of exceptions to the judgment of the court overruling this motion, there is no certificate of the facts proved, or of the evidence given on the trial; the bill is silent as to the facts and evidence on which the verdict was founded, and makes no direct reference to the only bill of exceptions in which any portion of said facts or evidence is certified, namely, the bill of exceptions to the ruling of the court, refusing to 133 give certain instructions *prayed for by the plaintiffs in error, and giving other instructions. It is true, that in the first mentioned bill of exceptions, the motion to set aside the verdict is stated as being for the causes: "1st. That the verdict was contrary to the evidence: 2d. That the instructions given by the court were erroneous: And 3d. On newly discovered evidence." And it is argued, that as the only instructions of the court, of which mention is made in the cause, are contained in a bill of exceptions which has a certificate of the evidence on which the motions of the parties and the rulings of the court, in regard to the instructions, were founded, there arises a necessary implication of an intention to refer to said certificate as a means not only of testing the correctness of the rulings of the court in regard to the instructions, but of determining also whether the verdict was or was not contrary to the evidence. I do not perceive the necessity of such an implication; but, were we to concede that there was the implied reference contended for, I do not think the concession would be of any avail to the plaintiffs in error. By such a reference merely, the certificate of the evidence on which the instructions were asked, could not be substituted for the certificate of the facts or evidence in the cause, which it is necessary, for a party complaining of a verdict, to obtain, in order to have a judgment overruling his motion to set aside a verdict as contrary to the evidence, reviewed in an appellate court. In a bill of exceptions to the ruling of a court refusing to give instructions, it is only necessary for the exceptor to set out so much of the evidence, or to state the tendency of so much of the evidence as is essential to show the relevancy and applicability of the instructions to the case. To such an extent only does such a bill of exceptions generally undertake to give a history of the 134 proofs in the cause. *It may, and sometimes does set out fully all the evidence of either side, down to the period of the ruling of the court, objected to; yet, as instructions may be, and often are prayed for, and given or refused before the testimony is closed, such a bill of exceptions cannot, of itself merely, be relied on as a complete statement of all the facts or all the evidence on which the jury rendered their verdict. It could not be so relied on, even though it should in terms purport to be a statement of "all the evidence in the cause," as was the case in Brooke v. Young, 3 Rand. 16; for the reason stated by the court in that case, that "although the evidence stated in the bill might be all when it was sealed, there might be other important facts brought forward afterwards." For these reasons, the supposed implied reference to the certificate in question could not justify us in regarding it as a certificate of all the evidence in the cause. No reference could produce that effect which did not, in express terms, or by the clearest implication, show that such certificate was referred to and adopted, not merely as a statement of all the evidence given in at the time of its being made, but as a statement of all the evidence before the jury at the time of rendering the verdict.

Digitized by Google

The question which it would seem most proper to consider next, is, whether there is such a record of the exceptions of the plaintiffs in error to the ruling of the court in respect to the instructions, as warrants us to pass upon the propriety of such ruling. There are three papers sent to us as constituting parts of the record, which purport to be bills of exceptions taken by the plaintiffs in error to opinions of the court given against them in the cause, to wit, a bill of exceptions to the ruling of the court, refusing certain instructions and giving others (the one immediately under consideration); a bill of exceptions to 135 the opinion of the court *overruling the motion for a new trial, and a bill of exceptions to the judgment of the court overruling the motion in arrest of judgment.

The verdict of the jury was rendered on the 21st of November 1855. Immediately succeeding the entry of the verdict is the following: "And thereupon the defendants moved the court to set aside the said verdict and grant them a new trial herein. But because the court was not then advised of its judgment to be given in the premises, time was taken to consider thereof." Immediately succeeding this is a statement by the clerk as follows: "The following is a bill of exceptions to an opinion of the court given against the defendants aforesaid, on the said 21st day of November 1855, but which was not received by the clerk till the 12th day of February 1856." The bill of exceptions is then set out, commencing with the following caption: "Be it remembered, that on the trial of this cause, the counsel of the plaintiffs introduced the following evidence." The bill proceeds to set out certain written statements of the admissions of the parties, letters, accounts, interrogatories, and answers thereto; and after so doing, states "and here the plaintiffs rested their case." It proceeds then to recite that the defendants introduced certain evidence (setting it out) "and rested the case." "The counsel for the defendants (in the language of the bill) then moved the court to instruct the jury as follows." The instructions are set out, and the recital proceeds, "And the plaintiffs moved the court to instruct the jury as follows." The instructions are set out, "And the court (in the language of the recital) refused to give the instructions moved by the defendants and to give the instructions moved by the plaintiffs, but instructed the jury that." &c. After stating the instructions given by the court, the bill concludes, "To 136 which opinion of the court *refusing their said instructions, and giving the instructions aforesaid, the defendants except, and pray that this their bill of exceptions may be signed, sealed and reserved to them; which is done accordingly."

Immediately succeeding the bill of exceptions is the following entry: "And now at this day of the same term last mentioned, to wit, Tuesday the 12th day of February 1856 (being the same day and year first herein mentioned), came again the parties aforesaid, by their attorneys; and thereupon the court having maturely considered the motion of the defendants to set aside the verdict of the jury in this cause, and to grant them a new trial of the same, doth overrule the said motion. Whereupon the defendants moved the court to correct (which ought to be, doubtless, to arrest) its judgment upon the said verdict; which motion was also overruled."

The judgment is then given, and at the foot of it is the following: "Memorandum. The defendants aforesaid, by their attorney, this day excepted to two opinions of the court given against them, and tendered their bills of exception thereto: and also tendered a bill of exceptions to an opinion of the court given against them on the 21st day of November 1855: which bills were reserved, signed and sealed by the court, and ordered to be made parts of the record in said cause. And the two first mentioned of said bills are in the words and figures following, to wit." The bill of exceptions to the opinion of the court refusing to grant the new trial, and the bill of exceptions to the opinion overruling the motion in arrest of judgment, are then set forth.

It is proper to add here (what ought perhaps to have been stated before), that the transcript of the record is headed as follows: "Pleas before the Circuit court of the city of Richmond for the trial of 137 civil causes, *held at the state court-house in the said city, on Tuesday the twelfth day of February in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-six."

We judicially know that the November term of the Circuit court aforesaid might continue for such a space of time as would include the 21st day of November 1855, and 12th day of February 1856. We find no difficulty, therefore, in construing the involved and apparently self-contradictory entry following the bill of exceptions, as meaning to indicate that the day on which the final judgment was rendered, to wit, the 12th day of February 1856, was the same with that, as of which the transcript is entitled, that being "the same day and year first herein (that is, in the record) mentioned;" and that said day was a day of the term at which the verdict was rendered, the said term being "the same term last mentioned" in the record.

From this view of the record, it seems to me that there exists no valid objection to the bill of exceptions, growing out of the time of its being received, sealed and made a part of the record. According to our practice, it is not necessary that a bill of exceptions should be tendered immediately on the transpiring or happening of the action of the court to which a party excepts. It is true, that when the character of the exceptions is such that little delay is occasioned by the preparation of the bill of exceptions, it is sometimes immediately prepared and disposed of; and in such case, a memorandum of the transactions is usually made in the minutes of the proceedings of the day. But as in a great number, perhaps a majority of cases, serious delay and inconvenience would result from stopping the progress of the trial to prepare bills of exceptions to the rulings of the court, a practice, sanctioned by long usage, has prevailed, for the counsel desiring to except to any opinion of the court given against them on the trial, simply to 138 state *to the court that they intend to save the point, and ask the court to note the exception, and afterwards during the term to prepare the bill of exceptions, and tender it to the court for its signature. Such was the practice which prevailed under our law of 1819, which follows substantially the provisions of the statute of Westm. 2, 13 Edw. 1, ch. 31. I do not think that any such change in the law has been introduced by the 8th section of chapter 177 of the present Code, as requires us to declare that such a practice is no longer to be allowed. The bill of exceptions in question having been tendered and signed not only at the same term at which the verdict and judgment were rendered, but at the time of the rendering of the judgment, was, it seems to me, clearly in time.

Digitized by Google

The important difficulty, however, in respect to the bill of exceptions here, arises not out of the time of its being tendered and sealed, but out of the fact that neither in the bill itself nor in the entry of its being made a part of the record, is there any distinct averment of the fact that the exception to the opinion of the court refusing the instructions, was taken at the time of the rendering of the opinion, or indeed at any time before the verdict was rendered.

The presence of this last mentioned fact is essential to entitle a party relying on a bill of exceptions, to claim any benefit from his bill. It is incumbent on him to show that he saved the point or took the exception in the manner already indicated, or in some more solemn form, either at the time when the opinion of which he complains was given, or at least before the verdict of the jury was rendered. In the absence of such showing, justice to his adversary would require that he should be held to have yielded to said opinion. It is not just or reasonable that he should be allowed to take his chance before the jury, and in the event of defeat, then to deprive his 139 successful opponent *of the benefits of the verdict by an exception, which, if insisted on during the trial, might have been met and counteracted by the latter.

It seems to me, however, that the plaintiffs in error, notwithstanding the omission of the record to state expressly and directly that the exception was taken at the trial, have yet shown, with satisfactory certainty, that such was the fact. For whilst neither the bill of exceptions nor the memorandum of its being made part of the record, contains a positive averment that the exception was insisted on during the trial before the jury, they do not, in my opinion, when read together, amount to an averment inconsistent with the existence of such a fact. The most that can be said of the effect of the two statements taken together, is that it leaves it somewhat in doubt whether such was or was not the fact. A legal and satisfactory explanation of this doubt in favor of the existence of the fact, I think, arises out of evidence afforded by other portions of the record, and certain presumptions springing from the very nature of the transaction.

We have seen that the memorandum at the foot of the judgment, in speaking of the bills of exceptions to the opinions of the court overruling the motion for a new trial, and the motion in arrest of judgment, says, in respect to them, that the defendants "this day excepted to two opinions of the court given against them, and tendered their bills of exception thereto;" but when it comes to speak of the bill in question, it says, "and also tendered a bill of exceptions to an opinion of the court given against them on the 21st of November 1855." From the marked difference of the terms used in reference to the first two bills, from those used in reference to the bill in question, there arises an inference, little inferior in force to an express negative of the fact, that the exception to which the last bill refers was made at the time of the entry. Why say, in 140 *respect to the first two, that the defendants this day excepted, &c., and tendered their bills, &c., and of the bill in question, merely that they tendered a bill to an opinion given before, if there was not a purpose to convey the idea that the exception to said opinion was not taken on that day?

The last day preceding that mentioned in the record, is the day on which the trial was had and the verdict given; and when we look to the bill of exceptions, we see that the defendants did except at some period of time: And it seems to be conceded, that if the bill in its conclusion had spoken in the past instead of the present tense; had used the terms "excepted and prayed," instead of saying "except and pray;" that those terms, taken in connection with the memorandum aforesaid, and all the recitals of the bill, would have shown sufficiently that the exception was taken at the time of the ruling of the court in respect to the instructions.

I do not think that the mere circumstance that the party, in reciting the fact of his excepting to the opinion of the court, has adopted the present instead of the past tense, should work the important result of making the bill conclusive proof that the exception was not taken till after the verdict. In drafting the bill, the slightest inadvertence might cause the one expression to be used instead of the other. The bill of exceptions may have been prepared at the time of the trial, though not tendered to the judge for his signature till the time of the rendering of the judgment; and in such case, the language might have been very properly used.

Digitized by Google

We have seen that the verdict was immediately followed by a motion for a new trial; which the court took time to consider. The bill of exceptions in question may, though perhaps then ready, have been withheld to await the action of the judge 141 on the motion *for a new trial, which, if granted, would dispense with the signing and recording the bill of exceptions. There is always a strong presumption that the judge would not sign a bill of exceptions to an opinion given on the trial, unless the exception was taken in time; and as the bill of exceptions here was filed at the time of the rendering of the judgment, when, as appears by the amendments of the record, the defendants in error were present by their attorneys, we have a still further presumption, and one of great force, in favor of the conclusion that the exception must have been taken at the proper time, and that all was rightly done in respect to the bill, arising from their failure to object to its being received and entered.

Little aid in determining the question under consideration is derived from a reference to the decisions of other states; as each state has moulded for itself, either by statute or the decisions of its courts, a practice in the matter of bills of exceptions, varying in a greater or less degree from the practice observed in any other state. The case of Harlow v. Humiston, 6 Cow. R. 189, however, seems to me to furnish strong persuasive authority in favor of the bill of exceptions in this case. In that case an exception was taken by the defendant below to a charge by the court to the jury. The bill of exceptions, after stating the charge, concluded thus: "The jury retired, and returned and delivered their verdict in favor of the plaintiff for fifty dollars damages. To all which charge the counsel for the defendant excepted." By the laws and practice of New York it was necessary that the exception to the charge should have been taken before the verdict of the jury was rendered, and it was obvious that there was doubt, from the conclusion of the bill, whether the exception had been taken before or after verdict; and an objection to the bill was urged on that score.

The objection in the appellate court
142 was overruled, the chief *justice, Savage, in rendering the opinion of the court, remarking, "It is objected that the exception came too late, and that it is too general. We must presume it was taken in time; otherwise, the court would not have allowed it."

I do not think that under the circumstances of this case we should violate any rule or incur any hazard of doing injustice to the defendants in error, by adopting a similar course here. A bill of exceptions, it is true, is a part of the record, and may not be contradicted by evidence extrinsic of the record. Still, it is not an essential portion of the regular and necessary history of the steps in a cause, its whole purpose being to bring into the record matters of which the account of the ordinary proceedings would otherwise take no notice. It is made a part of the record only at the instance of counsel; and the counsel and court concur in making it up. When, therefore, on comparing a bill of exceptions with the entry of its being received as part of the record, and other portions of the record, such a doubt arises as we have here, I think that the expressions out of which the doubt arises may be construed in reference to the circumstances shown by the record to have existed at the time the bill was tendered and received. The bill here having been tendered before or at the time of rendering the judgment, when, not only according to all presumption independent of the record, but also according to the averments of the record, the defendants in error were present by attorney, I am of opinion that the presumptions arising from this state of facts, taken in connection with the other considerations already adverted to, justify and require such an interpretation of the ambiguous expressions in the record as will sustain the validity of the bill. In cases where the bills of exceptions to rulings at the trial are not tendered till at some day subsequent to that on which the final 143 judgment is *rendered, I think that a more rigid rule should be observed. In such cases, the record ceasing to afford any longer evidence of the continued presence of the opposing party or his counsel, I think, that a party, who may have thus delayed to tender his bill, should be held to show, by averments of the record, free from reasonable doubt, that the exception was taken at the time of the ruling of the court excepted to, or at least before the finding of the verdict by the jury.

The rulings of the court in regard to the instructions being thus, as I conceive, properly before us for review, I shall proceed briefly to consider them. And it seems to me that the court did not err in refusing to give the first instruction prayed for by the plaintiffs in error. The declaration did not charge that they had been guilty of any want of diligence; did not impute to them any negligence in the transmission of the message; and there was no question of negligence before the jury.

I think that the court also properly refused to give the second instruction asked by the said plaintiffs in error. If the company, by reason of their having sent to Messrs. Smith & Co., the factors of the defendants in error, a message to purchase a larger quantity of cotton than the quantity mentioned in the message which the company were authorized to transmit, had rendered themselves liable to relieve the defendants in error of any excess of cotton purchased by their factors, in pursuance of the first mentioned message, no reason is perceived why the company was not equally bound to relieve them of all loss or obligation by them incurred on account of the accustomed and reasonable commissions of their factors, charged for effecting the purchase. And upon the supposition, therefore, that Smith & Co. would have been bound to accept, in behalf of their principals, an offer by the company, or an agent of the com-144 pany, to pay all the costs and *charges of the purchase of such excess, including the commissions aforesaid, on receiving such excess, or else release the company from any responsibility the said company were under to the defendants in error for having transmitted a wrong message, they were not bound to accept any offer of the kind which did not include the commissions aforesaid.

Digitized by Google

In respect to the rulings of the Circuit court in refusing to give the third instruction asked by the plaintiffs in error, and in giving the instructions which it did give, it was, I think, the duty of the defendants in error, as soon as they were apprised of the mistake or alteration in their message, and of the purchase, by their factors, of the two thousand and seventy-eight bales of cotton, if they intended to hold the company responsible for the excess of cotton over the five hundred bales, to have notified the company of such intention; to have made a tender of such excess to the company on the condition of its paying the price and all the charges incident to the purchase, and to have also further notified the company, that in case of its refusal to accept said tender, and comply with its conditions, they would proceed to sell such excess at Mobile, and after crediting said company by the net proceeds, would look to it for the difference between the amount of such proceeds and the cost of the excess, including all proper charges: and on the failure of the company, after notice, to accede to their offer, they ought to have proceeded to act accordingly. I do not think that the duty of the defendants in error, upon such failure of the company, in respect to the disposition of the five hundred bales of the excess, two hundred and eighty-four bales of which the testimony tends to show was on shipboard, and two hundred and sixteen under a contract of affreightment, varied substantially from their duty in this regard respecting the one thousand and seventy-eight bales 145 *which they proceeded to sell at Mobile. The principles and rules regulating the subject, required, as I conceive, a sale of said five hundred bales also at the nearest market (Mobile), to be taken by the purchaser or purchasers as it stood, namely, two hundred and eighty-four bales as on shipboard, and two hundred and sixteen bales as under a contract of affreightment.

The defendants in error had no right to subject the company to the hazards attendant upon sending the cotton to a foreign market. The loss (if any) which they had incurred on the said five hundred bales at the time of the refusal of the company to relieve them of the excess of cotton purchased, was the difference between the cost, including all proper charges, and its then present net value. Notwithstanding the refusal of the company to relieve them of the excess, or to have any thing to do with it, they had no right to subject the company to the hazards of any greater loss. These views are, I think, fully sustained by the principles to be deduced from the cases of Sands & Crump v. Taylor & Lovett, 5 John. R. 395; Cornwal v. Wilson, 1 Ves. sen. R. 509; Kemp v. Pryor, 7 Ves. R. 237; Chapman v. Morton, 11 Mees. & Welsb. 533; and the doctrines on the subject stated in Paley on Agency, ch. 1, § 7. The only doubt on the subject, arising from the consideration of these authorities, is whether the defendants in error, notwithstanding their notice to the company of their purpose to send on the five hundred bales, and hold it responsible for the loss that might arise, and the company's refusal to take it off their hands, have not, by sending the cotton to Liverpool instead of selling at Mobile, lost all right to recover of the company for the loss which might have been sustained on the said five hundred bales in case it had been sold in Mobile. I do not think, however, that if the defendants in error sent on the cotton, with the intention not of tak-
146 ing to themselves the profits *which might arise from a sale of the said five hundred bales in Liverpool, but of indemnifying themselves out of the proceeds of sale to the extent of the costs and obligations incurred by them by the purchase, they thereby, in the event of a still greater loss growing out of sending the cotton to Liverpool, lost any right they may have had to recover of the company for the loss that would have been sustained had the cotton been sold at Mobile, on the refusal of the company to relieve them of the excess.

On the other hand, if the defendants in error sent the five hundred bales aforesaid to Liverpool for purposes of speculation, with the intention of taking to themselves the profit in the event of a profit, and in the event of a loss, of visiting the loss on the company, the case in respect to said five hundred bales would, I think, be different. They could not claim all the benefits of a complete ownership of the property, and in case of a loss, demand of the company to make good the loss. Parties thus situated, if they do not abandon the property, cannot, in case they mean to sue for damages, go further, in dealing with the property retained by them, than to look to it as in the nature of a pledge, which may be sold for their indemnity. And it seems to me, therefore, that the purposes and objects of the defendants in error in forwarding the five hundred bales aforesaid to Liverpool, was a matter proper to be submitted to the jury for their consideration, in passing upon the damages in respect of the five hundred bales. Whilst, therefore,

Digitized by Google

I think that the Circuit court did right in refusing to give the third instruction prayed for by the company as asked, I think it ought, in lieu of said instruction, to have modified the instructions which it did give, in accordance with the foregoing views.

There was, as has been already stated, no issue of negligence on the part of 147 the company in transmitting *the message, in the case; and the instructions of the Circuit court, so far as they make the right of the defendants in error to depend in any manner on its appearing to the jury that the message was altered by the negligence of the company, were, I think, erroneous. On the first view of the case I was strongly of the impression that the questions, whether the jury might or might not regard the company as a common carrier, and might or might not infer, from the facts in the case, such an implied contract as the law attributes to common carriers, were properly before us in passing upon the instructions. But upon further reflection, I am of the opinion that they are not. If the plaintiffs in the action desired to get an instruction from the court on these matters, they ought to have stated, hypothetically, the evidence from the belief of which the jury were to ascertain that the company was a carrier, and from which they were to infer the implied contract aforesaid, and to have set out in the instructions the character of such implied contract. This was not done. And there being in the case no instructions asked for so framed as properly to elicit from the Circuit court any expression of opinion on said questions, it seems to me that the Circuit court, in saying to the jury, that "if they believe from the evidence that the message of the plaintiffs directing the purchase of five hundred bales of cotton, was delivered to the defendants to be transmitted, and they undertook to transmit it for the hire of one dollar and seventy-nine cents," and should also believe the other facts hypothetically stated as the grounds of a recovery, the defendants were liable, is, in respect of the contract and undertaking of the company, to be understood as if it had said to the jury, that if they believed that the company undertook to transmit the message accurately and correctly for the hire aforesaid, and should also believe 148 the other facts aforesaid, *the company was liable. Under this view of the instructions, the parties were left free to contest the questions aforesaid before the jury, not because of a liberty so to do, given by the instructions, but because the instructions did not in any manner pass upon them. So understanding the instructions, I do not think that there was any error in them in said particular. And being of the opinion that the questions aforesaid are not properly before us, as arising either out of the instructions asked or the instructions given, I decline expressing any opinion upon them.

These views of the case, without any more special application of them to the rulings of the Circuit court upon the instructions, will serve to indicate with sufficient certainty the particulars wherein, in my opinion, the said court has erred in said rulings. And because of such errors, I think that the judgment should be reversed, the verdict set aside, and the cause remanded for a new trial, in accordance with the principles herein declared; with liberty to the parties to amend their pleadings, if so advised.

LEE, J., thought that it did not satisfactorily appear, that the exception to the opinion of the court refusing the instructions asked, and giving other instructions, was taken before the jury retired to consider of their verdict. On the merits, he concurred in the opinion of Daniel, J.

ALLEN, P., and MONCURE, J., concurred in the opinion of Daniel, J.

The judgment was as follows:

It seems to the court, that the Circuit court did not err in overruling the motion of the plaintiffs in error in arrest of judgment.

And it appearing to the court, that 149 there is neither *a certificate of all the facts nor a certificate of all the evidence in the cause, it seems further to the court, that the plaintiffs in error have not sustained their allegations, assigning as cause of error that the said Circuit court erred in overruling their motion to set aside the verdict and grant them a new trial, on the ground that the verdict of the jury was contrary to the evidence.

And it seems further to the court, that the said Circuit court did not err in refusing to give the first instruction prayed for by the plaintiffs in error, nor in refusing to give the second instruction prayed for by said plaintiffs in error.

It seems further to the court, that the said Circuit court did not err in refusing to give to the jury so much of the third instruction prayed for by the said plaintiffs in error as asked the said Circuit court to instruct the jury, that "if the jury shall believe from the evidence that when the one thousand bales of cotton shipped by the factors of the plaintiffs to a foreign market, it was by them shipped on account and for the plaintiffs, with a view of taking advantage of the fluctuations of the market; and if they shall from the evidence further believe, that if a large profit instead of a loss had been realized on the quantity so shipped, they would not have accounted, and in point of fact did not intend to account to and with the defendants for the profits, then and in that case they must find for the defendants."

But it seems to the court, that the said Circuit court ought to have given to the jury, in lieu of so much of said instruction, an instruction to the effect, that if they should believe from the evidence that when the one thousand bales of cotton was forwarded by the factors of the defendants in error to a foreign market, it was by them forwarded on account of and for the said

Digitized by Google

defendants in error, with a view, on 150 the part of *the said defendants in error, of taking advantage of the fluctuations in the market; and if they should further believe from the evidence, that if a profit instead of a loss had been realized on the quantity so forwarded, the defendants in error would not have accounted, and in point of fact did not intend to account to and with the company for the profits, then and in that case the defendants in error were not entitled to recover for any loss sustained on the quantity so forwarded.

It seems further to the court, that the said Circuit court did not err in refusing to give to the jury the residue of the said third instruction. But it seems to the court, that the said Circuit court ought, in lieu of said residue of said third instruction, to have instructed the jury, that in case they should find for the said defendants in error, they should, in fixing the amount for which to render their verdict, ascertain the loss sustained on the one thousand and seventy-eight bales sold at Mobile, by deducting the net proceeds of such sale from the cost of the said one thousand and seventy-eight bales, and also find for what sum the five hundred bales (the residue of the one thousand five hundred and seventy-eight bales of excess) would have sold at Mobile at public sale, immediately before the two hundred and sixteen bales, a part of the said five hundred bales, was delivered on shipboard, to be taken by the purchaser or purchasers as it then stood, to wit, two hundred and eighty-four bales as on shipboard, and two hundred and sixteen bales as not then shipped, but under a contract of affreightment, subject to the contract for freight, and deduct said sum from the cost of the said five hundred bales, including all proper expenses and charges at Mobile, and in putting the cotton on shipboard, but not including the charge of freight on the said five hundred bales from Mobile to Liverpool; and add said balance to 151 the amount ascertained *as aforesaid as the loss on the one thousand and seventy-eight bales; and that said aggregate, together with interest from such day as the jury should think right, to the day of rendering their verdict, should constitute the sum for which to render their verdict.

It seems to the court further, that the Circuit court erred in the instructions which it gave to the jury, in so far as it made the right of the defendants in error in any measure dependent on its being shown that their message was altered by the negligence of the company, it seeming to the court that there was no question of negligence on the part of said company in issue before the jury.

And it seems further to the court, that there were no instructions prayed for so framed as properly to elicit from the Circuit court any instructions of the said court as to whether the company were to be regarded as common carriers, or whether the jury might infer a contract of any character from the nature of the calling of said company.

And it seems to the court, that the instructions of the said Circuit court should not be construed as indicating any opinion of the said court on said questions, or as intending in any manner to affirm or deny the right of the defendants in error to recover upon such an implied contract; but that the said Circuit court, in saying to the jury that if they believed that the company undertook to transmit the message, and should also believe the other facts hypothetically stated in said instructions as the grounds of the recovery, that then the company were liable, is to be understood as if it had said to the jury that if they believed that the company undertook to transmit the message accurately and correctly, and should also believe the other facts just indicated, that then the company were liable.

It seems to the court, that under the said instructions the parties were left free 152 to contest the questions *in respect to the calling of the company and the implied contract aforesaid, before the jury, not because the liberty to do so was expressly given, or involved in the instructions aforesaid, but because the Circuit court had not given any opinion on said questions.

And it appearing to the court, that said questions are not presented properly to this court for its decision, either by the instructions given or the instructions asked on the trial, it seems to the court improper to express any opinion upon said questions. And construing the instructions given by the Circuit court as just indicated, it seems to the court that said instructions are erroneous, so far and so far only as they are in conflict with the principles herein already declared.

And as, because of the errors in the rulings of the said Circuit court in respect of the instructions asked and of the instructions given, the judgment must be reversed, it becomes unnecessary for the court to consider whether the said Circuit court erred or not in overruling the motion of the plaintiffs in error to set aside the verdict and grant them a new trial, on the ground of newly discovered evidence.

And because of the errors which have been pointed out, it is considered by the court that the judgment of the said Circuit court be reversed, &c., with costs; and it is ordered, that the verdict of the jury be set aside, and the cause remanded for a new trial to be had in accordance with the principles herein declared, with liberty to the parties to amend their pleadings, if so advised.

Judgment reversed.

---

153 *Evans, Trustee, v. Greenhow & als.

April Term, 1859. Richmond.

Trust Deeds—Trustee and Beneficiaries—Execution Creditors—Priorities.*—The trustee and benefici-

*Trust Deeds—Trustee and Beneficiaries—Execution Creditors—Priorities.—In Wiant v. Hays, 38 W. Va.

Digitized by Google

aries in a debt to secure bona fide debts, without notice, are purchasers for valuable consideration, within the meaning of the exception in the statute, Code, ch. 188, § 3, p. 717; and will be preferred to an execution creditor of the grantor in the deed, as to a chose in action thereby conveyed.†

Thomas Crouch, claiming to be the creditor of George Ives deceased, for money paid as a joint surety with him, in March 1854 filed his bill in the Circuit court of the city of Richmond, against the administrator and heirs of Ives, and a former guardian of the heirs, seeking to subject a lot in the city which was a part of Ives' estate, and also to have any money in the hands of the former guardian applied to the payment of the debt. In February 1855 there was a decree ascertaining the amount of the plaintiff's claim at nine hundred dollars, as of the 1st day of October 1850; and a commissioner was directed to sell the lot, and report to the court.

On the 27th of February Samuel C. Greenhow filed his petition in the cause, claiming the proceeds of the sale of the lot, as an execution creditor of Thomas Crouch. It appears that in May 1852 Greenhow recovered a judgment in the Circuit court of Henrico county, against Thomas 154 Crouch and two others for *the sum of one thousand one hundred and fifty-four dollars and ninety cents; on which sundry executions had been sued out, but only the sum of four hundred dollars had been made upon them. On the 17th of February 1855 a new execution was issued on the judgment, which went into the hands of the sheriff of Henrico at 12 M. of that day; and on the 19th of the same month another execution was issued, and went into the hands of the sheriff of the city of Richmond on the same day.

On the 5th of March Thomas J. Evans was admitted a party defendant in the suit, and contested the right of Greenhow to the fund in the suit. He claimed it under a deed dated on the 15th of February 1855, and recorded on the 17th of the same month, at 2 o'clock P. M., on the acknowledgment of the grantors; by which Thomas and Richard Crouch conveyed to Evans their interest in the claim involved in the suit of Crouch against Ives, in trust to secure certain creditors named in the deed. Evans had no knowledge of the existence of this deed until it was recorded; and in his answer to the petition he insists that he and the beneficiaries in the deed were assignees for valuable consideration without notice of the petitioner's execution, and therefore that they came within the exception in the 3d section of chapter 188 of the Code of 1849; and were entitled to the subject.

On the same day on which Greenhow filed his petition the commissioner reported his sale of the lot. And the proceeds of that sale not being sufficient to pay the plaintiff's debt, the former guardian of the heirs admitting that he had in his hands a fund belonging to them, an order was made directing him to pay into bank, to the credit of the cause, a sum sufficient to discharge the balance of the debt. And then the cause coming on to be heard 155 on the 13th of June *1856, the court decreed in favor of Greenhow for the fund. And from this decree Evans applied to this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Nance & Williams, for the appellant.
Claiborne, for the appellees.

MONCURE, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

686, 18 S. E. Rep. 809, it is held that under sec. 2, ch. 141, Code of W. Va. a writ of fieri facias is a lien upon personal property, not of such a nature as to be leviable, owned by the debtor before its return day if docketed as required in said section, against a purchaser for value, without notice other than the constructive notice arising from such docketing; but, if it is not docketed, the lien will not affect the purchaser if he be a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice of the writ; and it makes no difference, so far as the protection of the purchaser is concerned, whether he purchase before or after the return day of the writ, citing Evans v. Greenhow, 15 Gratt. 162. See also, Shurtz v. Johnson, 28 Gratt. 667, citing the principal case. In Charron v. Boswell, 18 Gratt. 228, and note, the principal case is referred to.

In Trevillian v. Guerrant, 31 Gratt. 527, the court said: "It is conceded that under the third section the lien of an execution upon the debtor's choses in action is a legal lien, and continuing in its nature; that it does not cease with the return day, and that it is good against all persons except an assignee for valuable consideration without notice. This is settled by the decisions of this court in Puryear v. Taylor, 12 Gratt. 401; Evans, Trustee, v. Greenhow et als., 15 Gratt. 153; Charron & Co. v. Boswell, 18 Gratt. 216."

Same—Same—Purchaser.—For the proposition that the trustee and beneficiaries in a deed to secure bona fide debts, without notice, are purchasers for valuable consideration, the principal case is cited with approval in the following cases: Exchange Bank v. Knox, 19 Gratt. 747, and note; Antoni v. Wright, 22 Gratt. 873, and note; Shurtz v. Johnson, 28 Gratt. 667, and note; Cammack v. Soran, 30 Gratt. 296, and note; Williams v. Lord, 75 Va. 404; Witz v. Osburn, 83 Va. 230, 2 S. E. Rep. 33; Throckmorton v. Throckmorton, 91 Va. 47, 22 S. E. Rep. 162; Chapman v. Chapman, 91 Va. 400, 21 S. E. Rep. 813; Cox v. Wayt, 26 W. Va. 817; Harden v. Wagner, 22 W. Va. 365; Duncan v. Custard, 24 W. Va. 737; Western Mining, etc., Co. v. Peytona Cannel Coal Co., 8 W. Va. 441; Kimmins v. Wilson, 8 W. Va. 591; Farmers' Bank v. Willis, 7 W. Va. 47; Ruffner v. Mairs, 33 W. Va. 661, 11 S. E. Rep. 7; Peters v. Bain, 133 U. S. 670, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 361, 363. See 2 Va. Law Reg. 707. See, in accord, Wickham v. Lewis Martin, 13 Gratt. 427, and cases cited in foot-note thereto; Richeson v. Richeson, 2 Gratt. 497; Weinberg v. Rempe, 15 W. Va. 829. See monographic note on "Deeds of Trust."

†This section of the statute extends the lien of a fi. fa. to all the personal property of the debtor, including choses in action, except certain property of a husband or parent, and "except that as against an assignee of any such estate for valuable consideration, or a person making a payment to the judgment debtor, the lien by virtue of this section shall be valid only from the time that he has notice thereof."

Digitized by Google

The Code, ch. 188, § 3, p. 717, provides, that "Every writ of fieri facias hereafter issued shall, in addition to the effect which it has under chapter 187, be a lien from the time that it is delivered to a sheriff or other officer to be executed, upon all the personal estate of, or to which the judgment debtor is possessed or entitled (although not levied on nor capable of being levied on under that chapter), except in the case of a husband or parent, such things as are exempt from distress or levy by the 34th section of chapter 49, and except that as against an assignee of any such estate for valuable consideration, or a person making a payment to the judgment debtor, the lien by virtue of this section shall be valid only from the time that he has notice thereof. This section shall not impair a lien acquired by an execution creditor under chapter 187."

The controversy in this case arises under this section of the Code. The subject in controversy is a chose in action, which belonged to Thomas and Richard Crouch. The appellee, Samuel C. Greenhow, claims a lien upon it under the said section, by virtue of sundry writs of fieri facias, issued after the Code took effect, upon a judgment obtained by him against Edwin Farrar and the said Thomas and Richard Crouch. The appellant claims a lien upon it by virtue of a deed of trust executed by said Thomas and Richard Crouch, and duly recorded, whereby they assigned the subject to him, 156 in trust to secure the payment, as *mentioned, of certain debts of theirs, named in a schedule annexed to the deed. And though the said Greenhow's execution lien is prior in time to the appellant's deed of trust lien, yet the appellant insists that the latter is prior in right, inasmuch as he is an assignee for valuable consideration and without notice, within the meaning of one of the exceptions contained in the section giving the execution lien as aforesaid. The question is, therefore, narrowed down to this, whether he is such an assignee or not?

The deed of trust is certainly an assignment of the subject in controversy, and the appellant is therefore an assignee thereof. He is also an assignee without notice. He denies notice in his petition and answer, and there is no proof or even averment of such notice in the record. Is he an assignee for valuable consideration?

A pre-existing debt is, of itself, a valuable consideration for a deed of trust executed for its security; which deed, if it be duly recorded, and was not executed with a fraudulent intent, known to the trustee or the beneficiaries therein, will be valid against all prior secret liens and equities and all subsequent alienations and incumbrances. It is not necessary to the validity of the deed, that it should be executed by the trustee or the beneficiaries, or even that they should know of its existence before the intervention of subsequent claims. The deed being apparently for the benefit of the creditors thereby secured, their acceptance of it will be presumed until the contrary appears. If any of them refuse it, their refusal will relate back to the date of the deed, and avoid it ab initio as to them. A debtor, even though he be in failing circumstances, may lawfully prefer one creditor to another, and make a valid deed of trust for that purpose. These principles are now well settled in this state, as the following cases sufficiently show: Garland v. Rives, 4 Rand. 282; Skipwith's 157 ex'or v. Cunningham, *&c., 8 Leigh 271; McCullough, &c. v. Sommerville, Id. 415; Lewis v. Caperton's ex'or, &c., 8 Gratt. 148; Phippen v. Durham, &c., Id. 457; Dance, &c. v. Seaman, &c., 11 Id. 778; and Wickham, &c. v. Lewis Martin & Co., 13 Id. 427. In the last case Judge Daniel said (and in this part of his opinion all the other judges substantially concurred), "I think it has been the constant course of the courts in this state to regard the creditors in a deed of trust, made by their debtor bona fide for their indemnity, in the light of purchasers for value." Id. 437.

It is not proved, nor even intimated, that the debts secured by the deed of trust in this case, are not all bona fide debts; nor that the trustee or any of the creditors participated in, or had notice of any fraudulent intent on the part of the grantors; nor, indeed, that there was any such intent, other than may be implied by the existence of the execution lien, which was unknown to the trustee and beneficiaries until after the recordation of the deed. No such intent appears on the face of the deed.

The appellant is therefore an assignee for valuable consideration and without notice, in the general sense of the terms. Why is he not such an assignee, within the meaning of the exception aforesaid? The terms are therein used without qualification or limitation; and the presumption is, they were intended to be used in their general and well understood sense. There is nothing in the nature of the case which requires that they should be construed in a different and more restricted sense.

It is argued by the counsel for the appellee, that the additional effect given by the Code to the writ of fi. fa. was intended as a substitute for the remedy formerly afforded by the writ of ca. sa. thereby abolished; and that as the effect of the lien afforded by the execution of the latter writ was to override subsequent alienations, so the delivery of the former to the sheriff 158 *for execution should have the same effect, except so far as an intention to the contrary may plainly appear in the Code; and that it does not plainly appear that such an assignment as that under which the appellant claims, comes within the meaning of the exception.

It is true, that the additional effect given by the Code to the writ of fi. fa. was intended as a substitute for the remedy formerly afforded by the writ of ca. sa. But it was not intended to be coextensive with that remedy in all respects. On this subject the revisors observe, "We will not undertake to say that the remedies now proposed to be substituted in the place of process to take the body for debt, will in every possible case attain for the creditor everything that he can now attain by means of that process; but we express the opinion, without hesitation, that in cases generally, the rights of creditors will be better protected by the measures proposed than by those for which they are substituted." Code, p. 716, note.

Digitized by Google

The two remedies differ in many respects. The new remedy is more beneficial to the creditor in some respects and less so in others, than the old. It gives a lien on all the personal estate of the debtor from the time that the writ of fi. fa. is delivered to the officer for execution, subject only to the exceptions enumerated. The lien does not depend upon the levy of the writ, but continues to operate after the return day and until the right of the creditor to levy any execution upon his judgment ceases, or is suspended by a forthcoming bond being given and forfeited, or by a supersedeas or other legal process. Code, p. 717, § 4; Puryear v. Taylor, 12 Gratt. 401.

On the other hand, the ca. sa. was a lien only from the time of its execution, and then only a qualified and conditional lien. It was not a lien at all upon personal estate until by the act of March 2, 1821, it was declared, that "every writ of capias ad satisfaciendum shall bind the property 159 of the goods of the party *against whom the same is sued forth, from the time that such writ shall be levied." Sess. Acts, p. 35, ch. 34, § 4. It is at least doubtful whether even that act made it a lien on choses in action. The language of the act is almost identical with that which declared that no writ of fieri facias, &c., "shall bind the property of the goods against which such writ is sued forth, but from the time that such writ shall be delivered," &c. 1 Rev. Code, p. 529, § 13. If the word "goods," occurring in each of these two acts in pari materia, be construed to have the same meaning in each, as would seem to be reasonable, then, as it clearly did not embrace choses in action in the latter, so it did not in the former. Again: the lien of the ca. sa. was dependent for its effect upon the debtor's taking the oath of insolvency. Until then, the lien was inchoate and conditional; and if the debtor died, or escaped, or was discharged, without taking the oath of insolvency, the lien was thereby determined. A ca. sa. was rarely resorted to until a fi. fa. had been tried without effect. So that it was only in the rare cases in which a ca. sa. was issued and executed, and the debtor took the oath of insolvency, that the creditor had the benefit of the ca. sa. lien. Effect might be given to such a lien against persons claiming by voluntary act of the debtor, without doing injustice to them; for they could not well be assignees without notice while the debtor was in custody. No effect was given to it against liens acquired by other creditors by act of law while he was in custody. Jackson v. Heiskell, 1 Leigh 257; overruled by Foreman v. Loyd, 2 Id. 284.

The writ of fi. fa. is generally issued on a judgment, and always, in the absence of special direction to the clerk to the contrary. It is to this execution, thus almost always issued upon a judgment, that the Code, ch. 188, § 3, has imparted the important additional effect therein men-
160 tioned. In giving to the creditor *this new and extensive lien, it was eminently proper so to guard it as that it should do no injury to the just rights of others. Accordingly, it was given, subject to certain exceptions, which the legislature supposed would have that effect, and which are reasonable, and ought to be fairly construed. Among them is the exception in favor of an assignee for valuable consideration and without notice. The propriety of this exception, so far as it applies to an assignment for value paid at the time, is not denied. Nor will it be denied that it applies to an assignment in discharge of a pre-existing debt. But it is contended that the exception does not apply to an assignment for the security of a pre-existing debt. Such an assignment seems to be as well within the spirit as the letter of the law. It could never have been intended by the legislature that any assignment for valuable consideration, without notice and duly recorded, should be affected by the secret lien of an execution which may have issued from the court of a remote county of the state, and been years since returnable. Persons dealing with the execution debtor have no convenient means of informing themselves of such a lien, and are not bound to make enquiry. A judgment is a lien on the land of the debtor against subsequent purchasers from him; but the law requires it to be registered for their information. It does not require the lien of a fi. fa. to be registered, because it did not intend that purchasers for valuable consideration and without notice should be affected by such lien. To give it that effect, would not only be unjust to innocent persons, but would very much obstruct the free circulation of personal property, which the public interest requires and the law favors. It will not do to say that an assignee for the security of a pre-existing debt would only be placed in statu quo, and would therefore not be injured by being deprived of the benefit of his lien. He may have reposed on that security and been thereby prevented
161 *from seeking satisfaction in any other way. At all events, having obtained that security bona fide, he ought not to be deprived of it, and is fairly entitled to all the advantages to which he would be entitled in any other case as a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice.

But it is argued, that if this be the case, a debtor may always avoid the execution lien, by making an assignment for the benefit of other creditors. And so, it may as well be said that he may, by making an absolute assignment for value paid at the time; or by receiving debts due to him from persons having no notice of the lien. The law has afforded to the judgment creditor as ample remedies as possible, consistently with the rights of others, to enforce the satisfaction of his judgment. It has made his judgment a lien on the whole real estate of the debtor. It has made his fi. fa. a lien from the time that it is delivered to the officer to be executed, on all the personal estate of the debtor on which it is capable of being levied and is actually levied before the return day; which lien overreaches all intermediate alienations and incumbrances with or without notice. And it has, in addition to that effect, made it a lien, from the same time, on all the personal estate of or to which the judgment debtor is possessed or entitled (although not levied on, nor capable of being levied on as aforesaid), subject only to the exceptions mentioned. And it has provided as ample means as possible for the enforcement of this last mentioned lien, by enabling him to compel the debtor to discover and surrender his estate, and to compel any other person on whom there is a liability by reason of said lien, to discharge such liability. By resorting to, and pursuing with diligence these means, or some of them, the creditor is generally able to prevent an evasion of his execution lien: and if he be not always able to do so, it is only because 162 *rights of others, which the law regards as superior to his, stand in his way.

Digitized by Google

It is further argued, that as one of the executions of the appellee was in the hands of the sheriff, and in full force when the deed of trust was recorded, and when the appellee filed his petition in this case, the lien of that execution is therefore superior to the lien of the deed of trust, though the lien of the other executions of which the return day had passed, might be inferior thereto. The subject in controversy being a chose in action, is incapable of being levied on under chapter 187 of the Code; and a lien upon it by execution could therefore be acquired only under chapter 188. Under the latter, it is immaterial whether the return day of the execution be past or not. In each case, the lien exists, and to the same extent. It may be proper to observe here, that the deed of trust was recorded before the appellee filed his petition aforesaid, or the suggestion therein referred to.

It is further argued, that the appellee has at least equal equity with the appellant, and the legal right, or at all events, a prior equity, and ought, therefore, to prevail in this controversy. If it can be said that he has equal equity, it cannot properly be said that he has the legal right. The law under which he claims expressly excepts an assignee for value and without notice: so that such an assignee and not the execution creditor has the legal right. As between them, there is no execution lien on the subject, and the debtor had the same right to make the assignment as if the execution never had issued.

The court is therefore of opinion that the appellant is entitled to the fund in controversy; and that the decree be reversed with costs, and the cause remanded to be further proceeded in accordingly.

Decree reversed.

---

163 *Averett's Adm'r v. Booker.

April Term, 1859. Richmond.

[76 Am. Dec. 203.]

Bill of Exchange—Case at Bar.*—The following is not a bill of exchange, nor does it import a valuable consideration, or a promise by the drawer to the payee to pay if the money is not paid by the drawee:

Lynchburg, December 8, 1852.

$1,080 59

The trustee of N. and A. will pay to B. the sum of one thousand and eighty dollars and fifty-nine cents, with interest from 15th March 1850, out of any moneys in his hands belonging to me.

W. B. A.

This was an action of assumpsit in the Circuit court of the city of Lynchburg, brought by William T. Booker against William B. Averett's administrator. The plaintiff declared upon the following paper, which he averred was made for value received.

Lynchburg, December 8, 1852.

$1,080 59

The trustee of Norvell and Averett will pay to William T. Booker the sum of one thousand and eighty dollars and fifty-nine cents, with interest from 1st of March 1850, out of any moneys in his hands belonging to me.

Wm. B. Averett.

On the trial of the cause, the plaintiff introduced in evidence the foregoing paper, and also proved that it was presented and not paid; and that there were no effects out of which the order could, at the time of the trial, be paid. And this being all the evidence in the cause, the court, at the instance of the plaintiff, instructed the jury that they might infer from the paper aforesaid, a consideration moving from the 164 plaintiff *to the defendant's intestate, which entitled him, without further evidence than the paper itself, to recover in this case.

To this opinion of the court the defendant excepted: And there having been a verdict and judgment against him, he applied to a judge of this court for a supersedeas; which was allowed.

---

*In Williamson v. Cline, 40 W. Va. 205, 20 S. E. Rep. 921, the principal case was cited as authority for the proposition that if an instrument recites that its promise is "for value received," these words are prima facie evidence of valuable consideration. See generally, monographic note on "Bills, Notes and Checks."

Digitized by Google

Green, for the appellant.
Garland, for the appellee.

LEE, J. The only question in this case is that raised by the instruction asked for by the defendant in error upon the trial. The declaration unlike that in Jackson v. Jackson, 10 Leigh 448, sufficiently avers a consideration for the draft or order which it describes, but as when it was produced at the trial no consideration was expressed upon its face and it was not stated to have been made "for value received," the question made was whether the jury could from the paper alone infer such a consideration moving from the defendant in error to the plaintiff's intestate as would entitle him to recover without further evidence.

If the order in question were good as a bill of exchange it cannot be questioned that the party might have recovered upon it without averring in his declaration or proving at the trial that any value had been received for it, as such a bill is presumed to stand on valuable consideration and prima facie to import it. Bayly on Bills, ch. 1, § 13, p. 40; Macleed v. Sneed, 2 Str. R. 762; Poplewell v. Wilson, 1 Id. 264; Philliskirk v. Blackwell, 2 Maule & Sel. 395; Wilson v. Codman's ex'or, 3 Cranch's R. 193, 207; Hatch v. Trayes, 11 Adolph & El. 702; 39 Eng. C. L. R. 207; Jones v. Jones, 6 Mees. & Welsb. 84; Bayly on Bills, ch. 9, p. 390; Coombe v. Ingram, 4 Dowl. & Ryl. 211. But I think it clear that this paper cannot 165 be regarded as *a bill of exchange, nor as carrying with it the exemption pertaining to that class of securities from the necessity of both averring and proving a sufficient consideration as the condition of recovering upon it. To constitute a good bill of exchange, the sum to be paid must not only be in money and certain in amount, but it must be payable absolutely and at all events. If it be payable out of a particular fund or upon an event which is contingent, or if it be otherwise conditional, it is not in contemplation of law a bill of exchange. Roberts v. Peake, 1 Burr. R. 323; Carlos v. Fancourt, 5 T. R. 482; Chitty on Bills, ch. 5, p. 152 et seq.; Bayly on Bills, ch. 1, § 6, p. 16 et seq.; Story on Bills, § 46; Crawford v. Bully, Wrights R. 453; Van Vacter v. Flack, 1 Smedes & Marsh. R. 393; Hamilton v. Myrick, 3 Pike's R. 541. Here, the sum to be paid is not payable absolutely and at all events. It is payable out of a particular fund to wit the moneys, if any, in the hands of the drawee belonging to the drawer. The draft therefore cannot be treated as a bill of exchange, nor can a recovery be had upon it as such.

So, again, if the paper in question contained an express promise to pay the sum mentioned upon which an action of debt might be maintained under our statute, I incline to think that the recovery might be had without further proof of consideration. If debt would lie upon the paper, it would be evidence of such indebtedness as would be a sufficient consideration for the promise to pay in the action of assumpsit. The case of Jackson v. Jackson, above cited, so far as it is of any authority, having been decided by a court equally divided, shows that it is not necessary in such a case even to aver a consideration. For the declaration without averring such consideration was sustained by the court below, and that judgment was affirmed by the division of this court. But it is unnec-

166 essary *to go into this question in this case, because whilst the declaration in all its counts sufficiently avers a consideration, it is not pretended that the paper offered in evidence contained any thing that could by any construction be held to be an express promise to pay the sum of money mentioned in it. And not being a bill of exchange, no promise is raised by law in favor of the payee against the drawer from the failure of the drawee to accept or to pay. Josceline v. Lasserre, Fortesc. R. 281; S. C. 10 Mod. R. 294, 316; Jenny v. Herle, 1 Stra. R. 591; S. C. 2 Ld. Raym. R. 1361; Haydock v. Lynch, 2 Ld. Raym. R. 1563; Banbury v. Lisset, 2 Stra. R. 1211; Dawkes v. DeLorane, 3 Wils. R. 207; S. C. 2 Wm. Black. R. 782; Nichols' adm'r v. Davis, 1 Bibbs' R. 490; Mershon v. Withers, Id. 503; Carlisle v. Dubree, 3 J. J. Marsh. R. 542.

The case of Jolliffe v. Higgins, 6 Munf. 3, might seem at first blush from the reporter's syllabus of the point decided, to be somewhat in conflict with the principles above stated; but upon closer examination, I think the decision will be found to be in perfect harmony with them and to be abundantly sustained upon the case itself. No reasons are assigned by the court for affirming the judgment, but upon the report of the case, I think we can see ample grounds on which to vindicate its correctness without disturbing any of the principles to which I have adverted. The action was assumpsit and the declaration counted specially on the draft or order set out, and also for money had and received by the defendant to the use of the plaintiff. The plea was the general issue; and at the trial, the defendant demurred to the evidence. This consisted of the draft or order described in the declaration by which the drawer (the defendant) directed the drawee (Waite) to pay to the plaintiff the sum of one hundred and eight dollars and eighty-five cents which the order stated he (the drawer) had 167 lodged in the hands of the *drawee and was the property of the payee as guardian, &c., with proof of non-payment by the drawee, and protest therefor, and notice to the drawer; and also that the drawer had never deposited any such funds or other funds whatsoever with the drawee. Now, I do not think it by any means clear that the order was not good as a bill of exchange. Mr. Wickham for the plaintiff in error, it is true, contended that it was not because it was not made payable to order, and was drawn on a particular fund; and this Mr. Leigh appears to have conceded. Formerly it was doubted whether it was not essential to the character of a bill of exchange that it should be payable, e. g. to A or his order or to bearer. But it is now well settled that it is not essential to the character either of a bill of exchange or of a promissory note that it should be negotiable. Chadwick v. Allen, Str. R. 706; Smith v. Kendall, 6 T. R. 123; The King v. Box, 6 Taunt. R. 325; Burchell v. Slocock, 2 Ld. Raym. R. 1545; Bayly on Bills, ch. 1, § 10, p. 33; Chitty on Bills, ch. 5, p. 181; Story on Bills, § 69. And it may with great force be contended that the order to pay was neither conditional nor restricted to any particular fund, but as well as can be ascertained from the statement of the case, was absolute and unconditional to pay the amount. It is true it was added that the drawer had lodged the amount in the hands of the drawee and that it was the property of the payee. Whether this statement was true or false would not affect the character of the order. The theory of every bill of exchange is that the drawer has funds in the hands of the drawee subject to his order, and whether this be true or false the character of the bill is the same. See Story on Bills, § 13. The reason given for making the draft would not necessarily change the absolute character of the order, or whether true or false, effect its legal character and incidents. It would 168 seem to fall *rather within a class of cases which are carefully distinguished from those in which the order is to pay out of a particular fund, although at first glance they might seem to be of them. Thus a bill drawn by a freighter payable to a person entitled to receive the freight "on account of freight," is good, for it is not payable out of a particular fund but merely shows to what account it is to be applied or what is the value that has been received. Pierson v. Dunlop, Cowp. R. 571. So a bill for money as "the drawer's quarter's half pay by advance" is good; for it is not payable out of a particular fund but is to be paid in advance; and will be payable whether the half pay ever become due or not. Macleed v. Snee, 2 Stra. R. 762. And so specifying the fund in any other manner out of which the value was received for which the bill is drawn will not vitiate the bill; thus stating "value received out of the premises in Rosemary Lane," or "being a portion of a value, as under, deposited in security of payment hereof;" or "on account of wine had by me" (the drawer); or "being so such due by me to A. at Lady-day next." In these cases the bill is not payable out of a particular fund, but it only specifies the value received and the occasion of the draft. See Haussoullier v. Hartsinck, 7 T. R. 733. Bayly on Bills, p. 18; Story on Bills, § 47.

Digitized by Google

But if the order could not be treated as a bill of exchange, certainly from its terms it might be fairly and legitimately inferred that the defendant had had in his hands money belonging to the plaintiff which he had failed to pay over to him and which he falsely pretended by the order he had lodged in Waite's hand for him. The amount therefore would clearly be recoverable in an action for money had and received and the demurrer to the evidence could not avail the defendant.

The court may therefore have 169 thought either that *the order in this case was good as a bill of exchange, or that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the second count of the declaration, and that the judgment was therefore right, and should be affirmed.

All contracts by our law must be either contracts by specialty or contracts by parol. If not by sealed instruments, they are parol whether verbal or in writing, and if in writing, whatever may be the rule of the civil law, or whatever the doubt created by the remarks of Lord Mansfield and Justice Wilmot in Pillans v. Mierop, 3 Burr. R. 1668 et seq., there must be in general a sufficient consideration to support them, just as if they were proved by parol evidence only. The authorities for this proposition are numerous and familiar, and I deem it unnecessary to stop to cite any. Commercial paper and perhaps promises in writing for the payment of money on which debt would lie under our statute, constitute exceptions to the rule, but otherwise it is universal and pervading. Accordingly, the defendant in error recognizing the rule and its applicability to this case, asked the court to instruct the jury that they might infer the consideration from the paper itself, and the court gave the instruction asked. The whole case then is resolved into the enquiry whether the paper does of itself, furnish proof of a legal promise and a sufficient consideration?

Now I apprehend that a paper of this character can only be said to furnish such proof, where the consideration is stated in it or it is stated to be for value received, or some equivalent, or where the terms in which it is expressed are inconsistent with any other theory than that it was upon a consideration. If those terms are just as consistent with the theory of a total want of consideration as they are with that of its existence, it would seem impossible to say that they afford such a legal presumption that the paper was founded on a con-
170 sideration as would justify the jury *in finding it as a fact. In the paper in question, no consideration is stated nor is the draft stated to be made "for value received," nor are any equivalent terms used showing that it was made for a consideration. And taking all the terms of the paper together they are at least as consistent with the theory of an absence of all consideration as they are with that of any value received. The terms of the order would admit equally well of several different constructions. The drawer might have known that he had just such a sum in the hands of the drawee and intended merely to give authority to the latter to deliver the same to the payee for him. Or without knowing whether the trustee had received funds for him or not, might have merely given the order if he had, to authorize the payee to receive them for him as his agent. The counsel for the defendant in error, it is true, asserts that the order was drawn at a time and at a place at which the plaintiff's intestate might have as conveniently drawn his funds from the hands of the drawee himself as Booker the payee could do it for him. Nothing of this however appears in the record, nor does it appear, as is also alleged, that the intestate was a partner of the firm of Norvell & Averett. If these facts would have influenced the case they were not before the jury, there being, as has been stated, no evidence whatever except the order itself and proof of non-payment, and that there were no effects out of which it could be paid. So, it is perfectly inconsistent with the terms of the order, that it may have been drawn for the purpose of loaning the amount to the payee if the drawer had the funds in the hands of the drawee, or of making a gift to him of the amount if it could be had. Either of these hypotheses and others that might be suggested are just as reasonable as that insisted on by the defendant in error that the order was given in discharge of a 171 debt due him from *the payee; and I cannot think the circumstance that the order calls for interest on the sum named from a given day is of such conclusive import as is attributed to it by the counsel. Whilst it is strictly consistent with the existence of a debt that was thereby settled, it is not inconsistent with either of the other hypotheses suggested.

Digitized by Google

The court having given the instruction asked for, ignored all the other hypotheses than that of a debt due to the payee from the drawer or of value received by the latter; and as the jury were told they might infer a consideration from the paper itself, they could only regard it as peremptory to them to make that inference, because if they might infer it, it was their duty to infer it; and to say that they might infer it was equivalent to saying that they must infer it because it was a matter not depending on the weight of evidence or force of circumstance but simply upon the legal import of the paper itself.

I think the Circuit court erred in giving the instruction asked for, and am of opinion to reverse the judgment.

ALLEN, P., and DANIEL, J., concurred in the opinion of Lee, J.

MONCURE, J., concurred in the result.

Judgment reversed.

---

172 *Monteith, Sheriff, & als. v. The Commonwealth.

April Term, 1859, Richmond.

1. Sheriff—Motion against—Allegations of Notice.—On motion against a sheriff and his sureties for his failure to pay the taxes due to the commonwealth, it is not necessary that the notice should state on what bond of the sheriff the motion will be made.

2. Same—Bond of—Recitals in—Case at Bar.—M is elected sheriff of S in May 1854, and gives bond as such. In July 1856 he gives bond under the act of March 15th, 1856, extending the time for which sheriffs should hold office, to January 1st, 1857. In May 1856 he is re-elected sheriff for a regular term of two years commencing the 1st of January 1857: but he does not give his official bond under that election within sixty days from his election nor until the 12th of January 1857, when it is executed by himself and his sureties. This bond recites his election for two years from the 1st of January 1857, is acknowledged in open court and ordered to be recorded: and M is permitted by the court to qualify as sheriff and act as such. HELD: whether the court below erred in holding the notice in this case fatally defective. The notices in such cases, as in notices for judgments of any kind, are treated with great indulgence by the courts. The purpose of such a notice as the present one is to acquaint the defendants with the grounds on which the plaintiff proposes to proceed against the defendants, and all that is required in such notice is that it should be so plain that the defendants cannot mistake the objects of the motion, however it may be wanting in form and technical accuracy. As showing the great indulgence with which such notices are dealt, I would refer to the cases of Monteith v. Com., 15 Gratt. 172, and Supervisors v. Dunn, 27 Gratt. 608, in which cases it was held on motions against the sheriff and his sureties, because of his failure to account for taxes, it was not even necessary to state in the notice on what bond of the sheriff the motion will be made. In the first of these cases, ALLEN, P., says: 'The notice is of a motion against the sheriff and others, his sureties, for certain taxes due from said sheriff for 1857. No particular bond is described, but it was incumbent on the commonwealth to show at the trial that the said sheriff, with the persons named as his sureties, had duly executed a bond for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office for that year.' The sheriff's bond in the case before us, while there is a failure to state its contents, except by saying it was 'a bond as sheriff of Hancock county,' is fully identified by its dates and otherwise. It is obvious that this failure to specify the contents of the bond does not make a notice defective, for calling it a bond given as sheriff makes it so plain that the defendants cannot mistake the bond on which he is proceeding, and they sufficiently know its contents by its being called a sheriff's bond. Under the liberality of the court in reference to notices, it would seem unwise to attempt much accuracy or particularity; for, if the notice descends to particulars as to dates, sums, and names, the document referred to must, when produced, correspond with the notice, though, of course, such particularity would not vitiate a notice. See Drew v. Anderson, 1 Call 51; Cookes v. Bank, 1 Leigh 433. Any danger of this sort would be avoided by a more general description, provided it be not so vague that what is intended may be mistaken. See Graves v. Webb, 1 Call 443; Segouine v. Auditor, 4 Munf. 398; Steptoe v. Same, 3 Rand. (Va.) 221; Supervisors v. Dunn, 27 Gratt. 612; Board, etc., v. Parsons, 22 W. Va. 308; Lemoigne v. Montgomery, 5 Call 528; Booth v. Kinsey, 8 Gratt. 560; Hendricks v. Shoemaker, 3 Gratt. 197; White v. Sydenstricker, 6 W. Va. 46." ...

---

*Sheriff—Motion against—Allegations of Notice.—In Shepherd v. Brown, 30 W. Va. 19, 3 S. E. Rep. 189, it is said: "It only remains for us to determine

Digitized by Google

1. Same—De Facto—Liability.†—If M is not sheriff de jure, he is sheriff de facto, and as such is bound for his acts.
2. Same—Bond of—Recitals in—Sureties Estopped to Deny.‡—The sureties of M in his last bond are estopped by the recitals thereof, from saying M was not sheriff, and the bond is binding upon them.
3. Same—Re-election—Case at Bar.—M having professed to enter upon his office and act under his last election, it cannot be held that he continued to hold over and act under his first election, on the ground that his successor had not qualified, so as to subject his sureties in the previous bonds.
3. Appellate Practice—Motion—Sheriff—Case at Bar.—The notice to the sheriff and his sureties being of a motion for a balance of the land, property and free negro taxes of 1857, and the judgment being for a balance due upon these and also for the license tax; this is error for which the judgment will be reversed in the appellate court.

This was a motion by the commonwealth, in the Circuit court of the city of Richmond, against James Monteith, sheriff of Stafford county, and twelve others as his sureties, for the recovery of a balance of the 173 *land, property and free negro taxes of 1857, due from Monteith. The facts are stated by Judge Allen in his opinion. There was judgment in favor of the commonwealth for seven thousand three hundred and fifty dollars and sixty-one cents, with twelve per cent. interest thereon from the 13th of September 1858 until paid, and one thousand one hundred and two dollars and fifty-nine cents damages. And the defendants having excepted, and put the facts upon the record, applied to this court for a supersedeas; which was allowed.

Wellford and Marye, for the appellants.
The Attorney General, for the commonwealth.

ALLEN, P. On the 29th day of April 1858 the auditor of public accounts notified the plaintiff in error, James Monteith, as sheriff of Stafford county, and the other plaintiffs in error as his sureties, that instructions would be given to the attorney general to move against them for the balance of the land, property and free negro taxes of 1857, due from James Monteith, sheriff of Stafford county; also for damages, &c.

The plaintiffs in error appeared, and objected to the legality of the motion, and moved to dismiss it: 1st, because it did not appear from the notice on what bond the motion was made; 2d, that if made on the bond executed on the 12th of January 1857, the said bond was illegally taken, because the same was not executed within the time limited by law for the taking thereof. The motion was overruled, an exception taken, and in the bill of exceptions the facts, as agreed upon the trial, were set out.

From these it appeared that the attorney general exhibited an account, which charged Monteith, sheriff of said county, "to 174 balance of land, property, free *negro and September license taxes of 1857, $7350 61, interest at 12 per cent. from 13th September 1858." Also, an affidavit of service of the notice on all the plaintiffs in error. One of the parties to whom the notice was directed, was dead, as appeared from the affidavit. It further appeared, that James Monteith was elected sheriff of said county in May 1854, and executed his official bond on the 10th of July following. That on the 14th day of July 1856 he gave another bond, in pursuance of the act of March 15th, 1856, continuing the term of office to which he was elected in May 1854, until the 1st of January 1857; that in May 1856 he was re-elected sheriff of said county for a regular term of two years, commencing the 1st of January 1857; and that no other than said bond of the 14th of July 1856 was given by him after his re-election in May 1856 until the 12th of January 1857, on which day he executed the bond of that date, which was signed by the plaintiffs in error and the security since deceased. The condition of this bond recites, that said

---

See also, Board Supervisors v. Dunn, 27 Gratt. 612; Board v. Parsons, 22 W. Va. 312, citing and following the principal case.

†Officers—De Facto—Validity of Acts.—In Roche v. Jones, 87 Va. 487, 12 S. E. Rep. 965, it is said: "It is alleged that Councilman A. D. Wallace, who voted for the ordinance, had, about two weeks before its passage, moved his residence beyond the corporate limits of the town, and had thereby vacated his office of councilman; and that, consequently, his vote was a nullity. But this is a non sequitur; as Wallace had continued to exercise his office as councilman, and to discharge its functions, until 1st July, 1889, when his successor qualified. He was a de facto councilman, and his acts, as such, were valid and binding. Monteith, Sheriff, v. Commonwealth, 15 Gratt. 172; Griffin's Ex'or v. Cunningham, 20 Gratt. 40; McCraw v. Williams, 33 Gratt. 513; Blackwell on Tax Titles, p. 100-103."

‡Bonds—Recitals in—Estoppel.—For the proposition that the obligors of a bond are estopped to deny the recitals thereof, the principal case is cited and followed in the following cases: Findley v. Findley, 42 W. Va. 381, 26 S. E. Rep. 436; B. & O. R. Co. v. Vanderwarker, 19 W. Va. 270; Pannill v. Calloway, 78 Va. 395; Chapman v. Com., 25 Gratt. 721, and note; Gibson v. Beckham, 16 Gratt. 321, and note.

See, in accord, Cox v. Thomas, 9 Gratt. 320; Bank v. Fleshman, 22 W. Va. 317; Cecil v. Early, 10 Gratt. 198; Franklin v. Depriest, 13 Gratt. 257, and note; Hoke v. Hoke, 3 W. Va. 561; Pratt v. Wright, 13 Gratt. 175, and note; Wynn v. Harman, 5 Gratt. 157; Taylor v. King, 6 Munf. 358; Cordle v. Burch, 10 Gratt. 480; Board of Supervisors v. Dunn, 27 Gratt. 608; 4 Min. Inst. (3d Ed.) part 2, p. 1120. See monographic note on "Official Bonds" appended to Sangster v. Com., 17 Gratt. 124; also, monographic note on "Estoppel" appended to Bowen v. McCormick, 23 Gratt. 310.

In Childrey v. Rady, 77 Va. 534, the principal case is distinguished. In Griffin v. Macaulay, 7 Gratt. 476, it is held, that a trust deed to secure creditors, reciting the amount of the debts due to the different creditors is not conclusive, even as against the grantor and his administrator of the amount of the respective debts.

Digitized by Google

James Monteith hath been elected sheriff of the county of Stafford for the term of two years, commencing from the 1st of January 1857. The bond appears to have been acknowledged in open court, and ordered to be recorded. The parties also agreed that there was a balance of land, property, free negro and license taxes for the year 1857, unpaid and due by said Monteith, amounting to the sum of seven thousand three hundred and fifty dollars and sixty-one cents. It was further agreed, that there should be no formal pleadings, but that the plaintiffs in error might avail themselves of all legal defences to the commonwealth's motion.

On these facts the court entered judgment, that the commonwealth should recover against the plaintiffs in error seven thousand three hundred and fifty dollars 175 *and sixty-one cents, the balance of the land, property and free negro taxes of 1857, due from said Monteith, sheriff as aforesaid, with interest, damages and costs.

The first objection, that the notice did not show on what bond the motion was made, was properly overruled. The notice is of a motion against the sheriff and others, his sureties, for certain taxes due from the said sheriff for 1857. No particular bond is described, but it was incumbent on the commonwealth to show at the trial that the said sheriff, with the persons named as sureties, had duly executed a bond for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office for that year.

The main question upon this branch of the case is, whether the bond of the 12th of January 1857 was a valid obligation.

The constitution, art. vi, sec. 30, provides, that the voters of each county shall elect a sheriff, who shall hold office for the term of two years; and the 23d section of the same article directs that all officers, whether elected or appointed, shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices after their terms of service have expired, until their successors are qualified. And art. v, § 38, provides, that the manner of conducting elections and making returns of elections, of determining contested elections, and of filling vacancies in office in cases not specially provided for in the constitution, shall be prescribed by law. And the general assembly may declare the cases in which any office shall be deemed vacant, where no provision is made for that purpose in the constitution.

To carry out in part these constitutional regulations, the legislature, by an act passed April the 22d, 1852, Sess. Acts, p. 64, ch. 71, directed that the voters of each county should, on the fourth Thursday in May, elect a sheriff, whose term of office, by the 18th section of said act, was to 176 commence on the first day of *July next succeeding the election, and to continue for two years. By the 7th section, the officer conducting the election at the court-house, within five days from the commencement of the election, was to examine the poll, ascertain the result, and declare the person to whom the greatest number of votes were given, to be elected. By the 8th section, the officer conducting the election is to make true return of the sheriff elected; which shall be handed to the clerk of the County or Corporation court, to be filed in his office. The 9th section provides, that the return shall be subject to the enquiry, determination and judgment of the County court, upon complaint made in the mode designated of undue election or false return; prescribes how contested elections shall be proceeded in, and that the court, in judging of said elections, is to proceed on the merits thereof, and determine finally concerning the same, according to the constitution and laws. By the 10th section, the court is to proceed, at the first session after the complaint of an undue election or false return is made, to determine said contest without a jury, unless good cause be shown for a continuance. By the 14th section, whenever a vacancy shall occur in said office, the County court shall order a writ of election to supply the said vacancy. And by the 19th section, it is enacted that before entering upon the discharge of his duty, the person elected shall take the oaths of office prescribed by the Code, and give such official bond as is required of him; that he shall take such oaths and give such bond in the proper court within sixty days after his election; and if he fails so to do, his office shall be deemed vacant. But his qualification, unless he be elected to fill a vacancy, shall not be deemed to take effect before the first day of July next after his election.

The act of March 15th, 1856, changing the time at which the term of office 177 shall commence, made no *alteration as to the time of the election or the period thereafter within which bond was to be given.

In this case, the bond upon which the parties were notified not having been executed until the 12th of January 1857, more than sixty days after the election, a question arises whether there was then any authority to take it, or whether the obligors can be permitted to allege that the same was invalid. Upon the provisions of the constitution and laws referred to, the attorney general insists that until the County court has actually adjudged or determined that the title to the office of sheriff, derived from the election of the voters, has been forfeited by the failure to qualify and give the official bond, he is still, to all intents, in office, and may rightfully qualify; and if he does so, his title to the office cannot be questioned in any proceeding thereafter. The law in this respect adopts the terms of the constitution, which empowers the general assembly to declare the cases in which any office shall be deemed vacant; and there is much force in the argument that the word "deemed" here should be taken in the sense of adjudged or determined by that authority which is to determine whether there has been an undue election or false return, upon proper complaint made, and which is required to order a new writ of election when a vacancy occurs in the office. It can hardly be supposed that the legislature intended to make the omission to give bond within sixty days after the election, work an absolute forfeiture of the title in every supposable case. The title to the office is derived from the election by the voters. The declaration of the officer conducting the election and his certificate are merely evidences of the fact of an election, and do not affect the validity of the title conferred by such election. If the officer conducting the election, and whose duty it is, within five days from the commencement of the election, to examine the 178 *poll, ascertain the result, and declare the person for whom the greatest number of votes have been given, to be duly elected, should neglect or refuse to perform this duty within the sixty days, his default should not operate to forfeit the title of the person elected to the office. So, if an election should be contested, the court may, for good cause shown, continue the controversy from term to term. If so continued, the controversy would generally continue beyond the sixty days. In such case, if the contest should be determined in favor of the party returned as elected, his omission to give the bond within sixty days after the election, would not, as it seems to me, forfeit his title. In these and perhaps other instances it would seem that justice to the party elected requires that the law should be so construed as to allow some extension of the time beyond the sixty days. The legislature, however, in the clause under consideration, has used this word "deemed" twice, and in the last instance, certainly in the sense of to look upon, regard, hold, take. The clause declares that if he fail to take the oaths and give the bond within sixty days after his election, his office shall be deemed vacant, but his qualification shall not be deemed to take effect before the 1st of July next after the election. No adjudication or determination was contemplated by the use of the word in the last member of the sentence.

Digitized by Google

The act passed March 30th, 1858, Sess. Acts, p. 17, ch. 20, entitled an act providing for general elections, &c., uses the same terms, and in reference to other officers. The 56th section thereof, for instance, provides that the office of judge shall be deemed vacant not only when he dies, resigns, or is removed from office, but also when he fails to qualify within thirty days next after he receives his commission; thus seeming to treat the failure to qualify within the thirty days, as creating a vacancy to 179 the same extent as when *the vacancy is caused by death, resignation or removal from office. The succeeding section provides, that when there shall be such vacancy in the office, the governor shall make known the fact, by proclamation, within ten days after the fact shall come to his knowledge, &c.—the words "such vacancy" referring to a vacancy produced by any of the causes enumerated in the preceding section.

Under these various provisions of the constitution and laws, questions of great importance may arise as to the proper construction of this term, as used in the constitution, and adopted in the laws to carry the constitution into effect. The case under consideration, it seems to me, may be correctly decided on other grounds upon which I prefer to place it, as it was argued before the vacancy on the bench was filled.

Was not Monteith, after he gave bond and entered upon the discharge of the duties of the office, sheriff de facto? If he were not in all respects an officer de jure, because of the failure to qualify and give the bond in the time prescribed, was he a mere usurper, undertaking to act without any pretence or color of right? This cannot be maintained upon the facts in this record. He had been regularly elected; from that election he derived his title to the office; no commission was necessary to perfect it; the law required none; and in practice no commission issues. The subsequent steps of the officer conducting the election are only intended to authenticate the fact of such election, and the qualification and bond do not confer the office, but are preliminaries to his entering upon the discharge of the duties of the office to which he has been elected. Asserting such title to the office, he executed and acknowledged the bond required by law, before the tribunal authorized to take the official bond of sheriffs. The condition of the bond so executed recites that he hath been elected sheriff of 180 the *county of Stafford for the term of two years, commencing from the 1st of January 1857; and binds him to the faithful discharge of the duties of his office aforesaid, according to law: Thus showing that he claimed to act under the title conferred on him by election, and gave bond to execute the duties of the office to which he asserted a legal right.

It was held in the case of The King v. Lisle, Andrews' R. 164 (S. C. 2 Stra. R. 1090), that in order to constitute a mayor de facto, it is necessary that there should be some color of an election. In The Town of Plymouth v. Painter, 17 Conn. R. 585, a person eligible to the office of grand juror, was in October duly chosen a grand juror for the following year. He refused to take the oath prescribed, and was fined according to law for such refusal. He paid the fine, and in the month of May afterwards took the oath and exercised the functions of a grand juror, by making a presentment and prosecuting it. In a suit between third parties, in which the validity of his official acts came in question, it was held that he was an officer de facto, and his acts as such were valid. It was insisted there, if a person chosen does not accept and qualify, the office becomes vacant; but the court held, that although it might not be easy in all cases to determine what ought to be considered as constituting a colorable right to an office, so as to ascertain whether one is a mere usurper, there was a fair color of right in the person acting as grand juror to exercise that office, whether he was legally entitled or not. He was plainly more than a mere usurper; he was legally appointed; was eligible, and claiming a right to act under his appointment, took the oath prescribed. These, if nothing had intervened, would have been sufficient to confer a complete title to the office; and even if his previous refusal to take the oath disqualified him from doing so afterwards, this effect was not *so palpable as to deprive him of a fair color of right to exercise the office. There was an observance of all the legal forms, and this clearly constituted a colorable title or apparent right.

Digitized by Google

181

In the case of The People v. Collins, 7 John. R. 549, a person was duly elected a commissioner of the highway for the ensuing year. The law provided that the commissioner, before he entered on the discharge of the duties of his office, and within fifteen days after his election, should take and subscribe the oath of office before some justice of the peace, who, within eight days thereafter, should certify the oath and deliver it to the town clerk; and that if he shall not take and subscribe such oath and deliver such certificate, such neglect shall be deemed a refusal to serve in such office; and the town may proceed to choose another. The commissioner chosen had not taken the oath, and filed the certificate according to the act. The commissioner having laid out a survey of a road, the town clerk refused to record it. Upon an application for a mandamus to compel him to record the survey, it was argued that if the person elected does not take the oath within fifteen days, it is a refusal to accept, and the office becomes vacant, so that a new election may be made, and that no quo warranto was necessary, because the act considers the office as vacant, and provides for filling it. But the court held, that if he acted without qualifying, he was liable to a penalty, or the town might choose new commissioners; but if the town did not, the subsequent acts were valid, so far as the rights of third persons and the public were concerned. He was commissioner de facto, since he came to the office by color of title.

In Fowler v. Beebee, 9 Mass. R. 231, it was objected that the sheriff whose deputy executed the writ, was not sheriff de jure, he having been appointed and commissioned some months before the law erecting the *county for which he was appointed, went into operation. The plea was overruled, because he was sheriff de facto, and his acts and those of his deputies were valid as to third persons. Upon an information against the same officers, it was decided in 10 Mass. R. 290, that their appointments were made without constitutional and legal authority.

182

The principle of these and the like cases, say the court in Wilcox v. Smith, 5 Wend. R. 231, is this, that a person coming into office by color of election or appointment, is an officer de facto, although it be conceded that his election or appointment was invalid; or I may add, although by neglecting or refusing to qualify, the law treats the office as so far vacant as to provide for filling it by a new appointment.

And this is a sufficient answer to the argument, that if a sheriff coming into office under color of an illegal election, is to be treated as an officer de facto, a mere stranger, if permitted to qualify, might intrude himself into the office. Such a person would be a mere usurper, and his acts void. There being but one mode of acquiring the title to the office, to wit, by election, where it appeared that no such claim of title is preferred, the act of qualification would confer no right, for no title is thereby acquired; and the court or tribunal permitting it would be acting not under authority of law, but without law, and the act would be not voidable, but wholly void.

The provision in the constitution, that officers shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices until their successors are qualified, does not affect the question in the present case. He had been elected sheriff in 1854, and continued in office, by virtue of said election, or by executing a new bond, as provided for by the act of March 15th, 1856, postponing the commencement of the term from the 1st of July to the 1st of January next after the election. *By asserting his title to office under his last election, and giving bond, he admitted he was not in office under his previous election. There could be but one sheriff, and by assuming office under color of the last election, the office was full, and filled by him, either de jure or de facto, under his last election. Nor, as it seems to me, would the case have been varied, if a stranger had preceded him. The return of the election is to be made to the clerk of the county, to be filed in his office. The returns of the election are subject to the enquiry, determination and judgment of the County court, where there is a complaint made in the mode prescribed. It hears and determines contested elections; it passes upon the sufficiency of the sureties offered; it receives and orders to be recorded the official bond. It must ascertain whether a vacancy exists before it can order a writ of election to supply it. Even if the law declaring that the office should be deemed vacant upon a failure to give bond within sixty days, be mandatory and not directory, and it was the duty of the court to have ordered a new writ, still it was not done. On the contrary, they recognized the title preferred; and so recognizing it, though it be conceded they erred, they were acting within the scope of their authority, and their act is not void. It must be respected; and the person so admitted into office, upon title claimed to be derived from regular election, and, as in this case, admitted to have been asserted under such election, can only be ousted by a quo warranto, the proper proceeding to try the validity of the title to an office. Town of Plymouth v. Painter, 17 Conn. R. 585. It would be oppressive on the preceding sheriff and his sureties, if they were required to ascertain at their peril whether his successor had been regularly inducted into office by the officers or courts to whom this duty was confided by law. The duty of the preceding sheriff is at an end 184 when a successor *claiming to be duly elected is inducted into the office, through the agency of the proper officers and tribunals charged with this duty.

183

Digitized by Google

In Harris v. Jays, Cro. Eliz. 699, it was conceded by the court, that if one being created bishop, the former bishop not being deprived or removed, admits one to a benefice, the act is good and not avoidable, for that the law favors one in a reputed authority. There was in fact a bishop de jure, yet respect was paid to the act of another, who was inducted into office claiming under the color of a proper appointment. 16 Vin. Abr. tit. Offices, G. 4; O'Brian v. Knivan, Cro. Jac. 552. Treating him as sheriff de facto, his acts are valid as respects the rights of third persons who have an interest in them, and as concerns the public in order to prevent a failure of justice. Such is the case of public officers, who are such de facto, acting under color of office, by an election not strictly legal, or without having qualified themselves by the requisite tests, or by holding over after the period prescribed for a new appointment, as in case of sheriffs, constables, &c. 2 Kent 345 (295 mar.), and the cases before referred to; and Jones v. Gibson, 1 N. Hamp. R. 266; The Margate Pier v. Hannam, 5 Eng. C. L. R. 278.

If then the sheriff is in office as sheriff de facto, it is not for him to deny the validity of his title, or to say that he is not sheriff de jure, or that the court had no authority to take his bond. When the court recognized the validity of his title, whether they erred or not, they were acting within their jurisdiction in requiring the bond; for the law makes it the duty of the court to take such bond from the sheriffs elected. The title by election so recognized subsists until the party is ousted; and while it does exist, the court may rightfully require the bond. Whenever it is conceded that he is sheriff de facto, it is also conceded that the 185 *office is full. He cannot deny that he is sheriff de jure; and conceding him to be in office, the law makes it the duty of the court to require bond. In this case, there is no question that the bond is in proper form, taken by the proper tribunal, and shows that it was given by him as sheriff for a specified term for which he was elected. It would be most unjust to the public, and to individuals who must rely on this bond as their security for the due performance of the duties of his office, to permit him now to controvert the truth of his own assertions. Nor can I perceive any better ground upon which the securities can stand. If the bond is valid as to him, it is equally so as to them. The fact of election is proved by the recital in the condition, and admitted in the agreement of facts. And the recital shows the bond was taken and received by virtue of such title; and this, it seems to me, they are estopped from denying, even if the agreement of facts did not show the election.

The cases referred to, and relied upon in the argument, do not establish any principle at variance with the proposition above maintained.

In the United States v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheat. R. 720, the validity of the bond was not in question. The law authorized the president, in the recess of the senate, to make appointments, by granting commissions which should expire at the end of the next session. Bond with surety was given under this commission. Afterwards, a new appointment, by and with the consent of the senate, was made. The court held that the two commissions could not be considered as one continuing appointment; the acceptance of the last commission was a virtual superseding and surrender of the former; and that the liability of the sureties was confined to the duration of the first commission.

In the case under consideration,
186 the sureties are liable *for the discharge of the duties of the office for the term for which the bond recites he was elected, and thereafter until a successor qualifies.

In Branch v. Commonwealth, 2 Call 570, the condition of the bond was for the collection of taxes imposed by an act of assembly recited in the condition of the bond. This law had expired. No taxes were collectible under it, and the liability of the sureties could not be extended beyond their undertaking, to taxes collected under a subsequent law. No question as to the validity of the bond or the effect of a recital as estopping the parties, was decided. The sureties stood upon the letter of the bond.

In Stuart v. Lee, governor, 3 Call 421, the law directed that the bond should be payable to the justices, and that the penalty should be one thousand pounds. The bond was taken, payable to the governor, in the penalty of ten thousand pounds. The suit was brought in the name of the governor at the relation of the party injured. It was a suit under an act of assembly authorized to be brought on certain bonds given under statutes. The court held, that as the statute required a bond in the penalty of one thousand pounds, payable to the justices, this was not such a bond as the act required; and being sued on as a bond taken under the act, the action could not be maintained.

In the case under consideration, the bond is taken in a proper penalty, and payable to the proper party, and so conforms to the law.

In The Commonwealth v. Jackson's ex'or, 1 Leigh 485, it appeared that there was no law authorizing the sergeant of the Hustings court of Williamsburg to collect public taxes, or the court to appoint a collector or take a bond from him. The court held, that such bond was not valid and obligatory on the surety. No reasons are assigned; but the bond was taken not only without authority of law, but against the policy 187 of *law; it was an unauthorized interference of the court with the collection of public revenue; a duty confided by law to officers designated by the law.

Digitized by Google

In our case, the County court is the tribunal to which the law confides the duty of taking the bond, and the bond is in furtherance of public policy.

The cases of Frazier v. Frazier's ex'ors, 2 Leigh 642, and Roberts v. Colvin, 3 Gratt. 358, merely decide that the parties could not be charged beyond the stipulations of their contract. The bonds did not conform to law, and did not extend to the liability asserted.

In none of these cases did the question of estoppel arise.

In the case of Cutler v. Dickinson, 8 Pick. R. 386, an administration bond given to a judge of probate, was offered in evidence, and the court held that the obligors were estopped by the recital in the bond to deny the appointment of the administrator; and in Allen v. Luckett, 3 J. J. Marsh. R. 165; Stockton v. Turner, 7 Id. 192; Kellar v. Beeler, 4 Id. 655; the parties were estopped from denying that there was such an injunction, judgment or decree as these bonds recited, although in all these cases the matter recited ought regularly to appear of record; and in Franklin's adm'r v. Depriest, 13 Gratt. 257, the official bond of an executor was made payable to four justices, one of whom was not a member of the court at the time. It was held that the sureties were estopped from averring that he was not a member of the court, as by their bond they acknowledged that the four persons to whom it was made payable, were justices of the County court then sitting.

Upon these authorities, it seems to me that the sureties as well as the principal would be estopped from denying the title by which the sheriff claimed his office. They acknowledged in the condition that he had been elected sheriff for said county 188 for the term of *two years, commencing from the 1st of January 1857, and bound themselves for his faithful discharge of the duties of his office aforesaid: the office of course to which he then had title by virtue of his election for a term of two years just commencing.

Upon the whole, I regard the bond as valid, and that the motion to dismiss was properly overruled.

But it seems to me there is error growing out of the variance between the notice and judgment and the proof, which must lead to a reversal, and a remanding of the case for a new trial. It was agreed that there should be no formal pleadings, but that the defendants might avail themselves of all legal defences to the motion. The parties agreed the facts, and the question was referred to the court whether any, and if any, what judgment should be rendered. The parties were notified that a motion would be made against them for the balance of the land, property and free negro taxes of 1857, &c., without specifying any amount. The account filed shows a balance of land, property, free negro and September license taxes of 1857, amounting to seven thousand three hundred and fifty dollars and sixty-one cents. By the facts agreed, it appears that there was a balance of land, property, free negro and license taxes for the year 1857, unpaid and due by the sheriff, amounting to seven thousand three hundred and fifty dollars and sixty-one cents; and the court rendered judgment for that sum, the balance of the land, property and free negro taxes of 1857, due from said sheriff, with interest, damages and costs. By the facts agreed, it would seem that the balance was made up of license taxes as well as of land, property and free negro taxes; but there is nothing to show what proportion of such balance was license taxes. It is most likely, as was suggested in argument, that the payments made, when applied to the license taxes, discharged them, 189 and that there may be *that balance of the other taxes due for the year 1857; and that if the subject had been adverted to on the trial, it could have been shown that such was the state of the case. There is, however, nothing in the record to enable the court to correct the error. As the notice did not claim any license taxes, and the judgment is pursuant thereto, it would not be a bar to another proceeding for the license taxes, and the facts agreed show a fatal variance between the notice and judgment and the proof. I think on this account the judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Allen, P.

Judgment reversed.

---

190 Ushers' Heirs v. Pride.

July Term, 1858, Lewisburg.

1. Evidence—Certificate of Auditor—Delinquent Land.—A certificate purporting to be made by the auditor of the state, in pursuance of the act of March 15, 1838, Sess. Acts, p. 16, § 7, of land forfeited for non payment of taxes, being in the usual form in which he certifies papers from his office, is evidence of the execution of such certificate, and of the official character of the paper, and also of the facts therein contained.

2. Same—Same—Statute—Retrospective Effect.†—Though such certificate was made in 1844, yet it having been offered in evidence in 1856, it is prima facie evidence, by the act, Code, ch. 176, § 4, p. 660

*This case and the next were decided at the July term 1858, of the court, but were not then directed to be reported. They are now published by the direction of the judges, at the request of members of the western bar.

†Evidence—Statute—Retrospective Effect.—See principal case cited and approved in James River, etc., Co. v. Littlejohn, 18 Gratt. 76.

Digitized by Google

though said act was passed after the certificate was made.

3. Taxation—Forfeiture of Lands—Redemption.‡—Lands returned delinquent for non-payment of taxes between 1820 and 1831, were forfeited by the act of April 1, 1831, Sup. R. C. p. 345, § 2, if not redeemed before the 1st of November 1833; and by subsequent acts the time was extended; but the forfeiture became complete on the 1st of October 1834; and the forfeiture was not released, unless the owner redeemed the land in the mode provided by statute.

4. Ejectment—Outstanding Title—Case at Bar.§ The heirs of a patentee of land forfeited for non-payment of taxes and not redeemed, cannot maintain ejectment for it against a party who has entered upon it peaceably, though the tenant has no title to the land.

This was an action of ejectment in the Circuit court of Wood county, brought in June 1841, by the lessee of the heirs of Thomas Usher, jr. and Abraham Usher against Jesse Pride, Burr Triplett and three others, to recover a tract of land of twenty-four hundred acres, separate parcels of which were held by each of the defendants. The cause came on to be tried in November 1856, as against Jesse Pride.

191 *The plaintiffs claimed under a patent from the commonwealth of Virginia, bearing date the 24th of July 1788, for fourteen hundred acres; and it was admitted by the defendant, that the lessors of the plaintiff were the heirs of Thomas and Abraham Usher, and that the land in controversy was included in the patent.

It appears from the evidence, that Thomas and Abraham Usher, the patentees, lived in Maryland, and that they died prior to 1800, and also that from 1839 to June 1845 some of the heirs were infants, and also that others were married women.

In 1816 some of the heirs came out to the county of Wood, and went upon the land within the boundary of the fourteen hundred acre patent, and claimed it as theirs, and rented a portion of it to a tenant for one year; and that this tenant went upon the land in the fall of 1816, and cultivated some twenty-five or thirty acres, which were cleared. That the same person who had been the tenant in 1816, in the years 1828 and 1829 took possession of the land by the permission of James Pugh, who professed to act as the agent of Ushers' heirs; and put up the fences, and pastured the fields with his hogs and cattle, there being no person residing thereon; and that this tenant professed to hold the land under Ushers' heirs. That in the years 1833 and 1834 a part of the land, but not that held by Pride, was occupied by a tenant, who leased it from James Pugh, who professed to act as the agent of Ushers' heirs. And that about the 1st of June 1835 one of these heirs moved out from the east to the county of Wood, and settled upon the land, on that part of it occupied by the last tenant, and remained upon it, claiming it as the land of Ushers' heirs, until February 1836, when he left it. And the tenants occupying the land had sufficient property thereon to pay the taxes for the years they were upon the land.

It appears further, that from 1800

192 to 1817, inclusive, *the land was not entered upon the commissioner's books for taxation in the names of the patentees, or their heirs, or of any person claiming under them. In 1818 it was so entered in the names of Abraham and Thomas Usher; and the land which had

---

‡Taxation—Forfeiture of Land—Redemption.—See principal case cited in Smith v. Tharp, 17 W. Va. 233, 239; Yokum v. Fickey, 37 W. Va. 773, 17 S. E. Rep. 322.

Same—Statutes Providing for Forfeiture of Land—Constitutional.—In State v. Sponaugle, 45 W. Va. 426, 32 S. E. Rep. 287, it was said: "How has this question of forfeiture for taxes been regarded by the Virginia courts? They have been unable to discover that it is not due process of law. It is true that in Kinney v. Beverley, 2 Hen. & M. 318, where the act of 1790 which provided that lands on which taxes should not be paid for three years 'shall be lost, forfeited and vested in the commonwealth,' JUDGE TUCKER did express the opinion that, without office found, the state could not take title, as it was only by record the king could take title; not definitely saying the act was invalid. JUDGE ROANE (than whom no one has a higher name among Virginia jurists) said, 'I cannot for a moment doubt the power of the legislature to pass the law in question;' and he said that no inquest of office was necessary, and that such a construction would defeat collection of revenue. JUDGE GREEN'S opinion does not mention the subject. So this case cannot be quoted (as it is sometimes) as against the validity of forfeiture acts, as it was decided on other points. In Wild v. Serpell, 10 Gratt. 405, it was held that 'the statutes of Virginia forfeiting land to the commonwealth for the failure of the owners to enter them upon the commissioner's books and pay taxes are constitutional,' and that title vested under them in the state without judgment, decree, or inquest of office. Several cases uphold the statute. Staats v. Board, 10 Gratt. 400; Levasser v. Washburn, 11 Gratt. 572; Smith v. Chapman, 10 Gratt. 445; Hale v. Branscum, 10 Gratt. 418; Usher v. Pride, 15 Gratt. 190. These cases are unsatisfactory, in not discussing the matter; but they do decide it, though in but one was it expressly mentioned. In Armstrong v. Morrill, 14 Wall. 120, the constitutional point was not discussed, but the Virginia forfeiture acts were recognized as operative. So it was settled in Virginia. In West Virginia, our courts, in many decisions, have recognized the Virginia decisions as binding authority. Twiggs v. Chevallie, 4 W. Va. 463; Smith v. Tharp, 17 W. Va. 221." See also, in accord, McClure v. Maitland, 24 W. Va. 576, and M'Clure v. Manperture, 29 W. Va. 641, 2 S. E. Rep. 765, citing as authority the same cases which are cited above.

Adversary Possession—Land Forfeited to State.—Actual possession of land forfeited to the state for nonpayment of taxes cannot divest the state's title. See principal case cited as authority for the proposition in Postlewaite v. Wise, 17 W. Va. 7; Smith v. Tharp, 17 W. Va. 231; Reusens v. Lawson, 91 Va. 244, 21 S. E. Rep. 347.

See also, monographic note on "Adversary Possession" appended to Nowlin v. Reynolds, 25 Gratt. 137.

§See generally, monographic note on "Ejectment."

Digitized by Google

been previously forfeited under the act of 1814, was redeemed in 1820. But the land never was entered on the commissioner's books in the name of the heirs of the patentees, nor in the name of any person claiming under the patentees, from the year 1837 to 1846, both inclusive, except for the year 1839.

The tenant offered in evidence two certificates, signed James E. Heath, auditor, dated in January 1844, and July 1845, stating the taxes due on the land from 1819 to 1837, both inclusive, and that no payment had been made in redemption of the land since 1818; and certifying that the land had been returned delinquent from the county of Wood for the years specified, in the names of Thomas and Abraham Usher, and was reported to the commissioner of forfeited and delinquent land for Wood county, for sale. To the introduction of this evidence the plaintiff objected; but the court overruled the objection; and he excepted.

The evidence being concluded, the tenant, by his counsel, moved the court to instruct the jury, "that taking the evidence so offered on behalf of the plaintiffs to prove all that it tends to prove, yet the evidence so offered on behalf of the plaintiffs, when considered in connection with the evidence offered by the defendant, does not prove and is not such a subsisting valid title, as entitles them to recover in this action." This instruction the court gave; and the plaintiffs excepted. And there having been a verdict and judgment for the defendant, the plaintiffs applied to this court for a supersedeas; which was awarded.

193 *Grattan, for the appellants, insisted:

1st. That the certificates of the auditor were improperly admitted as evidence. That the act, Sup. R. C. p. 348, § 7, under which they were admitted, does not apply where there are infants or femes covert, and that there were both in this case.

2d. That this land was not forfeited. If the jury might have made any reasonable inference, which would have prevented the forfeiture, the instruction in the form it was given is erroneous. That though the land was forfeited under the act of 1814, it was redeemed in 1820. That by the act of 1817, 2 Rev. Code, p. 559, § 2, land was no longer forfeited for non-payment of taxes; and it could not be forfeited prior to the act of 1831, which forfeited it on the 1st of January 1832; Sup. R. C. p. 345, § 2, 4: And prior to January 1832, the act of December 1831 was passed, which gave further time to pay the taxes; Sup. R. C. p. 356, § 1. Before that time expired, forfeiture for non-payment of taxes was abolished, and a lien upon the land was substituted for it. Sup. R. C. p. 359, § 3, 8. And he insisted further, that the jury might have reasonably inferred from the possession proved in 1833 and 1834, by the tenants of the plaintiffs, and from the possession of one of the heirs in June 1835, that they were in actual possession of the land on the 1st of April 1835, so as to prevent the forfeiture under the act of 1835, Sess. Acts 1834–5, p. 12, § 2.

3d. That as the patent gave the plaintiffs seizin in deed, and as they are proved to have had actual possession in 1816, 1828, 1829, 1833, 1834 and 1835–6, and as the defendant sets up no title in himself, but was a mere trespasser, he could not set up an outstanding title in a third person. Middleton v. Johns, 4 Gratt. 129; Tapscott v. Cobbs, 11 Gratt. 172; Doe *ex dem. Humphrey v. Martin, 41 Eng. C. L. 23; Doe ex dem. Leeming v. Skirrow, 34 Id. 64; Atkins v. Lewis, 14 Gratt. 30.

194

Fry, for the appellee, insisted:

1st. That the certificates of the auditor were properly admitted as evidence, under the act, Code, p. 661, § 4, act of 1850–51, p. 34; Burdett v. Taylor, 11 Leigh 339. That there was no proof that any of the plaintiffs were infants; and if some of them were femes covert, still as to all adult parties and parties sui juris, the certificates were admissible.

2d. That possession was sufficient to defeat a plaintiff who had no title. Adams Eject. 32; Moody v. McKim, 5 Munf. 374. That though an ouster of actual possession will give the party ousted a right to recover against the party ousting him, having no title; it was different where a party enters upon a vacant possession. That here there was no proof of ouster, and therefore the cases cited on the other side either did not apply to the case, or were authorities against the appellants.

3d. That the plaintiffs had no title, the land having been forfeited to the commonwealth. That though it was true the land was redeemed from the forfeiture under the act of 1814, and by the act of 1817 land was not forfeited, yet it was again forfeited under the act of 1831, and the acts subsequent to 1834 did not release the forfeiture, but only gave further time to redeem the land; which had not been done by these plaintiffs. That in fact the land was omitted from the commissioner's books from 1831 to 1846, and was on that ground forfeited under the act of February 1835, Sess. Acts 1834–35, p. 12. Having no title, and not having proved an actual ouster by the defendant, the plaintiffs could not recover in ejectment, though the defendants showed none.

195 *ALLEN, P. The first question presented in this case, arises on the third bill of exceptions taken by the plaintiff in error at the trial. From that it appears that certain certificates, purporting to be signed by J. E. Heath, auditor, were permitted to go in evidence to the jury, without proof of their execution, or of the official character of J. E. Heath, as tending to prove that the tract of one thousand four hundred acres was delinquent for the years and the amount therein set forth, and that the same had not been paid at the date thereof. The act of April 1, 1831, Sup. R. C. p. 348, § 7, makes such certificates evidence of the delinquency and forfeiture as against the parties therein named. And the act of March 15, 1838, Sess. Acts, p. 16, § 7, makes it the duty of the auditor to cause to be made out a list of every tract of land in the counties west of the Alleghany mountains, forfeited to or vested in the Literary fund for the non-payment of taxes charged thereon, and which shall not have been redeemed; and to transmit such lists to the commissioner for the sale of delinquent lands.

Digitized by Google

It being thus made the duty of the auditor to make out and furnish said lists and certificates in his official character, his attestation of the certificate in the usual mode of certifying official copies of documents under his control, must be deemed sufficient evidence of the execution of such document, and of the official character of the officer; as much so as the attestation of a clerk to an official copy from his office, is deemed and taken as evidence of the execution of the paper, and of the character of the officer, in the absence of any suggestion to the contrary. Upon general principles, and without reference to any particular statute, the certificate of the auditor of a fact appearing from the books under his control, and upon whom the law imposes the duty of examining such books, and giving a certificate of the facts 196 thereby appearing, as a guide *for other officers in the performance of duties imposed on them, would be competent as evidence of such fact. Baker v. Preston, Gilm. 235. And there being no particular mode of authentication or seal of office prescribed, the signature of the officer in his official character must prove itself and authenticate the instrument. In Taylor v. Burdett, 11 Leigh 334, it was decided, that as in case of sickness or absence of the auditor, the chief clerk in the office is required to perform the duties of the office, a certificate being signed by an individual as chief clerk and acting auditor, it must be presumed he was acting by reason of the sickness or absence of his principal. No objection seems to have been made to the certificate for want of authentication or proof of execution, nor does it appear that any such proof was offered. The question arose upon a motion to exclude from the jury the patent of the plaintiff, under the 17th section of the act of 1830-31, before referred to, until the plaintiff should show that he had his lands duly entered and charged with taxes, and had paid the same. The court was to determine the fact before admitting the patent to be read in evidence to the jury; and as it could only ascertain the fact by legal evidence, the question of the admissibility of such certificate without further proof of authentication, arose as soon as it was offered to satisfy the court of this preliminary fact.

By the Code of Virginia, ch. 176, § 4, p. 660, it is enacted that the certificate of the first auditor of the fact and time of the return of any real estate as delinquent, shall be prima facie evidence of what is stated in such certificate; and such certificate sealed, or sealed and signed, or signed alone, shall be admitted as evidence without any proof of the seal or signature, or of the official character of the person whose name is signed to it. The act of March 31, 1851, Sess. Acts, p. 33, § 13, extends the 197 provision to the *auditor's certificate of the payment or non-payment at any time of taxes on forfeited or delinquent lands, &c., but does not alter or affect the section of the Code as to the effect and admissibility of the certificate of the auditor of the fact and time of the return of any real estate as delinquent. That is the character of the certificates here, and the proof of the signature and official character of the officer is dispensed with. The provision, though enacted since the date of the certificate, is general, and permits a certificate to be admitted in evidence whenever offered without proof of execution or of the official character of the officer. Such provision, though retrospective, is not objectionable; it violates no right, and makes no change in the evidence of the fact affecting the right. The fact of delinquency, as appearing on the books in the auditor's office, creates the forfeiture; the official certificate is by law made evidence of the fact; and how that is to be authenticated is mere matter of practice, which may be regarded as may be most convenient in prescribing proceedings in court.

After the evidence was concluded, the defendant's counsel moved the court to instruct the jury, that taking the evidence of the plaintiff to prove all that it tended to prove, yet that the evidence so offered on behalf of the plaintiffs, when considered in connection with the evidence offered by the defendant, does not prove and is not such a subsisting valid and legal title as entitled the plaintiffs to recover in this action. Grave objections might be alleged against such a course of proceeding. The court is asked to substitute itself to the place of the jury; to exercise the functions of the jury in determining upon the weight and credit of the testimony, and deducing from it all such proper inferences as the jury might have deduced. I should not have deemed it erroneous, if the court had declined to 198 give such an instruction, and *had put the party to his demurrer to the evidence. The instruction however was given; the evidence is set out in the bill of exceptions; and as there is no conflict in the testimony, no injustice can be done to the plaintiff in error by viewing the testimony, as if there had been a demurrer to the evidence, giving to them the benefit of all proper inferences and presumptions, and disregarding any conflicting testimony offered by the defendant in error.

The first question that arises upon the evidence so certified, relates to the forfeiture of the lands claimed by the plaintiffs, for the non-payment of taxes charged thereon.

A grant issued to Thomas Usher, jr., and Abraham Usher on the 24th of July 1788, of one thousand four hundred acres of land, which it was admitted embraced the land in controversy; and it was further admitted, that the lessors of the plaintiff are the heirs of the said patentees. It appeared that the land had not been entered on the commissioner's books for Wood county from 1800 to 1817, both inclusive, in the names of the patentees, or their heirs, or of any person claiming under them. The first entry on the books of the commissioner of the revenue for said county, was made in the names of the patentees in the year 1818; and the heirs of said patentees had not hitherto caused said lands to be entered on said books in their names. It appears from the certificates of the auditor that no payment had been made in the redemption of said land since 1818, and that the land was returned as delinquent for the taxes charged thereon from 1819 to 1831, inclusive, and for the years 1833, 1836 and 1837.

Digitized by Google

By the act of April 1st, 1831, Sup. R. C. p. 345, § 2, lands returned delinquent for 1820 or any previous year, if not redeemed before the 1st of January 1832, were forfeited; and lands returned delinquent 199 for any *year subsequent to 1820 and previous to 1831, were forfeited if not redeemed before the 1st of November 1833.

By the acts of December 16, 1831, and of March 10th, 1832, further time for redemption upon all such lands was given until the 1st of April 1834. The period for redemption was extended by the act of March 11, 1834, to the 1st of October 1834. The act of Febuary 27, 1835, § 1, gave further time, until the 1st of July 1836, for the redemption of such lands returned delinquent, and which became vested in the Literary fund on the 1st of October 1834. The act of March 30, 1837, extended the time for the redemption of such forfeited lands until the 15th January 1838; and the act of March 15, 1838, extended the time to the 1st day of July 1838, when the period for redemption expired. The forfeiture of such lands returned as delinquent became complete on the 1st of October 1834. The subsequent acts treated them not as lands returned as delinquent merely, but as lands forfeited; and although further time to redeem was given, the forfeitures which had accrued by prior laws were not released, except in such cases where the owner availed himself of the privilege to redeem. Staats v. Board, 10 Gratt. 400. The land in question, therefore, never having been redeemed, became actually forfeited and vested in the Literary fund on the 1st of October 1834.

The proof certified shows that the patentees were dead when the land was entered in their names in the year 1818. It is unnecessary to consider whether under the act, 2 Rev. Code of 1819, p. 15, § 13, 16 and 30, this was not the regular course until the heirs caused a transfer to be made on the commissioner's books to their names, according to law. More especially, as it seems that payment in redemption of said lands for the taxes prior to 1818, had been made in the names of the patentees. But be this as it may, either the lands were properly entered, and being returned delinquent, were forfeited for the non-payment 200 *of taxes, vesting in the Literary fund such estate as was vested in the person in whose name it was returned delinquent, and in the heirs, devisees or purchasers claiming under such person at the time such land were forfeited according to the act of April 1, 1831, Sup. R. C. p. 346, § 4; or if not properly entered, then they became forfeited for failure to enter according to the act of February 27, 1835, § 2; which forfeiture became absolute by the failure to redeem before the 1st of November 1836, according to the act of March 23, 1836, as no actual possession of the owner or proprietor or of his tenant is shown to have existed on the 27th February 1835, the time of the passage of the act. And it further sufficiently appears, that the amount of taxes, exclusive of damages, exceeded the sum which was relinquished by the act of 1832 or subsequent laws, if any such enquiry could be raised until the lands were actually entered on the books of the commissioner of the revenue, and the amount ascertained. I think, however, the entry in the name of the patentees concludes the heirs and purchasers claiming under them, and they were forfeited for the delinquency in failing to pay the taxes charged thereon. But the result is the same under any aspect of the case as presented by the facts certified.

The defendant showed no title in himself; and it has been insisted, that according to the cases of Middleton v. Johns, 4 Gratt. 139, and Tapscott v. Cobbs, 11 Gratt. 172, the defendant showing no title, should not be permitted to set up an outstanding title to prove that the plaintiff has no title.

The testimony in the case shows acts of possession at different times by some of the plaintiffs, and by their agent and tenants. The last act of possession proved is, that one of the lessors of the plaintiff about the 1st of June 1835 moved from the east to the county of Wood, and settled upon the one thousand four hundred acre tract, remained until February 1836, 201 *when he left the land; and that he claimed the land as the Usher land; that the place where he so settled was a different portion of the one thousand four hundred acre tract, from that in controversy; and that the improvement where he settled was afterwards held by a third person adversely to the plaintiffs' title.

It does not appear that there was any privity between the lessors of the plaintiff and the defendant, or that there was any obtrusion on the actual possession of the plaintiffs in error. The land being forfeited and actually vested in the Literary fund, the possession of the plaintiffs after such forfeiture gave them no rights as against the commonwealth. For any thing that appears, the possession was abandoned in February 1836. It does not appear when or how the defendant entered. But being in possession, and nothing more appearing, he may retain it, and cannot be deprived of the enjoyment of the property by one who is proved not to have any right to the land in controversy. It appears from the Code, p. 560, note to § 14, that a proposition of the revisors to change the rule which permitted a defendant in possession to defeat a recovery by showing an older title than that of the plaintiffs in a third party under whom the defendant does not claim, was rejected by the legislature. The case under consideration must be governed by the general rule as recognized in Moody v. McKim, 5 Munf. 374, and the recent case of Atkins v. Lewis, 14 Gratt. 30, there being no proof to bring it within the exception acted upon in Middleton v. Johns, 4 Gratt. 129, and Tapscott v. Cobbs, 11 Gratt. 172.

Digitized by Google

I think the judgment should be affirmed.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Allen, P.

Judgment affirmed.

---

202 *Stinchcomb v. Marsh.

July Term, 1858, Lewisburg.

1. Ejectment—Evidence—Record of Another Action of Ejectment.—In an action of ejectment, the record of another action of ejectment between other parties, is not competent evidence upon a question of boundaries or the location of the land in controversy.
2. Power of Attorney—Conveyance of Land—Case at Bar.—M gives to J a power of attorney to sell her lands in the county of R, with power to J to appoint other agents or attorneys. J executes a power to C to sell the lands, but the power only authorizes C to act in the name of J, and it is signed by J in his own name, without any reference to his principal. This power does not authorize C to convey the land as attorney of M.

This was an action of ejectment in the Circuit court of Ritchie county, brought in March 1852, by Thomas Stinchcomb against Enoch Marsh, to recover one hundred acres of land. On the trial of the cause the plaintiff claimed under a patent from the commonwealth to Robert McClure and John Relfe, for one thousand acres of land, which described it as beginning at a white oak, corner to Hugh Lenox's survey, No. 11, and thence by a line of said Lenox S. 45 W. 497 poles to a black oak, &c. And as evidence tending to locate the grant, he introduced in evidence a copy of a plat and certificate of a survey of ten thousand acres made for Hugh Lenox, lying on the waters of Hughes' river, and beginning at a beech No. 11, and running thence S. 45 degrees east 1385 poles, and also a patent to Lenox founded on this survey. And further to locate the patent under which he claimed, he then offered in evidence the records in two cases in ejectment, the first between John Rawson, plaintiff, and Levi Dawson, defendant; and the other between the same plaintiff and William L. Hitchcox, defendant; in which cases Rawson claiming, as the 203 plaintiff alleged, *under Lenox's patent, had recovered a judgment fixing the boundaries of said patent as contended for by the plaintiff in this case. To the introduction of this evidence the defendant objected; and the court sustained the objection: and the plaintiff excepted.

The plaintiff having traced the title under which he claimed from the patentees to Mrs. Susan Mitchell, introduced in evidence a power of attorney from Mrs. Mitchell to her son John Mitchell, authorizing him to sell and convey any lands belonging to her in the counties of Wood and Ritchie; and also to appoint such other agents and attorneys as he might deem necessary to carry into effect the foregoing power. He also introduced in evidence a power of attorney from John Mitchell to Warren W. Chapman, dated the 9th of June 1846, by which John Mitchell appoints Chapman his attorney, in his name to sell and convey, upon such terms as his said attorney should deem most for his advantage, all such lands in the counties of Wood and Ritchie to which Susan Mitchell had title, and to sell which he John Mitchell held her power of attorney. And he authorized his said attorney to prepare deeds with such covenants of warranty as to Mitchell's said attorney should seem expedient, and to deliver them as his deeds. And throughout the paper it is all by or for John Mitchell; and is executed by him simply as John Mitchell, without saying as attorney, or adding the name of Mrs. Mitchell. Indeed, there is no reference to her in the power, except that hereinbefore given. The plaintiff then offered in evidence a deed executed by William W. Chapman as attorney in fact for Susan Mitchell, to the plaintiff, referring to the foregoing powers of attorney for his authority, conveying to him the undivided moiety of two tracts of one thousand acres each, one of which the plaintiff insisted included the land in controversy in this case. And the deed being offered in 204 evidence only for the *purpose of showing title in himself under it, the court being of opinion that it did not pass the title, on the motion of the defendant excluded it: and the plaintiff again excepted.

There was a verdict and judgment for the defendant. And thereupon Stinchcomb applied to this court for a supersedeas; which was allowed.

Hoffman, for the appellant.
Kercheval, for the appellee.

LEE, J. Two questions occur in this case, first, whether the records of the cases of Rawson v. Dawson and Rawson v. Hitchcox mentioned in the plaintiff's first bill of exceptions were properly excluded from the jury, and second, whether the deed from Chapman as attorney in fact for Susan Mitchell to the plaintiff of the 15th of August 1848 was properly rejected when offered to prove the transfer of the legal title to the

*See principal case cited in Wise v. Postlewait, 3 W. Va. 460. See generally, monographic note on "Ejectment."

Digitized by Google

land therein described to the plaintiff. Of these in the order stated.

It is a well settled rule of evidence that a verdict and judgment in an action at law cannot be received in evidence upon the trial of an action between others not parties to the first, nor standing in privity with those who were, for the purpose of proving any fact upon which such verdict and judgment were founded and which being essential to their rendition, is to be regarded as established by them. The party in the second action had no opportunity of cross examining the witnesses in the first, nor of confronting them with others by whom the facts deposed to by them might have been effectually disproved. 1 Greenleaf Ev. § 522, et seq.; Duchess of Kingston's Case, 20 How. St. Tr. 38, and n. 1. Moreover, although the witnesses in the first cause might all have been competent to give evidence in the second, yet it 205 might have *been otherwise, and the verdict and judgment may have been founded upon the testimony of the party himself who offers the record in the second cause or some other witness who would be equally incompetent. But this enquiry the court cannot stop to make. It would be opening a door to subjects and questions entirely apart from the true issue before the jury, and might lead into a wide field of irrelevant enquiry and discussion. Because therefore of the potential vice in the record as an instrument of evidence in the second cause the court has no alternative but to exclude it. Where the fact of such verdict and judgment having been rendered is proper and relevant evidence, as they can only be proved by the record, it may be admitted for that purpose, but when so admitted it cannot be used as evidence to prove any fact or allegation however material or traversable, upon which they must be supposed to have been rendered. Greenleaf Ev. § 538, 539, 527; 1 Stark. Ev. 213.

To this general rule there are some exceptions, as in the class of cases known as proceedings in rem, such as judgments of condemnation of property as forfeited, a prize in the exchequer or admiralty courts, and adjudications upon the personal relations of a party such as marriage, divorce, settlement and the like. 1 Greenleaf Ev. § 525, 541 and n, § 544 and n, § 545. Another exception it is said has been made in the case of verdicts and judgments upon subjects of a public nature, such as matters of reputation, customs and the like. 1 Greenleaf, § 526. Whether the latter class of exceptions can have any place in this state at this day, it is deemed not very material to enquire. For the verdicts and judgments offered in this cause can be brought within the range of neither of these classes. They were not cases in any sense in the nature of proceedings in rem, nor were they upon subjects of a public nature within the meaning of the ex-206 ception contended *for. They were strictly suits inter partes, concerning private rights only; and they must fall within the class of cases, the verdicts and judgments in which, are evidence of the facts on which they were founded, only as between those who were parties, or who stand in privity with those who were.

The purpose for which these records were offered was to prove the boundaries of the ten thousand acre survey made for Hugh Lenox which the land claimed by the plaintiff was said to adjoin; and it was sought to do this by showing that in those causes, that survey had been located by the verdicts in the same manner in which the plaintiff sought to locate it in this action, and thus to make them evidence of the boundaries claimed as established by the findings of the juries in the two causes produced. This was in direct contravention of the rule of evidence just adverted to and violative of all the principles on which it is founded.

Nor could these records have been admitted upon the principle which admits, in certain cases, evidence of hearsay, reputation, tradition. It is true the principle of the admissibility of such testimony in cases of a public nature has been extended by our courts to questions of private boundary; but it is difficult to perceive how this can render admissible the verdicts and judgments in cases between others, although the same boundary may have been the subject of dispute. Such verdicts and judgments may have been founded upon the hearsay or tradition given in evidence, or upon evidence of a totally different character. The identity of the boundary as claimed on the ground with that described in the muniments of title relied on, may have been established by the conformity of natural objects actually found with those called for. It may have been made out by artificial monuments shown to exist as marked trees of the kind called for, the annulations on which 207 were found to agree with *the years elapsed since the date of the survey relied on. It may have been deduced from a connection with one or more adjoining surveys the location and boundaries of which were sufficiently proven or undisputed. Or it may have been determined from several of these different sources of evidence, or all, combined. Again. The proofs of hearsay or tradition, or whatever they were, were from the mouths of witnesses who might or might not be competent to give testimony in the particular case: but the party had no opportunity to show their incompetency to testify against him, or to cross examine them or to meet their statements by opposing proofs. Now, as we have seen, the court will not enter upon enquiries as to the nature of the proofs in the former case or the competency of the witnesses who then deposed to give evidence in the principal case. To attempt it would only lead to indefinite delays and breed inextricable confusion. That the former verdicts and judgments may have been obtained under such circumstances as should preclude them from being evidence in the principal case and that the court cannot undertake to analyze the proceeding of which they were the result, renders their rejection a matter of inevitable consequence.

Digitized by Google

In the case in judgment the records which were offered in evidence were in cases between totally different parties, nor is any privity shown between any of them and any party in this cause. They show nothing of the nature of the proofs exhibited, nor do they disclose who were the witnesses examined. There is no savor of antiquity about them if that would have helped the argument, for they were rendered within the year before the trial of this case. The same sources of proof which were turned to so good account in those cases were, it may be supposed, equally accessible to the parties in this. If the witnesses in them were competent to give evi-208 dence in *this case, they might have been examined, and the jury left to draw their own inferences from their testimony without being influenced by the finding of another jury upon the same testimony. If they were not examined no reason has been shown for the omission even if the court would go into that enquiry. If they would not have been competent, that itself would be a conclusive reason for excluding the verdicts founded upon their testimony.

The rules of evidence have to a certain extent been relaxed on questions of boundary, but it is deemed unwise and inexpedient to extend the encroachment upon well settled and wholesome principles further than the courts have already gone. That the monuments of boundaries owing to the perishable materials of which they were made, may gradually disappear, has led to the admission of traditionary evidence concerning them, but it can furnish no sufficient reason for breaking down the well established barrier which restricts the effect of a verdict and judgment as evidence of the facts in issue in the cause, to those who were parties or stood in privity with those who were.

The second question relates to the exclusion of the deed from Chapman as attorney in fact for Mrs. Mitchell. If he had due authority as such, the deed should have been permitted to go to the jury, as it was in regular and proper form. If he had not, then Mrs. Mitchell was not bound, her title did not and could not pass by it, and as it was offered for no other purpose than to prove a transfer of her title to the plaintiff, it was properly excluded.

To show that Chapman was authorized to execute a deed for Mrs. Mitchell, the letter of attorney from John Mitchell of the 9th of June 1846 was first read in evidence to the jury. By the letter of attorney from Mrs. Mitchell to John Mitchell, the latter had the power to appoint such further 209 agents and attorneys as *he might deem necessary to carry into effect the power granted to him. The question then is was this power to appoint agents and attorneys duly executed as the law then stood by the letter of attorney to Chapman.

The power given to John Mitchell to appoint an agent who would be authorized to convey the legal title vested in Mrs. Mitchell, must of necessity have been executed by a deed, for no agent can bind his principal by deed unless he be so authorized by an instrument of equal solemnity. And as the law was then understood, to bind the principal every deed should be executed for and in the name of his principal, though it was not material whether the attorney sign the name of his principal with a seal annexed, stating it to be done by him as attorney for the principal, or whether he sign his own name with a seal annexed, stating it to be done for the principal. But if the deed do not purport to be the deed of the principal and be signed and sealed by the attorney neither in the name of his principal nor in his own name as his attorney it is not the deed of the principal. And in executing the power conferred, the attorney should conform to the terms and nature of his authority, and do that which it was the intention and legal effect of the power he shold be authorized to do in a legal and proper manner. Otherwise the act will be ineffectual to bind the principal.

Now the letter of attorney to Chapman does not purport to be the act of Mrs. Mitchell or for her or in her name. It purports to be the act of John Mitchell in his own name and on his own behalf. He appoints Chapman "his attorney," to sell, &c., "for his advantage and profit," to make seal and deliver deeds "as his deeds," to receive moneys coming "to him" on account of sales "for him and in his name," and "for him and in his name" to make seal and deliver acquittances. Nor is it signed 210 with the name of Mrs. *Mitchell stated to be by her attorney nor is his name stated to be for his principal. It is signed by him in his own name as if the instrument were executed in his own right and on his own behalf. Such an execution of the power could not bind Mrs. Mitchell nor invest Chapman with authority to transfer the legal title to the land. If John Mitchell had conveyed the land by a deed executed in the form adopted for this power, such a deed prior to the provision of our present Code, would not have passed the legal title. And a power executed by him under his authority to appoint other agents for his principal should be executed for or in the name of the principal just as should a direct deed of conveyance from himself. Whether a conveyance or a power to some other to convey it was but the execution of his power by deed, and that deed to be effectual must be executed in the manner required by the rules of law.

What might be the construction of such an instrument executed since our present Code took effect it is unnecessary to enquire as the paper in question was executed in 1846; but it cannot be sustained on the authority of Shanks v. Lancaster, 5 Gratt. 110, or of Bryan v. Stump, 8 Gratt. 241, as it is a different instrument from those in question in those cases and executed in a different manner. Prior to the Code at least, the question was not simply what the grantor intended to do, but whether the intent to execute the power was carried out in a legal and proper manner. In every case of a deed executed by an attorney it might be supposed that he intended to conform to his power and satisfy its requirements; but if he have failed to execute it in the manner required by the rules of law, it must be ineffectual, for his intention could not remedy the defective Code in which he attempted to carry his intention into execution. I refer on this subject to Sergeant Moore's Rep. Trin. 6 Eliz.

Digitized by Google

211 *No. 191, p. 70; Coombe's Case, 9 Rep. 75; Frontin v. Small, 1 Str. R. 705; S. C. 2 Ld. Raym. R. 1418; White v. Cuyler, 6 T. R. 176; Wilks v. Back, 2 East. R. 142; 5 Bouv. Bac. Ab. "Leases," I. 10, p. 571; Bogart v. De Bussy, 6 John. R. 94; Fowler v. Shearer, 7 Mass. R. 14; Elwell v. Shaw, 16 Mass. R. 42; Jones' dev. v. Carter, 4 Hen. & Munf. 184; Clarke's lessee v. Courtney, &c., 5 Peters' R. 318, 349; Martin v. Flowers, 8 Leigh 158. In the two cases last cited, the deeds were held inoperative because although purporting to be made by the parties as attorneys for their principals, they were yet executed by the attorneys in their own names and not in those of their principals.

That a spirit of self-reliance and directness of purpose, as suggested by counsel in argument, will prompt the people of this age and country to disregard the formalities of conveyancing and the rules of law by which they are prescribed, can constitute no sufficient reason nor furnish any adequate authority to the courts to change the law or overthrow plain intelligible and well settled legal principles. That is the province of the legislature, not of the judiciary. For the latter to undertake to mould the law so as to be adapted to the loose and careless modes of conducting business transactions which are said to prevail would be but to inaugurate uncertainty and confusion in the administration of justice, and lead to evils which though not at once foreseen and appreciated, might prove far greater and more to be deplored than the hardship which may occur in individual cases from an adherence to the settled rules of law, but which at last must be traced to the parties' own improvidence and want of reasonable care and precaution.

The result is that the letter of attorney from John Mitchell to Chapman being ineffectual to constitute the latter the attorney for Mrs. Mitchell, the deed which he undertook to make for her did not trans-
212 fer *the legal title to the plaintiff, and as it was offered for no other purpose than to prove such transfer, it was properly rejected by the court.

I think the Circuit court did not err in its ruling upon either of the questions raised, and am of opinion to affirm the judgment.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Lee, J.

Judgment affirmed.

---

213 *Miller v. Williams & al.

July Term, 1859, Lewisburg.

1. Ejectment—Title of Plaintiff—Case at Bar.—There is a sale of land under a decree to H who is the plaintiff in the suit; and the sale is confirmed and a conveyance ordered to the heirs of H, but no conveyance made. The heirs sell to third persons, but no deed is shown; but these purchasers take possession and put a tenant on the land. Afterwards on appeal the decree is reversed, the sale set aside, and a conveyance of the land directed; and in pursuance of this decree the court below sets aside the sale and directs a conveyance to the original owner, which is executed; and then the tenant in possession of the land attorns to this original owner, who holds by this tenant until he leaves the land, and afterwards continues in possession. In ejectment by the purchaser from the heirs of H against the original owner, HELD: the attornment of the tenant was not illegal, and the party getting possession through and from him is not the tenant of the plaintiffs so as to entitle them to recover without showing title in themselves.

2. Sale of Delinquent Lands—Quære.—Pending the appeal the land is returned delinquent for nonpayment of taxes in the name of the original owner, and is sold and purchased by the purchasers from the heirs of H. QUÆRE: If it was not their duty to pay the taxes, and if they can set up a title under that sale and purchase against the original owner.

3. Same—Removal of Commissioner—Effect of Conveyance by Substitute.—J, a commissioner of forfeited

*Sale of Delinquent Lands.—In McClure v. Maitland, 24 W. Va. 580, it is said: "The land sold being the property of the state and the court and commissioner her agents to make the sale, they are responsible to her and to her only for their acts. But like all other agents they must act within their authority and in the manner prescribed by it or their acts will have no effect. Therefore, unless they in making sales of the forfeited lands of the state, do substantially conform to the provisions of the statutes conferring the authority, their acts and proceedings will be ineffectual to divest the state's title or transfer it to the purchaser. Miller v. Williams, 15 Gratt. 213."

Landlord and Tenant.—In Voss v. King, 33 W. Va. 245, 10 S. E. Rep. 405, it is said: "If the tenant, with notice to the landlord, disclaims the tenure, and claims the fee adversely, in right of himself or a third person, or attorns to another, his possession then becomes a tortious one, by the forfeiture of his right; and the landlord's right of entry is complete, and he may sue at any time within the period of limitation from that time. Willison v. Watkins, 3 Pet. 43; Kane v. Bloodgood, 7 Johns. Ch. 90; Tyler, Ej. 311; Wild v. Serpell, 10 Gratt. 405; Miller v. Williams, 15 Gratt. 213, 219; Cooey v. Porter, 22 W. Va. 120."

See also, Turpin v. Saunders, 32 Gratt. 33, and note, and Dobson v. Culpepper, 23 Gratt. 362, and note, both citing the principal case.

Digitized by Google

and delinquent land, sells a tract of land and receives the purchase money. He is then removed and B is appointed in his place. B has no authority to convey the land to the purchaser; and his conveyance does not pass the title.

4. Same—Same—Same.—In such a case the court must make an order directing B to convey the land before he can make a valid conveyance.

5. Same—Loss of Report of Commissioner—Right to Prove the Facts by Evidence Aliunde.—The report of J of the forfeited lands in the county being lost, and the report of the sale of the land not showing plainly the land sold or the interest which the person in whose name it was forfeited held therein, it was not competent for the commissioner to resort to evidence aliunde to ascertain these facts; and therefore his deed is invalid.

6. Same—Joint Commissioners—Validity of Separate Acts.—Where there are two commissioners of forfeited and delinquent lands in one county, they are not required to act jointly; but each may act separately, and his deed will convey title to land sold by him.

214 *This was an action of ejectment in the Circuit court of Nicholas county, brought in August 1855, by Hazael Williams and Thomas McCleary against Charles C. Miller, to recover a tract of three thousand acres of land. On the trial there was a verdict and judgment for the plaintiffs; and the defendant excepted to opinions of the court overruling a motion for a new trial, and also for refusing and giving certain instructions. Numerous questions were raised, but only two of them were considered by this court.

As early as December 1782 George Clendenin and George Huston his surety executed a bond to John Mayo, binding themselves to pay him fifteen thousand pounds of tobacco. And in December 1794 Clendenin executed a power of attorney to Huston, authorizing him to sell a tract of three thousand acres of land, which Clendenin held under a patent from the commonwealth, and to apply the proceeds of sale to the payment of the debt due to Mayo. But Huston was not to sell the land or any part of it for a less price than one dollar per acre. This land was then within the county of Greenbrier, but is now in the county of Nicholas, and is described in the patent as lying in the county of Greenbrier, on the north side of Gauley river, including Stroud's improvement and the several branches of said creek.

Huston was sued upon the bond, and compelled to pay it: and he then filed a bill in the Chancery court at Staunton against John Cantril, the administrator of Clendenin, and the widow and heirs, seeking to subject the tract of three thousand acres of land and the other estate of Clendenin to satisfy him for what he had paid. In June 1823 a decree was made for the sale of this land: and in November following the marshal reported that it had been sold to George Huston at the price of thirty cents per acre.

Huston died in 1826; and the suit
215 was revived in *the name of Philip Pitman, his administrator, who had purchased the interest of the other distributees in the suit. And on the 19th of July 1827 the court confirmed the sale to Huston, and directed the marshal of the court to convey the land to Huston's heirs by name, or whomsoever they might appoint. It does not appear that this conveyance was ever executed by the marshal.

The debt due to Huston not having been satisfied by the sale of the land and the application thereto of the amount found to be due from Cantril, the administrator of Clendenin, on the 21st of July 1827 Pitman filed a supplemental bill, seeking to set aside certain gifts of slaves made by Clendenin to his three daughters before their marriage, as fraudulent and void as against creditors. But when the cause came on to be heard in August 1830, upon this supplemental bill, it was dismissed by the chancellor: And thereupon Pitman took an appeal to the Supreme court of appeals; where the case lingered until April 1840, when that court not only affirmed the decree of the chancellor dismissing the supplemental bill, but holding that the appeal brought up the whole case, reversed and annulled all that had been done in the original cause, and sent the cause back with directions that all the proceedings for subjecting the tract of three thousand acres of land, should be set aside, and a conveyance to the heirs of Clendenin should be decreed.

In pursuance of this decree the chancellor in June 1840 made a decree in conformity therewith, and appointing a commissioner to convey the land to the heirs of Clendenin: And this was done by a deed bearing date the 16th of August 1841.

After the sale of the land to Huston had been confirmed, and the heirs of Huston had sold their interest therein to Pitman, as before stated, about the year 216 *1828 or 1829 the plaintiffs took possession thereof, claiming the same as purchasers from Pitman; and they put George Rader into possession of it as their tenant; and he continued in possession as their tenant until the 13th day of October 1840; when he entered into an agreement under seal with Charles S. Miller for himself and the other heirs of Clendenin, by which he took a lease of the land from them, referring to the late decree of the court of appeals, to continue until the 1st of March 1842. And he continued to hold the land under renewed leases until the 1st of April 1847; when it was leased by Miller, acting for himself and the other heirs of Clendenin, to other parties; and the defendants so continued to hold possession of the land, by their tenants, down to the institution of the suit, claiming under Clendenin, and adversely to the plaintiffs.

Whilst the suit of Huston's adm'r v. Cantril & als. was pending in the Court of appeals, and in April 1839, John G. Stephenson, the commissioner of delinquent and forfeited lands for the county of Nicholas, seems to have made a report of the forfeited lands in the county of Nicholas, and to have reported the tract aforesaid of three thousand acres as forfeited in the name of John Cantril for the non-payment of taxes. And at the April term 1839 of the Circuit court of that county, the court made a decree directing the lands so returned forfeited to be sold. At the fall term of the court Stephenson reported that he had sold one tract of three thousand acres in the name of John Cantril, which was purchased by Hazael Williams and Thomas McCleary, at sixty-five dollars and twenty-five cents; that being the amount of taxes and damages, which was paid in hand: And at the April term 1840 the sale was confirmed by the court.

Digitized by Google

At the April term 1841 of the court
217 Alexander *Brown was appointed a commissioner of delinquent and forfeited lands for the county of Nicholas: and at the next September term John Brown was appointed to the same office in the place of Stephenson, removed. And by deed bearing date the 27th of May 1843, John Brown, as such commissioner, conveyed to Williams and McCleary the land which had been sold to them by Stephenson; describing it as a tract of three thousand acres patented to George Clendenin deceased, and forfeited in the name of John Cantril, it being the survey on which George Rader lives, on Stroud's creek.

When the evidence had been introduced, the defendant moved the court to give eight different instructions to the jury; but it is only necessary to state the second, which was as follows:

2d. The decree of the Circuit court for the county of Nicholas rendered at its April term 1839, and the return of sales made by John G. Stephenson, commissioner for the county of Nicholas, purporting to be sales made by him of forfeited and delinquent lands for the county of Nicholas, dated the day of 1839, and returned to the September term of said court 1839, and the decree of said court rendered at the April term 1840, confirming said sales, were not sufficient to vest the commonwealth's title, by forfeiture to the tract of land in controversy, in the plaintiffs, Hazael Williams and Thomas McCleary, or to authorize John Brown, who was subsequently appointed a commissioner of delinquent and forfeited lands for said county, to make and execute the deed dated the 27th of May 1843, to the complainants for the aforesaid land in controversy. This instruction the court refused to give: and the defendant excepted.

Upon the application of the defendant Miller, who had purchased the interest of Cantril and wife in the land, this court awarded a writ of error.

218 *Parks and Fry, for the appellant.
Gordon and Price, for the appellees.

LEE, J. Various questions have been elaborately discussed by the counsel in this case, two only of which, however, do I propose to consider. These are:

First, whether the defendants in error who were the plaintiffs in the court below, have made out a case entitling them to recover without showing the legal title which they claim to have derived under the sale made by the commissioner of delinquent and forfeited lands and the deed made to them by Commissioner Brown.

Second, whether such sale and deed did invest them with the legal title to the land in controversy so that they can recover on the strength of such legal title alone.

And, first, as to the right to recover without showing a legal title. If the plaintiffs holding peaceable possession of the land had been entered upon and ousted of such possession by the defendants having neither title to nor authority to enter upon the premises, according to a recent decision of this court they could have maintained ejectment upon their possession alone without showing a legal title. Tapscott v. Cobbs, 11 Gratt. 172. Or if the defendants were the tenants of the plaintiffs or the latter had the right to treat the former as such, then as they repudiated such tenancy and claimed to hold adversely, the plaintiffs might have recovered upon this ground without the necessity of showing a legal title, because being tenants the defendants could not dispute their landlord's title. Willison v. Watkins, 3 Peters' R. 43; Emerick v. Tavener, 9 Gratt. 220; Adams Eject. 3 n. 57 n. 247 n. 5, (ed. 1830); 2 Greenl. Ev. § 305, and authorities cited in n. 1.

That the defendants entered as tres-
219 passers cannot *be said with any propriety. They entered under authority of the decree of the 17th of June 1840 made in conformity to that of the Court of appeals of the 18th of April 1840. By those decrees, the decree for the sale of the land at which Huston, under whom the plaintiffs claimed, had purchased was reversed and annulled; and it was not left an open question whether the purchaser would be disturbed by the reversal of the decree of sale, for the decree went on to set aside all the proceedings had in the original cause including the sale, in terms, and appointed a commissioner to reconvey to the heirs of George Clendenin the land which had been so sold. And this deed was afterwards regularly executed by the commissioner. It is true these plaintiffs were not themselves parties to the cause, but Huston's heirs, and their immediate vendor Pitman, were, and they must stand on the footing of pendente lite purchasers and be bound by the decree. Thus the defendants obtained their possession under a bona fide claim of title and the authority of the decree of the court which restored to them all the rights of which they had been divested by the sale under the former decree.

But it is insisted that the plaintiffs had the right to treat the defendants as their tenants because the attornments made to them by Rader were unlawful and void, and that therefore they could not contest the plaintiffs' title until they had first restored the possession.

Digitized by Google

The general rule that a tenant may not dispute the title of him by whom he has been let into possession, cannot be questioned; but there is this modification, which is well established, that he may always show that his landlord's title has expired or been extinguished since the lease, or that he has sold his interest in the premises, or that it is alienated from him by judgment and operation of 220 law. Syburn's lessee v. *Slade, 4 T. R. 681; Colemere's lessee v. Whitroe, 1 Dowl. & Ryl. N. P. Cases, 1 (16 Eng. C. L. R. 409); Van Schaick's lessee v. Davis, 5 Cow. R. 123; Lowden's lessee v. Watson, 2 Stark. R. 230; Russell's lessee v. Rowland, 6 Wend. R. 666, 670; Adams Eject. 247 & n. 6. So if these parties could have been considered as tenants, they would have had the right under this modification of the rule to show that since the lease to Rader the title of the plaintiffs under which they got into possession had been extinguished by the decree of the Court of appeals and that of the Circuit court made in conformity to it. But they did not admit themselves to be tenants of the plaintiffs, nor had the latter the right to treat them as such. They always claimed to hold adversely, and although they came into possession by means of the attornments of the plaintiffs' tenant Rader, yet those attornments were made under such circumstances that the liabilities of tenants were not created by them. They were made after and in consequence of the decrees by which these parties had been fully restored to all their rights in the land and the title of the plaintiffs under the previous decree and sale, had been extinguished. They had the right to enter and take possession if they could do so peaceably. The recoverer after judgment may enter without execution where the demand is certain. Thus after judgment in a common recovery the demandant may enter or take out execution at his election. Shelley's Case, 1 Rep. 93, 106; Mary Portington's Case, 10 Rep. 35. The patron who recovers in quare impedit may present without a writ to the bishop. Rud v. Bishop of Lincoln, Hutton's R. 66. And after a recovery in ejectment the lessor of the plaintiff may enter without the sheriff, for his assistance is but to preserve the peace. Siderf. R. part 2, p. 156. Withers v. Harris, 7 Mod. R. 64, 69; Badger v. Lloyd, Holt's R. 199. And being 221 thus entitled to enter, he cannot *be considered as a trespasser for asserting that right unless his entry be attended with such acts of violence as will subject him to a criminal prosecution. Taylor v. Cole, 3 T. R. 292. Such an entry after judgment in ejectment works no disseisin of the freehold, nor can the true owner ever elect to make the person then in possession, a disseisor. He could not bring an assize of novel disseisin at common law; the entry is not injuste et sine judicio, but under authority of a court of justice and lawful, and therefore not liable to punishment by fine as every disseisin was. Taylor ex dem. Atkyns v. Horde (1757), 1 Burr. R. 60, 113, 114; Doe ex dem. Atkyns v. Horde (1777) 2 Cowp. R. 689, 701. Being thus entitled to enter and take possession, no reason is perceived why they might not acquire it by the attornment of the tenant in possession. It was the duty both of his landlord and himself to surrender it in conformity to the decrees, and the taking of the attornments was not in fraud of the rights of the plaintiffs, nor did it violate any law. For the act of assembly (1 Rev. Code 1819, p. 370, § 33), following the act of 11 Geo. 2, ch. 19, § 11, while it declared that the attornment of a tenant to any stranger should be void, unless with the consent of the landlord, expressly excepted such attornment made pursuant to or in consequence of a judgment of a court of law, or the order or decree of a court of equity. The attornment here was plainly in consequence of these decrees and was thus within the exceptions made in the act.

But it may be said that although this be true in respect of the title which the plaintiffs claimed under the purchase from Pitman, yet that after this purchase and after they had placed Rader in possession to hold as their tenant, they acquired an independent paramount title under the sale by the commissioner of forfeited lands and the deed made to them by Brown, which was not affected by the decrees in the chancery 222 *case; and that when they became invested with this title, immediately their tenant Rader held under them in respect of it also, and that as to it, his attornment was void.

It may be true that as between the plaintiffs and Rader, the latter might be regarded upon the accession of the new title as holding under it also; but I am not prepared to agree that this would deprive the defendants of the benefit of the decrees. If the possession had been vacant, they were entitled notwithstanding the plaintiffs had acquired an independent title pending the chancery suit to enter upon the premises and take possession. If they had come with a writ of possession, the new title would have been no answer to the sheriff's demand; and as when they did come the tenant in possession surrendered it to them and they entered upon it, I conceive they were in upon their own title and not as tenants, and that in either case the plaintiffs would have been put to their action upon their new title. The rule too forbidding the tenant to dispute his landlords' title would on the terms on which it is usually propounded, seem to relate to the original title under which he had been let into possession. See Adams Eject. 247; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 24, 25; 2 Ibid. § 305. And it may be questioned how far these plaintiffs claiming under the purchase from Pitman and standing in privity with Clendenin's heirs could be allowed to set up against them a title acquired by forfeiture for non-payment of taxes. It might be urged with great force that it was their duty to protect the title against such forfeiture and that their purchase at the tax sale should enure to the benefit of those ascertained to be the true owners. But it is unnecessary to pursue these enquiries for in the most favorable view to the pretensions of the plaintiffs, we are only brought to.

Digitized by Google

The second question above stated,
223 which relates to *the effect of the sale of the land as forfeited under the order of the Nicholas court and the deed made by Commissioner Brown in transferring the commonwealth's interest and vesting in the grantees the legal title to the land described in the deed.

The sale was under an order made at the April term 1839, which after reciting that John G. Stephenson commissioner of delinquent and forfeited lands, had that day made a report of the forfeited lands in the county of Nicholas, directed him in general terms to make sale of said lands upon the terms prescribed by law. Stephenson afterwards reported that he had sold sundry tracts of land in obedience to said order, and amongst others "a tract of 3000 acres in the name of John Cantril," which was purchased by Hazael Williams and Thomas McCleary at the price of sixty-five dollars and twenty-five cents, that being the amount of the taxes with the damages due thereon. At the April term 1840 this sale was confirmed. On the 9th of September 1841 Stephenson was removed from office, and John Brown appointed commissioner of delinquent and forfeited lands in his place; and subsequently Stephenson having never conveyed the land to the purchasers whilst he continued in office, Brown undertook to convey it by deed dated the 27th of May 1843. At the time of the execution of this deed there was another commissioner of delinquent and forfeited lands for the county of Nicholas, one Alexander Brown, who had been appointed at the April term 1841, and he had given bond and duly qualified as such, but he did not unite with John Brown in making it. And it is objected that the commissioners took a joint authority under the act, and that neither could act separately or without the concurrence of the other.

This objection, I think, cannot avail to affect the validity of this deed. It is 224 true in some of the counties *in which more than one commissioner of forfeited and delinquent lands was appointed, it is understood that they have construed their authority to be joint and not several, and have acted conjointly in all their proceedings. Such however, I think is not the true construction of the act by which the appointment of such commissioners was directed. The object of the law in authorizing several commissioners in one county, was to speed the sales of forfeited lands in the large counties in which from the number of forfeitures, they could not be investigated and reported to the court and the numerous tracts sold by a single commissioner in a reasonable time. The power conferred was a several one to be exercised by each commissioner, who is afterwards throughout the act spoken of in the singular, and there is nothing whatever in any of its provisions to indicate that it was to be exercised by the commissioners, where more than one, conjointly. And it would have retarded rather than promoted the object which the legislature plainly had in view, to make the power joint instead of several. I am however of opinion that it has not been shown that Brown had any legal authority to execute this deed. He was not the commissioner who sold the land and who was authorized to receive the purchase money, nor has any order of the court been produced directing him to make the conveyance. That he had been appointed a commissioner of forfeited land to supply the vacancy occasioned by the removal of Commissioner Stephenson did not of itself import an authority to make deeds for lands sold by his predecessor. By the act of 1837 it was the duty of the court in all cases to direct the deed to be made, and no deed could be made without such order; by the act of 1838, § 9, provision is made authorizing the commissioner by whom a sale is made to receive any purchase money before it is due, deducting the interest 225 thereon from the time when paid *to the time when the same would become due and payable according to the terms of sale, and thereupon the purchaser became entitled to his deed for the land so purchased and paid for, upon application to the commissioner. But the commissioner thus authorized to convey without the order of the court was he who made the sale and received the money. The words are "upon application to the said commissioner," referring to the one who had made the sale and received the money. No other would be authorized to collect or receive the purchase money of lands sold, without an order of the court, nor could the successor of a commissioner who had died or been removed from office know personally or undertake to recite that the money had been paid in advance to his predecessor. In such a case the proper course is for the purchaser to apply to the court and upon proving that the purchase money has been duly paid by reference to the report of sale if it showed it or by extrinsic evidence if it did not, to ask an order directing some other commissioner to make the deed.

In Walton v. Hale, 9 Gratt. 194, the president of this court says "the commissioner to make sales under the delinquent land laws * * * has no interest in the subject of sale. He acts like a commissioner to make sales under a decree of the Chancery court and is clothed with a mere naked authority." It was therefore held that the deed of such a commissioner could avail nothing where his authority to make it did not appear, as in that case where the commissioner had undertaken to make the deed to a person other than a purchaser at his sale.

In Rockbold v. Barnes, 3 Rand. 473, which was the case of a sheriff's sale of delinquent land, the deed purported to be made by the deputy sheriff, and it was held that to make it evidence of transfer of title it should be proven that the principal was sheriff 226 and *that the party who undertook to convey was his deputy. In Wilsons v. Bell's lessee, 7 Leigh 22, which was a similar case, the sale had been made by the sheriff, but the deed reciting such sale was made and acknowledged by the deputy as his own act, though it purported to be the deed of the principal. The deed was rejected as evidence of title, and the judgment was affirmed. In that case the opinion is expressed that where in such a case the sale is made by the sheriff, the deed cannot be made by the deputy and vice versa; and Tucker, P., refers to the terms of the act as fortifying "the natural supposition that he who makes the sale is to make the title." In Flanagan v. Grimmet, 10 Gratt. 427, Allen, P., refers to a case decided by this court, Keezee v. Leece (not reported), in which where the sale had been made by a deputy but the deed executed by the sheriff, the objection to the deed was overruled and it was suffered to go to the jury, and this court affirmed the judgment. But if in that case the correctness of the distinction implied in the opinions of the judges in Wilsons v. Bell's lessee (above cited) between the sheriff and his deputy, was doubted or disaffirmed, certainly I think, it will not be questioned if predicated of a sheriff and his successor in office or of a commissioner of forfeited lands and his successor.

Digitized by Google

The deed executed by Commissioner Brown, it is true, recites that it was made in pursuance of an order of the court made on the 9th of September 1841 directing the acting commissioner to convey the land to the grantees. No such order is produced, and the mere recital of authority in such a deed would not be evidence against others asserting an adverse claim. Carver v. Jackson, 4 Peters' R. 83; Wiley v. Givens, 6 Gratt. 277; Walton v. Hale, 9 Gratt. 194. The presumption I think is that there was in fact no such order, but that the 227 order of the 9th of September *1841, appointing Brown successor of Stephenson was construed (erroneously I think) as importing a direction to make deeds for lands sold but not conveyed by his predecessor. I think the deed was ineffectual for want of a sufficient authority in Brown to make it; but there is another objection which is perhaps equally fatal.

The report of the sale made by Commissioner Stephenson merely describes the land as "one tract of 3000 acres in the name of John Cantril * * * lying on waters of Gauley river and Beaver creek," and the order confirming the sale describes it as "3000 acres sold in the name of John Cantril." The order for the sale is a general order directing the sale of the lands forfeited within the county of Nicholas according to the report of the commissioner made on that day. But this report is not produced, why, the record does not disclose, though it was stated in the course of the argument that it had been lost; and we cannot know that it ever was reported as forfeited except so far as we may infer it from the fact that it was reported as having been sold as such and the confirmation of that report. But what was the description given of it in the report of forfeiture, if such there was, we are not informed, nor can we undertake to say from the record of the proceeding as we have it, that the "3000 acres in the name of John Cantril on the waters of Gauley river and Beaver creek," is the same three thousand acres granted to George Clendenin, or that it was the survey on which George Rader lived on Stroud's creek, nor does it inform us what John Cantril had to do with the three thousand acres granted to George Clendenin. Whether he claimed the whole tract or an undivided interest in it on behalf of his wife who it was proved on the trial of this cause (though it does not appear in the proceeding for the sale) was one of the heirs of George 228 Clendenin, we *are unable to learn, nor whether the entire tract was reported as forfeited or his undivided interest only. We cannot suppose that it was reported as forfeited as omitted land because not entered in the name of George Clendenin or of his heirs, because it is treated as forfeited for non-payment of taxes charged to John Cantril, and also because it is clearly proven that at the date of the act of 1835 the land was in the actual possession of parties claiming under the Clendenin title, and therefore not liable to forfeiture as omitted land. All these difficulties Commissioner Brown undertakes to resolve. He identifies the "3000 acres in the name of John Cantril on waters of Gauley river and Beaver creek," with the tract granted to George Clendenin on the north side of Gauley river, including Stroud's improvement and the several branches of Stroud's creek and a branch of Beaver creek, referring to the patent for the boundaries; and he ascertains that the whole interest in this tract had been forfeited in the name of John Cantril; and accordingly undertakes to convey it to the purchasers at the sale made by Stephenson. In doing this, even if he had had authority to make a deed, I conceive that he went out of the chart prescribed to him by the record and transcended his authority in undertaking to identify the land sold by Stephenson by elements of description furnished by himself outside of the record.

On both the grounds stated I think the deed of Brown was invalid to convey title to the land in controversy, or at least that its validity is not shown by the record before us, and that the Circuit court should have given the second instruction asked for by the defendants, and should have also sustained the motion to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial.

I am of opinion, therefore, to reverse the judgment and remand the cause for a new trial, upon which the parties may, if they can, supply the defects in the record

Digitized by Google

229 *on which they rely; and as the other questions that have been raised may not arise upon such future trial, I forbear at this time to express any opinion upon them.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Lee, J.

Judgment reversed.

---

230 *Va. Central R. R. Co. v. Sanger.

July Term, 1859, Lewisburg.

1. Railroad—Carriage of Passengers—Degree of Care.—Railroad companies conveying passengers, combining in themselves the ownership as well of the road as of the cars and locomotives, they are bound to the most exact care and diligence, not only in the management of the trains and cars, but also in the structure and care of the track, and in all the subsidiary arrangements necessary to the safety of the passengers.
2. Same—Same—Obstructions on Track—Degree of Care.—The duty of a rail road company to employ the utmost care and diligence in guarding their road against obstructions on the track is clearly embraced within its warranty to carry their passengers safely, so far as human care and foresight can go.
3. Same—Same—Same—Negligence of Independent Contractor.†—If a rail road company, whilst using its track for the carriage of passengers, engages in a work to be done on its road and in the immediate proximity of its track, negligence in the performance of which would, in the estimation and opinion of cautious persons, involve the hazard of obstructions to the passage of its cars, and an accident to a passenger is caused by an obstruction arising from negligence in the performance of the work; it is no defence to show merely that they had placed the work in the hands of a contractor, and that the obstruction was caused by the carelessness of one of his employees.
4. Same—Same—Same—Same—Case at Bar.—Contractors employed by a rail road company to deliver stone on the road and prepare it for ballasting the track (the ballasting not being necessary to the security, but being intended for the preservation of the track), place the stone in ridges so near the rail that it is struck by the step of the baggage car, or the ridge is disturbed and a stone rolled down by the hub of one of the cars, or is rolled down by the jarring of the train as it passes near the ridge, or it is loosed from its place and rolled down by the haste of one of the hands employed by the contractors in getting off the ridge to avoid the train, and the cars run against it, and are thrown off the track, whereby a passenger is injured; it is for the jury to enquire whether there was not danger in the work, arising from the mode and manner in which it was done; whether the company did not know, or by the exercise of the proper diligence might not have ascertained, the existence of such danger; and whether they had used due care and foresight in guarding against it; and if they have failed in this, the company is responsible to the passenger for the injury he has sustained.
231 *5. Instructions—Equivocal.‡—An instruction which is susceptible of two constructions, one of which is erroneous, and which may therefore mislead the jury, should not be given.

This was an action on the case in the Circuit court of Augusta county, brought by Jacob Sanger against the Virginia Central Rail Road Company, to recover damages for an injury which he sustained whilst being carried as a passenger on the defendant's road. On the trial the defendant asked for six instructions to the jury; the first four of which were given, the fifth was refused, and the sixth was given with a slight addition. And to the refusal of the court to give the fifth and sixth instructions as asked for, and the giving the sixth with the addition thereto, the defendant excepted. They are stated by Judge Daniel, in his opinion, with the evidence on which they are based. The jury found a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for six thousand dollars; on which the court rendered a judgment. And thereupon the defendant obtained a supersedeas to this court.

Michie and Stuart, for the appellant.
Baldwin and Imboden, for the appellee.

DANIEL, J. The only questions which we have to consider, are those arising out of the ruling of the Circuit court in respect

---

*__Carriage of Passengers—Degree of Care.__—Carriers of passengers must exercise the utmost degree of care in transporting passengers. The principal case and Farish v. Reigle, 11 Gratt. 697, were cited in Poling v. Ohio, etc., R. Co., 38 W. Va. 661, 18 S. E. Rep. 787, and Fisher v. W. Va., etc., R. Co., 39 W. Va. 389, 19 S. E. Rep. 587, as leading authorities for this proposition. See also, in accord, Baltimore & Ohio Ry. Co. v. Wightman, 29 Gratt. 431; Baltimore & Ohio Ry. Co. v. Noell, 32 Gratt. 395, and foot-note; Richmond, etc., Ry. Co. v. Scott, 86 Va. 907, 11 S. E. Rep. 404; Connell v. C. & O. Ry. Co., 93 Va. 55, 24 S. E. Rep. 467; Searle v. K. & O. Ry. Co., 32 W. Va. 370, 9 S. E. Rep. 248. This degree of care, where the carrier owns the road over which it operates, as in the case of railroads, is not confined to the management of the trains and cars, but most exact care and diligence must also be exercised in the structure and care of the track and in all subsidiary arrangements necessary to the safety of the passengers. See the principal case cited in Gleeson v. Va. Midland Ry. Co., 140 U. S. 435, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862; Baltimore & Ohio Ry. Co. v. Wightman, 29 Gratt. 431; Baltimore & Ohio Ry. Co. v. Noell, 32 Gratt. 394. See, in accord, Searle v. K. & O. Ry. Co., 32 W. Va. 370, 9 S. E. Rep. 248.

†__Same—Obstructions on Track—Negligence of Independent Contractor.__—See principal case approved in Carrico v. W. Va., etc., Ry. Co., 39 W. Va. 94, 95, 103, 19 S. E. Rep. 573, 574, 577; Carrico v. W. Va., etc., Ry. Co., 35 W. Va. 399, 14 S. E. Rep. 15.

See principal case distinguished in N. Y., etc., R. Co. v. Baker, 98 Fed. Rep. 697, 698.

See article in 6 Va. Law Reg. 137, as to the employment of independent contractor.

‡__Instructions—Equivocal.__—The principal case was cited and followed in Gas Co. v. Wheeling, 8 W. Va. 371. See also, foot-note to B. & O. R. R. Co. v. Polly, 14 Gratt. 448; monographic note on "Instructions" appended to Womack v. Circle, 29 Gratt. 192.

Digitized by Google

to the fifth and sixth instructions asked for by the plaintiff in error on the trial.

By the fifth instruction the court was asked to say to the jury, that if they believed from the evidence, that the injury received by the defendant in error was caused by the cars being thrown off the track by a large rock suddenly rolled down upon the track by the servants of Brown & Crickhard, contractors for the performance of work which did not necessarily or properly concern the running of the road, nor connect itself with or affect the track 232 or the carrying of passengers *thereon safely, and by no other carelessness; and that the rolling down of the said rock as aforesaid, could not have been foreseen nor provided against by the conductors of the cars, then, although the contract of the company with Brown & Crickhard required that their work should be done according to the requirements of the principal and other engineers of the company, and that Brown & Crickhard should carry out their directions, &c.; yet those provisions in the said contract did not make the employees of Brown & Crickhard servants of the company; and the jury should find for the company.

The sixth instruction asserts the proposition, that although it be true that a common carrier is not at liberty to depute another party to perform any part of his duty in reference to the transportation of passengers, and cannot rely on such a deputation to relieve him from responsibility; yet in a matter not relating to the duty of transportation of passengers, but collateral thereto, and not necessarily affecting the duty of the company as carriers, they stood on the same footing with other persons, and might rely on the default of their subcontractor to the same extent as any other party could do.

The court refused to give the fifth instruction, and gave no other in lieu of it. The court also refused to give the sixth instruction as asked, but in lieu of it, instructed the jury, that although it be true that a common carrier is not at liberty to depute another party to perform any part of his duty in reference to the transportation of passengers, and cannot rely on such a deputation to relieve him from responsibility; yet in a matter not relating to the duty of transportation of passengers, nor connected with the safety of the road, but collateral thereto, and not necessarily affecting their duty as carriers, the company stood on the same footing with other 233 persons, and might rely on *the default of their subcontractor to the same extent that any other party could do. The modification made by the court in the instruction, as asked, consisting in the interpolation of the words which I have italicised.

It appears from the certificate of the facts, that Brown & Crickhard were the contractors for the construction of the nineteenth section of the road (the section on which the injury was received); and that their contract included the delivery upon the line of the road, and preparing for the use of the track layers, the stone necessary for ballasting the road; that some month or two before the happening of the act complained of, it became desirable to lay the track upon the nineteenth section, and to use it for the passage of the cars; that Brown & Crickhard were not then ready with the stone for ballasting, and that as ballasting was designed merely to secure the permanency and durability of the superstructure, and was not deemed by the company essential to the present safety of the road, the engineer required the track to be laid without the stone ballasting: and the road was thus brought into use without the ballasting. Brown & Crickhard were required to go on and deliver and prepare the stone for ballasting; and were instructed to place it on the line of the road, outside of the track, in such a position that it could be either used for ballasting or conveniently placed upon cars to be transported elsewhere on the line; though they were instructed not to place it upon the track, or on or between the ties.

It further appears, that Brown & Crickhard were engaged, with a force of fifteen or twenty hands, in delivering and preparing this ballasting, and that the mode of doing it was to place unbroken stone along the line of the road outside of the track, and then to break and heap it up in ridges of convenient size and shape to be measured and received by the engineers.
234 *These hands were engaged at this work at the time the train came up on the day of the injury, and some of them appeared to have been sitting astride the stone ridges, and to have just left their places to avoid the near passing of the cars.

It was proved that the car was thrown from the track by striking against a large stone on the track; but there was a conflict of opinion among the witnesses as to how the stone came to be on the track.

No one saw exactly how the matter occurred, and the witnesses expressing their belief, from the appearances discovered on after examination, differed in opinion as to the precise manner in which the accident was caused.

One witness expressed the belief, as the result of his examination, that the ridge of stone at that point was so near the rail that it was struck by the step of the baggage car, and that by the disturbance thus caused, a large stone was rolled from the top of the ridge, just in front of the wheel of the first passenger car: And in support of this opinion, the witness stated that he observed that the step was very much bent and injured. Another witness thought that the ridge had been disturbed, and the stone rolled down by the hub of one of the wheels of the baggage car; and stated that the casting which covered the hub was very much broken. Another thought that the stone had been, rolled down by the jarring of the train as it passed near the stone ridge. Another, that the stone had probably been loosed from its place and rolled down by the haste of one of the hands of Brown & Crickhard in getting off the ridge to avoid the train; and gave as his reason that on examining the spot he found the apron and hammer of one of said hands at the point from which the stone had probably rolled, and saw no evidence that the train had struck the ridge of rock. All, how-235 ever (the certificate proceeds), *concurred in the opinion that the stone was rolled under the train while in motion, and the stone was found deeply imbedded in one of the ties. The wheel of the car was broken, and the end of the car thrown from the track against a bank, breaking the car, and injuring the plaintiff.

Digitized by Google

It was found that the nineteenth section had not been surrendered to the control of the road master charged with keeping the road in repair, but was still in charge of the engineer department as under construction.

The engineer who had charge of the section, stated that he considered the contractors Brown & Crickhard and their hands as under his control, and that he had given them such orders as, if obeyed, could have prevented such an occurrence. He further stated that he had frequent occasion to pass over this section of the road, and that he had never observed that any of the stone ridges were so near the track as to be dangerous; if he had, he would have had the authority and it would have been his duty to have them promptly removed. Another witness testified that being in charge of a gravel train in the service of the company, he had had frequent occasion to pass along the line over the nineteenth section, and that he had several times called the attention of those engaged in preparing this ballasting to the fact that the stone ridges were too near the rails, and that there would some accident occur if they were not removed.

I have thus followed up the instructions, with the certificate of the evidence, believing that a mere reading of the two in their immediate connection will of itself go very far towards showing the true object and meaning of the instructions, and the consequent propriety or impropriety of the ruling of the Circuit court in respect to them.

Before proceeding to make such 236 comments upon the *case as may, however, still seem necessary in order fully to test the correctness of the judgment of the Circuit court, it will, I think, be found convenient to direct our attention first to the nature of the contract (express or implied between the parties), by the negligent performance of their part whereof, by the company, the injury to the defendant in error is alleged to have been caused.

And here, in the first place, it is obvious to remark that, whilst the diligence which the law requires of a rail road company in the performance of its duties as the carrier of passengers on its cars, is in no respect inferior in degree to that expected of any other common carrier of passengers by land, the sphere of such duties is, in the case of the rail road company, generally of a much broader extent than that which usually limits the office and duty of a carrier of passengers by stage coaches or other like means of public conveyance. This enlargement of the limits of the duties and responsibilities of the rail road company grows out of the consideration in part that they are ordinarily not only the owners of the carriages or vehicles in which the passengers are transported, and of the motive power, but also the sole and exclusive proprietors of the track and of a certain space immediately contiguous on each side. Combining in themselves the ownership as well of the road as of the cars and locomotives, they are bound to the most exact care and diligence not only in the management of the trains and cars, but also in the structure and care of the track, and in all the subsidiary arrangements necessary to the safety of passengers. McElroy & wife v. Nashua and Lowell Rail Road Corporation, 4 Cushing's R. 400. And in order to show that they have used such care and diligence in the construction of their road, it is not sufficient to show merely that they employed for the purpose men of compe-
237 tent skill and *science. Thus, in the case of Grote v. The Chester and Holyhead Railway Company, 2 Exch. R. 251, which was an action against a rail way company for an injury received by the plaintiff by the breaking down of a bridge over which he was passing in a passenger train, it was held that it was a proper question for the jury whether the defendants had engaged the services of competent engineers who had adopted the best method and used the best materials, and that, if the defendants had done so, they would not be liable; but that the mere fact of their having engaged the services of such a person would not relieve them from the consequences of an accident arising from a deficiency.

And as accidents as frequently arise from obstructions on the track, as perhaps from any other cause whatever, it would seem to follow, obviously, that there is no one of the duties of a rail road company more clearly embraced within its warranty to carry their passengers safely, as far as human care and foresight will go, than the duty of employing the utmost care and diligence in guarding their road against such obstructions.

It would seem to me to follow further, that where a rail road company, whilst using its track for the carriage of passengers, engages in a work to be done on its road, and in the immediate proximity of its track, negligence in the performance of which would, in the estimation and opinion of cautious persons, involve the hazard of obstruction to the passage of its cars, it would be just as incompetent for them, in the case of an accident to a passenger caused by an obstruction arising from negligence in the performance of such work, to show merely that they had placed the work in the hands of a contractor, and that the obstruction was caused by the carelessness of one of his employees, as it would be for them, in the case of an accident to a passenger, arising from a want of care or skill 238 in the *management and conduct of the train, to show that such management and conduct had been let out to a contractor, and that the accident was due exclusively to the carelessness of one of his employees.

Digitized by Google

In neither case, I apprehend, could such a deputation by the company of its powers and duties to another, shield it against the complaint of an injured passenger.

It seems to me that the fifth instruction asked, if not plainly in conflict with these principles, is obviously susceptible of an interpretation which might have led to a verdict in disregard of them. We have seen that Brown & Crickhard were engaged in the work of delivering upon the line of the road, and preparing for the use of the tracklayers, the stone necessary for ballasting the road; and we have seen also that the ballasting was designed merely to secure the permanency and durability of the superstructure, and was not regarded by the company as necessary to the present safety of the road; and there is nothing to show that it was so necessary. Under one sense in which the jury might well have understood the instruction, they might have found that the work in which Brown & Crickhard were engaged "did not necessarily or properly concern the running of the road nor connect itself with or affect the track or the carrying of passengers thereon safely;" though at the same time believing that the company had not used due diligence in guarding against accidents which might arise from negligence in the disposition, management and performance of the work. It might well be that the delivery of stone on the road and its preparation for ballasting, if done in a proper manner and with due care, would not affect the track or the carrying of passengers thereon safely: And yet there was evidence tending to show that there was negligence either in Brown & Crickhard or in the 239 officers *of the company in so regulating the heaps or ridges in which the stone was placed, and the proximity of those ridges to the track, as to make them a source of danger to the trains in their passage on the track. For let the theory of either one of the witnesses who expressed their belief as to the manner in which the accident occurred, be adopted; let it be that the ridge of stone was so near the rail that it was struck by the step of the baggage car, or that the ridge had been disturbed and the stone rolled down by the hub of one of the wheels of the baggage car, or that the stone had been rolled down by the jarring of the train as it passed near the stone ridge, or (which is the theory adopted in the instruction) that the stone had probably been loosed from its place and rolled down by the haste of one of the hands of Brown & Crickhard in getting off the ridge to avoid the train: In either one of these aspects, there would be evidence before the jury tending strongly to show a want of due care on the part of those, whoever they were, who had the control and management in the locating and disposing of the heaps and ridges of stone. Not only so; but, whilst there was the evidence of the engineer of the section that he had frequent occasion to pass over the section, and that he had never observed that any of the stone ridges were so near the track as to be dangerous, there was yet also the evidence of another witness, who likewise had frequent occasion to pass over this section, and who stated that he had repeatedly called the attention of those engaged in preparing the ballasting, to the fact that the stone ridges were too near the rails, and that there would be some accident if they were not removed.

With such evidence in the case, can there be a serious doubt that the jury should have been left free to enquire whether there was not danger in the work, arising from the mode and manner in which it was 240 *done; whether the company did not know, or, by the exercise of the proper diligence, might not have ascertained the existence of such danger; and whether they had used due care and foresight in guarding against it? I think not. And yet according to a sense of the instruction in which it might well have been understood, these enquiries were withdrawn from the jury. It is true, that the words "no other carelessness," are used in such a connection as to make the instruction susceptible of the meaning that the verdict of the jury was to be based upon a finding negativing all negligence upon the part of the company. But the fair meaning of the instruction in the particular under consideration, is, I think, one which confines the jury to the finding that the sole and exclusive immediate cause of the disaster (the sudden rolling down of the stone upon the track) was the careless act of the servants of Brown & Crickhard, and that the rolling down of the stone could not have been foreseen nor provided against by the conductors of the cars.

In the view which I take of the case, the enquiry whether Brown & Crickhard were contractors for the work in which they were engaged, is not material. For if the company, by its officers charged with the duty of guarding the track against obstructions, saw, or might, by the exercise of proper vigilance, have seen that Brown & Crickhard were placing the stone in such close proximity to the track, or otherwise disposing of the material used in the work, in a manner calculated to excite in the minds of cautious persons fears and apprehensions for the safety of the track, it was their duty to use the utmost care and diligence to provide against the danger: and we have the evidence of the engineer, that in case he had observed that the ridges had been placed so near the track as to be dangerous, he would have had the authority, and it would have been his duty to have them promptly removed.

Digitized by Google

241 *Any instruction requiring the jury to render a verdict for the company upon a finding which did not clearly negative the want of care, skill or foresight on the part of the company not only in the conduct and management of the train, but also in all the other particulars wherein I have shown the passengers had a right to expect the exercise of such care, skill and foresight by the company and its officers, would have been unjust to the defendant in error. Had the fifth instruction been given, the jury might, and most probably would have rendered a verdict for the company upon a finding far less comprehensive than the one just indicated as essential to such a verdict; and the Circuit court properly refused to give it.

If the company desired to narrow the range of the discussion, and to stake their case on one or more distinct issues, to be found under instructions as to the law applicable to them, it was their business so to frame the instructions as that they might be given with safety as to the rights of the other side.

I have been unable to discover that the Circuit court did any thing to the prejudice of the plaintiff in error in making the slight modification which it made in the sixth instruction. The testimony, in relation to the work undertaken and performed by Brown & Crickhard, was the only evidence in the case to which the proposition of law, contained in the instruction, could be intended to refer. And the only effect which (it seems to me) the words interpolated by the court, to wit, "nor connected with the safety of the road," could well have, would be, to explain to some extent the preceding words in the instruction, and to point the jury to the enquiry whether the work aforesaid was of a character to fall within the designation of the instruction.

The court gave no intimation of its opinion as to the state of the facts of 242 the case; and I do not think *that the slight change which it made in the terms of the instruction, is in any respect objectionable.

I have examined with care the cases cited by the counsel of the company in support of their assignment of errors, and I do not perceive that they declare any principle in conflict with the foregoing views. The duties which a carrier of passengers owes to his passengers, and the duties which he owes to other persons, between whom and himself the relation of carrier and passenger does not exist, are essentially distinct. Decisions, therefore, settling how far it is competent for a company engaged in the business of carrying passengers to protect itself against a suit brought by a stranger for an injury received from the negligent act of an employee of a contractor of the company engaged in the prosecution of a work of the company, by showing that such employee was not, in a legal sense, the servant of the company, do not seem to me to have any immediate bearing on the case in hand. The two cases more especially relied on by the counsel of the company, viz: Reedie v. London & Northwestern Railway Company, 4 Exch. R. 244, and Steel v. Southeastern Railway Company, 223 Eng. L. & E. R. 366; were cases of the kind just indicated. In each case the suit was at the instance not of a passenger, but of a stranger.

In each case, the injury received was caused not by any accident happening in the running of the trains, but by an accident arising from the carelessness of employees of contractors engaged in the prosecution of a work altogether collateral to the running of the cars on the road.

In neither case had the company come under any contract or engagement with the party injured.

The difference is broad and obvious between such cases and the case of an injury received on the cars of a railway company, in their passage on the road, by a 243 *passenger who has taken his seat under the assurance and promise, on the part of the company (which the undertaking necessarily implies), that they have used, and will continue to use all the means of precaution, within the power of human foresight and sagacity, to provide for his safe transportation.

Upon the whole, I am of the opinion that there is no error in the judgment of the Circuit court, and am for affirming it with costs, &c.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Daniel, J.

Judgment affirmed.

---

244 *Callison v. Hedrick.

July Term, 1859, Lewisburg.

1. Public Officers—Proof of Appointment.—In general it is not necessary to prove the written appointments of public officers. That one has acted as such officer and been recognized by the public as such, is sufficient evidence that he has been duly appointed until the contrary appears. And the case is still stronger where the official character has been recognized by the appointing power.

2. Turnpike Roads—Proof of Location.—The plat or map of the survey and location of a turnpike road, with the certificates thereon by the surveyor, returned to the clerk's office and recorded in pursuance of the statute, is evidence of the line of

*Eminent Domain—Compensation to Landowner.—In Keystone Bridge Co. v. Summers, 13 W. Va. 501, it is said: "It is unquestionably true, that he may be, and indeed must be, in all cases deprived of his property taken for a county road, before he receives just compensation, as the law simply provides, that after the road has been established, the county shall be chargeable with the compensation. But it is well settled, that where property is taken by a state directly, or by a town or county under state authority by state authority, it is not essential, in order not to violate this provision of the bill the road as located, in an action by the owner of the land against a contractor for entering thereon, and injuring the land: And a partial mistaken change in the name of the road will not exclude them as evidence.

Digitized by Google

3. Same—Construction of—Limitation of Action for Damages—Case at Bar.—An act authorized the construction of a road from M to L, and the road was located and a plat thereof returned to the clerk's office; and an owner of land through which the road was to pass did not apply to the County court within the year to have her damages assessed. The road was in fact made but a part of the distance, and stopped; and at the next session of the legislature a company was incorporated to construct the remainder of the road. This company is entitled to make their road upon the location made under the previous law; and the owner of the land not having applied for damages within the year from the return of the plat, is concluded from recovering them.

4. Same—Same—Same—Change of Location—Effect.—In such a case, if the road is changed in any part of it from the location made, the owner of the land may recover damages for that.

This was an action on the case in the Circuit court of Greenbrier county, brought by Margaret P. Callison against Henry Hedick, to recover damages for an entry upon and ploughing up and scraping her lands. Upon the trial, which took place at the October term 1858, the plaintiff proved the entry upon her land by the defendant, and that he ploughed up the same for the distance of about a mile, with the 245 purpose of making *through said lands the Lewisburg and Oakland turnpike. And when she had concluded her testimony, the defendant offered in evidence a plat with the certificates thereon, which the certificate stated was "the profile of the Lewisburg and Marlin's Bottom turnpike from the county line to Lewisburg;" and which the clerk of the County court of Greenbrier certified had on that day, the 7th of March 1854, been returned and deposited in his office by Harvey Handley, the county surveyor, and recorded. This evidence the plaintiff objected to as not being duly authenticated. The defendant then read to the court the act of assembly incorporating the Oakland and Lewisburg turnpike company, passed February 20th, 1856, and also an act incorporating the Lewisburg and Marlin's Bottom turnpike company. (See for these acts the opinion of Lee, J.) And he offered one William Cochran as a witness to prove that he was the superintendent of the Marlin's Bottom and Lewisburg turnpike company. The witness stated that he had been appointed superintendent of said road by an order of the Board of public works. That as superintendent of said road he had attended meetings of the board upon business connected with the road; that he had received a salary as such superintendent, which had been regularly paid to him until the last year; and that the road had been located, and the profile and certificates aforesaid made out, and returned to the clerk's office under his authority as superintendent of the road; and that he had, as superintendent, reported that fact to the Board of public works: And the defendant stated that he proposed to prove further that the road which he made was upon that location.

The plaintiff objected to the statement of the witness of his appointment as superintendent of the road, on the ground that parol evidence of the order of the board was inadmissible without the production 246 of the *order; and to the profile and certificates, as not properly authenticated. But the court overruled the objections and admitted the evidence. Whereupon the plaintiff excepted.

After the evidence above mentioned was introduced, the defendant introduced evidence tending to prove that the trespass complained of, was committed in making the Lewisburg and Oakland turnpike; that the said road was made for a part of the distance on the location of the Marlin's Bottom and Lewisburg turnpike, as indicated in the profile aforesaid; but for another part, it departed from said location. And when the evidence was closed, the plaintiff asked the court to instruct the jury as follows:

1. That if the jury believe that the Marlin's Bottom and Lewisburg turnpike had terminated at the point where the Oakland and Lewisburg turnpike commenced; that no work had been done on the line of the latter road when the latter company was incorporated, and no act done along said line except to make a survey and return a profile of the road; that no interest in the soil of the land in question became vested in the latter company—that the law could not contemplate a continued fee simple title to the land over which the survey was made, when the state had declined to make the road.

2. That if the jury believed from the evidence that there was a departure from the location made by the first company, that the plaintiff is entitled to recover damages for such departure, whatever the law may be on the matter of the first instruction.

3. That in estimating damages for such departure, the jury are not to take into consideration any conveniences which might result to the plaintiff if the road was made. The entry upon her lands, as far as such departures were concerned, was unlawful, and the advantages of the road could 247 not be taken into consideration. *The court refused to give the first instruction to the jury, and in lieu thereof gave the following:

If the jury believe from the evidence that the Marlins Bottom and Lewisburg turnpike road had been located from Lewisburg to Oakland, the point at which the construction of said road had ceased, and that of rights, that the law should provide for payment of the compensation, before the property is taken and actually appropriated. See Callison v. Hedrick, 15 Gratt. 244; Redford et al. v. Knight, 11 N. Y. 308."

---

See also, the principal case cited in Bridge Co. v. Comstock, 36 W. Va. 275, 15 S. E. Rep. 73.

Digitized by Google

after such location through the lands of the plaintiff, a plat of the land to be taken for such road had been returned to the clerk's office according to law for more than twelve months, and the plaintiff had failed to assert her claim to damages for the land so taken within twelve months after the said plat was admitted to record, she was barred from claiming any damages, and the land covered by said location was vested in the state; and if the act for the construction of the Oakland and Lewisburg turnpike was passed after the said land of the plaintiff had vested in the state as aforesaid, the said company were authorized to construct the road upon the same location without paying any damages to the plaintiff.

The court gave the second instruction and refused to give the third, but in lieu thereof instructed the jury, if they believed from the evidence that any alterations made upon the location of the road through the lands of the plaintiff in making said road were made only with a view to the improvement in the location, they were at liberty in estimating the damages to take into consideration any advantages resulting to the plaintiff from such alteration.

To which opinion of the court, refusing to give the first and third instructions asked for by the plaintiff's counsel, and giving the instructions above stated, the plaintiff, by her counsel, excepted.

There was a verdict and judgment for the defendant. And thereupon Mrs. Callison applied to this court for a supersedeas; which was awarded.

248 *Price, for the appellant.

Wm. Smith and Gordon, for the appellee.

LEE, J. That the evidence offered by the defence in this case might be received under the general issue, if itself free from objection, is very clear. It has long been settled that the defendant under this issue may prove that the locus in quo was his own freehold or that of another by whose authority he entered, or that he hath any other title or right to the possession. Diersly and Nevel's Case, 1 Leon. R. 301; Dodd v. Kyffin, 7 T. R. 354; Garr, &c. v. Fletcher, 2 Stark. R. 71, 3 Eng. C. L. R. 250; Chambers v. Donaldson, 11 East's R. 65, 72; Argent v. Durrant, 8 T. R. 403, Gilb. Ev. 258.

The objection to the evidence offered to prove that Cochran was the superintendent of the road referred to, is I think, wholly untenable. In general it is not necessary to prove the written appointments of public officers. That one has acted as such officer and been recognized by the public as such, is sufficient evidence that he had been duly appointed until the contrary appears; nor is it material how the question arises, whether in a civil or a criminal case, nor whether the officer is a party or his official character is involved incidentally, unless where, being plaintiff, he unnecessarily avers his title to the office or the mode of his appointment; in which case, perhaps, the proof must sustain the entire averment. McGahey v. Alston, 2 Mees. & Welsb. 206; Berryman v. Wise, 4 T. R. 366; Cannell v. Curtis, 2 Bing. N. C. 228 (29 Eng. C. L. R. 316); The King v. Gordon, 2 Leach's C. C. 15; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 83, 92, and cases cited in nn. Still stronger is the case where, as in this, the acts and official character were fully recognized by the appointing power.

Nor can the objection to the plat and profile of road offered in evidence be 249 sustained. It is true there was *at that time no such precise road known to the law as the "Marland's Bottom and Lewisburg turnpike," but it is easy to see how it came to be so designated. By an act passed on the 25th of February 1850, provision was made for constructing what was called the "Huttonsville and Huntersville road." By this act the Board of public works were directed to have the road constructed, and for that purpose they were to exercise all the powers and be subject to all the restrictions which were given to and imposed upon the board by the act providing for the construction of the Staunton and Parkersburg road, passed March 16, 1838, except as therein otherwise especially directed. By that act the powers, duties and restrictions of the board in relation to the Staunton and Parkersburg road are defined by reference to those given to and imposed upon the president and directors of the Northwestern turnpike road by the act providing for the construction of that road, passed March 19, 1831, except as therein specially directed. By the fourth section of that act it was made the duty of the principal engineer to lay out and locate the road, and to deliver to the clerks of the County courts of the counties through which the same might pass, plats or maps of so much of the road as might be within their respective counties, to be by them recorded; and thereupon the land over which the said road should be located was to become ipso facto vested in the commonwealth for the use of the said road. On the 22d of March 1853 an act was passed providing for the extension of the Huttonsville and Huntersville turnpike from Marland's Bottom in the county of Pocahontas to Lewisburg. In the title to the act the road is described as "the Huttonsville, Marland's Bottom and Lewisburg turnpike." By the second section of the act for the construction of the Huttonsville and Huntersville road the Board of public works was directed to employ a competent en-
250 gineer *or superintendent who was to perform the duties enjoined upon the engineer of the Staunton and Parkersburg road, which as we have seen were the same as those enjoined upon the principal engineer by the act for the construction of the Northwestern turnpike. It was proved by the superintendent that the road had been located and the plat and profile offered in evidence made out and returned to the clerk's office under his authority as superintendent, and the fact reported by him to the board; and the certificate of the clerk shows that it had been received on the 7th of March 1854 and admitted to record. It of course represented only the Greenbrier portion of the line between Marland's Bottom and Lewisburg, and it was therefore described for the sake of brevity, prehaps, or because it was popularly so called as "the Lewisburg and Marland's Bottom turnpike." That it was so called appears throughout the record, and the plaintiff herself uses that name in speaking of it; and it was afterwards so called in the act of the 26th of February 1856. It was at most a mere misnomer which could mislead no one as the explanation was patent upon the face of the plat when taken in connection with the acts of assembly under which it had been made.

Digitized by Google

By the "plat of the land" to be occupied by the road required to be turned to the clerk's office by § 5, of ch. 70, of the Code (p. 349), I understand the same thing that is called a "plat or map of the road" in section 4th of the act concerning the Northwestern turnpike road, and I regard the profile in this case if not as perfect as it might have been made, yet as substantially complying with the requirement of the act. And having been returned to the clerk's office by Cochran, the superintendent whose duty from the nature of his office it was to cause the plat and profile to be made and so returned, the authorization of his act is sufficiently implied, and 251 it must be taken to be *the act of the board until the contrary is made to appear.

I think these grounds of objection to the profile as evidence were clearly insufficient, and I pass on to consider the effect of the survey and the return of the profile to the clerk's office in their bearing on the case, in connection with the first instruction asked for by the plaintiff and that which the court gave instead, when it refused it.

It may be inferred from what we see in the record that the Board of public works, under the act of March 22, 1853, had progressed with the work of the road from Marland's Bottom to Lewisburg and had completed the same as far as a place called Oakland; that at that point for some cause which it may not be difficult to conjecture, work upon the road had been suspended, and that it was determined to appeal to the public spirit of the people in the section interested for the means of prosecuting this work deemed of public utility, to its completion. For at the next session of the general assembly, an act was passed (Sess. Acts 1855-6, ch. 198, p. 139) providing for the incorporation of a company to be called the "Oakland and Lewisburg company, for the purpose of continuing the Marland's Bottom and Lewisburg turnpike from Oakland its then southern terminus to Lewisburg. By the second section of this act, the company was required to construct the road of the same width and grade as those of the Lewisburg and Marland's Bottom turnpike, and upon the location determined by the Board of public works, plainly referring to the location which had been made under the act of the 22d of March 1853 for the extension of the Huttonsville and Huntersville road from Marland's Bottom to Lewisburg. Now I can perceive no reason why the legislature might not authorize this company to construct the road upon the ground which had in fact
252 *been appropriated for the same road under another name. By the Code, (ch. 70, § 5, p. 349,) it is provided that upon the return of the plat of the land to be taken for a work of internal improvement to the clerk's office and when admitted to record, the land so to be occupied, shall ipso facto be vested in the state. Whether the interest so vested is an absolute fee simple or a qualified estate in the nature of a base fee for the use and purposes of the work, I do not deem it very material to enquire, though I incline to think notwithstanding the broad language of the act, it is of the latter character only. Were it an absolute fee simple, there would seem to be no need of the eighth section of the same chapter which provides that any land taken for such work may be used not only therefor but also for any other work of a different kind which the legislature might at a future time direct or authorize. Concede that the state takes only a qualified estate in the land, if the legislature could direct the Board of public works or authorize a company or third persons to construct a work of a different character from that for which the land had been appropriated (as to which or the validity or true construction of the section, I express no opinion) I can perceive no reason why it might not authorize a company to construct and use a work of precisely the same character, in fact the very road intended, upon the land appropriated. How is the land owner injured? If he might complain should his land taken for an ordinary turnpike road, be converted to the construction and working of a totally different kind of improvement, such e. g. as a rail road whereby he would be subjected to the greater inconveniences and the risks to life and property from such a road running through his land, (as to which I express no opinion,) surely he can have no just cause of complaint when the road which is actually to be made and used, is 253 *precisely the kind of road for which the land was appropriated. Whether it be made by the Board of public works under the direction of the legislature or by a company under its authority, he is incommoded exactly in the same degree and the conveniences and advantages which he derives are precisely the same.

But it is said the enterprise of constructing a road from Marland's Bottom to Lewisburg was abandoned by the legislature, and that finding it so the plaintiff may for those reasons have failed to file her petition and claim compensation for her land. Where land has been appropriated for a public work and the legislature afterwards by indubitable evidences manifests its intention to abandon the enterprise and the interest of the state, if a qualified estate only, has ceased and determined, I certainly will not undertake to affirm that a company incorporated at a subsequent period to construct such a work could claim to occupy the ground formerly appropriated by the state without making such compensation; but in this case there is no evidence of any such abandonment. That the Board of public works had not been able for whatever cause to complete the road to Lewisburg within one year after the filing of the profile in the clerk's office was certainly not sufficient to justify her in concluding that the enterprise was abandoned and induce her to forbear preferring her claim for compensation, if she otherwise would have done so within the year. That the enterprise was abandoned after the road had been made as far as Oakland because the work was suspended, whether before or after the expiration of the year and whether because money could not be raised or the appropriation had been exhausted, was by no means the necessary nor the proper inference. The Board of public works had not the power to declare the enterprise abandoned and surrender the commonwealth's interest in the location. The legislature having *declared 254 its purpose to extend the road to Lewisburg, it would have been more proper to conclude that it would provide the means either by an additional appropriation if the former were exhausted, or as it in fact did at the very next session, by designating another agency to go on and finish the work. And such is the true and proper construction of the act of 1855-6, and it was I think, plainly intended to authorize this company to occupy the location theretofore made by the Board of public works, and complete the line to Lewisburg.

Digitized by Google

Whether the plaintiff preferred her claim and obtained compensation for the land occupied by the road after the profile had been filed, we are not informed. If she did prefer it and received such compensation, surely she cannot be entitled to demand it a second time. If because she thought the peculiar benefits which she would derive in respect to the residue of her land would be full compensation and did not care to risk costs in seeking more, or whether with a commendable public spirit she chose to waive her claim, she must after the expiration of the year stand on the same footing as if she had received all that she was entitled to.

I think therefore the court properly refused to give the first instruction asked for, and that the instruction which it gave in lieu of it was substantially correct. But I think it erred in refusing to give the third instruction and in giving that which it did give, instead, understanding both as referring to the peculiar benefits which the party would derive in respect to the residue of her land by the construction of the road on the new location. If the company desired to change the location and had the right to do so, it was their duty to conform to the provision of the Code, ch. 56, § 21, p. 296. If they failed to do this, and departed from the location, they became 255 trespassers, and when sued, *they were not at liberty to fall back upon the provisions of that and other kindred sections and have the damages estimated according to the measure of compensation to the land owner prescribed by them. When off of the location they were mere trespassers, and the damages were to be estimated as in other actions of trespass. For this cause I think the judgment should be reversed and a new trial directed.

DANIEL, MONCURE and ROBERTSON, Js., concurred in the opinion of Lee, J.

ALLEN, P., was of opinion that the Lewisburg and Oakland turnpike company were not authorized to occupy the location that had been made by the Board of public works without compensation to the land owners. He concurred in the opinion of Lee, J., on the other points.

Judgment reversed.

---

256 *Shue v. Turk, Sheriff.

July Term, 1859, Lewisburg.

1. Emancipation of a Slave—Case at Bar.—D makes a contract with H, by which he sells to H his slave S for three hundred and fifty dollars, estimated to be one-half his value, and when H is reimbursed this money from the earnings of S, H is to emancipate him. H hires out S and keeps an account of his earnings and expenses; and when he has received all but about twenty-one dollars, H makes an arrangement with M, a resident of the state of Ohio, but then in the county of R on a visit, by which he receives this balance from M and conveys S to him, and M emancipates S in the county of R, where S is duly registered as a freeman. Before H makes the arrangement with M he has become insolvent, and shortly afterwards a judgment is recovered against him in the county of A, and is levied on S in the county of R. HELD:
   1. Same—Levy of Execution—Case at Bar.—That as D might have enforced the contract against H. and compelled him to emancipate the slave upon being reimbursed the amount he had paid, and as H had been repaid, and S had been emancipated in pursuance of the contract, he is not liable to be taken in execution for the debt of H.
   2. Same—Same—Habeas Corpus.—S having been emancipated and duly registered as a freeman, and not being claimed as a slave, but as subject to a lien for the debt of H, a proceeding by habeas corpus to be relieved from the custody of the officer is a proper mode to try the question of his liability to be subjected to pay the debt of H.
   3. Same—Recordation of Deed of.—M having been in the county of R when he executed the deed of emancipation, that was a sufficient residence to authorize the recording of the deed in the clerk's office of that county.
2. Appellate Practice—Secondary Evidence—No Objection in Lower Court.—Secondary evidence hav-

*Appellate Practice—Secondary Evidence—No Objection in Lower Court.—In Baltimore, etc., R. R. Co. v.

Digitized by Google

ing been admitted in the court below without objection, it cannot be objected to in the appellate court.

In July 1859 John Shue, a man of color, applied to the Honorable Lucas P. Thompson, judge of the Circuit court of Augusta county, for a writ of habeas corpus, alleging that he was a freeman, and had been levied on as the property of Abraham Hanna, 257 by virtue *of an execution which issued from the clerk's office of the County court of Augusta, upon a judgment recovered by Jacob Harnsbarger against Washington Swink, Abraham Hanna and others.

The writ was issued, and upon the hearing before Judge Thompson, Hanna was introduced as a witness by the petitioner, and stated—That Shue the petitioner, was formerly owned by a gentleman named Dismuth, living in Eastern Virginia, but had been hired out for twenty years in Augusta. That about three years since he had received several letters from Dismuth proposing to sell Shue to the witness, and proposing to take three hundred dollars for him, provided witness would agree to allow Shue to pay off the amount of the purchase money by his earnings and hire, and that when so repaid, witness would emancipate him. That witness did purchase him on these terms, at the price of three hundred and fifty dollars, Shue being then worth double the money, and that witness had paid the price. That Dismuth by his agent Hoard gave witness a bill of sale for Shue; and at the same time witness, according to his impression, executed and delivered a contract in writing, wherein was set forth the fact and terms of the contract, viz: that witness had received the bill of sale for Shue, with the understanding and agreement that when Shue's wages and earnings should amount to a sum equal to three hundred and fifty dollars, paid by him to Dismuth, the witness bound himself to emancipate said slave. Where that contract then was, he did not know. Witness regarded himself as the fee simple holder of the legal title of the petitioner, only for the purpose of securing the amount paid by him, and in conscience and morality bound to emancipate him upon being repaid his advances; but did not consider himself as bound to account to the petitioner or his former master. That the object of 258 the arrangement *on the part both of himself and Dismuth, was to afford the petitioner an opportunity to refund to witness the amount he advanced; and thus to procure his emancipation. That witness gave public notice of this arrangement soon after it was made, and that all contracts for the services of petitioner were to be made with witness; which was invariably done. That witness's son kept a regular account of the expenses of witness for the maintenance of the petitioner, and of the proceeds of his work; and in the month of March last it appeared from said account the witness had been repaid the amount advanced by him, with the exception of about twenty-one to twenty-five dollars. That with a view and for the purpose of fulfilling his contract with Dismuth, he made a bill of sale for the petitioner to William A. Marshall, then on a visit to his son in law in the county of Rockingham, but a resident of the state of Ohio, and Marshall paid to him the amount still due, and undertook, when that amount was repaid to him, to emancipate the petitioner.

The bill of sale from Hanna to Marshall bears date on the 26th of March 1859, and purports to be in consideration of three hundred and fifty dollars. By a deed bearing date the 19th of May 1859, Marshall emancipated Shue, stating the consideration to be motives of benevolence and three hundred and fifty dollars. This deed was admitted to record on the same day in the clerk's office of the County court of Rockingham. And in pursuance of an order of the County court of Rockingham, made on the 20th day of June 1859, the petitioner was on the 22d of the same month registered as a free negro in the clerk's office of that court.

In January 1859, Hanna having become embarrassed in his circumstances, by reason of some heavy securityships, he made a deed, by which he conveyed appar-
259 ently *all his property, of which there was a considerable amount of both real and personal estate, to Nicholas K. Trout, in trust for the payment of his debts. The petitioner Shue was not included in that deed, Hanna having stated the facts in relation to him, to the trustee, and being advised by him not to include him. In March 1859 Hanna was thought to be insolvent; though the trustee, who was examined as a witness, stated that his embarrassments resulted from his suretyships, and that it depended on various chancery suits brought to sell the real estate of parties bound with and before Hanna in debts paid by him as surety, whether he would in fact prove insolvent. The trustee said that he was a man of unquestionable integrity and truthfulness; and this was his general character.

The execution under which the petitioner Shue was levied on, was issued on a judgment recovered on a note for one thousand one hundred and twenty dollars, dated the 26th of March 1857, and payable two years after date, on which Hanna was the third accommodation endorser. The levy was made at the instance of Joseph F. Hottle,

Skeels, 3 W. Va. 560, it is said: "This evidence, although secondary, certainly tended directly to prove the contract supposed in the instruction, and the doctrine is too well settled to be called in question that if secondary evidence is introduced without objection in the court below, an objection to it in the appellate court comes too late and will not be considered. Shue v. Turk, 15 Gratt. 256; Atkins v Lewis, 14 Gratt. 34; Buchanan v. Clark, 10 Gratt. 172; Tayloe v. Smith, 10 Id. 558; Roberts v. Graham, 6 Wallace 578; Hammel v. The State, 17 Ohio Law State Rep. 628."

See also, Atkins v. Lewis, 14 Gratt. 30, and note.

Digitized by Google

a subsequent endorser on the same note, who Hanna stated was informed of the arrangement between Dismuth and himself very soon after it was made.

The judge dismissed the writ, and remanded Shue to the custody of the sheriff. And he thereupon applied to this court for a supersedeas; which was awarded.

Hugh W. Sheffey, for the appellant.
Michie and Baldwin, for the appellee.

ROBERTSON, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is settled that a negro, claimed and held as a slave, cannot litigate his right to freedom under a writ of habeas corpus.

In this case, however, the petitioner
260 *produces his papers showing, on their face, that he has been regularly emancipated, and registered as a free negro: and it appears upon the return and evidence, that those holding him in custody do not claim him as their slave, but that he is held by virtue of an execution levied for the purpose of subjecting him to a debt due from A. Hanna.

The matter in controversy is not whether the petitioner is a freeman or a slave: but whether, as an emancipated negro, he is liable for a debt of Hanna, his former owner—that is to say, whether, being free, he is subject to a lien, the enforcement of which may have the effect of reducing him again to the condition of slavery.

In Ruddle's ex'or v. Ben, 10 Leigh 467, it was held that a writ of habeas corpus is an appropriate remedy in such case.

This decision, however, was made by a court composed of three judges only, one of whom dissented; and so is not of binding authority. But I think that the decision of the majority, upon this question, was right: and the reasons given by Judge Parker in support of it, are so clear and forcible, that I cannot do better than refer to that portion of his opinion, expressing my entire concurrence in the views presented by him, upon this point.

It becomes necessary, therefore, to determine whether or not the petitioner has been so emancipated as to exempt him from liability for the debt, the execution for which has been levied upon him.

It has, in the argument here, been objected that the facts upon which the petitioner relies are not sufficiently proved, because the contract which Hanna (according to his impression) executed and delivered, the various letters referred to as having been received by him from Dismuth, and the original bill of sale to Marshall, have not been produced; nor has their 261 absence *been satisfactorily accounted for, so as to render secondary evidence of their contents admissible.

There can be no doubt that if objection had been made before the judge of the Circuit court to the admission of this secondary evidence, it must have prevailed. But an opportunity would then have been afforded the petitioner to remove it, either by the production of the papers, or by accounting for their non-production, so as to render proof of their contents proper. By its being taken for the first time in this court, the petitioner is deprived of that opportunity. The objection must therefore be overruled, and the facts stated in the bill of exceptions regarded as sufficiently proved.

The petitioner does not seem to me to stand in a better position, in any respect, than he would occupy if Hanna, on being reimbursed the amount advanced by him to Dismuth, had himself executed the deed of emancipation. The act was in truth substantially his: and the indirect mode of effecting it which was adopted, coupled with the false considerations recited in the bill of sale to Marshall, and in Marshall's deed of emancipation, are calculated to create doubts as to the fairness of the transaction. But I think that the inference of fraud which might be drawn from these circumstances is abundantly repelled by the other facts of the case. These facts show that there was no design on the part of Hanna to defraud any one; and that his sole purpose was to carry out honestly the contract between Dismuth and himself. He had neither obtained nor sought credit on the faith of his property in the petitioner; having given public notice, in the neighborhood, of the agreement under which he held him, as soon as it was made. Nor was his ability to discharge his debts in the slightest degree affected by all that he did in reference to the petitioner: for, before he caused him to be emanci-

262 pated, *he had received back every dollar that he had advanced. Hanna's creditors therefore have no right to complain that they have been in any manner defrauded. If they can subject the petitioner to their claims, it is only by virtue of a mere legal right arising out of the peculiar mode of emancipation which was adopted by Dismuth and Hanna. I speak of the emancipation as their joint act, for it should in fact be so regarded. Hanna indeed did less towards the liberation of the petitioner than Dismuth: for to effect it Dismuth contributed half of his value; while Hanna contributed nothing, save the trouble he took upon himself, and the risk he encountered of not being reimbursed the amount of his advance to Dismuth.

In examining the question as to the validity of the claim of the creditors of Hanna, I utterly repudiate the idea that I should, on the one hand, give a more liberal construction to the rights of the petitioner, in favor of liberty; or, on the other, that I should apply a stricter rule, because I may think that emancipation in this state ought not to be encouraged. I propose to adopt precisely the same rules of construction and decision that would apply to any other question of legal right, leaning neither to the one side nor the other.

It is objected, that the deed of emancipation has not been duly recorded, because Marshall was a citizen of Ohio, residing temporarily only in the county of Rockingham.

Digitized by Google

The deed describes him as being of the county of Rockingham, and it is admitted to record in that county, upon his acknowledgment before the clerk. This affords, I think, sufficient evidence that for the time, and within the meaning of the law, Rockingham was "his county." If the objection be valid, no person can emancipate a slave in Virginia, unless he has a fixed and permanent residence within the state.

263 *Such cannot be the proper construction of the law. The cases of Cales v. Miller, 8 Gratt. 6, and Hassler's lessee v. King, 9 Gratt. 115, would seem to remove all doubt on this question, if indeed any existed.

To determine whether the execution of such a contract as that between Dismuth and Hanna, by the emancipation of the slave pursuant to it, confers upon him a right to freedom superior to the claims of the creditors of the party executing the deed of emancipation, it is proper to examine into the nature of the contract, and ascertain whether it is valid and capable of being enforced.

Hanna supposed that it bound him "in conscience and morality" only: but if the facts stated by him show that it was legally binding also, his opinion to the contrary cannot affect its validity.

There was a valuable consideration moving from Dismuth to sustain the contract. He gave up half the value of the slave in consideration of the promise to emancipate. If then it was not binding between Dismuth and Hanna, it must be upon some other ground of objection to it than the want of sufficient consideration. There has been no adjudication in Virginia settling the question as to the validity of such a contract: but similar contracts have been passed upon by the courts of some of the other states of the Union.

In Tennessee, it has been held that such contracts are valid; and that they will be enforced, not only upon the application of one of the contracting parties, but also on that of the slave himself, or of any person whatever who may choose to petition for and on behalf of the slave. Elias v. Smith, 6 Humph. R. 33; Lewis v. Simonton, 8 Humph. R. 185—the latter of which cases even goes so far as to declare that a contract for emancipation made between a master and his slave is valid and enforceable.

In Louisiana, prior to the act of 264 1857 (which prohibits *emancipation in that state), a slave could make a contract relating to his own emancipation, although incapable of making a contract of any other kind. But in a case in which a testator had directed that his slaves should be sold together with the plantations on which they were employed, and that the purchaser should keep them on and attached to said plantations for a certain number of years, and then emancipate them—the slaves having been sold pursuant to the will, and upon the conditions required by it—the purchaser, before the time for emancipation had arrived, was proceeding to sell the slaves to different persons, to be removed from the plantations on which they were; and it was held that the court could not, on the application of the slaves themselves, interfere to prevent it. A suit was then brought by the heir of the testator, as representing his estate, for the purpose of enforcing the terms of the contract; and it was held that the purchaser was bound to comply with it, and a decree rendered accordingly. In delivering the opinion of the court, Martin, J., said:

"Justice requires that the defendant should not be permitted to disregard the obligation she has solemnly contracted. But it is urged that the terms and conditions of the will which are now sought to be enforced, are null and void, as destructive of the absolute power which sound policy and the laws of the land require the master should exercise over his slaves.

"So far as regards the slaves, the power of the master is indeed absolute. The slave cannot resist, or be heard if he complain of the abuse of this power: but in relation to other persons, nothing prevents the master from being compelled or coerced to comply with his engagements as vendee, which he contracted when he acquired his slave." Poydras v. Mourain, 9 Louis. R. 492, 505.

In Maryland, in a case where it ap-

265 peared that a *slave was sold for a term of years, with a power to the vendee to emancipate him at the end of the term, and that the vendor, before its expiration, sold him to another person, who got possession of him and held him in slavery, it was decided that the slave was entitled to recover his freedom, under a deed of emancipation, executed in his favor, by the first vendee, after the expiration of the term. Negro Cato v. Howard, 2 Harr. & John. R. 323.

In Kentucky (whose statutes in reference to the recordation of deeds of emancipation, and the prohibition of slaves from going at large and trading as freemen, are almost identical with our own), it has been decided that a contract such as the one now under consideration cannot be enforced at the suit of the slave; but that a specific performance of it will be decreed at the suit of the original owner, who contracted with his vendee for the future emancipation of the slave. Beall v. Joseph (a negro), Hardin's R. 51; Thompson v. Wilmot, 1 Bibb's R. 422; Willis v. Bruce & Warfield, 8 B. Monr. R. 548; Gatliffe's adm'r v. Rose, 8 B. Monr. R. 629.

I have referred to these cases as showing the view that has been taken of this question in states with institutions similar to our own. The decisions are of course to be regarded as authority here only so far as they may commend themselves by the reasons upon which they are founded. It is proper, therefore, that we should examine the question as an original one.

It is well settled that a contract between a master and his slave, for the future emancipation of the slave, cannot be enforced against the master, although it may have been fully performed on the part of the slave. Sawney v. Carter, 6 Rand. 173; Stevenson v. Singleton, 1 Leigh 72.

Digitized by Google

It seems to me too to be equally clear that a slave who has, under such a contract, paid his master the *stipulated price for his freedom, and who has been actually emancipated in consequence thereof, is liable to be subjected to the payment of any debt of his master, existing at the time of his emancipation. This is so, because the emancipation in such case is without any valid consideration—the price paid by the slave not constituting such consideration, inasmuch as not only the slave himself, but every thing made by or belonging to him, is in law the property of his master.

266

It is true, that the opinion of a majority of the court, in Ruddle's ex'or v. Ben, appears to be in conflict with this view: but, as has been already stated, that case is not binding as authority; and the decision in this respect (as indeed is shown by Judge Tucker, who dissented on this point) is so opposed to the necessary consequences resulting from the relation of master and slave, that it cannot be regarded as law.

I think further, that a slave cannot, while remaining in the condition of slavery, enforce a contract which may have been made by other persons for his benefit. If, therefore, Hanna had refused to comply with his contract with Dismuth, the petitioner could not by any legal proceeding have compelled him to do so. But it does not follow that the contract could not have been enforced by Dismuth.

It will hardly be contended that Dismuth could not enforce a contract with Hanna, by which Hanna, having paid him a certain sum as the hire of his slave, bound himself that as soon as he received an equal amount from the proceeds of the labor of the slave, he should be returned to Dismuth, or delivered up to any person to whom Dismuth might order him to be delivered. And if such a contract as the one supposed would be valid and binding, it is difficult to perceive why a contract that the slave, instead of being returned to Dismuth, or delivered to his order, at the time agreed upon, should be emancipated, would not *also be valid and enforceable by Dismuth, unless indeed it can be made to appear that such a contract is illegal.

267

Accordingly, a strenuous effort has been made, in the argument of the case, to show that such a contract is contrary to the policy of our law, and therefore void. It is insisted that it tends to destroy the proper relation between master and slave; and that by putting the slave in a position in which the fruits of his labor, instead of belonging absolutely to his master, are applied towards his own emancipation, he is made to occupy that intermediate condition between freedom and slavery that the law does not tolerate: And it must be admitted that this argument is not without force.

If, however, any contract of this character can ever be, this one is, free from the objection that the slave is put in a condition between freedom and slavery. The petitioner does not appear to have been even privy to it. He was kept until his emancipation in a state of entire servitude, not being permitted to make any contract, or to act in any respect as a freeman. Hanna having shown extreme caution in avoiding any infringement of the laws prohibiting slaves from going at large or hiring themselves out.

The objection then does not apply in this instance more forcibly than it does in all cases of prospective emancipation: and to sustain it, we must go to the length of establishing a principle which will prohibit all such emancipations. This we cannot do; for whatever may be our opinion as to the policy of permitting them, we have no right to change the law; and their validity is now too well settled to be questioned.

I think, therefore, that this contract is not void as being against public policy; and that it is one which a court of equity would, on the application of Dismuth, have enforced against Hanna, if he had refused to execute it.

268

As Hanna has voluntarily complied with the obligation of his contract, the petitioner is placed in the same position that he would have occupied if he had been emancipated under a decree of a court of equity in a suit brought by Dismuth against Hanna. He is a freedman, and as such, is entitled to litigate with the creditors of Hanna their right to subject him to sale to satisfy their demands.

The question does not arise in this case as to the extent of the rights of the creditor if he had acquired a lien upon the petitioner by issuing or levying his execution before Hanna had been reimbursed the amount advanced by him; and I express no opinion upon it.

Upon the facts as they exist, I think that the emancipation was effectual to exempt the petitioner from all liability for the debt, the execution for which has been levied upon him; and that he ought to have been discharged from custody. I am therefore of opinion to reverse the judgment.

LEE, J. I am of opinion that the writ of habeas corpus is not the appropriate remedy for the assertion of the right to freedom claimed by the plaintiff in this case. It is true it was sustained by the opinion of two of the three judges who sat in the case of Buddle's ex'or v. Ben, 10 Leigh 467, but the reasons on which it was rested are to my mind quite unsatisfactory. That the claimant produces a deed of emancipation cannot, as it seems to me, change the remedy for the enforcement of the right which it is alleged to confer, and it is conceded that in general this right cannot be litigated upon a writ of habeas corpus; and although those who claim his custody, do not claim as masters that he is their slave, they do claim that to *them the deed of emancipation is ineffectual and that they have the right to treat him as property and subject to be sold as the slave of the debtor party. The question at last is one of freedom or slavery, absolute freedom or qualified slavery, and should be tried in a more convenient and appropriate proceeding than a habeas corpus. If the deed were assailed upon the ground that it was a forgery and was admitted to record by fraud, or was wholly invalid by reason of the insanity of the grantor or because he was otherwise incapable of making the same, I presume the writ of habeas corpus could not be regarded as a proper proceeding to try the right; and I cannot perceive that the case is different if the deed be contested upon the ground that it was made with intent to defraud creditors or because it was wholly ineffectual as to a creditor whose debt was created before it was executed. The detention grows out of the alleged status of the party as it respects the claimants under the execution; they allege that as to them he is still a slave and liable to satisfy the debt; and although they do not claim absolute property in him as masters, yet the claim which they do make is such as should render them liable to the action provided by the statute. And moreover, no reason is perceived why the party might not resort to the court of equity for an injunction upon the ground that he was not liable to the execution. The owner of a slave levied upon by an execution to which he was not liable may enjoin the sale and obtain relief upon that ground, simply, without alleging any special reason for invoking the aid of a court of equity, and the case of a freedman would certainly not be less strong where the aid of that court is sought for his protection.

269

Digitized by Google

I concur therefore in what appears to have been the opinion of Judge Stanard in the case above cited, and of the judges who decided this case, and think that 270 the *writ was inappropriate to the petitioner's case, and on that ground was properly dismissed.

Upon the merits also, I find myself compelled to dissent from the opinion of the majority of the court.

By the Code of Virginia (ch. 103, § 11, p. 459) it is provided that all slaves emancipated shall be liable for any debt contracted by the person emancipating them before such emancipation was made; and it can scarcely be questioned that whether the emancipation be made by an indebted owner, directly, or indirectly, through the agency of another for the purpose of preventing the liability for debts, the effect must be the same. Such indirect emancipation with such purpose would be plainly in fraudem legis, and would be as to antecedent creditors as utterly void and ineffectual as any other conveyance made with intent to hinder, delay and defraud them. And such in my judgment is the true character of the emancipation in this case. Hanna the owner of the petitioner at the time of making the conveyance to Marshall by whom the deed of emancipation was executed, was largely indebted both as principal and security and was doubtless insolvent; in the month of January previous he had executed a deed of trust upon all his property "of every kind and description" for the security of his creditors and sureties; a large amount of property is designated in the deed, but the petitioner was not specially mentioned because as he states, he was advised by his counsel not to embrace him in the deed; the deed to Marshall was executed on the 26th day of March 1859 just three days before the note on which the judgment now sought to be enforced was rendered fell due; this deed recites falsely that it was in consideration of the sum of three hundred and fifty dollars paid by Marshall whilst Hanna himself admitted on the trial of the cause that the amount actually paid was a sum some where between twenty-one and twenty-five 271 dollars *only; Marshall the grantee was a citizen of a free state on a visit to a son in law in Rockingham county and was about to return to the state in which he lived; and in May 1859, less than two months after the deed to him, and pending the suit on the note against Hanna, Marshall executes the deed of emancipation reciting falsely that it was in part consideration of the sum of three hundred and fifty dollars to him in hand paid. Considering all the circumstances of the transaction I cannot resist the conclusion that it was a plan concerted between Hanna and Marshall to enable the former to defeat the claims of creditors and to do that indirectly which Hanna believed he could not do by a direct emancipation executed by himself. It is true Hanna states that this was done in consequence of an agreement or understanding with Dismuth of whom he purchased the petitioner which however he thought only binding upon him in conscience and morality, that when he had realized the amount he had paid for him out of the wages and earnings of the petitioner, he was to emancipate him, and that when he sold him to Marshall, he had received in that way the amount of the purchase money excepting the sum agreed to be paid by Marshall, and that there was a similar understanding with Marshall that when he should have received that amount from the earnings of the petitioner, he was to set him free.

But I cannot think that such a private unrecorded agreement, even if it should be held to be valid as between the parties, would be binding upon the creditors of the vendee or would at all affect their right to subject the slave in his hands to the payment of their debts. He is at law the property of the vendee and as such subject to his debts to his full value, and no court I apprehend, would at the suit of either slave or original vendor entertain a bill to set up such secret agreement against creditors and enquire how much of 272 *the purchase money had been reimbursed to the vendee out of the earnings of the slave whilst in his possession.

Digitized by Google

I do not understand that it is claimed in the opinion of my brother Robertson that the emancipation in this case acquired any additional validity under the circumstances of the transaction from the fact that the deed was executed by Marshall and not by Hanna himself. On the contrary it seems to be fully conceded that the petitioner stands in no better position, in any respect, than he would occupy if Hanna on being reimbursed the amount paid by him to Dismuth, had himself executed the deed of emancipation. What then would have been the condition of the petitioner if the deed had been executed by Hanna?

By our law as we have seen, an emancipated slave is liable for any debt contracted by the owner before the emancipation, and the debt in this case had been contracted before the deed was executed, and perhaps (though this is left somewhat uncertain) before the agreement with Dismuth. But it is said that as the deed was executed before the creditor had acquired or could acquire any specific lien upon the property by the levy of an execution upon it, the emancipation is good and the liability created by the statute is controlled and in effect overrode by the private agreement between the owner and his vendor and the execution of the deed of emancipation under it, and that the petitioner is therefore entitled to his discharge. This is in effect to assert that the petitioner acquired an inchoate right to freedom under the contract between Dismuth and Hanna which was afterwards consummated by the deed of emancipation executed by Marshall, and that as this deed was before the actual levy of the fieri facias the creditor's right was forestalled and defeated. I think neither of these propositions can be maintained.

It has been solemnly declared as 273 *the opinion of this court, that a slave has no social or civil rights, that he has no legal capacity to make or rescind a contract, and that he is without remedy for breach of an agreement, even for his emancipation. And it was accordingly held in two successive cases, after great consideration, that where in a will emancipation of a slave was made to depend upon his election to be free, as he had no legal capacity to make an election the clause declaring such emancipation was of necessity void and of no effect. Bailey, &c. v. Poindexter, &c., 14 Gratt. 132; Williamson, &c. v. Coalter's ex'ors, Ibid. 394. This want of legal capacity had been repeatedly and distinctly affirmed in previous cases; indeed it must be of necessity a distinctive feature and characteristic of the status of slavery. It therefore seems to be very clear that a slave can acquire no right whatever under such a contract between the former owner and his vendee; and what he cannot thus acquire directly, he cannot take indirectly through his former owner. In Dunlop v. Harrison, 14 Gratt. 251, it was held that as free negroes were prohibited by statute from holding slaves, so they could not be held by another in trust for their benefit. So as a slave can acquire no property directly neither can he acquire any interest in the same by way of trust. Haywood v. Craven's ex'or, 2 Caro. L. R. 557. See also, Trotter v. Blocher, 6 Port. R. 269, 305. It would be in direct contravention of this principle if a slave could acquire any interest under a contract between his master and his vendee touching his future emancipation which could strengthen such emancipation when made or give to it any additional force and effect to that which it would have without such previous contract. And if this be correct it cannot be right to hold that pre-existing creditors are shut off because they had not levied their execution before the deed
274 was executed. *The right to subject the property is expressly reserved by the statute and does not depend upon the levy of the execution. There was no necessity for any such provision where an execution had been levied; the object of the act was to hold the slave bound for pre-existing debts where there was no lien by execution or otherwise. Unless therefore this supposed equity in favor of the vendor is to enure to the benefit of the slave, it is impossible to say that it can deprive the creditors of the right to subject the slave which they certainly would have had if there were nothing but the deed of emancipation in their way.

Let us now look a little more closely into the alleged agreement between Dismuth and Hanna. And here the first observation that occurs is upon the very unsatisfactory nature of the evidence by which it is attempted to be proved. Hanna himself is the only witness offered and he speaks of a bill of sale and of the agreement by which he was to emancipate the petitioner when he should be repaid the three hundred and fifty dollars which he agreed to give for him out of his earnings; and he states that according to his impression, speaking of what had occurred only between two and three years before, he executed and delivered a writing containing the terms of the agreement. Neither the bill of sale, nor this writing nor any of the various letters which he said he had received from Dismuth on the subject is produced, nor any reason assigned for their non-production except that he did not know where the written contract which it was his impression he had executed, then was. He does not say he had lost the bill of sale or the letters he had received from Dismuth, nor does he undertake to state the terms and conditions, if any, of the former. The case was not submitted to a jury but was heard upon the law and the facts by the judge.
275 and he no doubt *thought the evidence very unsatisfactory. But if it were less so, I incline to think that such a contract is liable to very grave objections and that its validity should not be maintained for any purpose whatever. I am aware that in some of our sister states similar contracts have been held valid, and in Tennessee,

Digitized by Google

they have gone so far as to hold that such a contract should be enforced not only at the suit of one of the contracting parties but of any other person who may come forward as next friend of the slave; and that a contract between a master and his slave for the emancipation of the latter is good and may be enforced. Elias v. Smith, 6 Humph. R. 33; Lewis v. Simonton, 8 Humph. R. 185. But I am aware of no case in Virginia in which such a contract has been enforced or held valid. A contract between a master and his slave for the future emancipation of the slave is utterly void and cannot be enforced against the master although the slave may have fully complied with his part of the agreement; Sawney v. Carter, 6 Rand. 179; Stephenson v. Singleton, 1 Leigh 72; nor has a contract between vendor and vendee of a slave for the future emancipation of the slave, as far as I am aware, ever been sanctioned except so far as it may be supposed to be countenanced by the case of Ruddle's ex'or v. Ben, above cited. Of that case it may be remarked that while Judge Tucker concurred with Judge Parker in thinking the writ of habeas corpus the appropriate remedy, yet upon the merits, he was for remanding the petitioner to the custody of the sheriff for proceedings under the execution; and that Judge Stanard while he concurred with Judge Parker upon the merits had strong doubt whether the writ should not have been dismissed and the prisoner remanded because the remedy was inappropriate. Certainly it is not a binding authority upon any point, and if it is to be under-276 stood as *affirming that such a contract can give any additional efficacy and effect to a deed of emancipation executed in conformity to it as against creditors that it would not have without it, I am constrained to dissent as much from the doctrine of law which it teaches as I do from the sentiment expressed by Judge Parker that the dictates of humanity and justice should prompt us to favor emancipation by maintaining the right of the master to bestow (and of course the capacity of the slave to receive) the privilege of acquiring property to serve as a foundation for a consideration which will support what the judge calls "the inestimable grant of freedom."

Such a contract for the future emancipation of a slave when the price paid shall be reimbursed out of his earnings, is I think, opposed to the general spirit of our decisions and the policy of our laws. The distinction which it implies between the slave himself and his earnings is no where recognized by them. They admit no separate interests between master and slave. The latter is to be wholly devoted to the interests of the former. Such arrangement is evasive of the provision of our statute which makes it a misdemeanor to permit a slave to go at large, trade for himself, or hire himself out for the benefit of any person whatever, if not also of that prohibiting a freed negro to remain in the state. The presence of the negro in this intermediate condition, this half way house, between freedom and slavery so plainly condemned by our law, is fraught with all or most of the evils which have rendered the departure from the state of the freed negro the imperative condition of his emancipation.

I think it is to be regretted that prospective emancipation was ever tolerated by the courts in Virginia, but its validity has been, perhaps, too often affirmed 277 *to be drawn into question at this day. But where it has been sustained, it has been declared by will or deed duly recorded, as the law requires. The proposition here goes a bow shot beyond any previous case sustaining a prospective emancipation. It is in effect to declare such emancipation good, though not declared by will or deed admitted to record, but founded only upon a private agreement between the vendor and vendee of a slave under seal or otherwise and never admitted to record, and in which the slave has and can have no legal interest whatever; and this not only as between the parties but as against the creditors of the vendee whose debts were created before the deed of emancipation subsequently made was executed and recorded.

If such an agreement is to be held valid and enforced, its effect should be restricted to the parties themselves. It should not extend to the creditors of the vendee. To give it effect as to them is to defeat the plain intent of our statute. In none of the cases cited by the counsel that I have been able to see, was the controversy between the slave and a creditor of the vendee. They were all cases between the original parties to the agreement or between the slave or those claiming by purchase: nor does it appear from those cases that in the states in which they occurred there was a statutory provision like ours, in favor of creditors. At best such a contract, as it seems to me, can only confer a right upon the vendor to recover damages for its breach against the vendee, and a mere equity to call for its specific performance; and this equity being in its nature a secret equity founded upon an agreement not recorded and the possession of the slave being with the vendee, it would as it seems to me, be against all the analogies of the law, to give it priority to the claims of cred-278 itors who became such before it *was effectuated by the execution of the deed of emancipation; and such deed in my judgment ought to have no other or greater efficacy as against pre-existing creditors than if it had been executed without any such previous agreement.

I think the judge below did not err in remanding the petitioner to the custody of the sheriff, and am of opinion to affirm the judgment.

Decree reversed.

Digitized by Google

279 *Alderson v. Miller.

July Term, 1859, Lewisburg.

1. Landlord and Tenant—Denial of Landlord's Title—Fraud.—Though as a general rule a tenant is not allowed to question his landlord's title; yet if a person in possession of land claiming title to it, is by fraud or mistake induced to believe that another has a better right to it, and to take a lease from him; in an action by the landlord to recover possession, the tenant may set up such fraud or mistake, and show that he has a good title to the property.

2. Same—Same—Evidence—Case at Bar.—A is in possession of land under a deed from G, made in 1829, and there is a decree in 1855 in favor of S against G for all of a large tract of land which may be in the possession of G, or which may have been conveyed by him since 1837. M induces A to take a lease of his land from him; and at the end of the term sues A to recover possession, and relies alone on the lease. A offers in evidence a copy of the decree and his deed from G, and states that he proposes to follow up this evidence with proof that the lease was obtained from him by a person claiming under the decree, by fraud or mistake. Held, the evidence is admissible.

3. Evidence—Reversal as to Order of Proof—Case at Bar.—If in such case there is any reason to believe that the decree and deed are offered merely to produce an improper impression on the jury, and that it is not intended to follow it up by evidence tending to prove the fraud or imposition, the court may require the party to reverse the order of his proofs; but this is a matter to be left in a great measure to the discretion of the court which tries the case.

4. Inadmissible Evidence—Admitted—Instruction.†—If in such case, the decree and deed are admitted, and the party fails to produce the proof of fraud or imposition, the court may instruct the jury to disregard them.

This was a proceeding of unlawful detainer in the County court of Greenbrier, by Andrew A. Miller against Asa Alderson. On the trial there was a verdict and judgment for the defendant Alderson; and Miller having taken two bills of exceptions pending the trial, obtained a supersedeas to the judgment from a judge of the Circuit court.

On the trial, the plaintiff introduced
280 in evidence a *covenant bearing date the 1st of March 1855, executed by Alderson, whereby he agreed to lease from the plaintiff the land in dispute, described as the land Alderson then lived on, for the term of one year, the lease to commence on the 1st day of March 1855 and to expire the 1st day of March 1856; for which he bound himself to pay to Miller five dollars; and bound himself in the penalty of five hundred dollars to render up peaceable possession to Miller at the end of the lease. And he proved that on the 1st of March 1856 he demanded a surrender of the leased premises, which was refused by the defendant.

The defendant thereupon, to establish his right to the land in controversy, as a link in his chain of title, offered in evidence a copy of a decree of the Circuit court of Henrico county, made on the 21st of April 1852, in two causes, in one of which the personal representative of Richard Smyth and David Doyle was plaintiff and Eliza L. Schermerhorn and others were defendants, and in the other George Alderson, John Anderson, William Miller and others were plaintiffs, and the parties in the first suit were defendants. By this decree the sheriff of Greenbrier was directed to deliver to Eliza L. Schermerhorn and the heirs of John F. Schermerhorn deceased, so much of a tract of twenty-eight thousand two hundred and eighty and a half acres of land in Greenbrier county as was purchased by Eliza L. Schermerhorn, under a decree made in these causes, and which had been conveyed to her by the commissioner of the court, as the sheriff should find in the possession of the said Alderson and Anderson, or either of them, or in the possession of any person or persons, who had come into possession under them since the 23d of March 1837, when the first of these suits was instituted. And the defendant stated that he expected to prove that the lease referred to was procured through mistake or fraud, and 281 that he *had himself title to the land; and that this decree was a necesssary item of proof to establish said facts. To the introduction of this testimony the plaintiff objected; but the court overruled the objection; and he excepted.

*Landlord and Tenant—Denial of Landlord's Title—Fraud or Mistake.—As a general rule a tenant is not allowed to question his landlord's title. The principal case was cited as authorizing this proposition in Suttle v. R. F. & P. R. R. Co., 76 Va. 289; Gale v. Oil, etc., Co., 6 W. Va. 210. See other cases cited in monographic note on "Unlawful Detainer" appended to Dobson v. Culpepper, 23 Gratt. 352. See also, monographic note on "Estoppel" appended to Bower v. McCormick, 23 Gratt. 310.

But this rule is subject to exceptions. For, if a person in possession of land claiming title to it, is by fraud or mistake induced to believe that another has a better right to it, and to take a lease from him; in an action by the landlord to recover possession, the tenant may set up such fraud or mistake, and show that he has a good title to the property. See the principal case cited as authority for this proposition in Turpin v. Saunders, 32 Gratt. 33; Locke v. Frasher, 79 Va. 409, 411, 412; Gale v. Oil, etc., Co., 6 W. Va. 210; Jones v. Fox, 20 W. Va. 380; Voss v. King, 33 W. Va. 241, 242, 10 S. E. Rep. 403, 404. See also, cases collected in monographic note on "Unlawful Detainer" appended to Dobson v. Culpepper, 23 Gratt. 352.

In Campbell v. Fetterman, 20 W. Va. 412, it was said: "As a general rule a tenant is not permitted to question his landlord's title; yet from the time that the landlord has notice that the person, who formerly held as tenant, claims to be in possession, not as tenant, but in his own right, the relation of landlord and tenant ceases. Willison v. Watkins, 3 Pet. 43; Tavener v. Emerick, 9 Gratt. 220; Alderson v. Miller, 15 Gratt. 279." †Inadmissible Evidence—Admitted—Instruction.—See principal case cited and approved in Patton v. Elk River, etc., Co., 13 W. Va. 272.

Digitized by Google

After the introduction of the foregoing testimony, the defendant offered in evidence a deed bearing date the 15th day of December 1829, from George Alderson and John Anderson to himself, conveying to him the land in controversy. And he accompanied it with the same statement of what he expected to prove as that given above. The plaintiff objected to the evidence; but his objection was overruled by the court; and he again excepted.

When the cause came on to be heard in the Circuit court, that court reversed the judgment. Whereupon Alderson applied to this court for a supersedeas; which was awarded.

Price, for the appellant.
Gordon and Cosby, for the appellee.

ALLEN, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a supersedeas to a judgment of the Circuit court reversing a judgment of the County court in favor of the plaintiff in error Alderson, upon a summons for unlawful detainer sued out against him by the defendant in error Miller. Such a proceeding involves no question of title, the question being whether the plaintiff is, as against the defendant, entitled to the possession, although for the purpose of determining who is so entitled to the possession, the title may be given in evidence. In the case under consideration, it does not appear that Miller gave any evidence of title on the trial. He seems, from the statement in the first bill of exceptions, to have rested his right to recover upon his character of 282 landlord, seeking *restitution of possession from a tenant holding over after the expiration of his term. The questions made by the bills of exception arise upon the supposition that the parties stood in the relation towards each other of landlord and tenant. On the trial Miller gave in evidence, as the bill of exceptions states, a writing purporting to be a lease, whereby Alderson rented from him the land for the term of one year, and bound himself to render up peaceable possession at the end of the term; and proved that at the end of the term he demanded a surrender of the leased premises, which was refused by Alderson. The latter thereupon offered to read in evidence a decree which is set out in the bill of exceptions, and after reading said decree, he also upon the same state of proof offered in evidence a deed to himself for the land in controversy from George Alderson and John Anderson, dated the 15th of December 1829. The deed describes the land as part of a survey of twenty-eight thousand two hundred and eighty and a half acres, made for and granted to Henry Banks, and sold by the attorney of said Banks to the said G. Alderson and J. Anderson. To the reading of the copy of the decree and the deed in evidence Miller objected; but as the defendant in the court below stated that he expected to prove the lease referred to was procured through mistake or fraud, and that he had himself title to the land; and that said decree and deed were necessary items of proof to establish said facts, the court overruled the objection, and permitted the decree and deed to be read as evidence: to which decisions the said Miller excepted.

The general rule that a tenant should not be permitted to contest his landlord's title, is too well settled to require the citation of any authorities to sustain it. The rule rests upon principles of justice and good faith.
The tenant enters under his landlord,
283 and acquires *possession by admitting his title. It would be a breach of good faith to attempt to hold a possession so obtained, by impeaching the landlord's title. In most cases at law the plaintiff's action may be defeated by showing that the right to the subject in controversy is in a third person. In a writ of right the constructive seizin conferred by a grant could be defeated by proof of a valid outstanding title in a third person; and in ejectment the lessor of the plaintiff must, in almost every case, show a good title against all persons. The exception in favor of the landlord as against his tenant, is a departure from the strict rule of law. But a principle adopted to promote justice and good faith, must not, as was said by C. J. Tilghman in Hamilton's lessee v. Marsdon, 6 Binn. R. 45, be used as an instrument of fraud and violence. In that case the tenant, to prove adverse title, was permitted to show that being in possession under a lease from a third person, the plaintiff in the ejectment came with others armed and threatened to turn him out of the premises, unless he took a lease from him, which he did. So in the case of Miller v. McBriar, 14 Serg. & Rawle 382, a person in possession was induced by the plaintiff who exhibited a patent, to enter into an agreement called a lease. The tenant offered to prove that the patent was procured by fraud. Gibson, C. J., said that a tenant may impeach his landlord's title whenever he can show that he was induced to accept the lease by misrepresentation and fraud, and the exhibition of a title founded in forgery to induce a person already in possession to accept of a lease, was an act of an unequivocal character; and the evidence was admissible to show that the agreement was obtained by imposition and deceit. To the same effect is the case of Brown v. Dysinger, 1 Rawle's R. 408, where a lease was unfairly obtained
284 from a *person in possession of the land. The case of Ball v. Lively, 2 J. J. Marsh. R. 181, establishes the same proposition. In that case the defendant in possession against whom there had been a judgment and recovery in ejectment for part of the land in his possession, was induced by a person who had no authority to enforce the judgment, to take from him a lease, which recited that the plaintiffs in ejectment had recovered the whole of the premises. The court decided that if a person in possession of land be induced by fraud to become lessee of one having no claim to the land, he may disclaim the tenancy, and rely on his precedent possession, from which he has been seduced by false and delusive pretences. That was a case of forcible detainer, and so far as the facts of the present case can be collected from the bills of exception, may have been alike in its circumstances. The tenant Alderson was in possession when he executed the lease, for it describes the land as the land he then lived on. The deed to him from George Alderson and John Anderson was dated the 15th of December 1829. And the decree shows that in two suits between the widow and heirs of John F. Schermerhorn deceased, and said G. Alderson and J. Anderson and others, Alderson and Anderson were required to surrender and deliver up to the widow and heirs aforesaid possession of a portion of the tract of twenty-eight thousand two hundred and eighty and a half acres in said county of Greenbrier; and unless they should do so, the decree directed the sheriff to deliver to Mrs. Schermerhorn possession of such of the land conveyed to her by the commissioner of the court, as the sheriff should find in the possession of Alderson and Anderson, or either of them, or in the possession of any person who had come into possession under them since the 23d of March 1837, when the first of the chancery suits was 285 *instituted. The land referred to in the deed corresponds in the description of quantity and county where situated, with the tract a portion of which was conveyed by Alderson and Anderson to the plaintiff in error by the deed dated the 15th of December 1829, long prior to the 23d of March 1837, and the sheriff was not therefore authorized to deliver possession of it under the decree. How Miller the plaintiff in the court below claimed the land, does not appear. From the exception it would seem that after giving the lease in evidence and proving a demand and refusal to surrender, he there rested his case. Although he showed no title, yet if he had acquired possession and had parted with it to his lessee, good faith required he should be restored to the possession; and if the transaction had been fair, it would have been no answer to say he was not owner of the land. To lay a foundation to impeach his right to a restoration of the possession, it was incumbent on the tenant to show that he had held possession previous to the lease, under some claim of title, and that he was induced to surrender possession, if in fact he did surrender possession, and to take a lease by fraud and imposition of the landlord. To this end the deed to him was proper evidence, and the decree also as showing the exception in favor of those who came into possession under his vendors prior to the 23d of March 1837. The decree might also have been material, if any misrepresentation of its character had been made and the party in possession had not been apprised of the exception in favor of those who had come into possession under Alderson and Anderson prior to the day last aforesaid.

Digitized by Google

The proof being legal, and offered for the purpose set out in the bills of exceptions, the order in which it was offered was of no importance. In view of the object avowed, it would seem that they should have 286 *been first offered as showing an actual possession under claim of title before he surrendered possession and re-entered under the lease, and then to introduce the evidence of fraud and imposition. If any reason had existed to induce the court to believe that these papers were offered merely to produce an improper impression on the jury, and that it was not intended to follow them up by evidence tending to prove fraud or imposition, the court perhaps might have required the party to reverse the order of his proof. These are matters occurring in the progress of a trial, which must be left in a great measure to the control of the court which is supervising it. If not followed by any evidence tending to prove the fraud and imposition, the jury can be instructed to disregard it.

It was insisted that the decree should not have been admitted because it does not show on its face that it referred to the land in controversy. It is not necessary to determine that question upon this bill of exceptions. It was proof that such a decree was rendered, and whether the party offering it showed by other evidence, as he might have done by the admission of the adverse party, that the deed and decree referred to the same twenty-eight thousand two hundred and eighty and a half acres of land in Greenbrier does not appear. It does not appear that any motion was made to instruct the jury to disregard this evidence because not followed up by other evidence necessary to make it available. The objection seems to have been rested rather upon the time of offering the proof, than upon the admissibility of the proof in a different stage of the trial. A verdict was found and judgment rendered, without any exception to the rulings of the court in any other particular; there was no motion for a new trial; the facts proved were not spread on the record. The presumption there-287 fore is that the defendant below *did show a previous possession under title which he never had surrendered, and so showed a better right to the possession than his adversary; or if he did surrrender possession and re-enter under the alleged lease, that it was procured through fraud.

It seems to me that there was no error in the judgment of the County court, and that the Circuit court, instead of reversing, should have affirmed it.

Judgment of the Circuit court reversed, and that of the County court affirmed.

---

288 Clarkson v. Read & als.

July Term, 1859. Lewisburg.

Judicial Sales—Purchasers—Failure to Pay Purchase Money—Rule to Show Cause.*—A judicial sale of

---

Judicial Sales—Purchasers—Failure to Pay Purchase Money—Rule to Show Cause.—For the proposition

Digitized by Google

land is partly on a credit, and the purchaser pays the cash payment, and executes his bonds with security for the deferred payments; and the sale is confirmed by the court. When the bonds become due the purchaser fails to pay them. He may be proceeded against by a rule made upon him to show cause why the land shall not be sold for the payment of the purchase money; and upon that proceeding a decree may be made for a sale of the land.

In a suit in equity depending in the Circuit court of Kanawha county, in which Isaac Read, guardian, &c., was plaintiff, and E. V. Cox and others were defendants, the object of which was to have a sale of the land of certain infants, a decree was made on the 11th of January 1855, by which W. E. Gillison and William R. Cox were appointed commissioners to sell the land upon the terms of one-fourth of the purchase money in cash, and for the residue upon a credit of one, two and three years, payable by equal installments, with interest from the day of sale; the purchaser giving bonds with good security, for the payment of the deferred installments; and the title of the land to be retained as a security for their payment.

The commissioners proceeded, on the 10th of March 1855, to sell the land, when John N. Clarkson became the purchaser at the price of fifteen thousand four hundred dollars; and he complied with the terms of the sale, paying the cash payment and executing his three bonds, payable in one, two and three years, each for one-third of the deferred payments, with interest from the day of sale. And the sale was afterwards confirmed by the court.

From the reports of the commission-

289 ers made at a *special term of the court in January 1858, and at the subsequent May term, it appeared that Clarkson had paid no part of either of his bonds. That when the first bond fell due, suit was brought upon it by the commissioners, and judgment recovered against all the obligors; that an execution was issued upon this judgment and a forthcoming bond was given and forfeited: that on this forthcoming bond an execution was awarded, which was levied on slaves of Clarkson, the sale of which was enjoined by him: and that injunction was still pending.

When the second bond fell due, suit was brought upon it, and a judgment was recovered: and an execution issued upon that judgment, was returned "No property found." The commissioners reported that no suit had been brought upon the third bond, because it would only impose upon the complainants the costs and delay of another suit. That there was no reasonable expectation that the money could be made out of any of the obligors in the bonds. That it was three years since the sale, all the purchase money was due, and amounted, principal and interest, to thirteen thousand seven hundred and forty-four dollars and fifty cents; almost as much as the original purchase money; and as much, in the opinion of the commissioners, as the land would sell for.

At the May term 1858 the court made a rule upon John N. Clarkson, requiring him to show cause on the fifth day of June following, why the land should not be resold at public auction for cash, to pay the unsatisfied installments of purchase money due by him and his securities; and why a decree should not be made against him for so much of said unpaid purchase that, where a purchaser at a judicial sale fails to pay the purchase money he may be proceeded against by rule to show cause why the land shall not be sold for the payment of the purchase money; and upon that proceeding a decree may be made for a sale of the land, the principal case is cited and followed in Williams v. Blakey, 76 Va. 257; Hurt v. Jones, 75 Va. 847; Long v. Weller, 29 Gratt. 356, and note; Thornton v. Fairfax, 29 Gratt. 679, and note; Robertson v. Smith, 94 Va. 254, 26 S. E. Rep. 579; Stout v. Phillippi, 41 W. Va. 348, 23 S. E. Rep. 574; Glenn v. Blackford, 23 W. Va. 185; Gilmer v. Baker, 24 W. Va. 84; Berlin v. Melhorn, 75 Va. 642; Hickson v. Rucker, 77 Va. 139; Ogden v. Davidson, 81 Va. 761. See monographic note on "Judicial Sales" appended to Walker v. Page, 21 Gratt. 636.

In American Ass'n v. Hurst, 59 Fed. Rep. 3, it is said: "It has been held in a number of cases that a purchaser at a judicial sale becomes a quasi party, and that, where credit is given to him under an order of a court of equity, the court retains jurisdiction to compel payment by him of the residue through attachment, or by resale of the property. Wood v. Mann, 3 Sumn. 318; Clarkson v. Read, 15 Gratt. 288; Stephens v. Magruder, 31 Md. 168; Freem. Ex'ns, (2d Ed.) 313e. The statutory provision which we are considering merely gives another remedy, by which the court is required to secure to the parties in the case before it, payment of the purchase price bid at the sale had and confirmed by its decree."

In Va. Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Cottrell, 85 Va. 860, 9 S. E. Rep. 132, the rule laid down in the principal case is approved, but the court in this case said that a proceeding to rescind a sale which has been absolutely confirmed, ought to be no less formal than by a petition filed in the cause setting forth distinctly the grounds upon which the application is based, in order that the purchaser or other adverse parties to the proceeding may see clearly what they have to meet, and a summary rule to show cause is not sufficient.

In Anthony v. Kasey, 83 Va. 342, 5 S. E. Rep. 176, it is said: "In Clarkson v. Read, 15 Gratt. 288, this court held that the purchaser was a party to the suit as to all matters appertaining to the purchase, and might therefore be proceeded against by rule in case of default. But no such reason exists in our opinion for such a summary procedure against a surety. He does not deal directly with the court, and so become a party to the suit. His undertaking is collateral to the contract of purchase. It is that of a mere surety, and cannot be extended by construction in any respect. And to use the language of this court in Thurman v. Morgan (79 Va. 367), 'Their liability, if any, grows out of their undertaking as sureties on the bond, and can be ascertained and enforced only by suit on the bond in a common-law court, where full opportunity for making defense and the constitutional right of trial by jury can be had.'" money as the land, upon a resale, might not pay off and discharge.

Digitized by Google

Clarkson appeared to the rule, and objected that the court had no authority 290 to make an order for the sale of *the land, upon a rule, under the circumstances of this case. The ground of this objection is that the land had been sold upon a credit for three-fourths of the purchase money. That he had complied with all the terms of the sale, having paid in cash what he was required so to pay, and having given his bonds for the deferred payments with sureties satisfactory to the commissioners and the court, as was evident from the confirmation of the sale. That therefore he was not in contempt for failing to comply with the terms of sale; and not being a party in the suit, he could not be proceeded against, by a rule to show cause against a decree. He further insisted that he and his securities were good and ample for the balance of the purchase money still due. That though it was true that his property both real and personal was encumbered by deeds of trust to secure debts, so that executions could not be levied upon it; yet he expected in a short time to pay all his debts, including this one; and that the land which he had purchased had enhanced in value, and was and promised to continue to be, amply sufficient for the purchase money due on it. And he examined several witnesses in relation to his circumstances, from whose testimony, it may be concluded, though he was largely indebted, his property, unless greatly sacrificed, would be more than sufficient to pay his debts.

The case coming on upon the rule, and the answer thereto and the evidence, the court decreed that unless Clarkson should pay to the commissioners Gillison and Cox, within thirty days from the end of the term, the amount of the two bonds upon which judgments had been recovered, with all interest and costs due or incurred thereon, the said commissioners should proceed to sell at public auction, after advertising, &c., the land in the proceedings mentioned, requiring of the purchaser one-third of the purchase money in 291 *cash, and the balance in nine and eighteen months, with good security, and the title to be retained for further security, &c. From this decree, Clarkson applied to a judge of the Circuit court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Miller and B. H. Smith, for the appellant.
Fitzhugh and Fry, for the appellees.

DANIEL, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In the case of Casamajor v. Strode, 1 Cond. Eng. Ch. R. 195, the broad doctrine is laid down by the vice chancellor, Sir John Leach, that a purchaser, under a decree for the sale of lands, though not a party to the cause, does, by the act of purchase, submit himself to the jurisdiction of the court as to all matters connected with that character. The same doctrine is stated by Judge Story in the case of Wood v. Mann, 3 Sumner's R. 318, and by Chancellor Walworth in the case of Requa v. Rea, 2 Paige's R. 341. And in the second volume of Daniel's Ch. Pr. 1460-61-2, it is stated, that after the report of a sale by a master is confirmed, there are, according to the English practice, three modes of remedying the failure of the purchaser to comply with the terms of the sale. If it appears that the purchase has been made by a person unable to perform his contract, the parties interested in the sale, may, upon motion, obtain an order, simply discharging him from his purchase, and directing the estate to be resold. If the purchaser is responsible, the court will, if required, make an order that he shall within a given time pay the money into court; and if the purchaser, on being served with the order, fails to obey it, his submission to it may be enforced by attachment. Or an order will be made for the estate to be resold, and for the purchaser to pay the expenses arising from the non-completion of the purchase and the resale, and 292 *any deficiency in price arising upon the second sale. Such an order (the author proceeds) was made by Lord Cottingham in Harding v. Harding, 18 Eng. Ch. R. 514, after consultation with the other judges of the court; and although in that case the purchaser was a defendant in the cause, it does not seem that that fact was considered as necessary in order to justify the making of the order.

In Lansdown v. Elderton, 14 Ves. R. 512, the purchaser was compelled to complete his purchase by the second of the courses just mentioned, namely, by an order to pay in his purchase money within a given period, or stand committed. Since the date of that decision (1808) it has been the constant practice of the English courts of chancery to make such orders; and repeated instances may be found in the reports of our sister states, in which the precedent has been approved and acted upon. Anderson v. Foulke, 2 Harr. & Gill R. 346; Gordon v. Sims, 2 McCord's Ch. R. 151; Brasher v. Cortlandt, 2 John. Ch. R. 505.

It is argued, however, by the counsel for the appellant, that as judicial sales in England are always made for cash, the practice regulating such sales there has no application to cases where, by the terms of the decree, the sale is upon a credit, and the payment of the purchase money is to be secured by the bond of the purchaser. And in support of this view, he cites the case of Richardson v. Jones, 3 Gill & John. R. 163, in which it was held by the Court of appeals of Maryland, that where a bond is given to the trustee, for the purchase money under an order of sale in chancery, requiring a bond to be given, and the sale has been confirmed, the purchaser and his sureties cannot be compelled to pay the bond by attachment. Buchanan, Ch. J., thus states the reasons why, in his opinion, the practice in respect to sales on credit should be different from that in respect to sales for cash. "When a sale

Digitized by Google

293 *is made under a decree or order in chancery, and no bond or security is given for the payment of the purchase money, a practice has grown up in chancery, and sanctioned by this court, in Anderson v. Foulke, 2 Harr. & Gill 346, to compel the purchaser to complete his purchase by an order on him in a summary way to pay or bring the money into court, and that, from a necessity arising out of the peculiar character of such transactions. No action at law will lie to enforce a decree in chancery within the territorial jurisdiction of the court in chancery. An order of the Court of chancery ratifying such a sale is considered as amounting to a decree for the payment of the money; and if that court could not enforce the execution of it, it could not be enforced at all." "A court of chancery having a clear right to enforce its own decrees, and an order of ratification being considered as amounting to a decree for the payment of the purchase money, a purchaser who neglects or refuses to comply with such decree, is in contempt, and may be dealt with accordingly by an order in the first instance (in this state) to bring the money into court as preparatory to an attachment." "But where a bond is given to the trustee for the purchase money under an order of sale from chancery requiring bond to be given, the terms of sale are complied with, and a contract entered into, not with the court, but with the trustee, on which, after ratification, he has a full and perfect remedy at law for enforcing the payment of the purchase money, that is recognized and sanctioned by the order of ratification, which, in such case, is not a decree for the payment of the purchase money, but a confirmation only of what has been done. And though the contract of sale being perfected by the order of ratification, it is thereby said to become a sale by the court; yet the terms of sale
294 being complied with and *the purchase completed, by giving to the trustee, as required, a bond to secure the purchase money, the purchaser is not in contempt by the non-payment of it. The contract on the bond not being with the court, but with the trustee under the sanction of the court, the remedy is by suit on the bond in a court of law; and chancery cannot enforce it as a mere bond for the payment of money, by which the original simple contract of purchase is extinguished. And if the payment of the bond, as such, cannot be enforced by a bill in chancery, a fortiori, can it not be enforced in a summary way by an order to bring the money into court."

However satisfactory such reasoning may seem when the effort is to enforce the payment of the purchase money by attachment, I do not perceive how it can be made to bear on the case in hand. By the decree under which the purchase in this case was made, the terms of sale were, one-fourth of the purchase money for cash, and as to the residue, upon a credit of one, two and three years, payable by equal installments, the purchaser giving bond with security for payment of the deferred installments, and the title of the land to be retained as security for the payment of such deferred installments, until the same shall be fully paid. All of the bonds for the deferred installments were due and unpaid, and judgments at law upon two of them had proved unproductive. And in this state of things, the proceeding against the purchaser asked and obtained, was not a proceeding by way of attachment, but a rule summoning him to appear to show cause why the land sold him by the commissioners should not be resold to pay the unsatisfied installments of purchase money due by him and his securities; and why a decree over should not be rendered against him for so much of said unpaid purchase money as the said land, upon a resale, might not 295 pay off *and discharge. And the interlocutory decree, from which the appeal is had, is simply a decree for the resale of the land.

Let it be that there is no decree in the cause ordering Clarkson to pay in the purchase money, and that so, he cannot strictly be treated as in contempt; still, the credit which was allowed having expired, and his bonds being wholly unpaid, he is in default in respect to the purchase money. Having by his purchase submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court in the suit, he has not placed himself beyond the reach of the court by giving the bonds. The court still holds or controls the title, and he still owes the purchase money. In a contract of the like kind between Clarkson and a party acting in his own behalf, the execution, by Clarkson with his securities, of a bond to a third person for the benefit of the vendor, would not deprive the latter of a right to resort to a court of equity for full relief in the case of a failure by Clarkson, on the expiration of the credit, to pay the bond. The right of the vendor, in such case, to sue upon the bond at law, if he pleased, would not in any degree conflict with his right to have a decree for the sale of the land and a personal decree against Clarkson for any balance due after applying the proceeds of sale to the satisfaction of the unpaid purchase money. In cases of judicial sales in England, the court is regarded in a certain sense as the owner and principal, and the master as the mere agent; and the contract is treated as a contract substantially between the purchaser on the one side, and the court as the vendor on the other. Savile v. Savile, 1 P. Wms. R. 745; Anderson v. Foulke, already cited, 2 Harr. & Gill 346. This view is conceded by Ch. J. Buchanan in his opinion in the case of Richardson v. Jones, to be correct in regard to sales for cash; and I cannot per-296 ceive how *the nature of the contract as a whole is altered, or the relation of the court as vendor to the purchaser is changed, by the fact that the sale is on credit, and that the purchaser has executed his bonds to the commissioner for the deferred installments. It is true, that by the execution of the bonds the purchaser has placed it in the power of the court to cause the collection of the purchase money by a suit upon the bonds at law. The jurisdiction of a court of law in respect to the bond, however, is not in exclusion of the jurisdiction of a court of equity to compel a complete performance of the contract in all its parts. The bond is but an additional security for the purchase money; and the power of the court to sue on the bond is in aid of and not in conflict with its other powers to compel the execution of the contract. Such clearly would be the law as between two parties occupying strictly the relation to each other of vendor and vendee; and I can see no reason why the same rule would not hold as between the court and the purchaser at a judicial sale.

Digitized by Google

And if the court, in the case of a failure, by the purchaser at a cash sale, to pay in the money, may without requiring the parties to the cause to file a bill, proceed, by rules and orders to sell the land, and hold the purchaser accountable for the balance due, after applying the proceeds of sale to the discharge of the purchase money, it is difficult to see why the like proceeding may not be resorted to in the case of a sale for credit, when the credit has expired and the purchase money remains unpaid. Such rules and orders would have the same foundations to rest upon in the one case as in the other.

The power of the court thus to enforce the execution of the contract is, I apprehend, wholly independent of its power to proceed against the purchaser as 297 *in contempt. In the case of Harding v. Harding (already referred to), Lord Cottenham said, that there was no reason why a person purchasing under a decree of the court should not be held to his contract, as much as a person purchasing in the ordinary way: That the court might enforce the vendor's lien against the estate: and that an order to hold the purchaser to his contract and to resell the estate in the meantime, was in strict analogy to the course the court takes against a purchaser in the ordinary case. And in the very learned and able opinion of the chancellor (Bland), delivered on rendering the decree in Anderson v. Foulke, from which the appeal in that case was taken, he treats the practice in question as one so well established that its propriety could be no longer questioned. 2 Harr. & Gill 368.

I find nothing in conflict with these views, in the decision made by the Special court in the case of Gross v. Pearcy, 2 Patt. & Heath 483; to which reference was made by the counsel for the appellant; though it is true that Judge Thompson, in delivering the opinion of the court, whilst admitting the convenience of such a practice, expresses strong doubts, whether, "tested by the usages and practice of courts of equity in Virginia," the court had in such cases power to proceed by rule against a purchaser and his sureties, to decree a resale. The proceedings in that case in the Circuit court were, I think, clearly erroneous upon the merits; and I do not understand the decree of the Special court reversing those proceedings, as going to the length of deciding that a court of equity had no power in any case to order a resale upon rule. And with very high respect for the learning and experience as a chancellor, of the judge who delivered the opinion in that case, I still think that the power in question is one in strict harmony with 298 the principles *applicable to the constitution and practice of a court of equity, and essential to the convenient and efficient dispatch of its business.

I do not mean to say that in all cases of the kind the proceeding should be by a rule rather than by a bill. It is not difficult to conceive of cases in which there might grow up, or be developed, between the direct parties to the cause and the purchaser, equities of a character such as to require that they should be discussed and considered upon regular and formal pleadings, original or supplemental. It is, however, but reasonable to believe that in a majority of cases little else would be attained by requiring the parties to go through the steps of a regular suit, instead of proceeding by a rule, except delay: delay, which, whilst furthering no just end or object of the purchaser, would work inconvenience and injustice to those entitled to receive the proceeds of the sale.

A rule in such a case apprises the purchaser of the nature of the demand against him as fully as a bill could do. And the only additional office that a bill could perform, would be to recite, in a more formal manner, matters which he already knows; or which the law presumes that he already knows. If he has any cause to resist the demand, he can set it forth as fully in an answer to the rule as in an answer to a bill. And if in his answer to the rule he should show any reason why there should be no resale of the property, it would be just as incumbent upon the court to allow him an opportunity to bring forward his proofs as it would have been, had the same matter been averred in an answer to a bill.

In the case before us, the purchaser appeared to the rule, filed his answer, and went into the examination of witnesses for the purpose of proving the justice of the causes which he assigned why he 299 should not be *subjected to the order and decree asked against him. There is nothing to show, and indeed it is not suggested, that he has, by the summary character of the proceeding, been precluded from making any resistance or defence to the decree rendered, which he would or might have made in the course of a formal suit.

I see no error in the proceedings, and am of opinion to affirm the decree.

Decree affirmed.

Digitized by Google

300 *Yancey v. Mauck & als.

July Term, 1859, Lewisburg.

Sale of Land—Title Retained by Vendor—Subjection of Property for Purchase Money.*—Y sells land to M, and is to convey it when the first payment is made. Before this payment falls due they make an arrangement by which M executes his bond, with Y as his surety, to S, for a debt due from Y to S, equal to the whole purchase money of the land; and the bonds of M are surrendered to him and destroyed. M becomes insolvent and conveys the land to secure creditors; and afterwards Y is compelled to pay the bond to S. Y not having parted with the title, may subject the land in equity to the payment of the purchase money.

This was a bill filed in April 1857 in the Circuit court of Rockingham county, by Robert L. Yancey against R. C. Mauck, Allan C. Bryan and others, to subject an interest in a tract of land sold by Yancey to Mauck, to the payment of a debt which Yancey insisted was a lien upon the land. The facts, as they appear from the pleadings and proofs, are as follows:

Some years prior to 1850 Leyton Yancey died, leaving a widow and four children. One tract of land was assigned to the widow for her dower; and of course the reversion was in the children.

On the 20th of April 1850 Robert L. Yancey sold his interest in the tract of land which had been assigned to the widow, to Robert C. Mauck; for which Mauck bound himself to pay to Yancey one thousand dollars, of which five hundred dollars was to be paid on the 20th of April 1851, and five hundred dollars on the 20th of April 1852. And Yancey bound himself to convey the same with general warranty, when the first payment was made. At the same time Mauck purchased the interest of another of the heirs in the land, and upon the same terms: and afterwards he purchased a third interest.

301 *It appears that Zebulon Shafer had married one of the children of Leyton Yancey, and had sold his interest in some of the lands owned by his wife, to Robert L. Yancey, and that one thousand dollars of the purchase money fell due about the 1st of October 1850. This money Yancey wished to pay; and Mauck applied to Shafer to know if he wanted the money immediately, and being told he did not, Mauck proposed to give his bond for the amount. This Shafer agreed to, but required security; and although Mauck declined to give the security at the time, at the November term of the County court for 1850 he executed his bond with Yancey as his surety for one thousand and ten dollars, that being the amount of principal and interest due from Yancey to Shafer up to the 1st of December, when the bond was made payable.

Upon Mauck's executing his bond to Shafer, Yancey delivered up to him his two bonds for five hundred dollars each, which Mauck had given to him for the purchase money of the land; and they were destroyed. Some time after this, Yancey spoke to Mauck about his making a deed for his share of the land, saying he had fixed a time to do so, but was disappointed in it; when Mauck replied that it was immaterial to him when he made it, as he had no deeds for the other interests, and Yancey could take his own time to make it. Nothing further was said on the subject between them; and the deed was not made.

In 1855 Mauck had become embarrassed in his circumstances; and in April of that year he conveyed the land he had purchased from Yancey with other property to John C. Woodson in trust to secure Allan C.

*Sale of Land—Title Retained by Vendor—Subjection of Property for Purchase Money.—Where a vendor sells land but makes no conveyance of the property, it is well settled that he has recourse upon the land for the purchase money notwithstanding the vendee gave personal or other security for the same, and notwithstanding the subsequent purchaser, or incumbrance, had no notice that the purchase money or any part thereof was unpaid. The principal case was cited as authority for this proposition in Day v. Hale, 22 Gratt. 163; Coles v. Withers, 33 Gratt. 193; Stoner v. Harris, 81 Va. 460; Cleggett v. Kittle, 6 W. Va. 461; Dunlap v. Shanklin, 10 W. Va. 671, 676; Stephenson v. Rice, 12 W. Va. 586; Evans v. Johnson, 39 W. Va. 307, 19 S. E. Rep. 627. See also, principal case cited in Hempfield R. Co v. Thornburg, 1 W. Va. 267; Hurt v. Jones, 75 Va. 347. See, in accord, Hatcher v. Hatcher, 1 Rand. 53; Lewis v. Caperton, 8 Gratt. 148.

And, though the original security for the purchase money is surrendered and some other security given in its place with new parties to third persons, such new arrangement does not change the character of the debt, nor affect the lien for the purchase money; and the vendor is still at liberty to resort to the lien and enforce it even against a bona fide purchaser upon the failure of the proper parties to meet their obligations. For a court of equity looks to substance and not to form; it looks to the debt which is to be paid, not to the hand which may happen to hold it, and it considers a debt as never discharged until it is discharged by payment to the proper person, and by the proper person. See Summers v. Darne, 31 Gratt. 806; Coles v. Withers, 33 Gratt. 193; Gibert v. W., etc., R. Co., 33 Gratt. 597; Stimpson v. Bishop, 82 Va. 198; Mansfield v. Dameron, 42 W. Va. 795, 796, 26 S. E. Rep. 527; Frazier v. Hendren, 80 Va. 270; Fidelity Ins., etc., Co. v. S. V. R. R. Co., 86 Va. 13, 9 S. E. Rep. 759; all of which cases cite the principal case as authority on this subject. See also, in accord, Knisely v. Williams, 3 Gratt. 265, 46 Am. Dec. 193; Lewis v. Caperton, 8 Gratt. 148; Watts v. Kinney, 3 Leigh 272, 295.

Same—Same—Nature of Vendee's Possession.—Where a vendor sells land but makes no conveyance of the property and yet puts the vendee in possession, the vendee is regarded, at law, as the mere tenant at sufferance of the vendor holding the legal title, and the vendor, and not the vendee, is entitled at law to possession, and may recover the same by ejectment. See the principal case cited as authority for this proposition in Hawkins v. Wilson, 1 W. Va. 121, 124; Supervisors v. Ellison, 8 W. Va. 315.

On this point, see generally, monographic note on "Ejectment."

Digitized by Google

Bryan and Franklin Pence as his securities. This deed described the land as having been conveyed to Mauck by Yancey, and the deed as duly recorded in the clerk's office of the County court of Rockingham.

Bryan in his answer states that at 302 the time of the conveyance *to Woodson, he had not the slightest knowledge of any prior lien upon the land, and did not hear of any such lien for a considerable time afterwards. And he states and proves by Mauck that the latter had frequently told him that Yancey had been paid in full; but that the other two had not.

It appears that on the 21st of April 1852 Mauck paid Shafer on his bond four hundred and fifty dollars. In 1855 Shafer bought suit upon the bond against Mauck and Yancey, and recovered a judgment, which was satisfied by Yancey; Mauck having then become insolvent; though at the time of executing the bond and for some time thereafter he was in good credit.

Yancey in his bill insists that Shafer had a lien on the land for the amount of Mauck's bond; and the prayer of the bill is that that lien may be enforced for his benefit, and for general relief.

When the cause came on to be heard, the court dismissed the bill. Whereupon Yancey applied to this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Baldwin, for the appellant, referred to the facts, and insisted that the arrangement between Yancey, Mauck and Shafer was no more in effect than the assignment of Mauck's bonds for the purchase money to Shafer; and Yancey having been compelled to pay the debt, he was entitled to the vendor's lien upon the land.

He insisted further, that Yancey's right to subject the land stood on higher ground than the vendor's lien. That he never having conveyed the legal title, a court of equity will not compel him to convey it until he is paid. And whatever may have been the forms of the transaction, certainly Mauck had not paid the purchase money, nor had Yancey received it. He referred to Lewis v. Caperton's ex'or, 8 Gratt. 148, and Knisely v. Williams, 3 Gratt. 265.

He insisted further, that Bryan
303 could occupy no *higher position than Mauck. He was obliged to know that Mauck had no title; and he was therefore affected by any equity which Yancey had against Mauck. He was not a purchaser of the legal title without notice; for he was not a purchaser of the legal title at all; and he advanced no money, but was a mere surety of Mauck, and did not deal on the faith of this property as a surety.

Grattan, for the appellees, insisted:

1st. That the arrangement between Yancey and Mauck, by which Mauck's bonds were delivered up to him, effectually destroyed Yancey's lien upon the land. Buller, J., in Tatlock v. Harris, 3 T. R. 163, 180; Hutchins v. Olcott, 4 Verm. R. 549; Wiseman v. Lyman, 7 Mass. R. 286, 290; Trotter v. Crockett, 2 Porter's R. 401; Parsons v. Gaylord's adm'rs, 3 John. R. 463; Arnold v. Camp, 12 Id. 409; Waydell v. Luer, 3 Denio's R. 410; Frisbie v. Larned, 21 Wend. R. 450; Kearslake v. Morgan, 5 T. R. 514; McCandlish v. Keen, 13 Gratt. 615; White v. Wakefield, 10 Cond. Eng. Ch. R. 116; Johnson v. Thompson, 4 J. J. Marsh. R. 380; Calcord v. Seamonds, 6 B. Monr. R. 265; McClure v. Harris, 12 Id. 261.

2d. That Yancey being the plaintiff in equity, and Bryan being the defendant, and a purchaser for value without notice, the question was, which had the better equity: and he examined the facts, and insisted that Bryan's was the better equity. Cox v. Romine, 9 Gratt. 27.

3d. That Bryan being in possession and having the better equity, was entitled to the legal title; and could therefore defend himself at law under the statute, Code, ch. 135, § 20, p. 560. That in England the equitable owner may buy up an outstanding satisfied statute, mortgage or other incumbrance to protect his possession.

Bassett v. Notworthy, 2 White &
304 *Tudor's Leading Cases, p. 1, and notes. And this, though the plaintiff has the legal title. Id. 70 to 75; Pruslau v. Cooke, Freeman's Ch. Cas. 24; Jerrard v. Saunders, 2 Ves. jr. R. 454; Strode v. Blackburne, 3 Id. 222; Wallwyn v. Lee, 9 Id. 24; Joyce v. D. Moleynes, 2 Jones & Lat. 374; Bowen v. Evans, 1 Id. 264; Payne v. Compton, 2 Younge & Coll. Exch. Cas. 457; Coleman v. Cocke, 6 Rand. 618. Though there is some conflict of opinion in this country. 2 White & Tudor's Leading Cases, p. 97; Williamson v. Gordon's ex'ors, 5 Munf. 257; Tucker, P., in Mutual Assurance Society v. Stone, 3 Leigh 218.

But if the equitable owner is entitled to call for the legal title, he is protected. 2 White & Tudor 70; Willoughby v. Willoughby, 1 T. R. 763; Charlton v. Low, 3 P. Wms. 328; Ex parte Knott, 11 Ves. R. 609; Shine v. Gough, 1 Ball & Beat. R. 436; Bowen v. Evans, 1 Jones & Lat. 264.

ALLEN, P. Before our statute, Code, ch. 119, § 1, p. 510, the law was well settled that the vendor of real estate, who had parted with the legal title, had a lien on the property for the purchase money, whilst it remained in the hands of the vendee, or volunteers claiming under him, or purchasers with notice. This right of the vendor to resort to the estate, constituted an implied equitable lien, the creature of a court of equity founded on the supposed intent of the parties, from which an implied contract was inferred. But the rule was not unbending. The circumstances might show there was no such intent, and therefore no such implied contract could be raised. But what circumstances should have such effect, created the difficulty in the practical enforcement of the rule. A receipt for the purchase money endorsed on the conveyance, or taking a bond, note, bill of exchange or check or other instrument involving the mere personal liability, *of the vendee, did not discharge the lien. But where other security was taken, it was considered that as the party had carved out his own security, it was a substitution for the lien implied by law. The question, however, to what extent the taking a distinct security shall be regarded as a waiver, has been much controverted. So much so, that Lord Eldon seemed to consider that it could not be known in any case, without the judgment of a court, whether, under the circumstances of each case, the taking such security amounted to declaration, plain or manifest intention of a purpose to rely not any longer upon the estate, but upon the personal credit of the individual. Owing to this uncertainty, and to the perplexing litigation growing out of the claim of the vendor to enforce this equitable claim for purchase money against purchasers of the legal title for value, the revisors recommended that the vendor's equitable lien be abolished; and the Code, ch. 119, § 1, p. 510, provides, that if any person hereafter convey any real estate, and the purchase money or any part thereof remain unpaid at the time of such conveyance, he shall not thereby have a lien for such unpaid purchase money, unless such lien is expressly reserved on the face of the conveyance. The statute abolishes the lien where the vendor has conveyed the legal title, and has not reserved it on the face of the deed. It does not apply to the case where the title has been retained by the vendor, for the obvious reason that in such case the principles of our statutes requiring mortgages or deeds of trust to be recorded, was not infringed upon, and because purchasers for value of the legal title would not be endangered by parol proof of notice. Holding back the deed, or what is the same thing, depositing it as an escrow, until payment of the purchase money was made, was from the first regarded as evidence of an intention to resort to the land if necessary. And it was from decisions *of cases of this character that the doctrine as subsequently developed took its origin. The first case in which the principle was distinctly enounced, was the case of Chapman v. Tanner, 1 Vern. R. 267; where the chancellor said, "that there is a natural equity that the land should stand charged with so much of the purchase money as was not paid; and that without any special agreement for that purpose." Lord Eldon, in Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. R. 330, 343, says this case was imperfectly reported; and in Fawell v. Heelis, Amb. R. 724, Lord Apsley said, "that it appeared by the register's book, that the vendor retained the title deeds till he was paid. And the court said that a natural equity arose from his having the title deeds in his custody." And in the same case it is said that Pollexfen v. Moore, 3 Atk. 272, is very inaccurately reported, "as by reason that the purchase money was not paid, he kept the title deeds."

Digitized by Google

Among the circumstances to repel the presumption of an intention to resort to the estate, is the making of a conveyance of the legal title: a circumstance always sufficient to repel the presumption as against a bona fide purchaser from the vendee having the legal title. But a purchaser or incumbrancer of a mere equitable title must take the place of the person from whom he purchases. The vendor may resort to the estate whether a purchaser of the mere equitable estate from his vendee, purchased with or without notice. For want of notice, or the payment of a valuable consideration, cannot place him in a more advantageous position than his vendor. As between the vendor and vendee, the latter occupies the position of a tenant at sufferance to the former. The vendor may assert his legal title and recover possession of the premises by ejectment, and so disaffirm the executory agreement to sell; or if he elects to go into chancery, the proceeding is more correctly a bill for the specific *execution of the contract by requiring the vendee to complete his purchase by paying the price, or otherwise have the subject sold at his risk, than a bill to subject the property to a mere equitable lien.

That a vendor retaining the legal title occupies a position different from and higher than one who has parted with the legal title and relies on the mere implied equitable lien, is not only clear from the considerations aforesaid, but is shown by the authorities. Notwithstanding the doubts of Lord Eldon, it may now be considered as well established that where the vendor who has conveyed, takes a personal collateral security, binding others as well as the vendee, as a bond or note with security, the lien on the land does not exist. But in the case of Hatcher's adm'x v. Hatcher's ex'ors, 1 Rand. 53, the purchaser gave bond with security for the purchase money, but received no conveyance; and it was decided that the right of the vendor to resort to the land was not lost by having taken personal security. In that case, a suit at the instance of the security to subject the land for his indemnity, was sustained, before he had been compelled to pay himself. And upon the same principle it was held in Lewis v. Caperton's ex'or, 8 Gratt. 148, that the vendor retaining the legal title may resort to the land as against creditors and incumbrances of the vendee, although the vendee had subsequently executed a deed by which he conveyed other property to secure the purchase money.

The distinction between the implied lien where the legal title is parted with, and the right of the vendor who has retained the title to enforce a specific execution, is clearly drawn in the cases of Brush v. Kinsly and Adams v. Stillwell, 14 Ohio R. 20. The judge says, "The lien of the vendor results from the fact that equity holds the vendee clothed with the legal title, a trustee of the vendor for the payment of the *purchase money. Before the legal title passes from the vendor on a contract for the sale of land, there is no such lien. The vendor's remedy in such case is on the contract either to enforce a specific performance of the contract, or in an action at law. The vendee cannot compel a relinquishment of the legal title until he clothes himself with equity by the payment of the purchase money."

Digitized by Google

In Clark v. Hall, 7 Paige's R. 382, it was held, that where there is an unexecuted contract for sale, the vendor may file a bill to have specific execution, and then have the land sold for his debt. To the same effect were the cases in this court, of Hatcher v. Hatcher and Lewis v. Caperton, ubi supra, and Knisely v. Williams, 3 Gratt. 265; Hanna v. Wilson, 3 Gratt. 243; Hopkins v. Cockerell, 2 Gratt. 88; Beirne's ex'ors v. Campbell, 4 Gratt. 125; Stuart's ex'ors v. Abbott, 9 Gratt. 255.

In Hanna v. Wilson it was held, that although an action on the promissory note given for the purchase money might have been barred at law, yet as the vendor retaining the title could sue in ejectment at law, or file a bill for specific execution, and subject the land in default of payment, his right in equity was not affected by any lapse of time short of the period sufficient to raise the presumption of payment, whatever might be the operation of the statute of limitations in an action at law instituted upon the promissory note. A similar proposition was affirmed in Hopkins v. Cockerell. The cases of Lewis v. Caperton's ex'ors, Stuart's ex'ors v. Abbott and Beirne's ex'ors v. Campbell, before referred to, show that the intervention of a purchaser without notice, or a bona fide incumbrancer, does not obstruct the right of the vendor to charge the land. The case of Beirne and Campbell carried the principle so far as to hold that though a purchaser has obtained the legal title, and had no notice that there was purchase money 309 due to a previous *vendor, yet if his vendor had not the legal title when he purchased, the land is liable for the purchase money due to the previous vendor.

The cases of Hanna v. Wilson and Knisely v. Williams also determine that in such case the assignee for value of a note given for the purchase money of land, may maintain a suit against his assignor, the vendor and the vendee for a specific execution of the contract, in a case proper for such relief, and subject the land to the satisfaction of his claim, agreeing in this respect with the almost uniform current of decisions in this country where the vendor has not parted with the title; although there is more conflict of decision whether the vendor's implied lien where he has parted with the legal title accompanies the assignment of the vendee's note or bond for the purchase money. See note to Mackreth v. Symmons, 1 White & Tudor's Lead. Cas. in Equity 245, where the cases are collected.

An application of these principles to the facts of the case under consideration, leaves no doubt in my mind of the right of the appellant to resort to the land in controversy for satisfaction. The contract of sale was executory; the appellant bound himself to make a deed to the appellee R. C. Mauck when the first payment was made. Before the bonds for the purchase money fell due, an arrangement was made, by which the vendee, with his vendor the appellant as security, executed their bond to a creditor of the vendor for the amount of the purchase money, for which amount the creditor gave the appellant credit, and the bonds executed by the vendee were surrendered. The effect of the arrangement was the same as if the appellant had assigned his vendee's bonds for the purchase money in discharge of a debt, continuing responsible as assignor; or as if he had given to his creditor, in discharge of 310 his own debt, an order on his *vendee for the amount of the purchase money, and which the vendee had accepted.

These arrangements did not change the character of the debt; it still consisted of the purchase money due for the land. Whether it should be paid to the vendor directly, or to a third person for his relief, and the discharge of his debt, did not change the nature of the consideration. The vendee becoming embarrassed, executed a deed of trust upon this, with other property, to secure some of his creditors; and failing to pay the substituted bond executed for the purchase money, his security the appellant was compelled to pay it. The arrangement, to the extent of the failure to pay, fell through. The purchase money was not paid; the vendor did not obtain relief from his debt. He was compelled to pay it; nominally as the security of the vendee, in reality because it was originally his own debt which his vendee had bound himself to pay out of the purchase money due to him. Whatever might be the position he occupied at law, in equity which regards substance and not form, he stood as the unpaid vendor retaining the legal title. If the case stood alone between him and his vendee, could the latter compel him to relinquish the legal title until he had clothed himself with equity by the payment of the purchase money? Would he be heard to say that by shuffling the securities the purchase money was satisfied, though he had never paid and his vendor had never received a cent? Would he not be told, in the language of the president of this court in Watts v. Kinney, 3 Leigh 272, 295, "That a court of equity looks to substance, not to form, that it looks to the debt (here the purchase money) which is to be paid, not to the hand which may happen to hold it: that the fund (here the land) charged with its payment, shall be so applied, whosoever may be the person entitled;
311 *and that it considers a debt as never discharged, until it is discharged by payment to the proper person, and by the proper person." So this court held in Knisely v. Williams, 3 Gratt. 265; a case somewhat similar in its circumstances to the present. There the vendor of land took a bond for the purchase money and retained the title to the land. He afterwards agreed with the vendee to receive an order on a third person, payable at a distant day, for the amount of the bond. The order was given and the bond surrendered; but when the order was presented, the drawee refused to accept. It was held that the surrender of the bond and taking the order did not discharge the land, and that the vendor, upon the refusal to accept the order, could proceed forthwith, the purchase money being due at the date of the order, to enforce the specific execution of the contract, obtain a decree for the payment of the purchase money, and to subject the land to sale for the satisfaction thereof. Such would, as it seems to me, be the condition of these parties, if there had been no incumbrancers. As to them, the authorities show they must abide by the condition of their debtor. No fraud or misrepresentation is imputed to the vendor. They should have looked to the registry to ascertain whether their debtor had a legal title. The appellant has been guilty of no default; and their negligence can give them no equity against him.

Digitized by Google

I think the decree dismissing the bill is erroneous, and should be reversed with costs, and the cause remanded with instructions to enter a decree in conformity with the precedent in Knisely v. Williams, to execute the contract by requiring the appellant to execute a deed with general warranty to the appellee R. C. Mauck for the land contracted to be sold to him by the appellant, and acknowledge the same in order to be recorded, and file the same with the papers of the cause; and upon the same being so executed, acknowledged 312 *and filed, unless the said appellee, or some one for him, shall within thirty days pay the debt, interest and costs aforesaid, together with the costs of this suit, that then the commissioner of said court sell the land upon the usual credits.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Allen, P.

The decree was as follows:

The court is of opinion, for reasons in writing filed with the record, that the decree of the Circuit court dismissing the bill of the appellant with costs, is erroneous. It is therefore adjudged and ordered, that the same be reversed and annulled, and that the appellees pay to the appellant his costs here expended.

And it is further decreed and ordered, that the cause be remanded to said Circuit court, with instructions to enter a decree in favor of the appellant against the appellee Robert C. Mauck for the balance of the purchase money unpaid, with interest thereon from the time the same became payable, and the costs of this suit; and furthermore to decree and order, that the appellant do make to said appellee R. C. Mauck a deed conveying his interest in the land described in the contract, dated the 20th of April 1850, filed as an exhibit in the cause, with covenants of general warranty, and acknowledge the same in order to be recorded, and file the same with the papers in the cause; and if the debt, interest and costs aforesaid be paid within thirty days after the deed shall have been so filed, that said appellee, on such payment, have leave to withdraw said deed, leaving an attested copy thereof: And unless said debt, interest and costs shall be paid by the appellee R. C. Mauck, or some one for him, to the appellant within thirty days after the filing of said deed, that a commissioner, to be 313 appointed by *said court, after giving bond according to law, shall, after duly advertising the time and place of sale, proceed to sell said land upon a credit of six, twelve and eighteen months, taking bond with security from the purchaser, and retaining a lien on the land for the security of the purchase money: And that he report his proceedings to court, in order to a final decree; which is ordered to be certified to said Circuit court of Rockingham county.

Decree reversed.

---

314 *Fulton's Ex'ors v. Gracey & als.

July Term, 1859, Lewisburg.

1. Slaves—Suit for Freedom—Evidence—Declarations.—In a suit for freedom, the declarations of the testator of the defendants, made some fourteen or fifteen years before the trial, that the plaintiffs were then free, and declarations made some twenty odd years before the trial, that they would be free at the age of twenty-eight years, are competent evidence for the plaintiffs: And this, though the testator had but a temporary interest in the negroes.
2. Same—Same—Same—Case at Bar.—The plaintiffs claim their freedom as being the children of a negro woman named Nan. The registry of Nan as a free woman, and the certificate of the clerk of the County court in which Nan was registered, to the correctness of the registry, and the affidavit of the person to whom Nan had been bequeathed for the time she was to serve, by a person under whom the testator of the defendants claimed the plaintiffs, of the fact that Nan was free, which affidavit was acted on by the court, and was filed in the clerk's office, when the registry of Nan was directed by the court, are competent evidence for the plaintiffs.
3. Same—Same—Same—Register—Quære.—QUÆRE: If a register, made and certified according to law, is not prima facie evidence of every fact therein stated, in any controversy involving the freedom of the negro registered, or of any other persons claiming freedom under such negro. It is at least evidence of the negro's freedom at the time it was made.
4. Same—Same—Same—Admissions of Defendant.—In a suit for freedom, the plaintiff must make out his title against all the world. The admissions of the defendant that the plaintiff is free, is evidence against the defendant, whether he ever had any interest in the plaintiff as a slave or not, or whatever such interest, if any, may have been. But it is only presumptive evidence, liable to be repelled by proof that the plaintiff is the slave of the defendant or some other person.
5. Same—Person of African Descent—Presumptions—Case at Bar.—The presumption of law is that a person of African descent is a slave; but that presumption may be repelled by any evidence tending to show he is free. A deed by which the mother of such person is conveyed to another for a certain number of years, and then to be discharged from all further service; and her children born before that time to serve till twenty-eight years and then to be discharged from all service, though such deed not having been recorded, cannot confer freedom, yet it tends to repel the presumption of slavery, and is competent testimony.

Digitized by Google

315 *6. Evidence—Entries of Age by Defendant—Admissibility.—Entries by the testator of the defendants in a book, of the ages of the plaintiffs, made along with the ages of other slaves owned by the testator, are not competent evidence for the defendants, to show that some of the plaintiffs who were the children of another plaintiff, were born before she attained the age of twenty-eight years, and that the children had not attained that age; even if such fact were material to be proved.

This is a suit for freedom, brought under the Code, ch. 106, p. 464, by Gracey and her nine children, against John A. Dice and Thomas Fulton, executors of James Fulton deceased. Verdict and judgment were rendered for the plaintiffs. The defendants took five exceptions to rulings of the court during the trial, and a sixth exception to the refusal of the court to set aside the verdict on the ground that it was contrary to the law and evidence. The first five exceptions are sufficiently stated in the following opinion.

The sixth and last bill of exceptions sets out the facts proved on the trial, and is referred to in and adopted as a part of each of the other bills of exception, save the first and the fifth. The facts are substantially these: Thomas Richards of the town of Alexandria in the district of Columbia, by deed dated the 23d day of March 1805, and executed in the presence of three subscribing witnesses, sold and conveyed to George Bolling and Elizabeth his wife a female negro named Nan for the term of twelve years from the date of the deed, and any children she might have before the expiration of the said term, to serve, each and every of them, till they should arrive at the age of twenty-eight years; and after the expiration of the said term of twelve years the said Nan to be discharged from all further service; and each of her said children, upon arriving at the age of twenty-eight years, in like manner to be discharged from all further service. By successive assignments endorsed on the said deed, the interest thereby conveyed was assigned by said Bolling and wife to Thomas Hord, jr.

316 on the *25th of January 1806; by Hord to James Sarkins on the 2d of August 1806; by Sarkins' administrator to Price Skinner on the 23d of February 1808; by Skinner to Christian Hottle on the 23d of October 1808; and by C. Hottle to Henry Hottle on the 9th of March 1813. Neither the deed nor any of the assignments was ever recorded. But the deed and assignments, as they were successively made, appear to have been delivered, with Nan, to the assignees successively. The last assignee, Henry Hottle, by his will, gave Nan to his wife Christena, to stay with her until the time she was bound to him should be expired. The said Christena, by affidavit before a justice of the peace, bearing date the 11th day of April 1817, made oath that Nan had served out the time for which she was sold to her deceased husband Henry Hottle, and was then free, and, as affiant believed, about the age of twenty-eight years. On the 5th of May 1817 Nan was registered as No. 32 in the office of Rockingham County court; it being stated in the register that she was born free, but bound to serve a certain number of years, which she had duly served, as appeared by her papers filed in the office. And at the succeeding term of said court, the said register was by the court compared with said Nan, and found duly made, and a copy thereof ordered to be furnished her in the manner prescribed by law. The only papers found in the office were the deed, and assignments endorsed thereon, and the affidavit of Christena Hottle, on which papers was an endorsement, in the handwriting of the former clerk of the court, in these words: "No. 32—Nancy's papers." "Registered 5th May 1817."

Elizabeth Long, a witness for the plaintiffs in the court below, proved that some fifteen or sixteen years before the trial she was at the residence of James Fulton, the testator of the defendants; and while in a conversation with Fulton, some little 317 negroes, children *of Gracey, were playing about the yard. She remarked to Fulton that those little negroes seemed to have a better time of it than the children of many white people; to which he replied, that now that Gracey was free, he had told her she could leave him if she chose, but that if she chose to remain with him, he would take care of her and her children, and treat them as well as he had always done.

Joseph F. Hottle, another witness for the plaintiffs, proved that he is a son of Christian Hottle, one of the persons through whose hands Nancy (alias Nan) passed; that said Christian, who is dead, told witness he had purchased Nancy in Alexandria for Henry Hottle, father of said Christian; that witness had always understood in the family that Gracey was a daughter of Nancy; that Nancy was free at twenty-eight years of age, and that her children born before she arrived at twenty-eight years of age, were to be free at twenty-eight years of age; that she had four such children, viz: Gracey, Milly, Jerry and Jeff; that Milly died before attaining twenty-eight years of age, and that Jerry and Jeff were permitted to go free at that age; that these four children were divided by Henry Hottle among his children, Gracey having been given to Mrs. Fulton, wife of James Fulton, who was a daughter of Henry Hottle; and that witness had always heard from his father and understood in the family, about these negroes pretty much what is stated in the said deed.

Digitized by Google

Christian Snell proved that about twenty years before the trial he had a conversation with James Fulton, in which he remarked to Fulton that Gracey's children would make him rich; and Fulton replied, that the mischief of it was, Gracey and her children would be free at a certain age, which witness did not remember, but which was some time in twenty.

Clement Irving proved that about
318 the year 1818 *Nancy came to live upon his father's land, and continued to live there about twenty years; that she then and always after, to the present time, passed as a free woman; that Gracey, a daughter of Nancy, either was brought to his father's land with Nancy, or was sent there soon after, and remained there with Nancy some six years; after which time she was taken to James Fulton's; and that witness understood at that time that Gracey was to be free at twenty-eight years of age.

It was also proved that Gracey is a daughter of Nancy, and was born about the year 1814; that she has the children mentioned in the petition for leave to sue for freedom, of whom four were born before and the other five after Gracey attained the age of twenty-eight years, and all of whom were under that age at the time of the trial.

Henry Messersmith, a witness for the plaintiffs, proved that he had, about ten years before the trial, heard James Fulton say that his brother in law Christian Hottle had been "narrating" it about that Gracey was free, but he had been paying taxes on her, and meant to hold her.

The last mentioned witness and a number of others, neighbors and acquaintances of James Fulton, introduced by defendants, proved, that Fulton had always, so far as they knew, held and claimed Gracey and her children as slaves, treating them precisely as he did his other slaves.

The defendants also introduced an official copy of the will of James Fulton, bearing date the 25th of January 1855, and duly admitted to probate, whereby it appears that the plaintiffs were disposed of as his slaves: and also introduced the act of the general assembly, passed December 30, 1789, ceding ten miles square, or any less quantity of territory within this state, to the United States, for the permanent 319 seat of *the general government, and the act of the general assembly, passed on the 3d of February 1846, for the retrocession of Alexandria to this state, and the act of congress of the 27th of February 1808, extending the laws of Virginia over that portion of the district of Columbia ceded by Virginia to the United States.

These were all the facts proved at the trial. Fulton's ex'ors applied to this court for a supersedeas to the judgment; which was awarded.

Michie and Woodson, for the appellants.
Baldwin, for the appellees.

MONCURE, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The questions to be decided in this case arise upon the bills of exception, and will be considered and disposed of in their order.

1. The plaintiffs, to prove their right to freedom, offered to give in evidence to the jury the declarations of James Fulton, the testator of the defendants, made some fourteen or fifteen years before the trial, that Gracey and her children were then free; and also the declarations of said testator, made some twenty odd years before the trial, that Gracey and her children would be free at the age of twenty-eight years; to which evidence the defendants objected, "on the ground that parol declarations in a suit for freedom are insufficient to establish freedom." But the court overruled the objection, and the defendants excepted.

Parol declarations are certainly insufficient, in this state, to confer freedom on a slave. But parol declarations of a defendant in a suit for freedom, that the plaintiff is free, are admissible evidence of the fact, according to the general rule that the admissions of a party to a suit are evidence against him. The declarations in such case do not confer freedom; do not 320 *change the status of the plaintiff; but merely tend to show what that status is, to wit, that he is a free person, however his freedom may have been acquired. He may have acquired it in a variety of ways, and otherwise than by will or deed: as for example, by being born of a free mother. He and his maternal ancestors may always have been free. In many cases he might be unable to produce any muniment of his freedom; either because such muniment never existed, or because it has been lost, or is not in his possession or power. And an admission of his freedom by the party detaining him as a slave, may be the best, if not the only evidence of the fact which can be produced. Such an admission is competent evidence in any suit for freedom; its weight being dependent on the circumstances of each case, and being a matter for the consideration of the jury.

2. After the plaintiffs had introduced the declarations of James Fulton, the testator of the defendants, in regard to the right of the plaintiffs to freedom as aforesaid, and also the deed of the 23d of March 1805, from Richards to Bolling and wife, the plaintiffs offered to give in evidence to the jury the register of Nancy and the certificate of the County court of Rockingham to the correctness of said register, and also the affidavit of Christena Hottle: To which evidence the defendants objected as improper to go to the jury, "because said papers were ex parte, and not legal evidence in this case of the right of Nancy or Gracey to freedom." But the court overruled the objection; and the defendants again excepted.

The plaintiffs based their claim to freedom on the ground that they inherited it

Digitized by Google

from Nancy, the mother of Gracey. Any legal evidence tending to prove that Nancy was free at the time of the birth of Gracey, is relevant and admissible evidence 321 in support of the *plaintiffs' claim. The evidence objected to, as mentioned in the said bill of exceptions, seems to be of that character.

The registry was made under the act passed January 25th, 1803, entitled "an act more effectually to restrain the practice of negroes going at large;" 2 Stat. at Large, new series, p. 417, ch. 21; which required every free negro to be registered in the court of the county in which he resided, by the clerk of the court of said county, in a book to be kept for that purpose; that the register should specify, among other things, in what court such negro was emancipated, or that he was born free; that the court should certify such register to have been truly made; and that a copy thereof, signed by the clerk and attested by a justice, should be delivered to the said negro. This law, with some changes not material to be here set forth, has remained in force ever since its passage. 1 Rev. Code of 1819, p. 438, § 67; Code of 1849, p. 466, § 6.

It is at least questionable whether a register, made and certified according to law, is not prima facie evidence of every fact therein stated, in any controversy involving the freedom of the negro registered, or of any other persons claiming freedom under such negro. See 1 Greenl. Ev. § 483, 485, 491, 493. If it be so, then the register of Nancy is prima facie evidence of the fact therein stated, that she was born free.

But it is unnecessary to go to that extent, in the decision of the question now under consideration. It is sufficient, for this purpose (as the reason assigned for the objection taken to the evidence concedes), that the register of Nancy is evidence of her right to freedom at the time it was made. The fact that she was free at that time, is a very important link in the chain of evidence necessary to show that she was free at the time of the birth of Gracey. Evidence of her having acted and been generally reputed as a free 322 person, is *certainly admissible evidence of her freedom. It is the strongest possible evidence of that character, that in 1817, about the time her term of service under the deed aforesaid expired, she was duly registered as a free person, and the court certified that such register was truly made; and that her right to freedom accordingly, so far as the record shows, has never since been controverted. The ninth instruction asked for by the defendants and given by the court, that the said register is only prima facie evidence that Nancy was entitled to freedom at that time, "liable to be rebutted by evidence that she was not free according to law, but that it is no evidence that she was entitled to freedom before that time, nor that any child she had before that time was entitled to freedom," is an exposition of the law, of which the defendants at least have no cause to complain; and it is sufficient to show that their objection to the register as evidence was properly overruled. See Pegram v. Isabell, 2 Hen. & Munf. 193.

The register and certificate are therefore admissible evidence; and so also is the affidavit of Christena Hottle. It was part of the evidence on which the register was founded; is referred to therein; and, with the said deed, was endorsed, filed and preserved by the clerk in his office. She was the person last entitled to the services of Nancy under the said deed, and held her when her term of service expired. Her only claim to Nancy was under the said deed, and under her husband Henry Hottle. And the only claim of the appellants' testator James Fulton to Gracey, was under the same deed, and under the said Henry Hottle. She was as much entitled to Nancy absolutely, as he was entitled to Gracey absolutely. Her admission is as much evidence of the freedom of Nancy, as his is of the freedom of Gracey. Her affidavit is nothing more than her admission 323 under oath of Nancy's freedom. *Her admission is evidence, not only against her, but against all persons claiming under her. The claim of the testator of the appellants must have been under her, if they had any claim at all to Nancy. The only persons, so far as the record shows, who appear to have had any interest in Nancy, supposing her to have been a slave, were Thomas Richards, the grantor in said deed, and the person entitled to her services under it. The admissions of these persons were competent evidence of her freedom in this suit. The deed itself is an admission of her freedom by Richards, and was admitted as evidence without objection. The affidavit, as before stated, is an admission of her freedom by the person last entitled to her services under said deed, and is, therefore, admissible evidence.

3. After all the evidence had been given, the defendants moved the court to exclude as evidence from the jury the declarations of James Fulton as to the right of Gracey to freedom, "on the ground that the plaintiffs had proved by the said deed and other evidence, that James Fulton had only a temporary interest in said Gracey and her children; and never having been the fee simple owner his declarations are not evidence for the purpose of proving a right to freedom." But the court overruled the motion; and the defendants again excepted.

A plaintiff in a suit for freedom must make out his title against all the world. The only issue in the suit is, whether he be free or not; and if he be not free, he must fail in the suit, whether he be the slave of the defendant or of some other person. The defendant's admission of the plaintiff's freedom is always evidence of the fact against the defendant, whether he ever had any interest in the plaintiff as a slave or not, and whatever such interest, if any, may have been. It is, however, only presumptive evidence, liable to be repelled by proof that the plaintiff is 324 the slave either *of the defendant or of some other person. And the judgment which may be recovered by the plaintiff upon such evidence, cannot affect the title of any other person than the defendant and those who claim under him. The motion to exclude the evidence was therefore properly overruled.

Digitized by Google

4. After all the evidence had been given and ten instructions had been asked for by the defendants, and given by the court to the jury, the defendants moved the court to instruct the jury that the said deed of the 23d of March 1805, from Richards to Bolling and wife, "is not evidence wich tends to rebut the presumption of slavery resulting from the color and African descent of the plaintiffs and Nan, or to establish a pre-existing title to freedom." But the court refused to give the said instruction; and the defendants again excepted.

In the case of a person visibly appearing to be a negro, the presumption is that he is a slave; but in the case of a person visibly appearing to be a white man or an Indian, the presumption is that he is free. Hudgins v. Rights, 1 Hen. & Munf. 134, and opinion of Roane, J., Id. 141. In this case, any legal evidence tending to show that the plaintiffs are free, tends to repel the presumption arising from their color, that they are slaves, and is therefore admissible. The deed of the 23d of March 1805 is of that character. It does not profess to be a deed of emancipation; but is merely a conveyance by Richards to Bolling and wife of the services of Nan and her children for certain terms respectively; at the expiration of which, it declares that she and they are to be discharged from all further service. It does not describe them as slaves, but as free persons, at least at the end of their respective terms of service. And as it was plainly not intended to be a deed of emancipation, it seems to imply that Nan had previously acquired her freedom by birth, or in some other legal mode.

At all events, it is "evidence which 325 *tends to rebut the presumption of slavery resulting from the color and African descent of the plaintiffs and Nan, or to establish a pre-existing title of freedom;" and the court therefore properly refused to give the eleventh instruction asked for by the defendants.

5. After evidence had been introduced by the plaintiffs tending to prove Gracey's right to freedom upon her arrival at the age of twenty-eight years; and after the introduction by them of the deed of the 23d of March 1805, the defendants, to sustain the issue on their part, and for the purpose of showing the ages of Gracey's children, and which of them were born before she arrived at the age of twenty-eight years, offered to give in evidence to the jury an old book entitled "Select Sermons by Mr. Andrew Gray," in which book, and on 31st, 32d and 33d pages thereof, the date of the birth of Gracey's children, and also of other children of other negro women of said James Fulton, were written. It was proved that the book was said Fulton's, and was kept by him in his house to the time of his death; and that the entries therein, of the birth of said negroes, was in his handwriting, and seemed to have been made many years ago. To which evidence the plaintiffs objected, and the court sustained the objection. Whereupon the defendants again excepted.

The evidence thus excluded was not material, and would not have affected the verdict; which was in favor of all the plaintiffs, though it was proved by other evidence that four of them, children of Gracey, were born before, and her other children after she attained the age of twenty-eight years, and that all of the said children were under that age at the time of the trial. But it would have been inadmissible if it had been material. The principle upon which such entries are admitted is (in the language of Lord Eldon 326 *in Whitelocke v. Baker, 13 Ves. R. 511, 514), "that they are the natural effusions of a party, who must know the truth, and who speaks upon an occasion when his mind stands in an even position, without any temptation to exceed or fall short of the truth." 1 Phil. Ev. 239; 2 Stark. Ev. 605. The very foundation on which such entries are admissible fails, where it is probable that parties who made them labored under any temptation to misrepresent the facts; when that is the case, such evidence is inadmissible. Id. If the entries excluded in this case be material to the defence, then clearly the party who made them labored under a temptation to misrepresent the facts, and therefore the said entries were inadmissible evidence, and were properly excluded.

6. The 6th and last exception taken by the defendants, was to the refusal of the court to set aside the verdict, on the ground that it was contrary to the law and evidence.

There is nothing in the case to show that Nan was ever a slave, except the fact of her color and African descent; and the presumption arising from that fact, seems to be repelled by the other facts proved in the case. The first information we have of her is, that in 1805, when the deed of the 23d of March of that year was executed, she resided in the town of Alexandria. And she and the deed were transferred from one to another in that town until 1808, when they were transferred to Christian Hottle, who purchased her for his brother, Henry Hottle of the county of Rockingham, where, it appears, she has ever since resided. She is not described as a slave in the said deed, nor in any assignment thereof, nor in the will of Henry Hottle, nor in the affidavit of Christena Hottle. The deed does not profess, and plainly was not intended, to be a deed of emancipation, but purports to be merely a conveyance of the tem- 327 porary services of Nan and of *any children she might have during her term of service, to which temporary services the grantor seems to have claimed title, but in what way or by what right, does not appear. The deed rather implies that she was free at the time of its execution, and states that she and her said children at the expiration of their respective terms of service were "to be discharged from all further service"—words, rather inappropriate to the purpose of emancipation, but perfectly consistent with the idea that she was already free, but bound to serve for a limited period. She was given by the will of Henry Hottle to his wife Christena Hottle, "to stay with her until the time she was bound to him should be expired." Shortly after that time expired, to wit, in April 1817, Christena Hottle made affidavit that Nan had "served out the time for which she was sold to her deceased husband," and was then free. And in the next month, May 1817, Nan was registered in the office of the County court of Rockingham as a person "born free, but bound to serve a certain number of years; which she had duly served, as appeared by her papers filed in said office;" and the court certified the register to have been truly made, and ordered a copy to be furnished her in the manner prescribed by law. It does not appear upon what information the fact was stated in the register that she was born free. It is not probable that it would have been so stated on information derived alone from Nancy, if indeed she had any knowledge on the subject. The fair presumption is, that it was stated upon information derived from some of the parties claiming under the deed—probably Christena Hottle, who seems to have furnished her with the deed and affidavit, and no doubt otherwise assisted her in obtaining the register. At all events, we find the fact thus solemnly and authentically stated in 1817; and she has enjoyed her 328 freedom, without interruption, *ever since; living all the time in the same county, and probably in the same neighborhood with the testator of the defendants, until his death in 1855. The only other children of Nan, born during her term of service, who survived the age of twenty-eight years, besides Gracey, were discharged from service at that age, according to the provisions of the deed, and have ever since enjoyed their freedom without interruption. Gracey alone and her children have been detained in slavery by the defendants, and their testator. He, on several occasions, admitted that they were free, or would be at a certain age. And after he determined to detain them as slaves, the only reason he assigned for doing so (as far as the record shows), was, "that he had been paying taxes on Gracey, and meant to hold her." He had no claim to them except under the said deed; and he certainly had no rightful claim under that, to Gracey after she attained the age of twenty-eight years, and her children thereafter born. They, at least, either belong to some other person than the defendants, or are free. No other person has ever claimed them; and it may reasonably be presumed that they are free. Upon the whole, we may well conclude that the jury were warranted by the evidence in finding the plaintiffs to be free, and therefore that the Circuit court did not err in refusing to set aside the verdict.

Digitized by Google

The court is of opinion that there is no error in the judgment, and that it be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

---

329 *Mustard v. Wohlford's Heirs.

July Term, 1859. Lewisburg.

[76 Am. Dec. 209.]

1. Infants' Contracts—Sale of Land—Voidable.—An infant sells his tract of land, puts the purchaser in possession, and executes a bond in a penalty with condition to make the title. The contract is voidable but not void.

2. Same—Same—Disaffirmance.†—In such a case the infant on coming of age, sells the land to another person, and executes to him a bond in a penalty with condition to make the title. This is an avoiding of the first contract.

Infants' Contracts—Sale of Land—Voidable.—For the proposition that an infant's contract for the sale of his land is voidable and not void, and may be disaffirmed or ratified by him after he becomes of age, the principal case is cited and followed in the following cases: Gillespie v. Bailey, 12 W. Va. 92, 93; Wilson v. Branch, 77 Va. 71; Birch v. Linton, 78 Va. 590; Bedinger v. Wharton, 27 Gratt. 871, and note; McClanahan v. Roanoke Iron Co., 95 Va. 558, 28 S. E. Rep. 955, but in this case disaffirmance was not allowed because of the laches on the part of those entitled to disaffirm. In Dellinger v. Foltz, 93 Va. 734, 25 S. E. Rep. 998, it is said: "If it be true that one who deals with an infant in his own proper person does so at his peril, a fortiori is it true when he deals with one who represents himself as agent of the infant, it being well settled that an infant cannot empower an agent or attorney to act for him, and that such an appointment would be void. Nor can he affirm what one has assumed to do for him, for he cannot ratify what he could not authorize. 1 Minor's Inst. 516; Mustard v. Wohlford's Heirs, 15 Gratt. 329; Thomas v. Roberts, 16 M. & W. 778; Dexter v. Hall, 15 Wall. 9; Fonda v. Vanhorn, 15 Wendell 631; Armitage v. Widoe, 36 Mich. 124; Trueblood v. Trueblood, 8 Ind. 195."

In Kyger v. Sipe, 89 Va. 509, 16 S. E. Rep. 627, the rule laid down in the principal case as to the right of an infant to disaffirm his contract after becoming of age is approved; but it is held in that case that where the infant is bound jointly with an adult who is surety for the infant, the plea of infancy which is purely a personal plea, will not release the surety, but the contract will subsist against him in full force.

†Same—Same—Disaffirmance.—In Sanger v. Hibbard, 101 Fed. Rep. 457, the court said: "'The question,' says the supreme court, 'is whether the acts and declarations of an infant during infancy can estop him from asserting the invalidity of his deed after he has attained his majority. In regard to this there can be no doubt, founded either upon reason or authority. Without spending time to look at the reason, the authorities are

Digitized by Google

3. Sale of Land—By Party Out of Possession.—In this state a party out of possession may sell and convey his interest in land; and therefore, though the first purchaser from the infant has been put in possession of the land, and has received a conveyance, the infant on coming of age, may convey, and his deed will avoid the first deed.

4. Infants' Contracts—Effect of Disaffirmance.—The effect of the first contract of the infant, by his sale after coming of age, is to render the first contract void; to extinguish any interest in law or equity which the first purchaser may have acquired under it; and to entitle the vendor or the second purchaser in his name to recover possession of the land at law; and hold it free from any equity of the first purchaser.

5. Same—Same.—If an infant after coming of age disaffirm a sale made by him whilst an infant, he becomes reinvested with the title to the property, and may demand and recover it not only from his vendee, but from any other person who may have it in possession, though he be a purchaser from his vendee.

6. Same—Disaffirmance—Right of Purchaser.—If an infant after coming of age avoids his contract for the sale of his property, and sues to recover it, the purchaser is entitled to recover the consideration received by the infant, or so much of it as may then remain in his hands in kind.

7. Same—Executory—Liability of Infant for Wasted Consideration.‡—But a contract executory on his part, if he has during infancy wasted, sold or otherwise ceased to possess the consideration, and has none of it in his hand in kind on his arrival at all one way. An estoppel in pais is not applicable to infants, and a fraudulent representation of capacity cannot be an equivalent for actual capacity. Brown v. McCune, 5 Sandf. 224; Keen v. Coleman, 39 Pa. St. 299. A conveyance by an infant is an assertion of his right to convey. A contemporaneous declaration of his right or of his age adds nothing to what is implied in his deed. An assertion of an estoppel against him is but a claim that he has assented or contracted. But he can no more do that effectively than he can make the contract alleged to be confirmed.' Sims v. Everhardt, 102 U. S. 300, 313, 26 L. Ed. 87. The rules of law which we have stated, and which are the only ones applicable to the facts of this case, and decisive of it, are supported by all the authorities. Corey v. Burton 33 Mich. 30; Whart. Cont. § 56; Badger v. Phinney, 15 Mass. 359; Chandler v. Simmons, 97 Mass. 508; Carr v. Clough, 26 N. H. 280; Railway Co. v. Higgins, 44 Ark. 296; Ruchizky v. De Haven, 97 Pa. St. 202; Mustard v. Wohlford's Heirs, 15 Gratt. 329; Mortgage Co. v. Dykes, 111 Ala. 178, 18 South. 292; Brantley v. Wolf, 60 Miss. 420; Gibson v. Soper, 6 Gray 279; Craig v. Van Bebber, 100 Mo. 584, 13 S. W. 906. The judgment of the United States court of appeals for the Indian Territory, and the judgment of the United States court in the Indian Territory, Northern district (53 S. W. 330), are reversed, and the cause is remanded to the latter court, with instructions to grant a new trial, and to proceed therein not inconsistently with this opinion."

---

In Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 32 W. Va. 139, 142, 9 S. E. Rep. 61, the deed of a married woman and her husband was void as to the married woman, because of a defective certificate of her examination and acknowledgment, and after the death of her husband she conveyed the land to another with notice of the former deed; and the court after giving the facts in the principal case, said: "That case logically by analogy rules this case. An infant's conveyance is not void, but voidable, whereas a married woman's deed, without proper certificate, is void at the start. If a man may purchase the infant's land after he becomes of age, with notice of a prior sale to another during infancy, vesting the first purchaser with title until avoided, and the second purchaser takes a better title than the first, and call on equity to enforce his right by taking from the first purchaser his legal title, acquired after the infant obtained his majority pursuant to his sale in infancy, why cannot much more a second purchaser from a married woman acquire a better title than one who took from her a deed not voidable, but void at the instant of its execution?"

See, in accord, Guffey v. Hukill, 34 W. Va. 58, 11 S. E. Rep. 756, citing the principal case.

‡Same—Same—Rights of Parties.—In MacGreal v. Taylor, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 965, it is said: "So in Chandler v. Simmons, 97 Mass. 508, 514, the court said: 'Another ground relied on by the defendant is that the deed (by the infant) cannot be avoided without a return of the consideration. We do not understand that such a condition is ever attached to the right of a minor to avoid his deed. If it were so, the privilege would fail to protect him when most needed. It is to guard him against the improvidence which is incident to his immaturity that this right is maintained. Gibson v. Soper, 6 Gray 279-282; Boodey v. McKenny, 23 Me. 517. If the minor, when avoiding his contract, have in his hands any of its fruits specifically, the act of avoiding the contract by which he acquired such property will devest him of all right to retain the same, and the other party may reclaim it. He cannot avoid in part only, but must make the contract wholly void if at all, so that it will no longer protect him in the retention of the consideration. Badger v. Phinney, 15 Mass. 359; Bigelow v. Kinney, 3 Vt. 353. Or, if he retains the use or dispose of such property after becoming of age, it may be held as an affirmance of the contract by which he acquired it, and thus deprive him of the right to avoid. Boyden v. Boyden, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 519; Robbins v. Eaton, 10 N. H. 561. But if the consideration has passed from his hands, either wasted or expended during his minority, he is not thereby to be deprived of his right or capacity to avoid his deed, any more than he is to avoid his executory contracts. And the adult who deals with him must seek the return of the consideration paid or delivered to the minor in the same modes and with the same chances of loss in the one case as in the other. Dana v. Stearns, 3 Cush. 372-376. It is not necessary, in order to give effect to the disaffirmance of the deed or contract of a minor, that the other party should be placed in statu quo. Tucker v. Moreland, 10 Pet. 65-74; Shaw v. Boyd, 5 Serg. & R. 309.' See, also, 1 Am. Lead. Cas. (5th Ed.) 224, 232, 249, 259; Mustard v. Wohlford's Heirs, 15 Gratt. 329-340; Cressinger v. Welch's Lessee, 15 Ohio St. 156; Eureka Co. v. Edwards, 71 Ala. 248, 256; Corey v. Burton, 32 Mich. 30; Price v. Furman, 27 Vt. 268, 271; Robinson v. Weeks, 56 Me. 102, 107; Carpenter v. Carpenter, 45 Ind. 142, 146; Harvey v. Briggs, 68 Miss. 60, 66, 8 So. Rep. 274; Railway v. Higgins, 44 Ark. 293, 297; Reynolds v. McCurry, 100 Ill. 356, 359; Tyler, Inf. § 37, and authorities cited."

See also, Bedinger v. Wharton, 27 Gratt. 871, and note: Gillespie v. Bailey, 12 W. Va. 92, 93; Abernathy v. Phillips, 82 Va. 773. See generally, monographic note on "Infants."

Digitized by Google

age, he is not liable therefor: and may recover the property sold by him without accounting for the consideration received.

8. Same—Sale of Land—Resale to Another at Majority—Effect of Deed Obtained by First Purchaser.—The purchaser from the infant, with knowledge of the sale made by him of the land after he came of age, obtains from him a deed for it. He can derive no benefit from the deed; but holds the legal title acquired under it in trust for the second purchaser; and may *be compelled by a court of equity to convey said title to such second purchaser; or if he dies, to his heirs.

330

9. Same—Same—Same—Effect of Knowledge of First Purchase.—Though the second purchaser purchase with knowledge of the first purchase from the infant, he is not affected thereby; the same having been disaffirmed and avoided by the second sale.

10. Same—Same—Same—Right of First Purchaser.—Any claim which the purchaser from the infant may have on account of payments made under his contract, or to obtain the deed, is a personal claim against his vendor, and cannot be enforced in a suit brought by the second purchaser to recover the land: he has no interest in or to the land or the purchase money due from the second purchaser.

11. Decrees—Recitals.—The decree reciting that the suit had been revived in the name of the heirs of the plaintiff, and they being parties to the appeal as appellees, the appellant cannot object that the suit was not regularly revived in their names.

12. Appellate Practice—Decrees—Amendment of—Case at Bar.—The second purchaser having sued to recover the land, and the decree having directed a conveyance by the first purchaser from the infant, without providing for the payment of the purchase money appearing to be due from the plaintiff, the appellate court will amend the decree and affirm it.

Alexander Nisewander, being entitled to an undivided fifth of a tract of land, subject to his mother's life estate in one-third thereof, contracted, during his infancy, to sell his said interest to John Mustard for the sum of eight hundred dollars; and on the same day, to wit, the 16th day of January 1852, executed a title bond in the penalty of one thousand six hundred dollars, conditioned to make a good deed with general warranty to the purchaser for the said interest on the 3d of November 1853, that being the day on which the vendor would attain the age of twenty-one years. Three hundred dollars of the purchase money were paid, according to the contract, in a house and lot in Mechanicsburg. No other payment was made during the infancy of the vendor, except about forty dollars, the amount of a debt assumed for him by the vendee. For the balance of the purchase money, the vendee executed his bond, but it does not appear when it was made payable; though it was, probably, when the

331 *deed should be executed by the vendor, on or after his arrival at lawful age. It does not appear that any deed, or even title bond, was ever executed to Nisewander for the house and lot in Mechanicsburg. It seems that that property was worth about three hundred dollars, and that he might have sold it for that sum if he had been of age, or could have given security to make a good title when he became of age. But not being able to do so, and being in want of money, he offered to sell it for one hundred dollars; and among others, offered to sell it to the appellant Mustard at that price. The appellant said he did not want it, but that his son Hugh would buy it. And Nisewander did sell it to Hugh Mustard and Addison Harman for about one hundred dollars; which was accordingly paid. The same property was afterwards sold by the appellant to another person for three hundred dollars, paid partly in cash and the balance in trade. Nisewander having become dissatisfied with his sale to the appellant, determined, and often declared, that he would not, on his arrival at age, confirm the sale and make a deed according to his title bond; and these declarations were sometimes made in presence of one or two of the appellant's sons, but not of the appellant himself. After his arrival at age, he persisted in this determination, and so declared; and on the 8th day of November 1853 he contracted to sell his interest in the land to Samuel Wohlford for eight hundred dollars; of which one hundred dollars was paid in cash, and for the balance three bonds were executed, payable at future periods; and he executed a title bond, conditioned to make a deed before the last payment should become due. When Nisewander applied to Wohlford to make this purchase, the latter knew that the former had contracted during infancy to sell his interest to the appellant, and asked him if he did not intend to com-

332 ply with his said contract: and *the former replied that he did not; whereupon the latter made the purchase, and received the title bond aforesaid. A few days after this purchase the appellant endeavored to obtain from Nisewander indemnity for the money paid on their contract as aforesaid; and, failing in that, endeavored to induce Wohlford to agree to rescind his contract with Nisewander, upon the return

*Decrees—Recitals—Effect.—In Arnold v. Arnold, 11 W. Va. 457, it is said: "It does appear in the evidence, that said Reese and wife were in the west at the date of the said deeds. The circuit court having in its decree ascertained and recited that the 'process was duly executed as to the defendants,' of which said Reese and his wife were a part, it seems to me that under the authorities above cited, and the case of Mustard v. Wohlford's Heirs, 15 Gratt. 329, and the principles therein established, and the circumstances and facts of this case, above stated by me, that the appellants cannot object that said Reese and his wife were not before the circuit court in said cause, at or before the rendition of said decree; although it nowhere appears in the transcript of the record before us, that they were served with process in the cause, except in and by the said recital in the said decree of the court which is appealed from. This objection and assignment of error is therefore overruled in this cause."

See also, Livesay v. Feamster, 21 W. Va. 101, citing the principal case. See note to principal case reported in 76 Am. Dec. 209.

Digitized by Google

of the money and bonds received by the latter; but Wohlford refused to do so. Shortly thereafter, to wit, on the 18th of November 1853, the appellant induced Nisewander to execute a deed conveying the land to him in consideration of the sum of nine hundred dollars, being one hundred dollars more than the amount of the purchase money before agreed upon between them; which sum of one hundred dollars was paid at the time of the execution of the deed.

Very soon after the execution of the said deed, and during the same month of November 1853, Wohlford instituted this suit for the purpose of having the deed annulled as having been fraudulently obtained by the appellant with a full knowledge of the equitable rights of Wohlford, and of obtaining the legal title to the said interest, and a partition of the land and an allotment of his several portion thereof.

The appellant in his answer admits that he obtained the deed with full notice of the prior sale and title bond to Wohlford, but says, in substance, that he had long previously purchased the same property, and received a title bond therefor from Nisewander during his infancy, of which purchase and title bond, as well as of the fact that respondent had paid a considerable part of the purchase money, the plaintiff had full notice at the time he made his purchase and obtained his title bond as aforesaid; that whether the plaintiff had such notice or not, respondent insists that having acquired the first equitable title, he had a right, notwithstanding his knowledge of any subsequently acquired 333 *equity of the plaintiff, to perfect his purchase, if he could, by obtaining a conveyance of the legal title; that although Nisewander was under age at the date of the title bond to respondent, yet it was not on that account void, but only voidable, and might be affirmed or disaffirmed at the election of said vendor, after he arrived at lawful age; that the sale and title bond of Wohlford were not a disaffirmance, but the deed to respondent was an affirmance of the said title bond to respondent, notwithstanding the payment of the additional sum of one hundred dollars as aforesaid, which was not intended to change the original contract, but merely to induce its affirmance; which respondent had a right to do.

Nisewander, in his answer, admits the contracts of sale made by him with the appellant and Wohlford respectively, the former before and the latter after he became of age, and states that a considerable portion of the purchase money due under the former contract was paid, or attempted to be paid, in a house and lot for which he had no use, and owing to the advantage thus taken of him, he determined, before he became of age, and expressed the determination frequently and publicly, that he would not confirm the contract; that after he became of age he expressed the same determination to various persons, and among them to Wohlford, and offered to sell him the land, which Wohlford then bought; that after making this contract with Wohlford, he was, by the free use of liquor supplied by Powers, acting for Mustard, prevailed upon to make a deed for the land to Mustard, which he would not have done if he had been sober; that at the time of the execution of the deed Mustard paid him one hundred dollars more than the original contract price; and that the sale to Wohlford was a fair one, made when respondent was sober, for a fair consideration, and he had no desire to defeat it.

334 *The facts, as before stated, are fully proved by the evidence; which also tends to prove that the deed from Nisewander to Mustard was obtained by undue and improper means practiced by the agent of the latter: but that fact is immaterial, in the view taken of the case by the court.

On the 11th of April 1857 a decree was rendered in the cause, reciting that Wohlford having died pending the suit, it had been revived in the name of his heirs, declaring the deed from Nisewander to Mustard to be fraudulent and void, directing the same to be set aside and canceled, and that Mustard should convey to the said heirs all the title vested in him by said deed, and appointing commissioners to make partition as prayed for in the bill.

From that decree Mustard applied to this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

N. Harrison and Grattan, for the appellant, insisted:

1st. That Mustard having been in possession of the land and having the legal title, a court of equity will not compel him to surrender the possession and title, to a man who had knowledge of the fact of his purchase and possession, and his having paid a part of the purchase money, without requiring him to return to the defendant what he had paid. Payne v. Dudley, 1 Wash. 196; Lipscomb's adm'r v. Littlepage's adm'r, 1 Hen. & Munf. 454; 2 Sugd. Vend. 9 edi. p. 260, § 4; Fagg's Case, 1 Vern. R. 52. And even an infant coming into a court of equity to avoid a contract, must return what he has received. Zouch v. Parsons, 3 Burr. R. 1794; Badger v. Phinney, 15 Mass. R. 359; 2 Kent's Com. 240, marg.; Smith v. Evans, 5 Humph. R. 70; Roof v. Stafford, 7 Cow. R. 184; Roberts v. Wiggin, 1 N. Hamp. R. 73; Weeks v. Leighton, 5 Id. 348; Northwest Railway Co. v. McMichael, 5 Exch. R. 123; Addis. Cont. 87; Amer. Lead.
335 Cas. 260; Hillyer v. Bennett, *3 Edwards Ch. R. 222; Brawner v. Franklin, 4 Gill R. 463; Weed v. Beebe, 21 Verm. R. 495, 500.

2d. That it is not a case for specific performance. To entitle Wohlford to sustain his bill, he must show that his vendor was in a condition to enforce a rescission of his contract with Mustard, and that he is entitled to ask the specific execution of his contract with Nisewander. That Nisewander could not enforce a rescission, first, because he could not return the consideration he had received; and second, because, after coming of age, he had executed the contract by conveying the land to Mustard. And the plaintiff cannot sustain his bill, because he could have no better equity than Nisewander. And further, he knew when he purchased, that Mustard was in possession under a contract with Nisewander, and had paid part of the purchase money, which he would lose if his contract was avoided. At most, therefore, it was a case for compensation. Armstead v. Hundley, 7 Gratt. 52; Parrell v. McKinley, 9 Gratt. 1.

Digitized by Google

3d. That although it was true that the contract was voidable by Nisewander, and only voidable, 1 Amer. Lead. Cas. 244, 248; Abell v. Warren, 4 Verm. R. 149; Oliver v. Houdlet, 13 Mass. R. 237; Bool and wife v. Mix, 17 Wend. 119, 131; yet Mustard having been put into possession of the land, the sale of the land by Nisewander to Wohlford whilst Mustard's possession continued did not avoid the previous contract with Mustard. Jackson v. Burchin, 14 John. R. 124; Jackson v. Carpenter, 11 Id. 539; Tucker v. Moreland, 10 Peters' R. 58, 79; 1 Amer. Lead. Cas. 257.

Staples and Wade, for the appellees, insisted:

1st. That admitting the contract with Mustard to be only voidable and not void, the sale and execution of his title bond by Nisewander to Wohlford, after coming 336 *of age, was a disaffirmance of his contract with Mustard. Tucker v. Moreland, 10 Peters' R. 58; 1 Parsons' Cont. 273; Jackson v. Burchin, 14 John. R. 124; Cresinger v. Lessee of Welch, 15 Ohio R. 156; 1 Amer. Lead. Cas. 114, note. And whilst it was true that in the states where one out of possession of land cannot sell, the infant would be required to enter upon the land sold during his infancy, in order to avoid the sale; yet in this state, and under our present statute, no such entry is necessary to enable an infant to avoid his contract made during his infancy. 1 Amer. Lead. Cas. 114; 1 Parsons' Cont. 273, 274. And if the sale to Wohlford was a disaffirmance of his contract with Mustard, no subsequent act of his could affirm that contract. 1 Amer. Lead. Cas. 111.

2d. That the proposition was well established, that if during his infancy, an infant wasted or otherwise ceased to possess the property acquired by the contract, he was not thereby deprived of his right of election, and might nevertheless, on coming of age, avoid the contract, and take the property given in exchange. And that in this case, Mustard was in no situation to insist upon a different rule, since by his own act he has deprived the infant of the power to return the property acquired by the contract.

3d. That if it was true, as they contended, that the contract with Mustard was avoided by the contract with Wohlford, then Mustard had no equity either as against Nisewander or Wohlford; and having obtained the legal title with a knowledge of Wohlford's equity, he held it as trustee for Wohlford, and a court of equity would compel him to convey it to him. That not having an equity to insist upon the return of the property which he had transferred to Nisewander as against him, he could have none on that ground against Wohlford.

337 *MONCURE, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The court is of opinion, that the contract of the 16th of January 1852, between Nisewander and the appellant, though made when the former was under age, and when that fact was known to the appellant, was not a void contract, but only voidable, and subject to be affirmed or disaffirmed by the former, after his arrival at age. "The tendency of the modern decisions (says Chancellor Kent) is in favor of the reasonableness and policy of a very liberal extension of the rule, that the acts and contracts of infants should be deemed voidable only, and subject to their election, when they become of age, either to affirm or disavow them." 2 Kent Com. 235. The authorities on this subject are fully collected in the valuable notes of Hare & Wallace, appended to the case of Tucker, &c. v. Moreland, in 1 American Leading Cases, edition of 1857, p. 224-267. And from the numerous decisions which have been had in this country, the annotators deduce the following definite rule, as one that is subject to no exceptions. "The only contract binding on an infant, is the implied contract for necessaries: the only act which he is under a legal incapacity to perform, is the appointment of an attorney; all other acts and contracts, executed or executory, are voidable or confirmable by him at his election." Id. 244. It is not material that the title bond in this case is in a penal sum; though it has been said that a bond of an infant with a penalty is void. Coke Lit. 172 a; recognized as being still the law by Bayly, J., in 3 Maule & Sel. 482. The penalty of the bond is a mere matter of form, the substance of the contract being the condition, on which may be maintained an action of covenant at law or a suit for specific performance in equity. See also 3 Rob. Pr. (new) 221-228.

The court is further of opinion, that the said contract was disaffirmed by the 338 contract of the 8th of *November 1853, between Nisewander and Wohlford, made after the former arrived at age. There is no evidence, nor even pretence, of any affirmance of the former contract by Nisewander after he arrived at age and before he entered into the latter, which was but eight days after his arrival at age. On the contrary, he persisted, during that period, in declaring that he would not confirm the former contract. Then, the question is, Did not the latter amount to a disaffirmance of the former? A voidable act of an infant may be avoided by different means, according to the nature of the act; but, without undertaking to enumerate them, it is sufficient for the purposes of this case to say, that such an act may certainly be avoided by him, after he becomes of age, by an act of the same nature and dignity. Thus a feoffment may be avoided by a feoffment; a deed of bargain and sale, by a deed of bargain and sale; a title bond, by a title bond, &c.; the two acts in these cases being of the same nature and dignity. It is not necessary, in order to produce that effect, that the latter act should expressly disaffirm the former. It is enough that the two acts are inconsistent with each other; in which case the former is disaffirmed by plain and necessary implication. The case of Frost v. Wolveston, 1 Strange's R. 94, seems to have proceeded on this principle. There, an infant covenanted to levy a fine by a certain time to certain uses; and before he came of age he levied the fine, and by another deed, made at full age, he declared it to be to other uses: the court held that the last deed should be the one to lead the uses. So also did the cases of Jackson v. Carpenter, 11 John. R. 539; Jackson v. Burchin, 14 Id. 124; and Tucker v. Moreland, 10 Peters' R. 58.

Digitized by Google

In these cases, deeds of bargain and sale were avoided by deeds of the same nature to other bargainees. In the last of them, 339 Judge Story said the *first two "are directly in point, and proceed upon principles which are in perfect coincidence with the common law, and are entirely satisfactory." In these cases, the first grantee was not in actual possession when the second deed was executed, but the land was either vacant, or the grantor remained in possession. If there be an adverse possession, then, it is said, in those states where one out of possession cannot sell, there should be an entry by the grantor in order to avoid the first deed by another. 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 257, and the cases cited. But no entry is necessary in those states in which one out of possession of real estate can sell his interest therein. 1 Parsons on Cont. 273. That is the case in this state, under the Code, ch. 116, § 4, 5, p. 500; which provides, "that all real estate shall, as regards the conveyance of the immediate freehold thereof, be deemed to lie in grant as well as in livery;" and that "any interest in or claim to real estate may be disposed of by deed or will." Carrington v. Goddin, 13 Gratt. 587. But in this case, though the first vendee appears to have been in possession when the second title bond was executed, such possession was not adverse to the vendor, but in subordination to the title which still remained in him, and which would have been conveyed by him independently of the statute, and without any actual entry. In any view of the case, therefore, the contract with Wohlford was a disaffirmance of the contract with the appellant.

The court is further of opinion, that the effect of such disaffirmance was to render the first mentioned contract void; to extinguish any interest in law or equity the appellant may have acquired under it; and to entitle Nisewander, or his vendee Wohlford in his name, to recover possession of the land in an action at law, and hold it free from any equity of the appellant. When a voidable contract of an infant is dis-
340 affirmed *by him, it is made void ab initio by relation, and the parties revert to the same situation as if the contract had not been made. 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 259; Boyden v. Boyden, &c., 9 Metc. R. 519, 521. If the contract was one of sale by the infant, he becomes reinvested with his title to the property, and may demand and recover it, not only of the vendee, but of any other person who may have it in possession. The right of an infant to avoid his contract is an absolute and paramount right, superior to all equities of other persons, and may therefore be exercised against purchasers from the vendee. 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 258; citing Myers, &c. v. Sanders' heirs, 7 Dana's R. 506, 521, and Hill v. Anderson, 5 Smedes & Marsh. R. 216, 224. He who deals with an infant deals at his peril, and subject to this right of the infant to disaffirm and avoid the contract. This is the case, even though he deal in ignorance of the infancy, and on the fraudulent representation of the infant that he is of full age. Van Winckle v. Ketcham, 3 Caines' Cas. 323; Conroe v. Birdsall, 1 John. Cas. 127; and other cases cited in 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 249. A fortiori, it is the case where, as here, the dealing is with full knowledge on the part of the adult of the infancy of the other contracting party. While the effect of avoiding the contract of sale by an infant is, on the one hand, to entitle him to demand and recover the property sold, so it is, on the other hand, to entitle the other contracting party to demand and recover the consideration received by the infant, or so much of it as may then remain in his hands in kind. Indeed, if the infant, after arriving at age, and before any act of disaffirmance by him, alien any part of the consideration, or exercise any unequivocal act of ownership over it, or retain it in his hands in kind for an unreasonable length of time, he may thereby affirm the contract and render it absolutely binding. Id. 255. But if he has,
341 during infancy, wasted, sold *or otherwise ceased to possess the consideration, and has none of it in his hands in kind on his arrival at age, he is not liable therefor, and may recover possession of the property sold by him (at least if the contract of sale be executory merely on his part) without accounting for the consideration received. "The true rule," as stated in Story on Cont. § 42, "seems to be, that when articles are furnished to the infant which do not come within the definition of necessaries, and which are consumed or parted with; or when money is lent which is expended by the infant; the other party has no remedy to recover an equivalent for the goods or money; the specific consideration given by him being parted with, or not being capable of return. But when the specific consideration, whatever it be, exists, and remains in the hands of the infant at the time of the disaffirmance of the contract, and is capable of return, the infant is bound to give it up, and he is treated as a trustee of the other party, if the contract be made originally in good faith. The ground of such a distinction is, that in the first case the goods or money cannot be returned; and to make the infant liable therefor in damages, merely because they had been used by him, would be to deprive him of his privilege of affirming or avoiding his contract." See also Boody v. McKenney, 23 Maine R. 517.

Digitized by Google

In the case of an executed sale by an infant, it has been held that if he disaffirm the sale and seek to recover back the article sold, he must restore the purchase money or other consideration; Smith v. Evans, 5 Humph. R. 70; Badger v. Phinney, 15 Mass. R. 359, 363; and if he go into chancery to set aside his conveyance, he must offer in his bill to restore the purchase money; Hillyer v. Bennett, 3 Edw. Ch. R. 222. Without expressing any opinion upon this question, it is sufficient for the purposes of this case to say, that no case of an executory contract of sale by an in-342 fant *has been found, in which the infant, disaffirming the contract after his arrival at age, has been held accountable for the consideration received and spent by him during his infancy; but all the authorities on the subject seem to be the other way. If the infant in any such case has delivered possession of land contracted to be sold by him, he has an unconditional right to recover it back in an action at law; and a court of equity will not restrain him from doing so, nor impose terms upon the exercise of his right. Such was the decision of the court in Brawner & wife v. Franklin, &c., 4 Gill's R. 463. Dorsey, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said, "Establish the doctrine now contended for, and what is the result? Why, that the whole policy of the law as to infantile incompetency to sell, waste and dispose of their property and estates, is frustrated." "An infant may sell his patrimonial estate, prodigally waste the purchase money in extravagance, gambling and dissipation; and if, when arrived at years of maturity and discretion, he disaffirm the contract, and sue at law for the recovery of his property, a court of equity will, by injunction, arrest the arm of the law, and say to him, Before you shall further assert your claim to your estate, you must repay to the purchaser all the money you have received from him." To such a doctrine the court refused to subscribe, and, we think, rightly so.

The court is further of opinion, that the appellant having no equity in regard to the land when he obtained the deed of the 18th of November 1853, and having obtained it with full knowledge of the equity of Wohlford, can derive no benefit from the said deed, but holds the legal title acquired under it in trust for the heirs of Wohlford, and may be compelled by a court of equity to convey said title to them. A purchaser for valuable consideration without notice of a prior equity, and having the legal 343 estate, is entitled to *priority in equity as well as at law, according to the maxim, that where equities are equal, the law shall prevail. He is a great favorite of a court of equity, and has been protected to such an extent as to be allowed to take advantage of a deed which he stole out of a window by means of a ladder, and of a deed obtained by a third person without consideration and by fraud. Flagg's Case, cited in 1 Vern. R. 52; Harcourt v. Knowel, cited in 2 Vern. R. 159; and Culpeper's Case, cited in 2 Freem. R. 124. "These, however (it has been well said), were extreme cases, showing indeed how partial equity is to a purchaser, but carrying the doctrine of protection further than it would be at the present day." 2 White & Tudor's Eq. Cas. 6, notes to Basset v. Notworthy; 2 Sugd. Vend. 1020. And it has been held that a purchaser "shall not protect himself by taking a conveyance from a trustee after he had notice of the trust; for by taking a conveyance with notice of the trust, he himself becomes the trustee, and must not, to get a plank to save himself, be guilty of a breach of trust." Saunders v. Dehew, 2 Vern. R. 271. If, therefore, the appellant could be regarded as a bona fide purchaser when he obtained the deed from Nisewander, he could derive no protection from that deed, which was obtained from a mere trustee of the legal title for Wohlford, and with full knowledge on the part of the appellant of the existence of the trust. Indeed, if he had then been a bona fide purchaser, he would not have needed the deed for his protection against Wohlford, who, in that case, would have been a purchaser with notice of his prior equity. But the appellant cannot be regarded as a purchaser at that time. He had received no conveyance, and paid only a part of the purchase money. His purchase was never more than voidable, and had been avoided; and he ceased to have any equity, in regard to the land; but Nisewander was left free to dispose 344 of it as *if he never had sold it to the appellant. So that Wohlford's purchase, though made with notice of the prior sale to the appellant, was entirely unaffected thereby, the same having been disaffirmed and avoided. And the appellant, having obtained the deed with full notice that the person from whom he obtained it was a mere trustee of the legal title for Wohlford, became himself a mere trustee of that title, and bound therefore to convey it to Wohlford's heirs.

The court is further of opinion, that any claim which the appellant may have on account of payments made under the original contract with him, or as a consideration for the execution of the said deed, is a personal claim against Nisewander, and cannot be enforced in this suit. It has been already shown that the appellant has no interest in or claim to the land itself. Nor has he any in or to the purchase money, if any, due by Wohlford. If he has, he must have derived it from the deed. But that is a conveyance of the land, and not an assignment of the purchase money. It is adversary to the sale to Wohlford, and not in subordination to it. A claim founded thereon is in conflict with the specific execution of Wohlford's purchase, to which he is entitled, and which is the purpose of this suit. Such claim, therefore, cannot be enforced in this suit.

Digitized by Google

The court is further of opinion, that it sufficiently appears from the recital contained in the decree appealed from, that the cause had been duly revived in the name of the heirs of Wohlford; Craig v. Sebrell, 9 Gratt. 131; but at all events, the appellant has no right to complain of any irregularity in that respect, the said decree being in the name and in favor of said heirs, and they being parties to and defending this appeal.

The court is therefore of opinion, that there is no error in the said decree to 345 the prejudice of the appellant. *But the court is further of opinion, that as it does not appear that the whole purchase money due by Wohlford had been actually paid when the said decree was rendered, though it had then become payable; and as the said land was subject to a lien for so much of the said purchase money as may then have remained unpaid; the said decree should have been without prejudice to such lien, and to any proceedings for the enforcement thereof which the said Nisewander or his assigns might be advised to institute; and that the said decree should be amended in that respect, and as amended affirmed.

Decree amended and affirmed.

---

346 *Carter v. Ramey.

July Term, 1859, Lewisburg.

Caveats—Case at Bar.*—The entry and survey of both the caveator and caveatee being upon land which had been previously granted by the commonwealth, and which had never been forfeited, the commonwealth having no interest in the land which could be vested in the caveator, he can have no right to it: and therefore cannot maintain a caveat; though the caveatee may have no better right.

This was a case of caveat in the Circuit court of Russell county, filed by Dale Carter against William Ramey. On the 1st of May 1857 Moses Ramey made an entry for two hundred and forty-eight acres of land on the Pound fork of Sandy river in the county of Russell; which was transferred to William Ramey; and on the 11th of May a survey of the land was made. The land included in this entry and survey was situated within the boundaries of a tract of four thousand acres, patented to Richard Smith by grant from the state of Virginia, dated the 21st of February 1788, which had never been forfeited to the commonwealth.

The caveator Carter claimed under an entry for seven thousand five hundred acres made by Charles A. Smith; which entry was assigned to Carter, and covered the land embraced in the entry of Ramey. The grounds on which Carter contested Ramey's right to a patent, were, that the survey had not been returned to the register's office within one year after making the survey; and because the entry was not sufficiently precise and definite. But these objections were not considered by the court.

When the case came on for trial, the parties agreed the facts and submitted it 347 to the court: And the court *dismissed the caveat. Whereupon Carter applied to this court for a supersedeas; which was awarded.

B. R. Johnston, for the appellant.
Fry, for the appellee.

LEE, J. In every caveat founded on the alleged better right of the caveator to the land in controversy, the first enquiry is as to his title or interest in the subject. He cannot recover upon the mere infirmity of the title of the caveatee, for however defective that may be, no one has a right to interpose for the purpose of preventing him from carrying his entry into grant unless he have a better right, legal or equitable in himself, except only in the class of cases provided for by § 24 and 29 of the Code (p. 483), authorizing any person in case of violation of the provisions of previous sections referred to, by a locator, to enter a caveat against the emanation of a grant. Field v. Culbreath, 2 Call 547; Currie v. Martin, 3 Call 28; Walton v. Hale, 9 Gratt. 194; Harper, &c. v. Baugh, &c., Ibid. 508. And the same rule prevails in Kentucky as shown by repeated adjudications under their statute which was taken from our act of 1779, and is believed to be in all respects substantially the same. Patterson's dev. v. Bradford, Hardin's R. 101; Hendricks v. Bell, 1 Bibb's R. 138; Justices of Allen County v. Allen, 2 A. K. Marsh. R. 30; Whitley v. Shirley, 3 Ibid. 131. In truth the rule as applied in cases of caveat on the ground of better right, is but another phase of the principle which authorizes a defendant in ejectment, not being himself

*Caveat—What it Must State.—The caveator must state in his caveat the grounds on which he claims the better right to the land in controversy, and he will not be permitted to abandon on the trial the right which he has set out in his caveat, as that under which he claims, and prove a different right. Trotter v. Newton, 30 Gratt. 588, citing the principal case; Walton v. Hale, 9 Gratt. 194; Harper v. Baugh, 9 Gratt. 508.

See, in accord, Clements v. Kyles, 13 Gratt. 468, and foot-note.

Same—Infirmity of Caveatee's Title.—The caveator cannot rely on any infirmity in the title of the caveatee, but can only succeed upon showing a better legal or equitable title in himself. Trotter v. Newton, 30 Gratt. 593, citing the principal case.

See also, in accord, Field v. Culbreath, 2 Call 547; Staples v. Webster, 5 Call 274; Walton v. Hale, 9 Gratt. 194; Harper v. Baugh, 9 Gratt. 508.

Digitized by Google

a trespasser who has wrongfully entered upon the peaceable possession of the plaintiff and ousted him of it (Tapscott v. Cobbs, &c., 11 Gratt. 172), to defeat the action by showing an outstanding better title in another; Haldane v. Harvey, 4 Burr. R. 2484; Crisp v. Barber, 2 T. R. 749;
348 Martin v. Strachan, *5 T. R. 107, 110, note (a); Lyons v. Brown, Gilm. 105, 118; Bull. Nis. Pri. 110; and which even in a writ of right, when that action was in use, where the demandant relied upon a constructive seizin, permitted the tenant to disprove such seizin and prevent a recovery by showing an elder grant or a better title in another. Green v. Watkins, 7 Wheat. R. 27; Bolling v. Mayor, &c., of Petersburg, 3 Rand. 563.

In this case it is agreed that the land embraced by the caveatee's survey lies wholly within the boundaries of a tract of four thousand acres granted to one Richard Smith by patent bearing date 21st of February 1788, and that this four thousand acre tract had never been forfeited to the commonwealth under her revenue laws or otherwise. Thus it was not liable to entry, either as waste and unappropriated, or as forfeited land, and the entry of the caveator so far as it embraced the land covered by the survey of the caveatee, being wholly unauthorized by law, was simply void and could confer no equity whatever. And a grant founded upon such void entry would pass nothing, there being indeed nothing in the commonwealth upon which the grant could operate. Whittington v. Christian, 2 Rand. 353; Hannon, &c. v. Hannah, 9 Gratt. 146; Levasser v. Washburn, 11 Gratt. 572; Atkins, &c. v. Lewis, &c., 14 Gratt. 30. Having therefore no equity, the caveator fails to show the better right upon which only can he maintain his caveat; and although the caveatee's entry may be equally invalid and give him no better equity, yet in equali jure potior est conditio defendentis.

Another objection has been made to the caveator's case involving the question whether an assignment of an entry made under our act providing the mode of acquiring title to waste and unappropriated, and since the Code of 1849, to forfeited, lands, is valid so as to authorize the assignee to maintain a caveat in his own 349 *name against another who shall have obtained a survey of the same land, as the caveator in this case claims under an assignment from one Smith by whom the entry was made. As however the first objection must prove fatal to the caveator's case, I deem it unnecessary at this time to express any opinion upon this question.

I think the caveat was properly dismissed, and am of opinion to affirm the judgment.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Lee, J.

Judgment affirmed.

350 *Hill & Wife v. Huston's Ex'or & Others.

July Term, 1859, Lewisburg.

1. Legacies—Coupled with a Condition—Effect of Acceptance.—A party accepting a legacy coupled with a condition, may bind himself to the performance of the condition, although the burden may exceed the benefit.
2. Same—Same—What Necessary to Bind Legatee.—But to bind a party in such a case, it must appear that he elected to accept the legacy and perform the condition with full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances necessary to enable him to make a judicious choice. To make an election conclusive, the party must be informed as to the relative values of the things he elects between.
3. Same—Same—Effect of Acceptance under Mistake.—Where a party has made an election without sufficient information, or under a mistake, he will be relieved against the consequences, upon the terms of restoring other persons, whose rights may be affected by his acts, to the same situation as if those acts had not been performed.
4. Same—Legatee to Pay Testator's Debts—Liability of Legatee.—A bequest of testator's whole property to a legatee, in consideration of which she is to pay testator's debts, though accepted, does not bind the legatee to pay the debts beyond the value of the legacy.
5. Wills—Rule of Construction.—In construing wills, courts are not bound to give a strict and literal interpretation to the words used, and by adhering to the letter defeat the manifest object and design of the testator.
6. Same—Use of Property by Executrix—Liable Only for Rent.—A case in which an executrix holding and employing the estate of testator in her business, held not to be bound for profits, but only for a rent.

In 1841 Archibald W. Huston and William W. Pollock entered into a partnership for the purpose of keeping a hotel in the town of Harrisonburg, in the county of Rockingham; and for the purpose of the partnership they purchased a house and lot, which was afterwards known as Pollock's hotel. By the terms of the partnership the house was to be kept by Pollock. In 1843 they purchased another house and lot which had been known as the Washington tavern.

In October 1844 Huston died, having 351 made a will, *by which he gave to his widow a tract of land for her life, and personal property; and directed his executors to sell all the rest of his real estate; except that they were not to sell his interest in his houses and lots in the town of Harrisonburg under five years from the period of his death; and until the real estate was sold, the executors were to rent the same, or so much as they considered it proper to rent, either by public or private contract, as they might consider proper.

At the end of the year the executors rented to Pollock, Huston's moiety of the houses and lots at three hundred dollars a

*The principal case was cited and approved in Taliaferro v. Day, 82 Va. 95, as to the proposition laid down in the first headnote.

Digitized by Google

year. But Pollock died in February 1845, having made a will containing a single bequest, which was in the following words: "I give and bequeath to my beloved wife Jane Pollock, my whole and entire estate of every description; but for and in consideration whereof, she is to pay all my just debts." And he appointed her his executrix, with authority to qualify without giving security; which she accordingly did.

The separate estate of Pollock was appraised after his death at nine hundred and thirteen dollars and sixty-nine cents; and his debts amounted to twelve hundred and ninety-one dollars and forty-three cents. Mrs. Pollock kept the hotel on her own account; and whilst it does not appear that there was any agreement between herself and the executors of Huston, as to the terms upon which she was to hold the property, she and they seem to have considered that she held the moiety belonging to the estate of Huston, at a rent of three hundred dollars a year; that being the amount for which the executors had rented to her husband for the year 1845.

In 1850 Mrs. Pollock married John N. Hill; and in April 1852 Hill and wife filed their bill in the Circuit court of Rockingham county, against Huston's executor, and his widow and children, in which they 352 set out *the facts herein before stated; but alleged that Mrs. Pollock declined taking the property under the will of her deceased husband, though she made no record renunciation of it. That in fact there was nothing to take under the will, as the debts of her husband were greater than there were means to pay them.

They further stated that it was understood by all the parties concerned, that Huston's interest in the partnership property could not be sold for five years from his death; and to have sold the one undivided half belonging to Pollock's testate, could not have been done without a great sacrifice. That Mrs. Pollock was advised to rent the property at the former rate of six hundred dollars a year, which was assented to by Huston's executor; and she had thus continued to rent it. That she, and since her marriage her husband, had paid debts of the partnership of Pollock & Huston, amounting to near five thousand dollars; and it was feared the partnership property would not be sufficient to pay the debts of the concern; and as Pollock had no separate property after paying his individual debts, the complainants desire the court to determine who shall be compelled to make up the deficit: were the complainant Hill and the estate of Huston equally bound, or was the estate of Huston bound for the whole amount. And they prayed for a sale of the partnership property; that the amount due to Hill might be paid, and for an account of the debts of the concern.

The defendants in their answers, concur with the plaintiffs in their apprehensions that the partnership property will not be sufficient to pay the debts, and in the prayer for a sale; and the widow and children of Huston say that they were of opinion until the last year, and so understood Mrs. Pollock, that Mr. Pollock died solvent, and that the property of the firm was sufficient to pay the debts; and they always 353 understood *Mrs. Pollock and her present husband as claiming precisely the same title and ownership in the property, which was held by Pollock himself in it. And they insist that Mrs. Hill did accept the devise under her former husband's will. They say that their confident expectation for a considerable period was, that after discharging the debts there would be a surplus; and they have reason to believe that this opinion was entertained by Mrs. Hill.

In October 1852 there was a decree for the sale of the real estate of the partnership, and also for an account of the debts of the concern. And the commissioner for the sale of the real estate reported that he had sold the property called Pollock's hotel to the plaintiff Hill at the price of seven thousand seven hundred dollars, and the Washington tavern at the price of six thousand eight hundred dollars. The commissioner directed to take an account of the debts and assets of the firm, reported the amount of the debts with interest thereon up to May 5th, 1855, at twenty-four thousand eight hundred and seventy-six dollars and ninety cents; and the assets of the firm, including the proceeds of the sales of the real estate, at twenty-two thousand eight hundred and nine dollars and fifty-two cents: In this account of assets was included a rent of the property from the death of Huston at six hundred dollars a year. And according to this account the debts exceeded the assets by the sum of two thousand and sixty-seven dollars and thirty-eight cents. The debts of the firm had all been paid either by Bryan the executor of Huston, or by Mrs. Pollock before her marriage, and her husband since that event. No separate statement is made of the amount paid by these last; but there was paid by them out of the assets of the firm and out of the profits of the hotel whilst kept by them, or from other unknown sources, about fourteen thousand three 354 hundred dollars; *much the larger part of it, as the appellees contended, out of the profits of the hotel. There was no exception to the report, except by one of the creditors, whose claim was disallowed.

There was no direct proof, either written or oral, that Mrs. Pollock had ever declared in terms her acceptance of the bequest under Pollock's will. But he having left four infant children, she kept possession of the property precisely as Pollock had done, holding one moiety as rented from Huston's executor, treating and speaking of the property as her own, keeping no accounts as between herself and the children; or as executrix; but keeping an account as between herself and the firm of Pollock & Huston; and even in this case not alluding to the fact that her children were interested in the property, or making them parties in the cause, until it was done by an amended bill, simply bringing them before the court.

Digitized by Google

The cause came on to be finally heard on the 26th of May 1856, when the court confirmed the report; and being of opinion that the female plaintiff had accepted the devise under the will of her former husband William W. Pollock, and by her acceptance made herself individually liable for one equal moiety of the debts of the firm of Pollock & Huston; and that the plaintiff John N. Hill, by his intermarriage with the female plaintiff, became legally liable for the debts of his wife, decreed that after the social assets of the firm of Pollock & Huston were exhausted, the debts which then remained unpaid should be discharged, one-half thereof by the plaintiffs Hill and wife, and the other half by the executor of Huston out of the assets in his hands. From this decree Hill and wife applied to this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Michie, for the appellants, admitting the principle *that a devise or bequest upon the condition of paying 355 the testator's debts, if accepted by the devisee or legatee, would bind him to pay them, insisted:

1st. That the acceptance must have been made with full knowledge of all the facts, as to the condition of the estate; or that by her own acts she had rendered it iniquitous to avoid the responsibility. And this, he insisted, was fully sustained by the case of Messenger v. Andrews, 3 Cond. Eng. Ch. R. 761; which was the only case in which the debts exceeded the value of the bequest.

2d. That Mrs. Pollock had not accepted the devise and bequest to her. And he went into a full investigation of the evidence to sustain his proposition. And he insisted further, that if she had accepted the bequest, it was done in ignorance of the condition of the estate, so that she would not be bound by it. And certainly she had done nothing which would render it iniquitous in her to avoid the responsibility. The sales which had been made showed that the property had greatly enhanced in value since the death of Pollock.

3d. That the appellants were not liable for profits. Mrs. Pollock rented the property, taking her husband's moiety at the rent which Huston's executor considered sufficient for his; and the profits made were her own, made by her own labor and management. That no question had been made in the court below as to liability for profits; but it was made in this court for the first time; and there was nothing to show that profits had been made.

Woodson and Grattan, for the appellees, insisted:

1st. That if Mrs. Pollock accepted the devise under Pollock's will, she was bound to pay his debts, though they exceeded the value of the devise. They referred to many cases, from Collier's Case, 6 356 Coke's R. 16 a; *Wellock v. Hammond, Croke Eliz. 204, down to the present day, both in England and this country, in which a devise upon a condition to pay the testator's debts was held to give the devisee a fee, upon the ground that it bound him to pay the debts. Among them were, Moone v. Heaseman, Willis' R. 138; Doe v. Richards, 3 T. R. 356; Denn v. Meller, 5 Id. 558, 1 Bos. & Pul. 558, 2 Id. 249; Baddeley v. Leppingwell, 3 Burr. R. 1533; Doe ex dem. Thorn v. Phillips, 23 Eng. C. L. R. 178; Abrams v. Winshup, 3 Cond. Eng. Ch. R. 429; Jackson v. Bull, 10 John. R. 19; Jackson v. Martin, 18 Id. 31; Gibson v. Horton, 5 Har. & John. 177; Cook v. Holmes, 11 Mass. R. 528.

They insisted further, that a court of equity would enforce this liability. Attorney General v. Christ's Hospital, 3 Bro. Ch. Cas. 165; Talbot v. Earl of Radnor, 9 Cond. Eng. Ch. R. 22; Earl of Northumberland v. Marquis of Gramby, 1 Eden's R. 489, 2 Amb. R. 540, 647; Messenger v. Andrews, 3 Cond. Eng. Ch. R. 761; Spraker v. Van Alstyne, 18 Wend. R. 200; Harris v. Fly, 7 Paige's R. 471; Gardner v. Gardner, 3 Mason's R. 178, 207-8; Wright v. Denn, 10 Wheat. R. 204; Vanmeter v. Vanmeter, 3 Gratt. 148.

And they examined the evidence, and insisted that she had accepted the devise under Pollock's will; and had held the property under it, making very large profits.

2d. That if Mrs. Pollock did not accept the devise, she held the property as executrix, and was bound to account for the profits she had made. That a surviving partner carrying on the business with the partnership effects, is bound to account for the profits. 3 Kent's Com. 64, and note c; Brown v. Litton, 1 P. Wms. R. 140; Crawshaw v. Collins, 15 Ves. R. 218, 230, 1 Jac. & Walk. 267; Featherstonhaugh v. Fenwick, 17 Ves. R. 298, 309, 310; Sigourney v. Munn, 7 Conn. R. 11, 324; Brown v. De 357 Tastet, 4 Cond. Eng. Ch. *R. 133.

And an executor carrying on trade with his testator's assets shall not be allowed to make profits, though he makes himself personally liable in the business. 2 Lomax Ex'ors 283, 284; Watson, ex parte, 2 Ves. & Bea. R. 414; Collyer Part. § 603, 604; Wightman v. Townroe, 1 Maule & Sel. R. 412; Beathcote v. Hulme, 1 Jac. & Walk. 122, 131; Thompson v. Brown, 4 John. Ch. R. 619.

ROBERTSON, J. There can be no doubt that a party may, by accepting a legacy coupled with a condition, bind himself to the performance of the condition, although the burden may exceed the benefit. But it must appear that he elected to accept the legacy and perform the condition, with full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances necessary to enable him to make a judicious choice. To make an election conclusive, the party must be informed as to the relative value of the things he elects between. And where he has made an election without sufficient information, or under a mistake, he will be relieved against the consequences upon the terms of restoring other persons, whose rights may be affected by his acts, to the same situation as if those acts had not been performed.

Digitized by Google

Hill and wife deny that she ever accepted the provisions of the will of her former husband, Pollock; but I do not consider it necessary to enter upon an examination of this question, because even if it be admitted that she did accept them, and that the construction placed upon the will by the Circuit court is correct, it seems to me to be quite clear, on applying the foregoing well established principles to the case, that she is not bound by such acceptance, and ought to be relieved from its consequences.

It cannot be pretended that she made the election with information as to the 358 condition of the estate; *that she knew it was insolvent, and that she was assuming a charge instead of deriving a benefit by taking under the will.

Nor can it be said that injury has resulted to any one from the course she has pursued. On the contrary, it appears that the property while in her possession and under her management, increased in value; and that the fund for the payment of debts was largely augmented. Pollock's creditors and the estate of his deceased partner have thus been benefited, and of course can have no right to complain that she did not make known at an earlier day her determination not to take under the will. Besides, the delay in bringing matters to a close was in a great degree attributable to the provisions of Huston's will prohibiting the sale of his interests in the partnership property from being made within five years after his death.

I think, therefore, that supposing Mrs. Hill to have made an election, she should have been permitted by the court to reconsider it, and to relieve herself from liability for the debts of her former husband, by giving up his property to his creditors.

On another ground also it seems to me that the decision of the Circuit court is erroneous.

I am of opinion, that upon a proper construction of Pollock's will, his widow was not required to make an election; and that her taking under it could not impose upon her any liability, beyond the value of the estate, for his debts.

No case of election, under a will, can ever arise, unless the intention of the testator to require the party to elect is clear and decisive. 1 Jarman on Wills 393; Crump v. Redd's adm'r, 6 Gratt. 372.

Such intention never exists, unless the testator designs a benefit for some other party, who, as well as the legatee put to the election, is the object of his bounty.

359 *In this case, the whole estate was given to the wife, to the exclusion of even the children of the testator. There was no object of his bounty in whose favor he could have designed an election to operate: For it cannot be supposed that he intended to make his creditors objects of his bounty at the expense of his wife: that, knowing his estate to be insolvent, he devised it to her, with the view of imposing upon her the obligation of paying his debts, however much their amount might exceed its value; and of thus taking from her, and from his and her children, the means of support, which after his death, she might acquire by her own industry. Yet we must believe all this before we can come to the conclusion that he intended to give her his estate only upon the condition that she should become personally bound for his debts, whatever their amount might be.

But it may be said that while it is clear he did not design this, such is the effect of his will. That he was himself mistaken as to his pecuniary condition, and did not foresee the consequences of the provision he made; and that the will, being clear and unambiguous in its language, must be carried into effect even although the result may be different from what he anticipated.

There can, I think, be no doubt that he was mistaken as to the situation of his affairs, and supposed there would be something left for his wife after the payment of his debts. This made him perhaps less cautious in his language than he might otherwise have been. If he had doubted the sufficiency of his estate to pay his debts, he would probably have used terms about which no controversy could have arisen.

But the whole question is at least one of intention: for, as has been shown, a legatee can never be required to elect unless the testator intends it: and can the fact that the testator labored under a mistake like 360 this *create an intention for him, which we know never could really have existed for an instant in his mind?

In construing wills, courts are never bound to give a strict and literal interpretation to the words used, and by adhering to the letter, defeat the manifest object and design.

When, in this case, we look at the will itself; the relative situation of the parties; the obvious purpose to benefit the wife; the improbability, nay the absurdity of the idea that the testator intended to charge her personally, beyond the value of the estate he gave her, with the payment of his debts; we cannot hesitate in deciding that the will properly construed means no more nor less than that the widow should take the whole estate subject to the payment of the debts of the testator.

But it has been insisted in the argument here, that if Hill and wife are not liable for the payment of Pollock's debts by reason of her accepting the provisions of his will, they are at least bound to account for the profits made from his estate after his death, and that those profits greatly exceed the rents with which they have been charged.

Numerous cases have been cited to show that a surviving partner carrying on business with the partnership effects, must account for the profits; and that an executor carrying on trade with the assets of his testator, is held accountable for all profits, even though he makes himself personally liable in the business.

Digitized by Google

These are unquestionably well settled rules of law, but they have no application to this case.

No question arises as to the liability of the surviving partner for profits; for Pollock did not, after the death of Huston, continue the business as surviving partner, but became tenant of the property at a rent agreed upon between him and the executor of Huston: And there is no good 361 ground for insisting that *his executrix made herself liable for profits, either to the firm, or to his estate.

No such liability was suggested in the court below. No account of profits was asked for or ordered; and there is nothing to show that profits were in fact made. But if it be conceded that profits were made, she is not bound to account for them. She subjected the assets to no risk or hazard; and cannot be considered, in the sense of the rule referred to, as having continued them in trade. She is properly to be regarded as a tenant of the property; and least of all, have the appellees any right now to treat her otherwise.

In the account filed as an exhibit with the bill, she is charged with rent for the whole property, at the same rate which had been agreed upon as to Huston's moiety, between her husband in his lifetime and Huston's executor. This account was made out under the supervision and with the aid of Huston's executor, and of his adult children, and was admitted by them to be correct, as far as the data in the possession of the parties at the time enabled them to state it. The correctness of the charges of rent was not only then acquiesced in by all parties, but in the report of the commissioner, made under the order of court, the same charges were continued without objection from any quarter. This report was confirmed, and the decree now appealed from was entered in favor of the appellees in conformity with it.

Under these circumstances, it cannot be doubted that Mrs. Hill must be considered as having held the property as tenant, at a fair rent, for which she has duly accounted.

The appellants are in no way liable for the debts of the firm of Pollock & Huston, the estate of Huston being alone liable after the social assets shall have been exhausted, inasmuch as the whole of the in-362 dividual *assets of Pollock's estate have been absorbed by his own debts.

To the extent that the appellants have paid debts of the firm out of their own funds, they must, after the exhaustion of the social assets, be reimbursed by the estate of Huston.

I think the decree should be reversed, and one entered in conformity with the foregoing opinion.

ALLEN, P., and MONCURE and LEE, Js., concurred in the opinion of Robertson, J.

DANIEL, J., dissented.

Decree reversed.

363 *Poindexter & Wife v. Jeffries & als.

July Term, 1859, Lewisburg.

1. Wife's Equity—Principles Applicable.†—The principles applicable to a wife's right to an equitable settlement out of her property, stated.
2. Same—Real Property Subject to.†—Real, as well as personal, estate is subject to the wife's equity.
3. Same—Settlement—Amount.†—The settlement should be reasonable and adequate; and may be of a part or the whole of the property, according to the sound discretion of the court, upon all the circumstances of the case.
4. Same—When Settlement to Take Effect.†—If the husband lives with and supports his wife, the settlement may be made to take effect when he ceases to do so, or at his death. But if he has deserted or ill treated her, or is insolvent, or unable or fails to support her, it will be directed to commence immediately.
5. Same—*Valuable Consideration for Post-Nuptial Settlement.†—If property of the wife which a court of equity would direct to be settled upon her, is conveyed by the husband to a trustee for her benefit, the court will sustain the deed against creditors of the husband.
6. Same—Right to Settlement—Case at Bar.†—The wife's portion as one of the distributees of her father, of his personal estate, though there are no debts or they are satisfied, and the administrator, who is also a distributee, files a bill for a distribution of the estate, and commissioners are appointed to divide the property, who make the division, before the wife petitions for settlement, and although the division is afterwards confirmed, but subject to the future decision of the court upon her right, is not so vested in the husband as to deprive her of her right to a settlement out of this property.
7. Same—‡Life Estate of Husband in Real Estate Descended Not Subject to.†—The wife's real estate descended to her from her father, though undi-

*__Wife's Equity—Valuable Consideration for Post-Nuptial Settlement.__—See principal case cited and approved in White v. Gouldin, 27 Gratt. 505; Walden v. Walden, 33 Gratt. 88, 96, and foot-note.

In Smith v. Bradford, 76 Va. 764, it was said: "It is settled law in Virginia that an insolvent husband may make a valid settlement upon his wife of his uncollected share of an estate of which he, in right of his wife, is a distributee. It was so decided in Poindexter and Wife v. Jeffries and Others, 15 Gratt. 363; and the correctness of that decision has never been questioned."

See also, monographic note on "Fraudulent and Voluntary Conveyances."

†See generally, monographic note on "Husband and Wife."

‡__Same—Property Reduced into Possession by Husband.__—In Ware v. Ware, 28 Gratt. 676, the court said: "The last point to be considered is, whether the appellant has a valid claim to a settlement upon her of the whole or any part of the fund. The rule on that subject in this state is settled under repeated decisions of this court. It is thus laid down in Poindexter v. Jeffries, 15 Gratt. 363-369. Whenever the husband, in right of his wife, has obtained possession of and title to her property, his own title jure mariti becomes complete, and the property to the extent of his title, is subject to his right of disposition, and to the claims of creditors, like any other property of vided, is immediately and before the actual entry upon possession of it by the husband, so vested in the husband to the extent of his life estate, as that the wife is not entitled to a settlement out of the life estate of the husband, though he is insolvent and doing nothing to support her; and though advancements had been made to the wife by her father in his lifetime, which render it necessary to resort to a court of equity for a settlement of accounts and for partition.

Digitized by Google

In 1851 John Bowyer of the county of Rockbridge died intestate, leaving a 364 large real and personal estate, *and a widow and eight children. One of his children was Frances H. the wife of George B. Poindexter. By deed dated the 29th of December 1851, and duly recorded on the 8th of January thereafter, Poindexter conveyed his interest in his wife's undivided portion of the real estate of her father as one of his heirs, to Fielding B. Lewis her son by a former marriage, in consideration of a decree of said Lewis against said Poindexter for the sum of eight hundred and eight dollars and fourteen cents, with interest from the 1st day of June 1851. About the same time, or shortly thereafter, a bill was filed by the administrator, being also a distributee and heir, against the widow and other distributees and heirs of Bowyer, for partition of his real and personal estate; and on the 21st of September 1852, a decree for partition was accordingly made. Before that decree was executed, to wit, on the 20th of October 1852, Poindexter, by deed dated on that day and afterwards duly recorded, conveyed his interest in his wife's portion of the personal estate of her father to William B. Poindexter and Fielding B. Lewis, trustees, for the sole and exclusive use of herself and her children. Shortly thereafter the commissioners appointed to divide the estate of Bowyer performed that duty, and made report thereof to court; from which it appears that the value of the distributive portion of each of the children, of the real and personal estate (except the dower slaves), including advancements, was eight thousand eight hundred and eighty dollars and two cents; and that the portion assigned to Poindexter and wife consisted of one hundred and forty-five and a half acres of land, valued at six thousand nine hundred and two dollars and sixty-two cents, and two slaves, valued at one thousand three hundred and fifty dollars; which, with advancements made to them amounting to six hundred and fourteen dollars, and a balance of thirteen dollars and forty 365 *cents, directed to be paid to them for owelty of partition, made up their said portion of eight thousand eight hundred and eighty dollars and two cents. On the 16th of April 1853 Mrs. Poindexter, by her next friend, filed a petition in the cause, praying that the portion of personal property constituting her distributive share of her said father's estate, might be assigned to said W. B. Poindexter and F. B. Lewis, trustees in said deed of the 20th of October 1852, in trust for the purposes expressed therein; that such additional provision might be made for her out of the life estate of her husband in the real estate descended to her from her father, as the court might deem adequate; and for general relief. And on the same day the report of partition was confirmed; but subject, and without prejudice, to the rights of the said petitioner to such future order or decree as the court might make upon said petition: and, in the meantime, Poindexter and wife were to hold said land and slaves allotted and assigned to them in said partition, subject to the future order or decree of the court in the premises.

On the 21st of June 1851 a decree was obtained by F. B. Lewis against said G. B. Poindexter, and James M. Jeffries and John Pollard as his sureties, for the sum of two thousand nine hundred and seventy-five dollars and sixteen cents, with interest from the 1st day of June 1851 till paid. And the sureties having satisfied the decree, had it duly registered for their benefit in the clerk's office of Rockbridge county on the 30th of March 1852; and having on motion for that purpose, obtained a decree against G. B. Poindexter for the money paid by them as his sureties as aforesaid, they sued out a fi. fa. thereon, which was levied on one of the slaves allotted to Poindexter and wife as aforesaid; but the sale was suspended by an injunction awarded by the court in the said cause on the 366 *11th of November 1853, on the petition of Poindexter and wife.

In this state of things, the bill in this cause was filed in January 1854, by said Jeffries and Pollard against F. B. Lewis, in his own right, the said F. B. Lewis and W. B. Poindexter, trustees in the deed of the 20th of October 1852, and G. B. Poindexter and wife, stating the facts of the case, as viewed and deemed material by the plaintiffs, and praying that the said deed might be vacated and annulled, the said injunction dissolved, the said two slaves subjected to the execution of the plaintiffs, the life interest of G. B. Poindexter in the land assigned to his wife as aforesaid, and his interest in the dower slaves subjected to the claim of the plaintiffs, and for general relief.

The answers of G. B. Poindexter and F. B. Lewis having afterwards been filed, and sundry depositions taken, the cause came on to be heard on the 18th of September 1855; when the court, being of opinion that Mrs. Poindexter's right to a settlement out of the slaves and other personal property derived to her from her father's estate was clear and unquestionable, and that the deed his otherwise acquired. And when the property, by being reduced into the husband's possession, has once been released from the wife's equity, it can never again be subjected to it. If it be recoverable at law, and the aid of a court of equity be not invoked to recover it, her equity does not exist."

See the principal case also cited in Garland v. Pamplin, 32 Gratt. 314; Arnold v. Bunnell, 42 W. Va. 482, 26 S. E. Rep. 362; Persinger v. Simmons, 25 Gratt. 245.

Digitized by Google

of the 20th of October 1852 was valid, to the extent of the value of her equity or right of settlement; but declining then to decide whether the said equity extended to her husband's interest in her real estate; rejected the plaintiff's motion to dissolve the injunction awarded on the 11th of November 1853, and directed a commissioner to enquire and report what settlement ought to be made upon Mrs. Poindexter and her children, and to make alternative statements, &c.

The commissioner made a report showing, among other things, that Mrs. Poindexter derived from her father's estate the land and two slaves before mentioned; that the land would rent for about three 367 hundred *dollars per annum, and one of the slaves, a man twenty or twenty-one years of age, hired for one hundred and twenty dollars or one hundred and thirty dollars per annum, and the other, a woman eighteen or nineteen years of age, hired for about fifty dollars; that she had also in her possession three women slaves, with ten or twelve children, which had come to her as dower slaves in the estate of her first husband, but had been sold and were purchased and loaned to her by her son F. B. Lewis, which slaves however were believed to be then unprofitable by reason of the number of children; that Poindexter and wife had two sons, aged respectively eighteen or nineteen and sixteen or seventeen years, who were going to Washington college; and that Poindexter was engaged in no business to afford means of support for his family, and being wholly insolvent, his family were dependent on his wife's means for a support.

On the 18th of April 1856 the cause was again heard; when the court decided, that the said deed of the 20th of October 1852, conveying Mrs. Poindexter's interest in the personal estate of her father to trustees for the benefit of her and her children, was not an excessive settlement under the circumstances of the case, but was fair and reasonable, and such as the court would have directed to be made; and the court therefore approved and confirmed the same and perpetuated the injunction aforesaid. But the court further decided, that the equitable right of Mrs. Poindexter to a settlement did not attach to her husband's life estate in the one hundred and forty-five and a half acres of land assessed as her portion of the real estate of her father; but that said life estate is subject to the lien of the plaintiffs in virtue of the said decree obtained against G. B. Poindexter on the 21st of June 1851 for the sum of two thousand nine hundred and sixty-five dollars and sixteen cents, with interest thereon from 368 *the 1st of June 1851; which said lien is, however, chargeable on said life estate, and to be paid out of the proceeds of the same ratably with a decree rendered by the same court, in the same cause and at the same time, in favor of F. B. Lewis for eight hundred and eight dollars and fourteen cents, with interest from the said 1st of June 1851 till paid; the court having previously decreed that the deed of the 29th of December 1851 conveying said interest from G. B. Poindexter to F. B. Lewis as aforesaid, is inoperative so far as it is in derogation of the plaintiffs' right to participate pro rata in the lien of said decree. And the court therefore decreed that, unless payment should be made to the plaintiffs of the said sum of two thousand nine hundred and sixty-five dollars and sixteen cents, with interest as aforesaid and the costs of the suit, on or before the 1st day of July next thereafter, the said life estate should be sold in the manner and on the terms mentioned in the decree.

From this decree Poindexter and wife applied for and obtained an appeal.

Michie, for the appellants.

The Attorney General, Gordon and William Smith, for the appellees.

MONCURE, J. This case involves the doctrine of what is familiarly called "the wife's equity;" the origin and foundation of which are involved in much doubt, but which has been long and firmly established in England; 2 Story's Eq. § 1402, 1407, &c.; and though but recently recognized in this state, is now well established here also. Gregory's adm'r v. Mark's adm'r, 1 Rand. 355; Gallego v. Gallego's ex'or, 2 Brock. R. 285; Browning v. Headley, 2 Rob. R. 340; Dodd's trustee v. Geiger's adm'r, 2 Gratt. 98; James, &c. v. Gibbs, &c., 1 Pat. &
369 Heath 277. I will not attempt to *investigate it fully, but will state only so much of it as seems to be pertinent to the present case. The authorities on the subject are collected and commented on in 1 Lead. Cas. in Eq. Am. ed. 1859, top paging, 453-501.

The doctrine may be briefly stated thus: that a wife is entitled to an equitable settlement out of her property, not only against her husband, but against all creditors of, and purchasers from him, whenever it is recoverable only in a court of equity, or the aid of that court is actually invoked for its recovery; unless the husband has become a purchaser of the property by an antenuptial contract with the wife. If it be recoverable at law, and the aid of a court of equity be not actually invoked to recover it, her equity does not exist. And it ceases to exist, though the property be recoverable in equity, whenever it has been actually recovered or received without any claim by her to a settlement. Whenever the husband, in right of his wife, has obtained possession of, and title to her property, his own title jure mariti, becomes complete; and the property, to the extent of his title, is subject to his right of disposition, and to the claims of creditors and purchasers, like any other property of his any otherwise acquired. 2 Story's Eq. § 1403. If he or they have occasion to go into a court of equity for its assistance in regard to property to which his title has thus become complete; that court cannot, as the price of its assistance, impose upon him or them the terms of a settlement out of it on the wife. The relief sought in such a case, being due ex debito justitiæ, must be decreed unconditionally. It may be laid down as a universal rule, that when property, by being reduced into the husband's possession, has once been released from the wife's equity, it can never again be subjected to it. I mean of course the wife's equity, technically so called; which overrides the 370 claims of the husband *and all persons claiming under or against him. 1 Lead. Cas. in Eq. 468, 498. Property acquired by the husband jure mariti, like any other property of his, may become liable to the equitable claims of the wife in a suit for a divorce a mensa et thoro, and perhaps in a suit for alimony. Id. 496–7. But such liability is subordinate to prior liens acquired under or against the husband.

Digitized by Google

It seems to have been at one time considered that real estate was not subject to the wife's equity; and, at all events, that it was not so subject if it were not a trust estate, but one in its nature legal, which becomes from collateral circumstances the subject of a suit in equity; as where the legal estate happens to be outstanding in a mortgagee. But both of these points were decided affirmatively in the case of Sturgis v. Champneys, 5 Mylne & Cr. 97; reported also in 9 Law J. N. S. p. 100. In that case the wife of an insolvent was entitled for her life to real estate which had been devised to her without the intervention of trustees; but the legal title was outstanding in certain mortgages, and the assignee of the insolvent was obliged to file a bill to make his title (subject to the incumbrances) effectual. It was held by Lord Chancellor Cottenham (reversing the decision of the vice chancellor), that the wife was entitled to a settlement out of the rents and profits of the estate during the coverture. In Hanson v. Keating, 4 Hare, 1, 30 Eng. Ch. R. 1, Vice Chancellor Wigram, who had been counsel for the assignee of the husband in Sturgis v. Champneys, remarked, that prior to that case the opinion of the profession had, he believed, become settled, that estates in land were not subject to the same equity, upon the broad and important principle of preserving a strict analogy between legal and equitable estates in land. But, in deference to that judgment, he followed it, "although (he further remarked), 371 *if that case were out of the way, I should probably have decided otherwise. There would be no difficulty (he said) in distinguishing the facts of this case from those in Sturgis v. Champneys; but the reasoning in that case would remain, and I cannot disregard it." That case has also been followed by other cases, and its authority seems to be now fully established in England. Freeman v. Fairlie, 11 Jur. 447; Newenham v. Pemberton, 17 Law J. Equity N. S. p. 99; S. C. 1 D. G. & Sm. 644. I have seen no American case in conflict with it. In Dold's trustee v. Geiger's adm'r, 2 Gratt. 98, no question was raised as to the liability of real estate to the wife's equity; but it was held not to be liable in that case, because the husband had the legal title and possession. See also Van Duzer v. Van Duzer, 6 Paige's R. 366; and Wickes v. Clarke, 8 Id. 161. In James, &c. v. Gibbs, &c., 1 Pat. & Heath 277, the Special court of appeals referred to and recognized the case of Sturgis v. Champneys, and decreed a settlement on the wife out of her real estate. It is unnecessary, however, in my view of this case, to decide the question, and I therefore express no opinion upon it, but will assume, for the purposes of the case, that the doctrine is alike applicable to real and personal estate.

As to the amount of the wife's property to be settled; the general rule at one time was, to settle upon her one-half of the subject. 1 Roper on Husband & Wife 260; 1 Leading Cas. in Eq. edition of 1859, p. 483. But this is a matter in the discretion of the court, which will take into consideration the amount of the wife's fortune already received by the husband, or any previous settlement which may have been made. Id. Accordingly, in Coster v. Coster, 9 Sim. R. 597, three-fourths of the fund was settled on the wife by Sir L. Shadwell, V. C.; and in Napier v. Napier, 1 Drew. & Walk. 407, six hundred pounds out of a fund 372 *amounting to one thousand pounds, were settled on her by Ld. Ch. Sugden. It has been said that the court will not, except perhaps under very peculiar circumstances, settle the whole of the property on the wife. And in Beresford v. Hobson, 1 Madd. R. 362, in which the master, upon a reference, had approved of the settlement of the whole, Sir Thomas Plumer, V. C., sustained the exception taken to the report; observing, after an elaborate review of the authorities, that the question in most cases had been, how much the wife should have; and in determining that, the court had exercised a discretion, and had not tied itself down to any precise rule, but had never given the whole. But the whole has been given in many subsequent English cases, which are cited in 1 Lead. Cas. in Eq. 485. The American cases seem to be to the same effect, many of which are cited in the notes of Hare & Wallace to that valuable work, p. 499. This court, in Browning v. Headley, 2 Rob. R. 340, gave the whole to the wife. The true rule on the subject seems therefore to be, that the settlement should be reasonable and adequate, and may be of part or the whole of the property, according to the sound discretion of the court upon all the circumstances of the case. The usual practice is to refer it to a commissioner to enquire and report what would be a reasonable and adequate settlement. But the court may decide this question for itself, if there be sufficient material in the record for the purpose: and if it plainly appear that the whole property subject to the settlement is not more than adequate, a reference is of course unnecessary.

As to when the provision for the wife should take effect; this, also, is a matter of discretion with the court upon all the circumstances. If her husband lives with and supports her, it may be made to take effect when he ceases to do so, or at 373 his death. But *if he has deserted or ill treated her, or is insolvent, or is unable or fails to support her, it will be directed to commence immediately. 1 Lead. Cas. in Eq. 499.

Digitized by Google

The wife's equity is so substantial an interest that it will constitute a valuable consideration for a postnuptial settlement by the husband upon her (made while the equity exists), which will be sustained against his creditors, to the extent of the equity, by a court of chancery. Id. 500. "The same circumstances which would induce the court (said the V. C. in Wickes v. Clarke, 8 Paige's R. 166) to compel a settlement by the husband, or those claiming under him or in his right, will operate to uphold a deed of settlement already made, to the same extent that would be required if one should be directed to be made under the view of the court."

The equity of the wife will be administered to her, not only in a suit in which the husband or his assignee is plaintiff, seeking the aid of a court of equity to recover her property; but generally also, in a suit brought by her or her trustee for the purpose of asserting it. This was at one time doubted; it being supposed that the jurisdiction rested solely on the ground that he who asks equity should do equity; but it has long since been firmly established. 2 Story's Eq. § 1414; 1 Roper on Husb. and Wife 260; Elibank v. Montolieu, 5 Ves. R. 737; Newenham v. Pemberton, 17 Law J. Equity N. S. 99; 1 Lead. Cas. in Eq. 468.

There seems to be one exception to this general rule, and that is, where the property is in its nature legal, but the aid of a court of equity is invoked for its recovery on some collateral ground of jurisdiction; as, in the case of a mortgage debt recovered in a foreclosure suit. There, the wife's equity attaches solely on the ground that he who asks equity must do equity, and therefore cannot be asserted in a suit brought by her. 1 Roper on Husb. and Wife 258, 260.

374 *The argument of the counsel for the appellees, that the doctrine of the wife's equity, recognized and acted on by this court, is that which had been settled in England at the time of the establishment of our chancery court, and that we must therefore look only to the English decisions prior to that time to ascertain the law upon the subject, is, I think, untenable. The subsequent English decisions are, of course, not binding upon us; but they are entitled to great respect, and at least as much on this question as on any other.

Having stated so much of the doctrine as seems to be pertinent, I will now endeavor to apply the law to the facts of this case.

There can be no question but that the doctrine applies to Mrs. Poindexter's portion of her father's personal estate. That estate at his death devolved on his personal representative. His distributees at law, of whom she was one, could recover it only in equity. She asserted her claim to an equitable settlement out of her distributive portion before it was received or recovered by her husband, and before the report of partition of the estate was confirmed by the court. And though the report was confirmed and her portion received before the decree sustaining the settlement which had been made upon her by her husband, yet the confirmation was expressly subject to the future order or decree of the court upon her petition for a settlement which she had previously filed. The deed of settlement of the 20th of October 1852 was certainly executed before her husband received possession of her portion or any part of it; and that settlement, having afterwards been sustained by the decree of the court, is valid (if properly sustained), notwithstanding possession of the property was received between the dates of the deed and of the decree. The argument of the appellee's counsel, that the administrator of Bowyer, being also one of his distributees, by 375 bringing *the suit for partition, elected thenceforward to hold the subject as distributee and not as administrator; that the possession of one parcener is the possession of all; and that therefore Poindexter was in possession of his wife's portion of the personal estate before she claimed her equity, cannot be sustained. The administrator did not cease as such to hold the personal estate of his intestate, so far as the record shows, until it was actually distributed; until which time it was assets in his hands, and he was not bound to distribute it without refunding bonds.

Nor can there be any doubt as to the propriety of the decree approving and confirming the said deed. The settlement thereby made was certainly not excessive, in view of all the circumstances of the case. And the husband being insolvent and unable to support his family, it was properly provided in the deed that the property should immediately enure to the benefit and maintenance of the wife and children. The deed may not be in such form as the court would have prescribed; but the wife being satisfied with it, and having petitioned for its confirmation, the court properly confirmed it, as it did not prejudice the rights of the husband's creditors.

Then as to the real estate: Was the wife entitled to an equitable settlement out of her husband's interest in that estate (assuming the doctrine to be applicable to real estate)? She derived it by descent from her father, who at the time of his death was possessed thereof and had a legal title thereto. Her husband had no occasion to go into equity to obtain possession or complete his title. If any remedy had been necessary by reason of the act of a wrongdoer in taking or withholding possession, it would have been a legal remedy. But none was necessary. There was no interruption, either of the title or possession, both of which devolved at once upon the heirs 376 at law of her *father as coparceners.

Digitized by Google

The possession of one was the possession of all the coparceners. 1 Lom. Dig. 489, marg. And the seizin of one was sufficient to entitle the husband of another to be tenant by the curtesy. Id. 69, marg. § 14; 1 Bright on Husb. and Wife, p. 117, ch. 10, § 1, Nos. 6 and 7. But here all were actually seized, so far as the record shows. Momentary seizin is sufficient to complete the husband's title. Id. No. 9. But in this case there has been no interruption of his seizin. A husband by becoming possessed of his wife's freehold estate of inheritance during the coverture, acquires a freehold interest during their joint lives, if there be no issue of the marriage, and during his own life, if there be such issue. In the former case, he and his wife are seized in her right, and in the latter he is seized in his own right as tenant by the curtesy initiate, and may maintain an action in respect to his freehold interest in his own name only. Id, p. 112, ch. 9, No. 1, 6, 8 and 9. In both cases, his interest is unconditional and unencumbered, and is subject to his right of disposition and liable to his debts. In this case, there being issue of the marriage, the husband became tenant by the curtesy intiate of his wife's interest in her father's real estate, and his freehold estate thus acquired is not liable to his wife's equity. That such an estate is not so liable, necessarily results from principles before stated, and has been expressly decided, not only in New York; Van Duzer v. Van Duzer, 6 Paige's R. 366; Wickes v. Clarke, 8 Id. 161; but also by this court; Dold's trustee v. Geiger's adm'r, 2 Gratt. 98. In the last mentioned case, Dold and wife brought a suit to recover her share of her father's real and personal estate on the ground that he had died intestate. After a protracted litigation, the intestacy was established and the plaintiffs succeeded. Pending the litigation the wife, by her next friend, filed a petition, praying 377 that her share of the *estate might be settled on her; and the husband by his answer assented. The Circuit court decreed accordingly; but with a proviso that the rights of the husband's creditors which may have attached upon the property before the execution of the settlement, should not be affected. The decree further confirmed a division of the real estate that had been previously made, and directed the wife's share to be delivered to the trustee, to be held for her separate use. The suit for the account and distribution of the personal and profits of the real estate, thereafter proceeded. The result of the suit showed that the share of the wife, exclusive of her share of the slaves, amounted to about four thousand five hundred dollars, much the larger part of which arose from the rents and profits of the real estate, hires of negroes and interest on personalty accruing during the pendency of the suit; and that her share of the slaves was in value about two thousand seven hundred dollars. This subject was by the decree of the Circuit court charged with a debt of the husband due by judgment, amounting in the aggregate, at the date of the decree, to about one thousand five hundred dollars. The trustee of the wife appealed from the decree, which was affirmed by this court. Judge Stanard thus concluded his able opinion in the case, in which the other judges concurred: "In respect to the rents and profits of the real estate, he (the husband) was at law and in equity absolutely entitled to them. Of that real estate there had been actual possession, by virtue of such actual possession by one or more coparceners, and they were accountable at law to the husband for the rents and profits, and he might sue therefor without joining the wife. This subject ought to have been charged, though the principal of the distributable share of the personal estate should be protected in the hands of the wife and her trustee by the relinquishment of 378 the husband. To *the tenancy by the curtesy of the husband in the real estate, he had legal title; and that was clearly chargeable with his debts, irrespective of his voluntary surrender thereof to the wife."

The husband's title as tenant by the curtesy having thus become complete, and not being liable to the wife's equity while the estate was held in coparcenary, no state of things which could afterwards arise could subject his interest to that equity. It then stood upon the same footing with his other property, and became alike subject to his right of disposition and the claims of his creditors. Therefore, he or his assigns or judgment creditors had a right to go into equity to have a partition of the real estate, and an allotment of his wife's portion thereof; and his judgment creditors had a right to the aid of that court in enforcing the lien of their judgments by a sale of his interest, without being subjected to the condition of a settlement on his wife or any other condition whatever. A parcener acquires no new right, nor is his old right enlarged by a partition. He is entitled to a partition as a legal incident to his estate in coparcenary; and it is merely a different mode of enjoying the estate, to which he may resort at his election. While the estate is held in coparcenary, his seizin is of an undivided interest, and pervades the whole estate. After the division and allotment, his seizin is confined to his several share, but as to that, is exclusive. And so too a judgment creditor of the husband coming into equity to enforce the lien of his judgment by a sale of an interest acquired by the husband in the wife's real estate, is seeking no new right nor to enlarge an old one, but is merely pursuing a remedy expressly given him by law to effectuate a legal lien upon his debtor's property. The wife having no inherent equity in such a case, can acquire none from the fact that she is a defendant to the suit. The 379 *maxim that he who asks equity must do equity, does not apply to the case. Hanson v. Keating, 30 Eng. Ch. R. 1.

The wife's equity attaches, as we have seen, only when resort must be, or is actually, had to a court of equity to reduce her property into her husband's possession, or complete his title thereto, and not when resort may be had to that court for any purpose after such possession has been obtained and title completed. The Special court of appeals decided otherwise in James, &c. v. Gibbs, &c., 1 Pat. & Heath 277; but, with the highest respect for the opinions of that court, I must say that I think the decision contrary to settled principles of law, if not to the decision of this court in Dold's trustee v. Geiger's adm'r, supra. And I am confirmed in this view by the fact that one of the learned judges who concurred in the decision of the Special court, afterwards decided this case otherwise in the court below, and must therefore have changed his opinion.

Digitized by Google

But it is argued by the counsel for the appellants, that as advancements had been made by the intestate to his children in his lifetime, a resort to a court of equity was indispensable to settle an account of the advancements, and ascertain the share to which each of the children was entitled in the partition of the estate; and that therefore the wife's equity attached to Mrs. Poindexter's share as well of the real as of the personal estate. I do not think this conclusion correct. Notwithstanding the fact that advancements happened to have been made to the children, the heirs had a legal title to, and were in possession of the inheritance to the extent of their respective interests, from the death of the ancestor. The title and possession of each parcener as to his undivided share was then complete. The occasion which afterwards arose to go into a court of equity for a par-380 tition of the estate *and an allotment of the several portions, cannot affect or impair the right of any person concerned. The account of advancements is a mere incident of the partition, affecting of course the extent and amount of the several portions, but not the title of the parceners. The distinction is between going into equity to complete the husband's title, and going there for some purpose in regard to the property after the title is completed. In the former case, the wife's equity attaches; in the latter, it does not. Going into a court of equity for an account of advancements and partition of real estate descended and in possession of the heirs, is a case of the latter kind. And so is going there to enforce a judgment lien upon a husband's interest in his wife's portion of the estate.

It is further argued, that it does not appear of what the advancements consisted, whether of real or personal estate; and that Poindexter and wife may have been entitled to more personal, and less real estate than they received in the division. See Code, p. 525, ch. 123, § 15. The answer to this argument is, that the partition was fairly made, was not excepted to, and has been confirmed by the court. It must therefore now be considered that they received their due and relative portion of the real and personal estate.

I think there is no error in the decree of the Circuit court, and am for affirming it.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Moncure, J.

Decree affirmed.

---

381 *Spengler v. Davy.

July Term, 1859, Lewisburg.

1. Continuances—Negligence in Preparing for Trial—Case at Bar.—It is important to defendant to prove the precise sum of money paid to plaintiff and the date of payment, and he has summoned a witness to prove it, but he has not informed the witness what he was expected to prove, and though the witness was in possession of the books, which would have enabled him to give the evidence, not knowing that he would be called to give the evidence, he had not examined the books, and they were not at the place of trial. The defendant was culpably negligent in not informing the witness what was the point to which he would be examined and having had two continuances, the court properly refused to grant him a continuance in the cause.
2. Removal of Causes—When Right Lost.†—A cause which had been pending in a County court for more than a year, is called for trial, and a motion by the defendant for a continuance is overruled: and he then moves the court to remove the case to the Circuit court. The motion is properly overruled.‡
3. Attachments—Probable Cause for Suing Out.§—Justifiable probable cause for suing out an attach-

*See generally, monographic note on "Continuances" appended to Harman v. Howe, 27 Gratt. 676; also, foot-note to The Bland and Giles County Judge Case, 33 Gratt. 443.

†Removal of Causes—When Right Lost.—In Hogshead v. Baylor, 16 Gratt. 103, and note, it is said: "After the motion to continue was overruled, a motion was made to remove the cause to the circuit court because it had been pending in the county court more than twelve months. The court properly refused to remove the cause at that time, as has been decided in the case of Spengler v. Davy, 15 Gratt. 381."

The principal case is cited and followed in Jelenko v. Coleman, 22 W. Va. 227, 230.

‡Code, ch. 174, § 1, p. 657; Sess. Acts 1850-51, p. 34. "Where any suit, motion or other proceeding, shall have remained pending, in a County or Corporation court more than a year without being determined, such court, on the motion of any party to such suit, motion or other proceeding, or his representative (without notice), shall order it to be removed to the Circuit court having jurisdiction over such county or corporation."

§Attachments—Probable Cause for Suing Out.—In Vinal v. Core, 18 W. Va. 40, it is said: "My conclusion, therefore, is that probable cause for instituting a prosecution is such a state of facts actually existing known to the prosecutor personally or by information derived from others, as would in law justify the setting on foot of the prosecution, that is, such as in the judgment of the court would lead a man of ordinary caution acting conscientiously upon these actual facts to believe the person guilty. These views are sustained in my judgment not only by ment against the effects of a debtor, is, a belief by the attaching creditor in the existence of the facts essential to the prosecution of the attachment, founded upon such circumstances as supposing him to be a man of ordinary caution, prudence and judgment, were sufficient to produce such belief.

4. Malicious Prosecution—From What Malice May Be Inferred.—The improper motive, or want of proper motive, inferrible from a wrongful act based upon no reasonable ground, constitutes of itself all the malice deemed essential in law to the maintenance of the action for malicious prosecution.

5. Pleading—Malicious Prosecution—Declaration—Irregularity Cured by Verdict.—In an action for maliciously suing out an attachment against the effects of the plaintiff, the declaration alleges, that the attachment was sued out "wrongfully and without good cause," instead of "maliciously and without probable cause." Though this was irregular, it is cured by the verdict.[1]

382 *This was an action of trespass on the case, brought in September 1854 in the County court of Warren county, by William Davy against Samuel M. Spengler, for maliciously suing out an attachment against the property of the plaintiff. The declaration charged, that "the said Samuel M. Spengler wrongfully and without good cause, sued out," &c., and afterwards, to wit, on, &c., "wrongfully and without good cause caused certain property of the said William Davy to be taken and seized under said attachment."

At the November term of the court an issue was made up on the plea of "not guilty," and the cause was continued from term to term until the March term 1857. These continuances were general, except at the May and November terms 1856, when the cause was continued for the defendant. At the March term 1857, when the cause was called, the defendant by his counsel moved the court to continue it until the next term; and the counsel stated that he was credibly informed and believed that a material fact, viz: the date and amount of a certain payment made by the Manassas gap rail road company to the plaintiff (who was a contractor to build the abutments and piers of a bridge for the company over the Shenandoah river in the county of Warren) at, or a short time before, the time of the plaintiff's leaving the county of Warren, they were not able to prove by the witness, who was present on behalf of the defendant, unless he had the books of the said company, in which he had made the entry of the date and amount of the same. But there was no proof that witness had been informed what they wished to examine him about, or that he was requested to examine the books. And the counsel for the plaintiff asked what was expected to be 383 proved *by the said entry as to the date and amount aforesaid; and in reply, the counsel for the defendant said they were not able to tell the exact day or the exact amount thereof. Whereupon the counsel for the plaintiff stated they were willing to admit that the plaintiff received a large estimate a few days before Christmas, and a few days before the plaintiff left the county of Warren in the year 1853; which the defendant's counsel stated they were unwilling to receive in the place of the fact stated by the entry itself.

But the court referring to the frequent continuances of the cause as they appeared reason, but by the weight of the authorities. See Mowry v. Miller, 3 Leigh 561; Spengler v. Davy, 15 Gratt. 381; Scott & Boyd v. Shelor, 28 Gratt. 906; Munns v. Dupont et al., 3 Wash., C. C. 31 (1 Am. L. C. 200); Hickman v. Griffin, 6 Mo. 37-42; Adams v. Fisher, 3 Blackf. 341; Raulston v. Jackson, 1 Sneed 182; Faris v. Starke, 3 B. Mun. 4-6; Hall v. Hawkins, 5 Humph. 257-259; Hall v. Suydam, 6 Barb. 84-99; Winebibble v. Porterfield, 9 Barr. 137; Lawrence v. Lanning, 4 Porter (Ind.) 196; Jacks v. Stimpson, 13 Ill. 701; Wheeler v. Nesbitt, 24 How. (U. S.) 544."

---

See also, the following cases citing the principal case for the above proposition: Burkhart v. Jennings, 2 W. Va. 257; Forbes v. Hagman, 75 Va. 180; Scott v. Shelor, 28 Gratt. 905, and note; Claflin v. Steenbock, 18 Gratt. 855, and note. See Womack v. Circle, 32 Gratt. 345, and note, where the principal case is cited. 1 Va. Law Reg. 233.

Malicious Prosecution—From What Malice May Be Inferred.—The improper motive, or want of proper motive, inferrible from a wrongful act based upon no reasonable ground, constitutes of itself all the malice deemed essential in law to the maintenance of the action for malicious prosecution.

The above proposition is approved in Forbes v. Hagman, 75 Va. 183; Scott v. Shelor, 28 Gratt. 905, and note; Jerman v. Stewart, 12 Fed. Rep. 271, all citing the principal case. But in the last-named case the action was under a Tennessee statute which allowed the defendant in an attachment proceeding to recover from the plaintiff who fails to prosecute his suit with effect, the actual damages sustained, whether there was any malice or want of probable cause or not.

Pleading and Practice—Declaration—Irregularities Cured by Verdict.—In State v. Purcell, 31 W. Va. 44, 5 S. E. Rep. 304, it is said: "From the view we have taken of the main question in this controversy, it becomes immaterial to inquire whether special damages were sustained by the relator or not, as the judgment which the court should have rendered would have been the same in either event. Not having demurred to the declaration, whatever errors were committed by the plaintiff appearing on the face thereof are after a trial of the action by the court by consent of parties, as well as after a verdict, cured by the statute of jeofails, unless there be omitted something so essential to the action * * * that judgment according to the law and the very right of the case cannot be given. Section 3, ch. 134, and § 29, ch. 125, Code; Holliday's Ex'rs v. Myers, 11 W. Va. 282; Spengler v. Davy, 15 Gratt. 381."

The principal case is also cited and approved in Burkhart v. Jennings, 2 W. Va. 257; Holliday v. Myers, 11 W. Va. 289, 292, 296.

---

[1]Code, ch. 181, § 3, p. 680. "No judgment or decree shall be stayed or reversed" * * * * * "for any defect, imperfection or omission in the pleadings, which could not be regarded on demurrer, or for any other defect, imperfection or omission, which might have been taken advantage of on a demurrer or answer, but was not so taken advantage of."

Digitized by Google

upon the record, overruled the motion. And thereupon the defendant excepted.

After the motion for a continuance of the cause had been overruled, the defendant moved the court to order the case to be removed to the Circuit court of Warren county. But the court overruled the motion, and directed the jury to be sworn therein to try the issues joined: and the defendant again excepted.

On the trial the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for five hundred and sixty-six dollars sixty-six cents damages. And the defendant moved the court to set aside the verdict and grant him a new trial, on the grounds that it was contrary to the evidence, and that the damages were excessive. But the court overruled the motion, and entered up judgment upon the verdict: and the defendant again excepted. The facts are stated in the opinion of Judge Daniel.

The case was taken to the Circuit court of Warren county by supersedeas; but at the August term of that court for 1857, the judgment was affirmed. And thereupon the defendant applied to this court for a supersedeas; which was allowed.

The Attorney General, for the appellant.
Baldwin and Philip Williams, for the appellee.

384 *DANIEL, J. It seems to me that the plaintiff in error has failed to show good ground for reversing the judgment, in the refusal of the County court to continue the cause on his motion.

It is not to be denied that the fact, which the plaintiff in error, through his counsel, stated he expected to prove by the witness in court, if an opportunity was afforded him to refer to certain books to which he could not then have access, was one which might have a very material bearing on the case. Proof that the defendant in error, at, or a short time before the date of his leaving the county of Warren, had received a large sum of money, might, in the absence of proof that he had honestly paid it to his creditors, or other explanation, obviously go far towards establishing that the plaintiff in error had proper grounds for suing out his attachment. It appears, however, from the certificate of the judge, that there was no proof that the witness had been informed what he was to be examined about, or that he had been requested to examine the books; that, on its being demanded of the counsel of the plaintiff in error what they expected to prove by the books in respect to the amount of the money aforesaid and the date of its payment, they replied that they were not able to tell the exact day nor the exact amount; and that the counsel for the defendant in error thereupon expressed their willingness to admit that their client received a large estimate a few days before he left the county; which the counsel for the plaintiff in error stated they were unwilling to receive in place of the fact stated by the entry itself.

It does not appear that the plaintiff in error was present. It does not appear that he had informed his counsel of the date and amount of the payment in question; or that he indeed knew himself what the books would disclose in respect to that matter. It is not stated that the witness had 385 been expected to be *able to prove the exact date and amount of the payment without a reference to the books; nor is any reason suggested why there should or might have been any such expectation.

Under such circumstances, I cannot undertake to say that the County court has not properly exercised its discretion. The plaintiff in error was plainly remiss in not notifying the witness what he expected to prove by him, so that he might refer to the books if necessary; and when we take into consideration the further fact that the plaintiff in error had already been indulged with two continuances of the cause, the fair conclusion is that if he has lost the benefit of any important fact on the trial of his case, such loss is due, not to any injustice or harshness in the ruling of the court, but to his own culpable negligence.

It seems to me further, that the County court did not err in overruling the motion of the plaintiff in error to remove the case to the Circuit court of Warren county.

It must be conceded that the words of the law under which the motion was made seem to be very plain, and to leave but little room for construction. It simply declares that when any suit shall have remained pending in a County or Corporation court more than a year without being determined, such court, on the motion of any party to such suit or his representative (without notice), shall order it to be removed to the Circuit court having jurisdiction over such county or corporation. Code, ch. 174, § 1, p. 657. The pendency of the suit for more than a year without being determined, would, giving to the words of the section their full ordinary meaning, seem to be all that is required to make it imperative upon the court to remove it. Yet it would be absurd to suppose that such could have been the real intention of the legislature. It is manifest that in some instances a 386 rigid enforcement *of the law according to the letter, would conflict with other laws, and do violence to rights which we cannot for a moment suppose it was the purpose of the legislature to disturb or impair. The legislature could not have designed to vest a party with the absolute right, by his mere motion, in the midst of a trial before the jury, to arrest the progress of the cause, and have it ordered up to the Circuit court. Notwithstanding, therefore, the peremptory and unqualified language of the law, the utter want of justice and propriety manifest in a strict compliance with its letter, renders it indispensable that the courts, in administering it, should put some restrictions upon its terms, and make some exceptions to a literal observance of its requirements.

It is obvious, from the very nature of the subject, that the courts must have some control as to the time at which, in the course and order of the proceedings in a cause, they will entertain such motions. The law embraces as well all the causes in chancery as all the cases at law which may have been depending for more than a year in the County courts. Was it the design of the legislature to give to a party the right, after the argument in a chancery cause has commenced, abitrarily, to stop the argument and remove his case to the Circuit court? Is a plaintiff, in an injunction cause, who has made an unsuccessful motion for a continuance, to be allowed, by such a step, to stay the action of the court, and avoid a dissolution of his injunction? Or, to take the case before us, has a party to a suit at law, who has made a motion to continue, which has been heard and overruled, a peremptory right to thwart and reverse the decision of the court and defeat his adversary of a trial by removing the case to the Circuit court? Each of these questions must, I think, be answered in the negative.

Digitized by Google

A reference to the provisions of the 387 1st and 2d sections *of chapter 174 of the Code, and the previous laws on the subject, renders it manifest that the true object of such legislation has been to insure to parties to suits in the County and Corporation courts, the speedy and impartial trial of their causes. The removal of a cause to the Circuit court, after it shall have been pending in a County or Corporation court for more than a year, on the motion of any one of the parties, is one of the means which the legislature has provided for attaining the ends in view. The language of the section in which this provision is made, it is true, is mandatory and not permissive; still, the nature of the subject, as I have said, forbids the idea that a court, in passing upon such a motion, has not a right to consider it in reference to the then state and condition of the cause in which it is submitted.

Upon such a reference in the present case, without instituting any further enquiry into the objects of the motion, the County court must have seen that the inevitable effect of granting it would be, not to further but to defeat the purposes of the law, and to allow the plaintiff in error to baffle and set at naught the action of the court in a matter upon which he had just before invoked its judgment, and visit his adversary with the very evil for which it was the design of the law to afford to both parties an efficient remedy. I think the motion was properly overruled.

The question next to be considered is, whether the County court erred in overruling the motion for a new trial. And in considering this question, we have to enquire, first, what it was incumbent on the defendant in error to prove; and secondly, whether he has proved it. The elements of the action are malice and the want of probable cause. In the celebrated case of Johnstone v. Sutton, 1 T. R. 493, 545, the essential ground of the action was declared to be that the proceedings complained of were had without a probable 388 *cause, inasmuch as from the want of such cause the other main ingredient, malice, may be, and most commonly is implied; whilst from the proof of express malice the want of probable cause cannot be inferred. That was the case of an action for a malicious prosecution before a court martial; but there is no material difference between such actions and actions for the malicious prosecution of civil suits in respect of the grounds on which they rest.

In the case of Manns v. Dupont & al., 3 Wash. C. C. R. 31, probable cause is said to be "a reasonable ground of suspicion, supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to warrant a cautious man in his belief that the person accused is guilty of the offence with which he is charged." In Hare & Wallace's notes to this case, 1 Amer. Lead. Cas. 213, the annotators select this as one of the best definitions of the term that has been given. Modifying the definition so as to adapt it to such a case as the one before us, we may, I think, properly define justifiable probable cause in cases of the kind to be, a belief, by the attaching creditor, in the existence of the facts essential to the prosecution of his attachment, founded upon such circumstances as, supposing him to be a man of ordinary caution, prudence and judgment, were sufficient to induce such belief.

It is true, that in the case of Mowry v. Miller, 3 Leigh 561, Judge Tucker, in delivering the opinion of the court, said, that as no man can maintain an action for malicious prosecution, where there was probable cause, it was obvious that those words should be made to refer to the state of fact as it respects the person prosecuted, and not to the degree of knowledge of that fact in the party prosecuting. It will be perceived, on a reference to the case, that the action there was against the defendant for having procured a third person to institute a malicious prosecution for felony 389 *against the plaintiff. There was a demurrer to the declaration; and Mr. Stanard, in the course of his argument, had endeavored to show that the declaration was defective in that, according to the fair meaning of its allegations, it did not allege that the defendant, without probable cause, advised and procured the prosecutor to institute the prosecution, but that he advised and procured the prosecutor, without probable cause, to institute it. The judge, in his notice of this objection, had already shown conclusively, by a reference to the declaration, that the objection was without any sufficient foundation, inasmuch as the charges of malice and probable cause stood, in the declaration, in connection, not only with the institution of the prosecution, but with the agency of the defendant in averring and procuring it. The proposition of law under consideration, subsequently stated by him, was, therefore, obviously, in his view, not essential to the decision of the case, and we may hence fairly conclude, was not weighed with the same degree of care that he would have bestowed upon it had he taken a different view of the true meaning of the declaration. No case was cited by the learned judge in support of the proposition; and carried out to its full extent, it is opposed by the current of authority, and is, as I conceive, clearly inconsistent with the true theory of such actions. To refer the question of probable cause exclusively to the state of fact as it respects the person prosecuted, would be in effect to allow a party sued for a malicious prosecution to say to the plaintiff, by way of defence, "it is true you are innocent of the offence with which you were charged, and at the time of instituting the prosecution I knew of no circumstance to justify me in believing you to be guilty, and did not so believe, but I have since ascertained that there existed at the time certain 390 facts and circumstances, *which, had they been then known to me, would have warranted me in believing you guilty."

Digitized by Google

The law, in departing from the ordinary rules of pleading and proof, and imposing upon an innocent man, wronged by a criminal prosecution, the burden of negativing probable cause as the foundation of the prosecution, does not proceed upon the idea that he is in fault in having become an object of suspicion, but upon considerations of public policy, requiring to some extent a sacrifice of private rights. Crime would often go unpunished for the want of some one to set on foot its prosecution, if the prosecutor was in all cases to be held bound to make good the charge; and it is thought to be better that innocent men should sometimes have to submit without redress to the hardship and injustice of being falsely charged with crime, than that the members of the community should be deterred from the exercise of a proper diligence and activity in bringing offenders to justice, by the fear of exposing themselves to suits by persons prosecuted upon appearances of guilt which turn out to be fallacious and deceptive. No considerations of the public good, however, can require that the partial denial of redress to innocent men falsely charged with crime, on the one hand, or the protection to those who honestly engage, upon reasonable grounds, in the prosecution of supposed offenders, on the other, should be extended to the case of an innocent man visited with the evils of a criminal prosecution instituted against him by one having at the time no belief in his guilt, and ignorant of any circumstance calculated to produce such belief. Accordingly, the cases are, generally, found holding that probable cause consists in the concurrence of belief of guilt with the existence of facts and circumstances, sufficiently strong to warrant such belief; or, in other words, that probable cause 391 is, substantially, *belief of guilt founded on reasonable grounds. Cabiness v. Martin, 3 Dev. Law R. 455; Ralston v. Jackson, 1 Sneed's R. 128; Hall v. Suydam, 6 Barb. S. C. R. 83; Foshay v. Ferguson, 2 Denio R. 617; Siebert v. Price, 5 Watts & Serg. R. 438; Faris v. Starke, 3 B. Monr. R. 4; and cases cited in 1 Amer. Lead. Cas. 213-14.

Applying these principles to the facts of the case, it is difficult to conceive how the jury could well have rendered any other verdict than the one they gave.

The leading facts of the case are, that Davy had contracted with the Manassas gap rail road company to build the abutments and piers of a bridge across the south branch of the Shenandoah, abutting, on one side, on the lands of Spengler: that he had lived in Warren county about eighteen months before the suing out of the attachment, and that he had been at work on the bridge from February 1853 to the 26th of December 1853, say ten months; during which time he boarded with Spengler, the plaintiff in error: that he employed a large number of hands, and in the months of November and December had forty-two hands at work on the bridge: that he had received from the company, a few days before the 26th of December, a large estimate on account of work on the bridge, the exact amount of which was not known, and that on that day he paid out to his hands who were present, about two thousand dollars, leaving something still due to some of them, of whom he asked at the time whether the amounts severally paid to them would do; that he paid nothing to Spengler, or Richards, or Massie (who also took out attachments) at that time, neither of them being present: that on the same day he went to Winchester on his riding mare, carrying with him most probably no other property or money than enough money to pay his expenses, stating to his manager (the witness), about the time of leaving, that he was going to Winchester 392 *to purchase steel: that he left upon the lands of Spengler all the property afterwards attached, consisting of goods in a store-house, tools necessary for the prosecution of the work, &c.; of the value of which we have no further proof than that it was sufficient to pay the amount of Spengler's judgment, and that he had no other property in the state, unless something was due him from the company: that the wife of Davy at that time resided in Washington city, and that he always considered that place his home: that Davy was seen in Winchester on the day he left the work, by a witness, to whom he stated that he intended to return the next day; that on the night of the day just first mentioned, he was seen in Winchester by another witness, who states that at his request he accompanied him to two hardware stores to purchase steel, but that Davy declined buying, saying that he could get it in Alexandria at a lower price, and would purchase there: that there was a considerable fall of snow the same night, but whether it had fallen before the occurrences stated by the last witness, is not shown: that on the 2d of January after the holidays, and after the snow had abated, the manager of Davy went to work on the bridge with twenty-five hands, and continued at work till the 9th of January, when Spengler's attachment was levied: that on the 17th of the same month Davy returned, bringing the mare on which he had ridden off: and that after some interruptions to the work, caused by the levy upon the tools and other property, and their subsequent sale, the prosecution of the work was fully resumed in February, and continued by Davy and his hands, till it was completed in October 1854.

Digitized by Google

It was further proved, that up to the time of the suing out of the attachment the credit of Davy was good, and that he was regarded as a man of integrity.

It was also proved by the manager
393 of Davy, that *shortly before the suing out of the attachment, Spengler came to him and enquired whether he or the clerk or any of his hands had heard from Davy, and also whether he had ever known Davy on any other occasion to be so long absent from his work; and that in reply he informed Spengler that Davy had not been heard from since he left, so far as he knew; but that he supposed that owing to the snow Davy had supposed that the work would be suspended for a while, and had gone to Washington to see his wife; that he had known him once to be absent for three weeks whilst engaged on another work in Warren, and that when he then left he requested the witness to attend to the work in his absence for him, and did not fix any time for his return.

It was also proved by one of Spengler's witnesses, that he lived at Spengler's house at the time of the suing out of the attachment, and for some time before; that he had frequently heard Davy complain that he was not making any thing on the work, and wished he was away, and he seemed to be out of humor with the place.

No witness gives evidence of any other fact or any other declaration by Davy than what is disclosed in the foregoing statement, tending in any degree to show a purpose on his part to remove his property. It was all left on the premises of Spengler; and there is an entire absence of proof going to show that Davy had made any attempt to carry it away, or to sell it or assign it. The fair inference from the facts is, that the estimate he received was fairly distributed out amongst his hands, according to their claims and wants; and that he contemplated the faithful prosecution and completion of the important work on which he was employed, was to be presumed from the fact that, after the slight interruption to its progress occasioned by the holidays and the fall of the snow, his manager 394 had *resumed the work with a strong and sufficient force, and was actively engaged in its prosecution at the time the attachment was sued out.

That it was not an unusual thing for Davy to absent himself from the work on visits to Washington, is directly inferrible from the statement of one of the witnesses, that his usual mode of traveling to Alexandria and Washington was by the rail road, which was completed to a point within six miles of the bridge; and when it is considered that Davy boarded with Spengler, and that the latter could not well be ignorant of the fact that his wife resided in Washington, it is difficult to conceive why, unless he was too ready to indulge in suspicion, he should not, on a view of the facts before him, have been satisfied with the very reasonable manner in which the absence of Davy was accounted for by his manager. I can see no ground on which Spengler could have reasonably founded a belief that Davy had removed or was about to remove his effects so as to endanger the collection of his debt. In the absence of such ground, the jury had a right to infer malice; which in such cases is to be understood in its legal sense, and not in its popular signification of anger, malevolence or vindictiveness. The improper motive or want of proper motive inferrible from a wrongful act based upon no reasonable ground, constitutes of itself all the malice deemed essential in law to the maintenance of the action; and the most charitable construction of Spengler's motives in suing out the attachment that can be given, is, that he acted upon slight circumstances of suspicion, inducing an unreasonable solicitude, on his part, for the safety of his debt, and a corresponding want of consideration as to the serious and irreparable wrong which his harsh proceeding was calculated to inflict upon the credit and other interests of his debtor.

The proposition advanced in the 395 course of the argument *here, that Davy was precluded by the judgment on the attachment from showing that Spengler had no reasonable ground to believe that he was removing or had removed his effects, &c., is met by the answer that no objection was made to the introduction of any of the evidence in the court below. Davy did not return till after the judgment against him for the debt claimed had been rendered, and an order made for the sale of the attached effects.

If, upon the rehearing of the case, irregularly obtained upon his petition, it was competent for him to have gone into the question whether the attachment had been founded on reasonable grounds (about which I express no opinion), it appears no such issue was tried or tendered. On the trial the plaintiff in error, if he could have relied on any estoppel, failed to do so, and there seems to have been a free, fair and full trial on the merits.

As to the objection that Davy was entitled to recover no damage growing out of the sale of his property, as he failed to stay the sale by giving bond, it seems to me sufficient to say that, supposing it competent for him to have pursued such a course, and that it was within his power to give such bond, he was not bound to give it. His action proceeds on the ground that the suing out and prosecution of the attachment were wrongful and malicious. The plaintiff in the attachment was acting at his own peril, and cannot be heard to complain that the defendant did not hinder him, in the sale which he was seeking to have, by complying with the onerous condition of giving bond and security to pay the judgment. Besides, the loss occasioned by the sale of his property was but an item in Davy's claim on account of damages, and the whole question of damage was fully before the jury.

Digitized by Google

I can see no ground for interfering with the verdict of the jury on the alleged 396 ground of excessiveness. *The law has not, and from the nature of things, cannot set up any precise standard by which the damages are in such cases to be fixed and ascertained; and the space is necessarily broad, within the limits of which the court must accept the verdict of the jury as the true and only measure of damage. In this case, the verdict is not so heavy as to induce the belief that the jury have been in any degree influenced by prejudice or passion.

The declaration in this case is irregular, in that it charges that the attachment was sued out wrongfully and without good cause, instead of maliciously and without probable cause; and doubts have been suggested since the argument of the cause, whether this irregularity is cured by the verdict. In the case of Ellis v. Thilman, 3 Call 3 (which was a case for a malicious prosecution), the allegation was that the prosecution was malicious and without any just cause. In the case of Young v. Gregorie, Id. 446 (case for the illegal suing out, &c., of an attachment), it was alleged that the proceedings were had maliciously and without any legal or justifiable cause. And in Kirtley v. Deck and others, 2 Munf. 10 (case for a conspiracy in preferring, &c., a malicious prosecution for a felony), the allegation was that the defendants falsely and maliciously conspired, &c., to prefer a false and malicious prosecution, &c.; but there was no averment that the prosecution was without probable cause. In each of these cases, it was held that the declaration was radically defective, and was not cured by the verdict. In these cases, it was said that the words without probable cause, or some equipollent expression, were essential to make a good declaration, and it was held that the words without any just cause, in the first mentioned case, and without any legal or justifiable cause, in the second, could not be received as equivalents for the words which the law required. It is to be observed, however, of all of these 397 cases, *that they were decided in the absence of some of the most sweeping of the provisions of our present statute of jeofails, and more especially of that which declares that no judgment after verdict shall be stayed "for any defect whatsoever in the declaration or pleading, whether of form or of substance, which might have been taken advantage of by a demurrer, and which shall not have been so taken advantage of;" which was first introduced at the revisal of 1819; and was re-enacted in 1849, with slight modifications, not necessary to be here noticed. See Code of 1849, p. 680.

It is true, that broad and comprehensive as is the language of the provision, this court has felt called upon, on several occasions, to set some limits to its operation, and to declare that there are some defects in declarations which are beyond its cure. Still it will be seen, on a reference to the cases alluded to, that none of them can be used as precedents for excluding this case from the benefit of said provision. The first of them (in order), Mason v. Farmers Bank at Petersburg, 12 Leigh 84, was the case of a suit by the plaintiff against the president and directors of a branch bank, in which the declaration complained of them as "the president, directors and company of the office of discount and deposit of the Farmers Bank at Petersburg." This court held, that no judgment could be rendered, as the declaration was against parties who could not be made liable to any action. There was no such corporation in existence. The declaration plainly showed that the cause of action was against the "president, directors and company of the Farmers Bank of Virginia." In the second case, that of Ross v. Milne and wife, 12 Leigh 204, the declaration plainly showed that the plaintiffs had no cause of action, and that the right demanded was in a third person. And in the third case, that of Boyle's adm'r v. Overby, 11 Gratt. 202, which was a suit against an admin-398 istrator *for an alleged cause of action against his intestate, the declaration alleged a cause of action which from its very nature must have died with the person of the intestate.

In neither one of these cases was there any room for the inference of facts, supplementary to and consistent with those alleged by the plaintiff, that could make out a good cause of action. In each case, the allegations of the plaintiff showed affirmatively that he had no right to recover.

The distinction between such cases and the one in hand, is too marked to require comment. Proof that the attachment was prosecuted maliciously and without probable cause, would be entirely consistent with the allegation that it was prosecuted wrongfully and without good cause; and it might well be that the very same testimony relied on to establish the latter allegation, might furnish sufficient proof of the former also.

I am free to confess that I have not been able to bring my mind to a conclusion entirely satisfactory as to the precise scope of the provision under consideration. It seems to me, however, that if the present case were to be excepted out of its operation, it would be a very difficult task to say at what point such exceptions should stop. The case is plainly within the letter of the statute; and I can see no sufficient reason for supposing that it is not within its meaning; whilst I am entirely satisfied that the case has been fully tried and justly decided on its merits. The supposed defect does not appear to have been, in any manner, brought to the notice of the County court; it is not assigned as one of the causes of error in the petition for a supersedeas to the Circuit court; nor in the petition to this court; nor (if noticed at all) in the argument here, was it insisted on as a ground for arresting the judgment.

Digitized by Google

Under these circumstances, it seems 399 to me that the *just and proper mode of disposing of the question is simply to read and administer the law in respect to it as it is written, leaving to the court, on some future occasion, when aided by the arguments of the bar, the task of ascertaining and setting out with more fullness and precision than has been yet attempted, the exact meaning and limits of the statute.

I see no error in the judgment, and am for affirming it.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Daniel, J.

Judgment affirmed.

---

400 *Marks & als. v. Hill & als.

October Term, 1859, Richmond.

1. Deeds of Trust to Secure Creditors—*Continuation of Business by Trustee. §—A provision in a deed of trust to secure creditors, that the trustee may continue the business and replenish the stock, if intended merely as a means of realizing the trust fund, and with a view to winding up the business, is not fraudulent per se, so as to avoid the deed.
2. Same—Same—†Employment of Grantor to Conduct Business.§—In such a case a provision in the deed that one of the grantors shall attend to the business, but he being under the control of the trustee, who may at any time on his motion, and shall at the request of creditors, sell the property at auction, is not fraudulent per se, so as to avoid the deed.
3. Partnership—Application of Social Effects to Pay Individual Debts.‡—Partnership effects may be applied, by the concurrence of the partners, to pay an individual debt of one of them, if the other receives a sufficient consideration therefor, though they may be unable to pay all their partnership debts.
4. Same—Same—Case at Bar.—H and N form a partnership, each to put in two thousand five hundred dollars. N borrows the money on his own note with security. H is unable to borrow on his own credit; and with the consent of N gives the note of the firm for the amount. They fail, and agree that both notes shall be paid out of the partnership assets; and the assets are conveyed in trust to secure these debts as well as other partnership debts. The agreement is upon a sufficient consideration, and valid against partnership creditors not secured by the deed.
5. Fraudulent Conveyance—Prayer for General Relief—Right to an Account.§—In a bill by creditors to set aside a deed of trust for payment of debts, on the

---

*__Deeds of Trust to Secure Creditors—Continuation of Business by Trustee.__—It seems well settled in Virginia that a provision in a deed of assignment to secure creditors, that the trustee may continue the business and replenish the stock in order to realize the trust fund, and wind up the business, is not fraudulent per se, so as to avoid the deed.

The principal case was cited as authorizing this proposition in Williams v. Lord, 75 Va. 401; Catt v. Knabe Mfg. Co., 93 Va. 736, 26 S. E. Rep. 246; Hurst v. Leckie, 97 Va. 555, 34 S. E. Rep. 464; Harden v. Wagner, 22 W. Va. 364; Shattuck v. Knight, 25 W. Va. 598; Kyle v. Harveys, 25 W. Va. 729; Landeman v. Wilson, 29 W. Va. 726, 2 S. E. Rep. 216 (dissenting opinion of SNYDER, J.); Ruffner v. Mairs, 33 W. Va. 662, 11 S. E. Rep. 7. See also, cases collected in foot-note to Gordon v. Cannon, 18 Gratt. 387.

†__Same—Same—Employment of Grantor to Conduct Business.__—So, also, a provision in the deed, that one of the grantors shall conduct the business under the control and direction of the trustee, who may at any time on his motion, and shall at request of creditors, sell the property at auction, is not fraudulent per se, so as to avoid the deed.

See the principal case cited in Gordon v. Cannon, 18 Gratt. 400; Catt v. Knabe Mfg. Co., 93 Va. 740, 26 S. E. Rep. 246; Harden v. Wagner, 22 W. Va. 366, 368; Landeman v. Wilson, 29 W. Va. 724, 2 S. E. Rep. 215 (dissenting opinion of SNYDER, J.); Conaway v. Stealey, 44 W. Va. 169, 28 S. E. Rep. 796; in all of which cases the principal case is cited as authority.

__Same—Inconsistent Reservation by Grantor.__—In Perry v. Shen. Nat. Bk., 27 Gratt. 757, the court said: "It was held by this court in Lang v. Lee, 3 Rand. 410, 'that a deed of trust made by the debtor professedly for the indemnity of certain preferred creditors, reserving to the grantor a power over the property conveyed, inconsistent with the avowed purposes of the trust, and adequate to the defeat thereof, was, because of such reservation, void as to any creditor thereby postponed.' This case, and the doctrines it established was affirmed and approved in the cases of Sheppards v. Turpin, 3 Gratt. 373; Addington v. Etheridge, 12 Gratt. 436; and Marks v. Hill, 15 Gratt. 400; and may now be held as the settled law of this state." See also, the principal case cited as to this proposition in Wray v. Davenport, 79 Va. 24; Saunders v. Waggoner, 82 Va. 323; Hughes v. Epling, 93 Va. 426, 25 S. E. Rep. 105. See also, foot-note to Perry v. Shen. Nat. Bk., 27 Gratt. 755; foot-note to Quarles v. Kerr, 14 Gratt. 48.

In 5 Va. Law Reg. 563, the editor says that careful practitioners are accustomed to study anew the famous case of Marks v. Hill, 15 Gratt. 400, whenever called upon to draw general deeds of assignments, particularly those covering a stock of merchandise which it is deemed desirable to close out in the course of trade, and to authorize the trustee to replenish with staple articles necessary to retain old customers and aid in disposing of the stock.* The editorial closes by saying that the Virginia practitioner, experienced or inexperienced, would do well to carefully study the two cases of Marks v. Hill, and Hurst v. Leckie, 97 Va. 550, 34 S. E. Rep. 464, before undertaking to draw elaborate deeds of assignments.

‡__Partnership—Application of Social Effects to Pay Individual Debts.__—See principal case cited in Snyder v. Lunsford, 9 W. Va. 229.

§As to assignments for the benefit of creditors, see further, monographic note on "Voluntary and Fraudulent Conveyances"; monographic note on "Assignments for the Benefit of Creditors."

Digitized by Google

ground that it is fraudulent on its face, the bill does not ask for an account, but there is a prayer for general relief. Though the deed is sustained as valid, the plaintiffs are entitled to an account.

6. Same—Same—Same—Appellate Practice.—In such case, the court below having dismissed the bill generally, and it not appearing that the plaintiffs asked for an account or that the court considered the question, the appellate court will affirm the decree sustaining the deed, and reverse it as to the account; but with costs to the appellee.

This was a bill filed in the Circuit court of Petersburg in January 1856, by 401 Grandison F. Marks and *others, judgment and execution creditors of Hill & Nichols, to set aside a deed of trust executed by William R. Hill and Dudley Nichols, to R. R. Collier in June 1854, to secure certain debts therein mentioned, upon the grounds that upon its face it was fraudulent in law and void as to creditors. Hill & Nichols commenced business in Petersburg in 1853, their stock consisting of household ware, fancy articles, and "notions" generally; and in June 1854, finding the business unprofitable, they made the deed complained of in the bill; by which, to secure a debt which the deed states Hill owed to William A. Bragg of two thousand five hundred dollars, and an accommodation note for two thousand dollars, which had been discounted for Nichols at the Farmers Bank, and endorsed first by R. S. Thompson and second by Collier, and to secure debts of the firm of Hill & Nichols, contained in a schedule to the deed, they conveyed to Collier all their stock of goods, effects and credits, of which an inventory had just been taken, in trust that Collier, with the consent in writing signed by William A. Bragg and R. S. Thompson, should permit Nichols, as agent, to carry on said business, the stock of which was thereby assigned, with authority to replenish the said stock, for the purpose of paying off the debt of Hill to Bragg and the note to Nichols at the Farmers Bank. And forasmuch as the said Collier had made himself liable to pay the debt to Bragg, as was understood between Bragg and Collier, Hill surrendered all interest he had in the business of Hill & Nichols. And in trust also that Collier should proceed to dispose of the effects of the firm and collect the credits specified in a schedule annexed to the deed, and pay the debts of Hill & Nichols, specified in another schedule. And out of the collections of said credits and any sale of said effects, if any, first to pay the expenses of the trust, including for the trustee a commission 402 of five cents in the dollar, *out of all the trust subject; and then pay, first, the "borrowed money," and next pay ratably the debts in the aforesaid schedule.

An it was stipulated by the parties to the deed, that the agency of Nichols should be arrested whenever Bragg, Thompson or Collier, or any other three of the creditors, should in writing give direction to Collier to make sale of the stock of goods by auction, in such way as Collier might judge best for the benefit of all interested. And after satisfying the trust, Collier should pay over any balance of proceeds and deliver any remnant of the effects and of the stock of goods to the order of Nichols.

The bill charged, that at the time of making the deed William R. Hill and Dudley Nichols were utterly insolvent; and that the plaintiffs' executions against them were returned "no effects:" and that appeared from the return thereon. The objections to the deed were: First—That the partnership effects were conveyed to pay the individual debt of Hill to Bragg and of Nichols to the Farmers Bank; debts which were contracted by each of them to raise the capital which each was to put into the partnership. Second—That Nichols was authorized to carry on the business with the stock conveyed by the deed, without limitation as to time, and with authority ot the agent to replenish the stock. And it is charged that the trustee had continued through the agency of Nichols to carry on the business up to the time of filing the bill or a short time previous.

Hill, Nichols, Collier and Bragg answered the bill separately, though all concur in the grounds of defence. They deny all fraudulent intent in making the deed, and aver that its provisions were made with the purpose to advance the interest of the creditors; all of whom were intended to be included, though some were inadvertently omitted. They say that Hill not 403 *being able to raise the sum of money which by their agreement he was to put into the business, he, with the assent of Nichols, gave to Bragg, from whom he borrowed the money, the note of Hill & Nichols for it: and this is proved by the note which Bragg exhibited with his answer. They say further, that Nichols borrowed his capital from the Farmers Bank, with Thompson and Collier as his sureties; but that as the partnership was bound for Hill's capital, it was thought but reasonable, and it was agreed between Hill & Nichols, that the debt of the latter to the Farmers Bank should also be paid out of the partnership effects; and as both debts were for borrowed money which had been laid out in the purchase of their stock in trade, and was represented by the goods in hand and the debts due them, that it was proper these debts should be preferred. As to Collier's interest in these debts, he was not bound for that of Bragg but by his signing the deed, which he supposed furnished him the means of paying it; and he was the second endorser on the debt due to the Farmers Bank; Mr. Thompson the first endorser, having ample means to pay it.

It was further stated, that as soon as the deed of trust was executed, possession of all the property was delivered to the trustee. That the stock, consisting of miscellaneous wares, fancy goods and "notions," would have been ruinously sacrificed at public auction: many of the articles could be "worked off" in the course of trade, which would be thrown away if forced upon the market. That for the benefit of the creditors, the deed gave to the trustee a qualified discretion as to the time and mode of disposing of the property. That to secure custom and work off the bad stock, it was necessary to renew the supply of such articles as were in common use and would command ready sale. And that it was not for the purpose of continuing the business, but simply to enable the trustee to 404 *dispose of the whole stock to the best advantage, that he was authorized, with the consent of the cestuis que trust, to replenish the stock until opportunity should occur to sell it to advantage. That Nichols, from his acquaintance with the business, was thought best fitted to act as agent for the trustee: he retained no right under the deed to manage the property. That in fact he acted as such agent only until he obtained employment elsewhere about the 1st of January 1855.

Digitized by Google

The cause came on to be heard on the 4th of June 1855, upon the bill, answers, the replications thereto and exhibits, when the court held that the deed had been executed in good faith, and was not invalid for any thing on its face; and therefore dismissed the bill with costs. And the plaintiffs thereupon applied to this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Joynes, for the appellants, insisted:

1st. That the deed was void, because it provided that Nichols should carry on the business. And he distinguished between the cases in which the trustee employed the grantor as his agent, to act for him, subject to his control, and for whose acts the trustee was responsible as for his own; which he admitted might be done; and the case in which it was a condition of the deed that the grantor should act; and therefore deriving his authority from the source from which the trustee derived his, he was necessarily independent of him to the extent of the authority conferred upon or retained by him. He referred to McClurg v. Lecky, 3 Penr. & Watts' R. 83; Nicholson v. Leavitt, 4 Sanf. S. C. R. 252, 273; Shattuck v. Freeman, 1 Metc. R. 10; Vernon & al. v. Morton, 8 Dana's R. 247.

2d. That the deed was void, because Nichols was authorized to continue and carry on the business, and for this purpose to replenish the stock: thus subjecting the whole trust subject to the casualties
405 incident *to the business, by which it might be lost or wasted. And again he distinguished between the cases in which the business was allowed to be carried on for a time with a view to the more advantageous disposal of the trust subject; and the case in which authority was given to carry on the business indefinitely, and to replenish the stock in order to give it vitality and success. He referred to Janes v. Whitbread, 5 Eng. Law & Equ. R. 431, as a case of the first class, and Owen & Wish v. Body & als., 31 Eng. C. L. R. 254, as establishing the principle of the other; and he insisted that this case came within the principle of Owen, &c. v. Body; Lang v. Lee, 3 Rand. 410, 425; Sheppards v. Turpin, 3 Gratt. 373; Spence v. Bagwell, 6 Gratt. 444; Addington v. Etheridge, 12 Gratt. 436; American Exchange Bank v. Inloes, 7 Maryl. R. 380; Whallon v. Scott, 10 Watts' R. 237; Hafner v. Irwin, 1 Ired. Law R. 490.

3d. That the debts to Bragg and to the Farmers Bank were the individual debts of Hill & Nichols; and they being insolvent when they made the deed, could not convey the partnership assets to pay them to the injury of the partnership creditors; and if the debt of Hill to Bragg, being secured by the partnership note, might be paid out of the partnership assets, that was not the case as to Nichols' debt to the bank; and there was no consideration to sustain Hill's conveyance to secure that debt. The deed therefore was void as to both, or at least one of these debts; and as it did not give the surplus of the fund devoted to the satisfaction of these debts to the other creditors secured by the deed, the appellants were entitled to have this fund applied to satisfy their debts. On the last point, he referred to Coly. Part. § 914 to 918; Tate v. Liggat, 2 Leigh 84. As to the power of one partner to convey assets of the partnership to pay the debts of the other, he referred to Hutchison v. Smith, 406 *7 Paige's R. 26; Nicholson v. Leavitt, 4 Sanf. S. C. R. 252; Burtus v. Tisdall, 4 Barb. S. C. R. 571; Collins v. Hood, 4 McLean's R. 186; Ferson v. Monroe, 1 Foster's New H. R. 462; Kirby v. Schoonmaker, 3 Barb. Ch. R. 46; Allen v. Chester Valley Co., 21 Conn. R. 130; Murrill v. Neill, 8 How. U. S. R. 414; McCullough v. Sommerville, 8 Leigh 415.

4th. That the court erred in dismissing the bill, the plaintiffs below being entitled to an account, and to have the surplus of the trust fund after the debts provided for in the deed were satisfied. Janney v. Barnes, 11 Leigh 100; Skipwith v. Cunningham, 8 Leigh 271. And that this might be had under the prayer for general relief, he referred to these cases, and also to Watts v. Waddell, 6 Peters' R. 389; Bailey v. Burton, 8 Wend. R. 339.

John Lyon, for the appellees, insisted:

1st. That the object of Hill & Nichols in providing for a private sale of the stock of goods, was to benefit their creditors, not themselves. They gave up everything they had, and still remained liable for their debts. That from the character of the goods, to sell them at auction was to throw them away; and if they were to be retailed, it was necessary to replenish the stock with such articles as were of common use and frequently called for. But the deed showed that the purpose was not to continue the business for profit, but to sell to the best advantage, and thus close up the trust in a way the most advantageous to the creditors. And that Bragg, Thompson or the trustee, or any three of the other creditors, could have a sale of the goods whenever they chose to require it. The case therefore came clearly within the principle of the first class of cases referred to by the counsel for the appellants. Janes v. Whitbread, 5 Eng. Law & Equ. R. 431.

Digitized by Google

407 *2d. That Nichols was simply the agent of the trustee. All would admit he was the best qualified agent that could be obtained to act whilst the goods were to be retailed at private sale, for no one questioned his integrity; and his agency could be terminated at any time by the creditors interested in the trust subject.

3d. That whilst it was true that the partners being insolvent could not make a voluntary assignment of the assets, yet they could convey the assets or their interest in them to satisfy their individual debts. Story Part. § 358 to § 363. And that in this case Bragg's debt bound the partnership; and Hill certainly received a valuable consideration in his release from that debt, for his conveyance to secure the debt of Nichols to the Farmers Bank. And he insisted that the result of the cases cited by the counsel for the appellants, was that the property of the partnership belongs to both the partners, and neither is entitled to dispose of the interest of the other, whether they are solvent or insolvent. But that where both unite they may convey the partnership property, effectually, for a valuable consideration.

4th. That the plaintiffs below could only have asked for an account under their prayer for general relief. That a party can only have relief according to the case made in his bill; and where the bill states the case for one specific object, the court will not give a different relief. Nickell & Miller v. Handly, 10 Gratt. 336. In this case, the bill does not allege that there will be a surplus of the trust fund, after satisfying the objects of the trust, but charges throughout that there would be no such surplus: And this is admitted by the defendants. He referred to Mitford's Plead. 39, note; Colton v. Ross, 2 Paige's R. 396; Foster v. Cook, 1 Hawks' R. 509; Lloyd v. Brewster, 4 Paige's R. 537; Nicholson v. Leavitt, 4 Sanf. S. C. R. 313; Story's Equ. Pl. § 40, 41, 42, 43; James v. Bird's adm'r, 8 Leigh 510.

408 *DANIEL, J. The clause in the deed, mainly assailed by the counsel of the appellants in his argument here, is that which provides that the trustee Collier, with the consent in writing of Bragg and Thompson, shall permit Nichols, one of the grantors, to carry on the mercantile business, in which he and his partner Hill had been engaged, with authority to replenish the stock of goods on hand. Such a provision, it was argued, was of itself sufficient to render the deed invalid, and the case of Owen & Wish v. Body and others, 31 Eng. C. L. R. 254, and several American cases, were mainly relied on in support of the proposition.

In the case of Owen & Wish v. Body, the debtor, who was engaged in the business of an inn-keeper, by his deed of assignment conveyed to Owen & Wish, his principal creditors, all his household goods, stock in trade, debts, estate and effects whatever, upon trust that they should, with all convenient speed, in such manner, at such time or times, and on such terms as they should think most advantageous, sell the goods and chattels; and should also, so long as they might think it advantageous to do so, continue and carry on the business of the debtor, either in his name, or in their own names. The assignees were empowered to purchase horses, carriages, and all other articles and things necessary to keeping up the stock in trade, and carrying on the business. Out of the moneys arising from a sale or the profits of the business, Owen & Wish were first to retain a sufficiency to pay their own debts, and then, from time to time, to distribute the residue ratably among such of the other creditors as should execute the deed within three months, as often as there should be sufficient money on hand to pay two shillings in the pound upon or in respect of said last mentioned debts.

The deed further provided, that the assignees, on being requested in writing by the major part in value of the other creditors, should, instead of continuing 409 *on the said business or trade, proceed to sell and convert into money immediately all the goods, stock in trade, effects, &c.

The assignment was declared invalid; Lord Denman, C. J., speaking for the court, simply stating that the ground of the decision was, that "the deed imposed such terms as might have constituted a partnership among the persons executing it, and those were terms to which creditors were not bound to submit."

That case, however, though not overruled, has been very much narrowed in its application by more recent decisions of the English courts: Janes v. Whitbread and others, 5 Eng. L. & Eq. R. 431; Coate and another v. Williams, 9 Eng. L. & Eq. R. 481. In the former of these two cases the deed, after authorizing the trustee to sell the property and pay the debts, proceeds to provide, that "it shall be lawful for the said trustee also to employ the said James Ellis (the grantor), or any other person or persons, in winding up the affairs of him the said James Ellis, and in collecting and getting in his estate hereby assigned, and in carrying on his trade, if thought expedient by him; and to allow to the said James Ellis, or any other person or persons so employed as aforesaid, out of the said trust estate, such sum and sums as to the said trustee shall seem proper." The court of common pleas sustained the deed. They construed the provision for carrying on the trade as merely authorizing the trustee to go on with the trade with a view to winding up. They said that the main object of the deed was to have the property realized; and that the carrying on the trade was no more than ancillary to that object: and in this they said the case was to be distinguished from the case of Owen v. Body, in which they thought it apparent that the main object of the deed was to continue the business of the debtor in a spirited manner for the benefit of the preferred creditors. In Coate v. Wil-410 liams, *the clause in respect to carrying on the trade was almost identical in terms with that in Janes v. Whitbread. The Court of exchequer, following the decision in Janes v. Whitbread, held that there was nothing objectionable in such a provision: Pollock, C. B., observing that the deed was in precisely the same terms with a printed form which might be had at any law stationer's in London.

Digitized by Google

Deeds with like provisions have been frequently sustained by the courts of our sister states. As, in the case of De Forest v. Bacon & another, 2 Conn. R. 633; where the deed conveyed all the stock of a country store, a large quantity of boxes and brushes, finished and unfinished, in a brush and box factory, together with a quantity of raw materials for making the same; upon trust to the trustees to sell and pay the debt, and with power to the trustees to conduct and carry on the manufactory of brushes of various kinds until all the materials then on hand should be consumed, and to purchase such articles as might be necessary to manufacture and work up all the raw materials then on hand. Such a provision in a conveyance the court said did not make it fraudulent per se; it could only be evidence of fraud proper to be left to the jury; and as the question of fraud had been fairly submitted to the jury, who had negatived the fraud, there was no ground of complaint.

A like decision was made in the case of Kendall v. The New England Carpet Co. 13 Conn. R. 383. There the assignment was by the company of all its goods, materials, effects, &c., to its principal endorser, for the purpose of indemnifying him, with power to the assignee to work up the stock on hand, to make purchases of any materials necessary for that purpose, and to pay all expenses incurred from the avails of the property assigned. Williams, C. J., in delivering the opinion of the court sustaining the validity of the deed, 411 *said, that the power in question was one which might be greatly beneficial to all the parties connected with the affairs of a large manufacturing establishment; that the sudden suspension of the operations of such a concern, and the sale of the stock in the various stages of manufacture, in parcels or together, would necessarily greatly diminish the value of the property to the creditors, and impair their security; that the power, it was true, was one which might be abused, but that the interest of vigilant creditors would generally prevent or detect any improper exercise of the power.

Similar views prevailed in the cases of Cunningham v. Freeborn, 11 Wend. R. 240; Foster v. The Saco Manufacturing Co., 12 Pick. R. 451; Woodward v. Marshall, 22 Pick. R. 468; Robins & als. v. Embry & als., 1 Smedes & Marsh. Ch. R. 207; and Dunham & Dimon v. Waterman, 3 Duer's R. 166.

I have been unable to perceive that there is any necessary conflict between these decisions and the case of The American Exchange Bank v. Inloes and others, 7 Maryl. R. 380, and Whallon v. Scott, 10 Watts' R. 237, cited by the counsel for the appellants. The deed in the former case empowered the trustee to sell the property, at his discretion, gradually, in the manner and on the terms in which, in course of their business, the grantors has sold and disposed of their merchandise. No time was fixed for the winding up of the business, and no power was given to the creditors to have the trust closed. The court, after adverting to several other features in the deed which they regarded as indicating a fraudulent design on the part of the grantor, said that the deed was simply a contrivance, through the instrumentality of a trustee, to provide for carrying on the business of the concern in the same manner in which it had been before conducted, and for an indefinite period, free of all control or interference on the part of creditors; and that a debtor could not thus postpone 412 his creditors *to an indefinite period without their assent. It was, however, conceded by the court that there might be cases in which the stipulation in question would be proper, where it was designed to be ancillary to the winding up of the debtor's business, or was designed more effectually to promote the interests of the creditors, and not intended for the benefit of the debtor.

In the case of Whallon v. Scott, the deed was held to be invalid, chiefly on two grounds: First, that by the language of the assignment the assignor parted only with the possession of the effects assigned, and not with the property, for a limited time, during which the court said it was impossible to say who was the owner; and 2dly, that whilst the assignees were empowered during the interval to sell the goods by retail, no appropriation of the proceeds was provided for. I see nothing in the facts of the case, or in the language of the court, which would make the decision or the opinion of the court in that case authority for denying to a debtor, in making an assignment for the benefit of creditors, the power to enter into stipulations for the winding up of the business, as were sustained in the cases I have cited.

In the deed under consideration, the clause conferring upon Nichols, as agent, the power to carry on the business and replenish the stock, does not in terms declare (nor is it in any other part of the deed in terms declared), that the power is given for the purpose of winding up the business of the concern. But on reading this clause in connection with the other provisions of the deed, and more especially the provisions contained in the last paragraph, the true construction to be put on the provisions directing the manner of disposing of the goods and their proceeds, taken as a whole, is, I think, that Collier is vested with the power, as soon as he shall deem it advisable, or as soon as he shall be re-

Digitized by Google

413 quested in writing, either by *Bragg or Thompson, the preferred creditors, or by any three of the other creditors, to make sale of said goods at auction, in such way as the said Collier shall judge best for the benefit of the parties interested; and that in the meantime Collier, with the consent of said Bragg and Thompson, may employ Nichols as his agent to sell the goods by private sales, and replenish the stock whilst so carrying on the business; and that the proceeds of the sales, whether of the sales made by Collier at auction, or of those made by Nichols whilst continuing the business, are to be applied in payment of the two preferred debts. So construing the deed, I cannot see that there is any provision in it inconsistent with an honest surrender by a debtor to his creditors, of his property for the payment of his debts. The grantors have parted completely with all their property, and with all dominion and control over it. They have devoted all their goods, effects and credits to the payment of their debts. Without insisting on any release by their creditors, they make an entire surrender of their property, its profits and proceeds. It is true, that in the event of the stock being sold by Nichols privately, he would probably derive a benefit from the clause conferring the power to sell in that manner. The goods would in all probability bring higher prices, and consequently go further in discharging the debts for which he was bound, if thus sold, than if forced off immediately at public auction. Still any benefit, thus accruing to Nichols, would not be due to any reservation or stipulation in the deed on which he would have a right to insist against the consent of his creditors; but would come to him, incidentally, from the exercise of a power, the control of which, by the terms of the deed, was in no respect with him, but wholly with the creditors and the trustee.

Nor is any ground for impeaching
414 the fairness of the *deed to be found in the provision empowering Collier to employ Nichols as his agent. It is not stated in the deed nor averred in the bill what compensation Nichols was to receive for his services as agent, nor indeed that he was to receive any; and all suspicion, that it was one of the purposes of the deed to create a profitable employment or lucrative agency for one of the grantors, is entirely shut out by the consideration that the agency might be discontinued at any moment by the action of Collier, or Bragg, or Thompson, or any three of the other creditors. The power in the trustee to appoint the debtor his agent, was conferred by the deeds in each of the cases of Janes v. Whitbread and Coate v. Williams, with the further power to allow him out of the trust estate such sum as to the trustee should seem proper; and there was no suggestion in either case that such a feature vitiated the assignment. It was however argued here by the counsel of the appellants, that even though the deed should be construed as intending no especial benefit to Nichols, it yet conferred powers upon the preferred creditors to which the other creditors ought not to be bound to submit; that whilst Bragg and Thompson might be willing to encounter the hazards of continuing the business, in the hope of thereby more effectually insuring the payment of their entire debts out of the trust subject, they had no right, without the consent of the other creditors, to subject the estate of the common debtor to such vicissitudes and risks.

It seems to me, that a satisfactory answer to this is to be found in the check upon the powers of the trustee and the preferred creditors, which the deed itself provides. It is difficult to suppose that Collier or Bragg or Thompson would be willing to embark in any heavy expenditures for the purchase of a new stock of goods, in the face of a provision giving to any three of the other creditors provided for in the 415 *deed, the power at any moment to order a discontinuance of the business and a sale of the goods at auction. And hence arises fairly a very strong inference that the deed was not planned or framed with a view to speculation, or any protracted continuance of the business for the benefit of the preferred creditors. It is true, that the creditors in the second class are not invested by the deed with any interest in the surplus which might arise from the sale of the stock of goods, after paying the debts of the preferred creditors: the stock of goods alone being appropriated to the security and satisfaction of Bragg and Thompson, and the credits and other effects alone, to the security and satisfaction of the other creditors. Still, as there is no release by any of the creditors, the creditors in either class have, notwithstanding, and independent of the deed, an interest in seeing that the property devoted to the satisfaction of the creditors in the other class, is made to go as far as possible in discharging the debts of the common debtor. They also have a further interest in the subject, growing out of the fact that the expenses of the trust are to be paid out of the effects and credits. The presence of these interests in the creditors of the second class, in connection with their power over the subject before adverted to, exhibit such a check imposed by the deed, on the conduct of the preferred creditors, as goes very far, it seems to me, in explaining the deed, and in showing that it was not in the scheme of Collier or Bragg or Thompson, that the trade should be carried on any longer than might be found necessary for the judicious winding up of the concern. And giving a fair and reasonable construction to all the provisions of the deed, and looking to the nature of the subject conveyed, I am of the opinion that the case, in respect of the feature under consideration, is within the influence of the several precedents I have cited, where features of 416 the kind were *held not to invalidate the assignments; that the authority given to replenish the stock of goods was merely designed, as the appellees in their answers aver it was, to enable the trustee and agent to make, occasionally, purchases of the more attractive articles, the presence of which would invite and retain custom, and thus facilitate the "working off" of the less attractive and less saleable portion of the stock; and that the carrying on of the business as provided for, was looked to by the framers of the deed not as one of its main objects and ends, but as a temporary expedient or means which, instead of delaying, would in all probability hasten the judicious conversion of the goods into money.

Digitized by Google

I do not think that either of the cases of Lang v. Lee, 3 Rand. 410; Sheppards v. Turpin, 3 Gratt. 373; and Addington v. Etheridge, 12 Gratt. 436; cited by the counsel for the appellants, can be made to apply to the deed here. In the last of these cases, the grantor retained to himself the possession of the goods, with the right to sell them until default should be made in the payment of the debts secured, and until the trustee should be requested by any of the creditors to close the deed; and though it is conceded in the second instruction asked in the case, that by the provisions of the deed the grantor was to account to the trustee, the deed in fact contained no such provisions, and was wholly silent as to the proceeds of the sales which the grantor should make during the possession retained by him. And in the other two cases, the deeds were even more obviously objectionable than the deed in Addington v. Etheridge. We should, I think, run counter to no decision of this court in declaring that the deed here is not void on the score of the objection under consideration; and for the reasons already stated, I am for so declaring.

Nor do I think that the validity of 417 the deed is either *wholly or partially destroyed by the fact that the partnership effects are conveyed for the purpose of securing the payment of the two thousand dollar note of Nichols to the Farmers Bank. Both partners were present, assenting to the whole arrangement, and uniting in the execution of the deed. There were no executions against their effects. They had done nothing to impair their dominion over their property. They were not under the operation of any bankrupt or quasi bankrupt or insolvent laws regulating the disposition of their assets. Under such circumstances, I do not doubt that the two partners combined had the same power and control over their social effects as each one had over his own individual and separate estate. Each one had a right, for a valuable and adequate consideration, to make a bona fide sale of his interest in the concern, or his share in the effects to the other. There was nothing to forbid their making a fair division of the social effects between themselves as the equities between them required; and if upon a settlement of their transactions one was indebted to the other, the former had the same right to apply his share of the effects to the payment of the debt that he had to apply his separate estate to the payment of any other debt he might owe.

Neither of them, it is true, had a right to give away his property, whether social or separate, to the prejudice of his creditors of either class, nor to pledge such property for the payment of the debts of others, for which he was in no wise bound, so as thereby to defeat the payment of debts for which he was bound. But if either of the partners had contracted a debt in his own name alone, of which the equities between the partners would require that the other should pay his share, I can see no good reason why the partners might not agree to apply the assets of the firm to the payment of such debt, or to give a deed of trust 418 upon *their partnership effects for the purpose of securing the payment, though the effect of making such an application of the assets, or of giving such a deed, might be to defeat the payment of debts contracted in the name of the firm.

As authority for these propositions, I would refer to Ex parte Ruffin, 6 Ves. R. 119; Ex parte Williams, 11 Ves. R. 3; Story on Partnership 508; and to the cases cited in the notes to Silk v. Prime, 2 Leading Cas. in Eq. (3d Am. ed.) p. 72, 331-2-3, 71 Law Libr.; and more especially, Siegel v. Childrey, 4 Casey's R. 279.

Now, it is stated in the bill that the debt from Hill to Bragg (the two thousand five hundred dollars) and the debt from Nichols to the bank (the two thousand dollars), were due for money borrowed by Hill and Nichols, respectively, to put into the business of their said partnership, as their respective shares of in-put capital. And in their answers, Hill and Nichols state that each was to put in two thousand five hundred dollars; that in order to carry out the agreement, Nichols borrowed two thousand dollars of the bank, on his individual note, endorsed by Thompson; and that Hill, being unable to raise his two thousand five hundred dollars out of his private resources, or upon his individual credit, borrowed that sum of Bragg, on the note of the firm of Hill & Nichols. Bragg makes a statement to the same effect in his answer, and files with it, as an exhibit, a copy of the record of a judgment obtained by him upon the note, by the confession of Hill and Nichols, and also a copy of the note on which the judgment was founded. The origin and character of the two debts are thus sufficiently shown; and indeed I did not understand the counsel for the appellant as contending that the record was wanting in proof in that regard. Nichols and Hill each also further state, that, such being the origin and character of the two debts, and 419 the money derived *from each loan having gone into the capital and business of the firm, and being represented by a corresponding amount of the goods and effects of the partnership, they deemed it just and proper, and so agreed, that the two debts should be placed on the same footing, and should both be paid out of the assets of the firm. It is true, that it is not stated in the answers when this agreement was made, whether at the time when Hill borrowed the two thousand five hundred dollars and gave the note of the firm for its payment, or at the time of executing the deed, or at some point of time in the interval; and I am inclined to infer from the answers, that the agreement was, most probably, not made till about the time of their coming to the conclusion to make the deed. But I do not regard the date of the agreement as material to the rights of the parties. It is enough, in the view which I take of the case, that the equities between the parties fully justified such an agreement; that they did so agree and carry out their agreement in the deed; as sufficiently appears by the deed itself.

Digitized by Google

It would be a very harsh and unreasonable judgment, as respects Nichols, to infer from his merely allowing Hill to raise his two thousand five hundred dollars on the note of the firm, that he thereby contemplated and agreed that in a final settlement of the partnership said note should, as between him and Hill, rank as a partnership debt, and be paid out of the assets of the firm, whilst he should be left to pay the note of two thousand dollars out of his private means. So to infer, would be in effect to suppose that Nichols intended to make a donation to Hill of the half of the two thousand dollars put by him into the concern, inasmuch as Nichols would be clearly two thousand dollars in advance to the firm more than Hill, if in a settlement of their affairs the two thousand five hundred dollars should be treated as the debt of 420 the firm, *and the two thousand dollar note as the debt of Nichols alone.

It is true, as it respects the owners of the two debts, that whilst Bragg stood as the creditor of the firm, the bank stood as the creditor of Nichols alone. Yet as between the partners in settling their transactions and adjusting their burdens inter se, Nichols had, as I conceive, a clear right in equity to insist that the debt of two thousand dollars should be placed on the same footing with the debt of two thousand five hundred dollars. This being so, and there being nothing further in the record to show how the parties stood in respect of their advances to the firm, it cannot be said that the deed as to Hill is, in respect to the two thousand dollars, without consideration, or that he is appropriating his share or interest in the effects of the firm to the payment of the debt of another, for which he was not bound. And upon a view of the whole case, I am of the opinion that the appellants have failed to show that the deed is void or in any respect invalid.

The appellants, however, have a right to subject the surplus proceeds of the trust subject, if any, after the satisfaction of the debts secured in the deed, to the discharge of their judgments. The bill, it is true, does not specifically ask for such relief. It seeks to set aside the deed, and to charge the entire subject conveyed with the payment of the judgments. There is, however, a prayer for general relief, under which, according to the decisions of this court in Skipwith v. Cunningham, 8 Leigh 271, and Janney v. Barnes, 11 Leigh 100, the appellants were entitled to have the surplus applied in discharge of their demands.

In each of those cases, as here, the bill was framed with a view to the setting the deed aside; in neither was there any specific prayer for an account. Yet this court, in each case, though concurring in 421 opinion *with the court below, that the deeds were valid, held that, under the prayer for general relief, the surplus might be decreed to the appellant, reversed the decree dismissing the bill, and remanded the cause for an account.

Upon the authority of those cases, I am of the opinion that we should affirm the decree so far as it dismisses so much of the bill as seeks to avoid the deed, whether in whole or in part, and reversing on account of the error in failing to direct an account, to remand the cause with instructions to the Circuit court to order an account of the trust fund, unless the benefit of such an order is waived by the appellants, and proceed with the cause as equity shall require; but if the appellants waive an account, to dismiss the residue of the bill with costs to the appellees.

I am further of the opinion, that notwithstanding the reversal to the extent just indicated, the appellees should have their costs in this court. It appears, I think, satisfactorily, from the pleadings and the opinion and decree of the Circuit court, that the questions touching the validity of the deed were alone litigated between the parties and actually passed upon by the court; and that the failure to order an account, or to submit to the appellants whether they would have an account, was a mere omission, proceeding from an oversight on the part of the court, and not from any error of opinion: an omission consequently which we may well presume would not have occurred, or would have been promptly corrected, but for the neglect of the appellants to bring the matter directly to the notice of the court. Under such circumstances, as there may be a surplus of the fund after satisfying the purposes of the deed, whilst, in order to avoid the possible injustice which might be done to the appellants, by wholly affirming the decree dismissing the bill, it becomes necessary to reverse

422 and remand for an account, *we shall be fully justified by the decision of this court in Handly v. Snodgrass, 9 Leigh 484, and numerous cases there cited by Judge Tucker, as also by several cases since decided (see Blessing's adm'r v. Beatty, 1 Rob. R. 287; Williamson's ex'or v. Howard, 2 Rob. R. 39; and Boyce's adm'r v. Smith, 9 Gratt. 704); in decreeing the costs of the appeal to the appellees. In all of these cases, the appellants succeeded in obtaining the correcting of errors, which, if allowed to stand, might have operated to their prejudice; yet, in each case, the costs of the appeal were given to the appellee. In some instances, the decree of the Circuit court was affirmed without prejudice; in others the decree was amended, and as amended, affirmed; and in others, the decree was reversed with costs to the appellees. The last mentioned mode of correcting this error is, I think, the one most appropriate here.

Digitized by Google

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Daniel, J.

Decree reversed, with costs to the appellees.

---

423 *Seaburn's Ex'or v. Seaburn & als.

October Term, 1859, Richmond.

1. Case Approved.—The case of Gallego's ex'ors v. The Attorney General, 3 Leigh 450, recognized as law, except so far as it may have been modified by statute.
2. Church Property—Statute Authorizes "Conveyance" Not "Devise."—The act, Code, ch. 77, § 8, p. 362, does not authorize a devise of land for the use of a religious congregation, but only a conveyance by deed.†
3. Same—Statute—Bequest of Money to Build Church—Validity of.—A fortiori the act does not authorize a bequest of money to be expended in building a church at a specified place, or for the support of the pastor of such church.

Nathaniel Seaburn, late of the county of Warwick, died without issue (having never been married), leaving a will bearing date the 7th day of January 1859, which, after providing for a sale of all his estate, real and personal, on certain terms therein mentioned, contains the following clauses:

"3d. I desire my executor to see to and have built, a good and comfortable brick church, on the land attached to Mulberry island church, and to pay for the same out of money arising from the sales of my estate, and I desire that said church shall have a comfortable gallery for colored persons, to be for the old side Baptist denomination.

"4th. I desire that two thousand dollars of the money arising from the sale of my estate be invested in state stock or in some other good stock, and the interest or dividend on said stock to be applied to the support of a competent minister to preach to the church desired to be built, and the church in York county called Upper Grafton, 424 provided the same minister *will have pastoral charge and preach to both churches, for the pastoral support as aforesaid. Should both churches become able to have separate pastors, then I do not withhold said support.

"5th. I desire my executor to have built, a good and comfortable brick church at the place called Upper Grafton, York county, for the benefit of the old side Baptist denomination, provided there is money enough after the church at Mulberry island is finished and the two thousand dollars invested in stock; said church to have a comfortable gallery for colored persons, and to be paid for out of any money left in the hands of my executor.

"6th. Should there be any surplus money belonging to my estate after finishing both churches which I have desired to be built, and after investing the two thousand dollars in stock as above desired, it is my desire that said surplus be invested in the same manner as the two thousand dollars, in state stock or some other good stock, and the interest or dividend on said surplus to be applied as the interest or dividend on the $2,000, that is for the payment of a minister to preach for the churches which I have desired to be built. But should the said interest or dividend amount to more than a fair compensation for the support of a preacher for said church, then it is my desire that such overplus of dividend be applied to keeping such churches in order."

In the 7th and last clause, Stafford G. Cooke the appellant is appointed executor. A codicil is annexed to the will bearing the same date, and in these words:

"It is my wish that all moneys which I may have due me by bond, note, open account or otherwise, be applied in the same way and for the same purposes, that is to say, for the two churches, as the money which will arise from the sale of both my real and personal estate."

425 *The will and codicil were admitted to probate, and the executor, having qualified, was proceeding to execute the same, when the appellees, claiming to be

*Case Approved.—In the first headnote of the principal case, Gallego v. The Attorney General, 3 Leigh 450, is recognized as law (that is that charitable trusts are void at common law) except so far as changed by statute. The following cases cite and approve the principal case: Carskadon v. Torreyson, 17 W. Va. 84, 85; Kelly v. Love, 20 Gratt. 130, and note; Com. v. Levy, 23 Gratt. 40; Bible Society v. Pendleton, 7 W. Va. 87; Knox v. Knox, 9 W. Va. 142, 145; Pack v. Shanklin, 43 W. Va. 316, 27 S. E. Rep. 394; Wilson v. Perry, 29 W. Va. 189, 1 S. E. Rep. 317; Wilmoth v. Wilmoth, 34 W. Va. 436, 12 S. E. Rep. 734. See Brooke v. Shacklett, 13 Gratt. 300, and note.

In Protestant Episcopal Education Society v. Churchman, 80 Va. 765, the case of Gallego v. The Attorney General, 3 Leigh 450, is disapproved and it is held that the bequest "to the trustees Protestant Episcopal Education Society of Virginia, said bequest to be used exclusively for educating poor young men for the Episcopal ministry upon the basis of evangelical principles as now established," is not contrary to public policy, but is valid both at common law and under Code 1873, ch. 77, and is enforceable by the chancery courts of this state.

See monographic note on "Charities" appended to Kelly v. Love, 20 Gratt. 124.

†See the opinion of JUDGE MONCURE for the statute.

Digitized by Google

heirs at law and next of kin of the testator instituted a suit in chancery against the executor, for the purpose of having the devises and bequests made, or attempted to be made, by the 3d, 4th, 5th and 6th clauses of the will before recited, and by the codicil, declared null and void, and the estate divided and distributed among them. The executor demurred to the bill, and also filed an answer, to which there was no replication. And the cause coming on to be heard on the bill, demurrer and answer, the Circuit court overruled the demurrer, declared the said devises and bequests "wholly inoperative and void, on account of the indefiniteness and uncertainty of the same and of the beneficiaries" thereof, ordered the executor to render an account of the estate and his administration thereof before a commissioner of the court, and directed the commissioner to ascertain who was entitled to the estate as heirs and distributees of the testator, and in what proportions they were so entitled, and to make report to the court.

From the said decree the executor obtained an appeal to this court.

Bowden and Cosnahan, for the appellant.
Mallory and Seawell, for the appellees.

MONCURE, J., delivered the opinion of the court. After stating the case, he proceeded as follows:

In the case of Gallego's ex'ors v. The Attorney General, 3 Leigh 450, it was held, that the English doctrine in regard to indefinite charities does not prevail in this state; that it was founded, mainly if not entirely, upon the statute 43 Elizabeth, called the statute of charitable uses, which, if it ever was in force here, was 426 *repealed by the general repealing act of 1792; that charitable bequests stand on the same footing with us as all other bequests, and will alike be sustained or rejected by courts of equity; and that a bequest of money to be applied to the erection and support of a Roman Catholic chapel in Richmond, and a devise of a lot in said city to trustees in fee, upon trust to permit all and every person belonging to the Roman Catholic church, as members thereof, or professing that religion, and residing in Richmond at the time of the testator's death, to build a church on the lot for the use of themselves and all others of that religion who may thereafter reside in said city; were uncertain as to the beneficiaries, and therefore void.

The authority of that case, although some of the positions therein held have been impunged elsewhere, and although the case of The Baptist Association v. Hart's ex'ors, 4 Wheat. 1, therein much relied on, has been supposed to have been founded on a misconception of the English law (Vidal, &c. v. Girard's ex'ors, 2 How. U. S. R. 127), is still firm and stable in this state, except so far as it may have been since modified by statute; having been repeatedly recognized by this court, and expressly affirmed in the recent case of Brooke, &c. v. Shacklett, 13 Gratt. 301.

The devises and bequests contained in the will and codicil of Nathaniel Seaburn, now under consideration, would undoubtedly be void for uncertainty, according to the principles of the case of Gallego's ex'ors v. The Attorney General, before cited. Indeed, this seems not to have been controverted in the argument.

But the counsel for the appellant contended that they are valid devises and bequests, under the Code, ch. 77, § 8, p. 362; which is as follows:

"Every conveyance, devise or dedication shall be valid, which since the first day of January 1777 has been made, and every conveyance shall be valid which 427 *hereafter shall be made, of land for the use or benefit of any religious congregation as a place for public worship or as a burial place or a residence for a minister; and the land shall be held for such use or benefit and for such purpose and not otherwise."

On the other hand, the counsel for the appellees contended that the said devises and bequests are not valid, under the Code: First, because it does not authorize a devise, but only a conveyance, as contradistinguished from a devise; and, if it does, secondly, because it only authorizes land to be given for the purposes therein mentioned, and not money, though it be directed to be applied to the erection of a church on land held for such purposes; and much less, if it be directed to be applied to other purposes, as for instance, the support of a minister; and thirdly, because the devises and bequests in question are void for uncertainty, even though they might otherwise be valid under the Code.

Let us now consider the first of these objections taken by the counsel of the appellees, to wit, that a devise is not authorized by the above recited provision of the Code. If this objection be tenable, it will be unnecessary to consider the others, as this will conclude the case.

There can be no doubt but that the word "conveyance," in its comprehensive, and perhaps in its technical sense, embraces a devise; and if it had been the only word used by the legislature in the provision in question to express the mode of transfer, it might, reasonably, have been construed in that sense; especially as it is used in that sense in other parts of the Code, as in ch. 116, § 1, 11. But we know that in common parlance, the word is often used in a more restricted sense, as contradistinguished from devise; and that it has often been so used in our most important acts of legislation; as for example, in the act concerning conveyances, 1 Rev. Code 428 1819, ch. 99. It *is like the word "purchase," which, technically, embraces a devise; but is generally used in a more restricted sense, and as meaning an acquisition of property by contract only. In the provision in question, "conveyance" is not the only word used to designate the mode of transfer therein mentioned. The section begins, "Every conveyance, devise or dedication shall be valid, which since the 1st day of January 1777 has been made;" thus tending to show that the word "conveyance" was not used here as comprehending "devise or dedication;" otherwise, it is presumable that these latter words would not have been used. But the section immediately proceeds: "and every conveyance shall be valid which hereafter shall be made," &c.; thus dropping the words "devise or dedication," used in the first line of the section. We cannot suppose that the legislature, in three consecutive lines, in which the only stop is a comma, would have used the words "conveyance, devise or dedication," as to the past, and the word "conveyance" only as to the future, without meaning something by the change of phraseology; without meaning more by the three words first used, than by one of them repeated in the same sentence. The legislature obviously intended to use the word "conveyance" in its restricted sense; and while they sanctioned every "conveyance, devise or dedication," which since the 1st day of January 1777 had been made, they determined to establish a new rule for the future, and to authorize only a "conveyance" (that is, by deed) for the purposes mentioned in the section. That this was their intention, is rendered, if possible, more manifest by the manner in which the section, as proposed by the revisors, was amended and adopted by the legislature.

Digitized by Google

The section, as proposed by the revisors, was in this language: "Every conveyance, devise or dedication shall be valid, which since the 1st day of January 429 *1777, has been or hereafter shall be made," &c. There could be no mistake as to the meaning of the section thus proposed; which was made, if possible, still more plain by a long note appended thereto. If it had been adopted by the legislature as proposed, it would expressly have authorized a devise in future. It was so adopted by the house of delegates. But it was amended in the senate, by striking out the word "or," in the third line, and inserting, in lieu thereof, the words, "made, and every conveyance shall be valid which;" so as to make the section read: "Every conveyance, devise or dedication shall be valid, which since the 1st day of January 1777, has been made, and every conveyance shall be valid which hereafter shall be made," &c. This amendment was agreed to by the house, and the section so amended was adopted, and became a law as it now stands in the Code. It seems to be inconceivable that this amendment would thus deliberately have been made, if it had not been intended to confine the word conveyance, remaining in the section, to its restricted sense, and not to authorize for the future a devise or dedication for the use of a religious congregation. No other motive for making it has been assigned, or seems to be assignable. It could not have been made for the purpose of saving words. If that had been the purpose of the legislature, they would have struck out the words "devise or dedication," in the first line of the section, and inserted no other; thus leaving the word "conveyance" to operate in the same comprehensive sense (embracing every mode of transfer by act of the parties), as well in regard to the past as to the future. So far from saving, they increased the number of words; by striking out one and inserting eight. But their purpose being not to authorize a devise in future for the use of a religious congregation, it occurred to them as the most natural and easy mode of effecting
430 that purpose, *to let the words "conveyance, devise or dedication" stand in reference to the past, but to use the word "conveyance" alone in reference to the future. It is a word at least of equivocal import, and its meaning in this instance is sufficiently explained by the context.

It was argued by the counsel for the appellant, that the jealousy of church encroachments which existed at the time of the revolution, and for a period thereafter, has long since ceased, that the policy of the state on this subject has undergone a material change, and that we ought now to apply a liberal, and not a strict, rule of construction to a statute authorizing the acquisition of property for religious uses.

It is not perceived that there has been any such material change of the policy of the state as the counsel supposed. No trace of any such change is to be found in the first amended constitution of 1830, nor in the case of Gallego's ex'ors v. The Attorney General, decided so late as 1832. The opinion of President Tucker in that case, in which the policy of the state is so ably vindicated, has since met with general, if not universal approbation; which seems to be still unabated. In the amended constitution of 1851 it was, for the first time, provided, as a part of our organic law, that "the general assembly shall not grant a charter of incorporation to any church or religious denomination; but (it is added) may secure the title to church property to an extent to be limited by law." Art. iv, § 32. The object of this section was to prevent the accumulation of church property, and to authorize the title only to so much as might be deemed necessary, and consisted with the welfare of the state, to be secured by law to religious uses. The latter part of the section seems to have been designed to sanction and authorize such legislation as had already been adopted to secure the title to church property to a limited extent, and which had been introduced by 431 *the act of February 3, 1842, entitled "an act concerning conveyances or devises of places of public worship." Sess. Acts, p. 60, ch. 102. The revisors recommended, in their report to the legislature, a more liberal provision on this subject than had been made by that act. They proposed not only that conveyances and devises (as provided by that act), but parol dedication of land should be authorized for the use or benefit of any religious congregation as a place for public worship, or for religious or other instruction, or as a burial place or a residence for a minister. And also that books, furniture or other things, "given or acquired for the benefit of such congregation, to be used on the said land in the ceremonies of public worship, or in religious or other instruction, or at the residence of their minister," should "stand vested in the trustees having the legal title to the land, to be held by them as the land is held, for the benefit of the congregation." Rep. Rev. p. 412, § 8 and 10. And they suggested, that if the legislature should prefer it, the 10th section could readily be made more extensive in its operation, by substituting therefor the following: "When any money or other thing shall be given by will or otherwise to, or be otherwise acquired by or for, any congregation having for its use or benefit such land as before mentioned, the same shall stand vested," &c. Id. note. The legislature not only did not adopt this suggestion, but amended the 8th and 10th sections proposed by the revisors, not only by limiting the mode of future acquisition of land to a conveyance as before stated, but by striking out the words in italics above written, to wit, the words "or for religious or other instruction," in the 8th, and the words "or other things," and the words "or in religious or other instruction," in the 10th section: Thus embodying in the Code a more limited scheme of church endowment than had been provided by the act of 1842.

Digitized by Google

432 *Under these circumstances, we think we ought not to apply a very liberal rule of construction to the statute, but to construe it according to the general rule. And so construing it, we think the conveyance by which it authorizes a transfer of land to be made for the use of a religious congregation, does not embrace a devise. We think the legislature plainly intended to alter the pre-existing law, by not authorizing such a transfer of land by devise in future. Whether the reason for the alternation was good or not, is a question which it belongs not to this court to decide. We may readily conceive what that reason was. And we must admit that the danger of an excessive and inordinate alienation of property to religious uses, so jealously guarded against by the policy of our law and the provision of our constitution before referred to, would be greatly increased by authorizing such alienation to be made by will, as well as by deed. And especially so, if the argument of the appellant's counsel be correct, that a religious congregation may take and hold (by its trustees) not only land, but money, and that without limit, provided it be to be laid out in land of the quantity and for the purposes prescribed by the statute, or in the erection of a church or a residence for a minister thereon, or in repairing the same, or in the purchase of books or furniture to be used on said land in the ceremonies of public worship, or at the residence of the minister. The legislature may well have supposed that there was no necessity for encountering this increased danger; and that authority in future to convey land for the purposes aforesaid by deed only, would fully answer the object in view.

If a devise of land for the purposes aforesaid would be void, a fortiori a bequest of money, though to be laid out in building a church on land held for such purposes, and much more, to be invested in stock for the support of a minister to preach in said 433 church, *would be void. The statute says nothing about money; and the only argument used to sustain the validity of the bequest in this case, is that the money is equivalent to land, according to the doctrine of equitable conversion.

It may be proper to state that nothing in this opinion is intended to be in conflict with the opinion delivered in the case of Brooke, &c. v. Shacklett. The conveyance in that case was by deed, executed before the adoption of the present Code; and it was not intended to express any opinion upon the question, whether a devise for the use of a religious congregation is authorized by the Code, which did not arise in the case.

For the foregoing reasons, and without expressing any opinion upon the other objections taken to the validity of the devises and bequests in question by the counsel for the appellees, the court is of opinion that the said devises and bequests are void and that the decree of the Circuit court be therefore affirmed.

ALLEN, P., concurred in the results of the opinion of the court, but not in the reasons given for it. He thought that the term "conveyance" was sufficient to embrace devises. But he was of opinion that according to Gallego's ex'ors v. The Attorney General, 3 Leigh 450, affirmed as that case was by The Literary Fund v. Dawson, 10 Leigh 147, and Brooke v. Shacklett, 13 Gratt. 301, the bequest was void: and that this case was not embraced in the statute.

Decree affirmed.

---

434 *Haxall, Brothers & Co. v. Willis.

October Term, 1859, Richmond.

(Absent MONCURE, J.*)

Sales—Title—Loss of Property—Case at Bar.†—W sells her crop of wheat to H, by sample, the wheat not then being cleaned from the chaff; and W is to deliver it to H at G depot of a rail road to be carried by the rail road company to Richmond: W paying the freight to Richmond, and H to take it from the depot in Richmond to his mill at his own cost, where it is to be weighed and tested by the sample, and when thus weighed and tested the price to be paid. The wheat is delivered at the depot at G and taken by the rail road company to their depot in Richmond, and all but four hundred and forty bushels is taken away by H. This four hundred and forty bushels is consumed by fire at the depot in Richmond before it can be removed. The title to the wheat was vested in H. and he is to bear the loss.

*He was related to one of the parties.

†See the principal case cited in Morgan v. King, 28 W. Va. 9.

Digitized by Google

This was an action on the case in the Circuit court of Henrico county, instituted in May 1850 by Nelly C. Willis against Haxall, Brothers & Co., to recover the price of a quantity of wheat which the plaintiff alleged she had sold and delivered to the defendants. The parties agreed to dispense with a jury and submit the whole case to the court. And when the cause came on to be tried, the court rendered a judgment for the plaintiff for the sum of four hundred and sixty-two dollars, with six per cent. interest thereon from the 24th of December 1849 until paid, and her costs. Whereupon the defendants excepted; and obtained a supersedeas to this court.

The facts as stated in the bill of exceptions are as follows:

The plaintiff, by her agent, John Willis, sold her crop of wheat by samples to 435 the defendants in the fall *of 1849, to be delivered at the Gordonsville depot of the Central rail road company, otherwise called in the proceedings, the Louisa rail road company, as soon as convenient, to be forwarded by the said rail road company, over their own road and the road of the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac rail road company, to the depot of the latter company at Richmond, consigned to the defendants. The price of the wheat was to be one dollar and five cents per bushel. The freight by rail road to the depot at Richmond, was to be paid by the defendants, and charged to the account of the plaintiff; and the wheat was to be carried from the depot at Richmond to the mills of the defendants, at their own expense, and without charge to the plaintiff. No other express stipulations were made in the contract of sale; but the agent of the plaintiff understood the contract to be made with reference to the usual understanding and practice in such sales, to wit: That the crop should range in quality with the sample left with the defendants; that the quality and quantity of the wheat should be ascertained and tested by the defendants, after the receipt of the wheat at their mills, before the payment would be due; that the delivery at the depot at Gordonsville would devest the plaintiff of all control over the wheat, and invest the defendants with the control of it; but that for the purpose of payment, the delivery would not be complete until the reweighing at the mills of the defendants should fix the quantity to be paid for. The plaintiff would readily have submitted to a reduction of price, if the wheat had proved inferior to the sample in the judgment of the defendants, unless the plaintiff were fully convinced that it was equal to the sample, or thought the abatement required by the defendants unreasonable; in which event she would have felt bound by their opinion. Nothing was said in the contract about what was to be 436 done in the event *that the wheat did not correspond with the sample in the judgment of the defendants; nor was any thing said about the acceptance of the wheat at Gordonsville by the defendants, and the change of control there, nor about the risks of transportation. Very little usually passed in conversation at the making of such sales, and nothing passed on this occasion that the witness (who was the agent) could recollect, as to the terms of the contract, except enough to fix the price, and times of delivery and payment. He usually, when selling wheat, presented the samples to the defendants and at the Gallego mills, and sold for the best price offered.

It was further proved that the plaintiff, by her agent, delivered her crop, amounting to nearly seven hundred bushels, at the Gordonsville depot of the rail road first mentioned, taking receipts for the same in the following form: "G'ville, Dec'r 12, 1849.—Rec'd of John Willis 49 co.'s bags wheat, 6,010 lbs. for Haxall & Bro. J. B. Ag't." That the wheat delivered at Gordonsville, prior to the 6th December 1849, was all received by the defendants, and accounted for. That from the 6th to the 12th December, inclusive, there were delivered at Gordonsville two hundred and forty-five bags of wheat, containing, by the weights at that depot, thirty thousand one hundred and twenty pounds. That on the 21st December 1849, these two hundred and forty-five bags were received at the depot in Richmond, and twenty-five of them were delivered to the defendants, and were accounted for; and that the remaining two hundred and twenty bags were destroyed by fire in the depot at Richmond on the night of the 23d December 1849, and that the defendants had refused to account for them.

It was further proved that the wheat, when it left the barn of the plaintiff in Orange, was fully equal to the samples by which it was sold, and which were 437 *taken from different parts of the bulk, in the opinion of the agent, who was often at the barn and saw the wheat constantly, when preparing it for delivery; and that the portion of the crop which came to the hands of the defendants was accounted for without objection to the quality.

Steger and Macfarland, for the appellants, insisted:

1st. That upon the terms of the contract in this case, the action could not be maintained irrespective of the loss of the wheat. That the price was not to be paid until the quantity was ascertained and the quality tested by comparison with the sample, at the mill; and therefore no action could be maintained for the price until this was done. Brockenbrough v. Ward's adm'r, 4 Rand. 352; Kennaird v. Jones, 9 Gratt. 183.

2d. That the sale of the wheat was on a condition, and the condition was precedent to the payment of the money. That true the sale was by sample, and the general rule is that in such sale the condition is subsequent. But that rule does not apply where something is to be done before payment is to be made. That generally the quality of the article or commodity is ascertained when it is delivered to the carrier: but that was not so in this case, but the quality was to be ascertained by inspection at the mill. That though delivery is often confounded with the contract, and is generally the completion of it; yet that was not the case in the contract under consideration. At the time of the sale it is admitted the contract was executory, for the wheat was then in the chaff, and was to be cleaned. Nor was it executed when the wheat was delivered at Gordonsville. That there may be many things to be done after delivery, and in this case it was to be brought to the mills, and the quality and quantity were to be ascertained before payment. That there may be a sale 438 without delivery; as in Campbell *v. Chapman, 13 Gratt. 105; and that there may be delivery without a sale. Keeler v. Field, 1 Paige's R. 312; Haggerty v. Palmer, 6 John. Ch. R. 437; Lorillard v. Palmer, 13 John. R. 14; Marston v. Baldwin, 17 Mass. R. 606; Dresser Manuf. Co. v. Waterton, 3 Metc. R. 9; Williams v. Moore, 3 Munf. 310; Harris v. Smith, 3 Serg. & Rawle R. 20; Dodsley v. Varley, 40 Eng. C. L. R. 141. In Ward v. Shaw, 7 Wend. 404, there was an actual delivery, but something remained to be done to ascertain the price to be paid, and it was held there was no sale. And such was the case of Andrew v. Dieterick, 14 Wend. R. 31. And this distinction was sustained in Pettitt v. Mitchell, 41 Eng. C. L. R. 233.

Digitized by Google

3d. That the contract was executory, and the property did not pass by delivery at Gordonsville. Blackburn on Sales 121, 122, 150, 151. They insisted that the second rule laid down by this author covered the case: That is, that where any thing remains to be done, as measuring or testing the article, this is a condition precedent. Story on Sales, § 296; Pleasants v. Pendleton, 6 Rand. 423; Dixon v. Myers, 7 Gratt. 240; Outwater v. Dodge, 7 Cow. R. 85; Rapeley v. Machie, Id. 250; Young v. Austin, 6 Pick. R. 280; Joyce v. Adams, 4 Seld. S. C. R. 291; Warren v. Buckminster, 4 Foster N. Hamp. R. 336; Screws v. Rand, 22 Alab. R. 675; Hutchinson v. Hunter, 7 Pa. R. Barr 140; Woods v. McGee, 7 Ohio R. 127; Lester v. McDowell, 18 Pa. R. 91; Logan v. Le Messurier, 6 Moore's Priv. Conn. R. 116.

Andrew Johnston, for the appellee, referred to the facts proved in this case and in the case of Haxall & Co. v. Barbour (see note at the end of this case), in which it was held that the purchaser was bound for the price of the wheat; and insisted that this was a stronger case for the vendor than that. He admitted that this was an executory contract, and conditional;
439 *but he insisted that the condition was that the wheat should be delivered at Gordonsville; and that having been done, the condition was performed; and the contract was executed on the part of the vendor. Story on Sales, § 242. He insisted that the effect of a sale by sample was to create an implied warranty that the article should be equal to the sample; Story on Sales, § 348; and if it was not equal to sample, the contract might be rescinded; Id. § 376, 408, 418; but it was the rescission of an executed contract. That this was the rule as to merchants ordering goods by sample: If the goods were shipped and lost on the way, the party giving the order had to bear the loss; though if they arrived and were not equal to the sample, he might refuse to take them. Fragano v. Long, 10 Eng. C. L. R. 313; Alexander v. Gardner, 27 Id. 538. The plaintiff was only required to make out a prima facie case, and the defendant must show that the warranty was not complied with. That here was certainly a prima facie case for the plaintiff, and the defendant did not rebut it. In Street v. Blay, 22 Eng. C. L. R. 124, it was held that the vendee might rescind the contract if the vendor could be placed in the same situation he was before the contract. And in Parker v. Palmer, 6 Id. 455, it was held that in an action for a sale by sample, it was not necessary to aver the fact, which if it was a condition precedent it was necessary to do. And Story, § 306, and Blackburn 329, say that delivery to a carrier is equivalent to delivery to the vendee. Then what is the effect of delivery? Usually possession indicates ownership. Blackburn on Sales 121, 147. Story, § 295, treats of delivery; and states four forms in which it may be made. And the lowest form of delivery is sufficient to put the property at the risk of the purchaser, though it is not sufficient for some other purposes: as acceptance by the vendee as well as de-
440 livery by the vendor is necessary *to satisfy the statute of frauds. He referred to Story on Sales, § 299 to 302, and insisted that the cases referred to by the counsel for the appellants, came under one of the other three forms of delivery.

He referred to the rules for construing contracts, stated by Blackburn, 151 to 154, 171, and said that there were no traces of these rules until the time of Lord Ellenborough, about 1805; that Blackburn disapproved of the second rule; and on sound reason. And though the rule was laid down broadly, yet it had not been applied to a single case where there had been an actual delivery. And in Hind v. Whitehouse, 7 East 558; Swanwicke v. Sothern, 36 Eng. C. L. R. 321; Tansley v. Turner, 29 Id. 288; Bloxom v. Sanders, 10 Id. 477, the rule was not applied; and in fact these cases were in opposition to it. And he insisted that in America the rule was either not adopted, or was adopted in a qualified sense; as where possession had not been delivered. He referred to Wilkes v. Ferris, 5 John. R. 335; Scott v. Wells, 6 Watts & Serg. R. 357; Damon v. Osborn, 1 Pick. R. 476; McComber v. Parker, 13 Id. 178; Riddle v. Varnum, 20 Id. 280; Cunningham v. Ashbrook, 20 Missouri R. 553; Pleasants v. Pendleton, 6 Rand. 423; Haxall & Co. v. Barbour, infra, note. And as to Dixon v. Myers, 7 Gratt. 240, the vendor had not done all he was to do, and therefore he came within the first rule stated by Blackburn; and it was not necessary to apply the second rule to the case.

Digitized by Google

DANIEL, J. The reversal of the judgment is asked mainly upon the argument that the ascertainment of the quantity of the wheat by weighing it, as also the ascertainment of the correspondence between the bulk and the sample, were conditions precedent to the vesting of the property; and that as the wheat was accidentally destroyed by fire before the appellants had an opportunity of ascertaining its 441 quantity and quality in *the mode prescribed by the contract, the loss ought not to have been visited upon them, but should have been left to be borne by the appellee.

I shall first examine how far the case is affected by the consideration that the wheat at the time of the loss had not been weighed by the appellants; and, secondly, how far it is affected by the consideration that the bulk had not yet been compared by them with the sample.

And proceeding to dispose of these questions in their order, it must be conceded that the authorities furnish numerous instances in which the rules in respect to the first question are stated in a manner favorable to the views of the appellants.

Thus, Mr. Blackburn, in his treatise on the Contract of Sale, at p. 151-2-3, after stating that where the agreement is for the sale of goods and also the performance of other things, the courts have adopted certain rules of construction for the purpose of ascertaining whether the performance of any of those things is meant to precede the vesting of the property, proceeds to say, "These rules, of which there is no trace in the reports before the time of Lord Ellenborough, are laid down, since the time of that learned judge, as rules of English law, in terms nearly equivalent to those in which they are laid down as rules of the civil law. They are two-fold: the first is, that where by the agreement the vendor is to do any thing to the goods for the purpose of putting them into that state in which the purchaser is bound to accept, or as it is sometimes worded, into a deliverable state, the performance of those things shall (in the absence of circumstances indicating a contrary intention) be taken to be a condition precedent to the vesting of the property. The second is, that when any thing remains to be done to the goods for the purpose of ascertaining the price, as by weigh-442 ing, measuring or testing the *goods, where the price is to depend on the quantity or quality of the goods; the performance of those things also shall be a condition precedent to the transfer of the property, although the individual goods be ascertained, and they are in the state in which they ought to be accepted."

He then proceeds to discuss the reasons of the rules; and in respect to the first he says, "It seems to be founded in reason. In general, it is for the benefit of the vendor that the property should pass; the risk of loss is thereby transferred to the purchaser; and as the vendor may still retain possession of the goods so as to retain a security for payment of the price, the transference of the property is pure gain. It is therefore reasonable, that where by the agreement the vendor is to do something before he can call upon the purchaser to accept the goods as corresponding to the agreement, the intention of the parties should be taken to be that the vendor was to do this before he obtained the benefit of the transfer of the property. The presumption does not arise if the things might be done after the vendor had put the goods in the state in which he had a right to call upon the purchaser to accept them, and would be unreasonable where the acts were to be done by the buyer who would thus be rewarded for his own default." "The second rule (however he proceeds) seems to be adopted, somewhat hastily, from the civil law, without adverting to the great distinction made by the civilians between a sale for a certain price in money and an exchange for any thing else. The English law makes no such distinction, but, as it seems, has adopted the rule of the civil law, which seems to have no foundation except in that distinction. In general, the weighing, &c. must, from the nature of things, be intended to be done before the buyer takes possession of the goods; but that is quite a different thing from 443 intending it to be done before *the vesting of the property; and as it must in general be intended that both the parties concur in the act of weighing when the price is to depend upon the weight, there seems little reason why, in cases in which the specific goods are agreed upon, it should be supposed to be the intention of the parties to render the delay of the act in which the buyer is to concur, beneficial to him. Whilst the price remains unascertained, the sale is clearly not for a certain sum of money, and therefore does not come within the civilian's definition of a perfect sale, transferring the risk and gain of the thing sold; but the English law does not require that the consideration for a bargain and sale should be in moneys numbered, provided it be of value. Still both branches of the rule (he adds) seem to be now firmly established, though, as has been already stated, only within the last half century, and then, it seems, adopted directly from the civil law."

The second rule as above stated, it cannot be denied, lays down the law as contended for by the appellants. It will be seen, however, on looking into the cases referred to by the author, as establishing the rule, that, in no one of them had there been any actual change in the possession of the goods; that in the three cases of Rugg v. Minett, 11 East's R. 210; Zagury v. Furnell, 2 Camp. R. 240; and Simmons v. Swift, 5 Barn. & Cres. 857, 12 Eng. C. L. R. 388; on which he mainly relies as illustrations of the rules, the acts of measuring, counting and weighing, by the terms of the agreement, or the usages of the trade, were to be done either by the seller alone, or by him and the buyer concurrently; and that in neither one of these cases do the judges use any expression from which the inference can be fairly drawn, that they would have held the measuring, counting or weighing as necessary precedents to the vesting of the property, if by the 444 terms *of the agreement those acts had been left to be performed by the buyers alone.

Digitized by Google

In the first case, Lord Ellenborough said, the true enquiry was, "whether every thing had been done by the sellers, which lay upon them to perform, in order to put the goods in a deliverable state." And Bayley, J., said, that "if the sellers meant to relieve themselves from all further responsibility, they should have done what remained for them to do; and until that was done, the property remained in them." In the second, Lord Ellenborough said, that "as the enumeration of the skins was necessary to ascertain the price, this was an act for the benefit of the seller; and as the act remained to be done when the fire happened, there was not a complete transfer to the purchaser; and the skins continued at the seller's risk." And it was proved in that case, that the custom was for the seller to count the skins, to see that each bale had its complement, before delivery. And in the third case, Bayley, J., said, that "generally speaking, where a bargain is made for the purchase of goods, and nothing is said about payment on delivery, the property passes immediately, so as to cast upon the purchaser all future risks, if nothing further remains to be done to the goods, although he cannot take them away without paying the price." And he further explains himself, by immediately adding, "If any thing remains to be done on the part of the seller, until that is done the property is not changed." That the latter remark was intended as a qualification of what he had said previously, is rendered obvious, by his opinion delivered the year afterwards, in the case of Tarling v. Baxter, 6 Barn. & Cres. 360, 13 Eng. C. L. R. 159, in which he says, "The rule of law is, that where there is an immediate sale, and nothing remains to be done by the vendor, as between him and the vendee, the 445 property *in the thing sold vests in the vendee; and then all the consequences resulting from the vesting of the property follow; one of which is, that if it be destroyed, the loss falls upon the vendee." And the remarks of Holroyd, J., in the same case, were to the same effect. Whilst, therefore, there appears to my mind to be great force in the reasons assigned by Mr. Blackburn against the adoption of the second of the rules stated by him, it seems to me also, that he has in fact stated the rule in terms broader than the decisions and opinions to which he refers as having established it, will justify.

There are, however, among the many cases cited by the counsel for the appellants, several, as for instance, Ward v. Shaw, 7 Wend. R. 404; Andrew v. Dieterick, 14 Wend. R. 31; and Logan v. Le Mesurier 6 Moore P. C. C. 116; in which the rule upon the subject is stated to be as they contend it is.

Still, there is, I think, a decided preponderance of authority in favor of the proposition, that where the subject matter of the contract has not only been completely ascertained and identified, but actually delivered, the mere fact that the weighing, counting or measuring, is yet to be done by the buyer, in order simply to ascertain the aggregate sum of money which he is to pay as the price, does not of itself show such a defect in the transfer of the title as will prevent the risk of loss from being cast on the buyer. Selwyn's Nisi Prius 1054; 2 Kent's Comm. 675-6; Sumner v. Hamlet, 12 Pick. R. 76; Macomber v. Parker, 13 Pick. R. 176; Riddle v. Varnum, 20 Pick. R. 280; Morgan v. Perkins, 1 Jones' (Law) N. C. R. 171; Tyler v. Strang, 21 Barb. S. C. R. 198; Crofoot v. Bennett, 2 Comst. R. 258; Page v. Carpenter, 10 N. Hamp. R. 77; and Cunningham v. Ashbrook, 20 Missouri R. 555. Of these cases, the last will be more especially noticed, as from the character of the facts it will be seen to be directly in point. It was 446 the sale of an entire drove of hogs *at a stipulated price per cwt. net weight, to be delivered at the slaughter-house of the buyer, who was to kill and weigh them. The hogs were delivered and slaughtered, and the seller notified that he might call the next day at the packing-house of the buyer, see the hogs weighed, and get his pay. That night, however, the slaughter-house was burned down, and the hogs consumed by the fire.

In the course of the opinion of the court, delivered by Leonard, Judge, sustaining the right of the seller to recover the price, the following principles, amongst others, were asserted, viz: That the rule, that in a sale of goods, no title passes while any act, such as counting, weighing or measuring remains to be done by the seller, is only applicable when such act is necessary to separate the goods from a larger mass, and does not apply to a sale upon fixed terms by weight, to be subsequently ascertained, of goods already separated; in which case, the title passes by the delivery; and as a consequence, the loss, by a destruction of the goods after they are delivered and before they are weighed, will fall upon the buyer. That although there is no sale till the price is settled, yet it is settled in the meaning of the rule, when the terms are so fixed that the sum to be paid can be ascertained by weighing, without further reference to the parties themselves; and that in a case of the kind, a jury would be at liberty to infer from a change of the possession, that the delivery was intended for the purpose of passing the property. "It is true (the judge said), that in determining the question as to the purpose of the parties in changing the actual possession, the fact that the price is to be subsequently ascertained by reference to the net weight, and then paid, is proper to go to the jury; but possession is so much of the essence of property, as it is that alone which enables us to enjoy a thing as property, and the natural connection between 447 *property and possession, especially in movables, is so strong, that the presumption arising from a change of actual possession, that it was intended also as a change of the property, is not overcome as a matter of law by the fact that the thing bargained for was to be paid for by weight, to be ascertained after the delivery."

Digitized by Google

The effect of an actual change of possession upon the question is very clearly and strongly stated in the opinion of the court in Macomber v. Parker. It is there said, "The general principle is, that where an operation of weight, measurement or the like, remains to be performed in order to ascertain the price, the quantity or the particular commodity to be delivered, and to put it in a deliverable state, the contract is incomplete until such operation is performed. Brown on Sales 44. But where the goods or commodities are actually delivered, that shows the intent of the parties to complete the sale by the delivery; and the weighing or measuring or counting afterwards would not be considered as any part of the contract of sale, but would be taken to refer to the adjustment of the final settlement of the price. The sale would be as complete as a sale upon credit before the actual payment of the price."

In the case of Scott v. Wells, 6 Watts & Serg. R. 357, Gibson, C. J., uses certain expressions in the course of his opinion, which seem to lean in favor of the pretensions of the appellants here. But on comparing the facts upon which the judgment in that case was founded, with the facts in this case, the decision will be seen to be one which may be very properly added to the list of cases already cited as sustaining the cause of the appellee.

The only reported cases decided by this court, in which it has become necessary to examine the principles bearing upon the question under consideration, are those of Pleasants v. Pendleton, 6 Rand. 423;
448 Campbell *v. Chapman, 13 Gratt. 105; and Dixon v. Myers & Co., 7 Gratt. 240. In none of these cases was the precise question before us decided; though in all it was necessary to consider to some extent that branch of the law under which it arises. In the first two, nothing was decided which can make in favor of the appellants. On the contrary, so far as they bear on this case, they are in favor of the appellee. In the last (Dixon v. Myers), which of the three most closely resembles this in the facts, it is true there is, in the opinion of the court, delivered by myself, a statement of the law, which, if taken alone, without reference to the special facts of the case, and unexplained by subsequent portions of the opinion, might seem to commit the court to the adoption of the second rule laid down by Mr. Blackburn. But when this reference is had and the opinion is taken as a whole, it will, I think, be seen that the case is one which cannot be regarded as an authority for the appellants. The contract there was for the purchase of an article yet to be prepared. By the terms of the agreement, Dixon was to take, at a certain price per cwt., all the stems which Myers & Co., who were manufacturers of tobacco, should prize during the year, with the exception of fifteen or twenty hogsheads, which Myers & Co. reserved the right to send to another person. Myers & Co. were to prize the stems in hogsheads, set them apart for the buyer in their store-room, weigh them and mark them, and then to present their bills and to receive their pay. Seventeen hogsheads had been set apart under the reservation just mentioned, and fifty-six hogsheads, for the price of which the suit was brought, had been prized and stored away: and a short time before the fire the agent of Dixon was at the factory, and in company with one of the superintendents in the establishment, counted them; and then urged this superintendent to press on the work as rap-
449 idly as he could, as *he wished one hundred hogsheads ready by Christmas. The fifty-six hogsheads, however, were not weighed or marked at the time of the fire.

It will be seen thus, that that case differs from this in several important particulars. There, there had been no actual change in the possession and custody of the thing bargained for. The weighing by the terms of the contract was to be done by the seller; and was not only an act necessary to be performed in order to ascertain the price, but in connection with the marking was necessary to the complete designation and identification of the property as the property of the buyer, and to the placing it in that state in which by the agreement it was to be before the seller could demand its price, or truly notify the buyer that it was then ready for him.

I do not think, therefore, that there is any thing to be found in the reported decisions of this court, which should constrain us to oppose that current of decisions which is strongly tending to the re-establishment of the common law rules upon the subject, and which, in the language of the court in Macomber v. Parker, considers such an understanding about the weighing, at least when it is to be done after an actual change of possession, "not as a part of the contract of sale, but as referring to the adjustment of the final settlement of the price."

In considering the second question in the case, I do not regard it material to enquire

Digitized by Google

whether the understanding between the parties in respect to the quality of the wheat, is to be regarded in the light of a warranty of the quality, properly so called, or is in connection with the other parts of the negotiation to be taken as an engagement to deliver wheat corresponding in quality with the sample. As the wheat, though in esse at the time of the contract, was not in the condition in which it was to be delivered, and the buyer 450 *had then no opportunity of inspecting, it is, I think, most proper to consider the contract as upon the footing of an engagement to deliver wheat corresponding in quality with the samples which were exhibited. And this latter view is the one most favorable to the pretensions of the appellants; as in such cases it would seem to be settled that if the goods do not correspond with the sample shown, the buyer may refuse to receive or pay for them. Wells v. Hopkins, 5 Mees. & Welsb. 7; Mondel v. Steel, 8 Id. 858; and 1 Smith's Leading Cases, note 257. In their note to the case of Chandelor v. Lopus, the American annotators state as the result of the numerous authorities which they cite on the subject, that "the rule which governs sales by samples is a mere application of the general and obvious principle, that in order to fulfill a contract of sale, the vendor must deliver that which he has agreed to sell; and if he does not, the vendee may either rescind the contract altogether and return the goods, or receive them, and claim a sufficient deduction from the purchase money to make up the loss occasioned by their inferiority, in absolute or relative value." Conceding this to be a correct statement of the rule, I do not perceive how it tends to establish in any manner the point at which, in the performance of a contract for the sale and delivery of goods, the law shifts the risk of loss from the seller to the buyer.

It is essential to the force and efficacy of every contract of sale, that the buyer and seller should mutually contemplate the same subject matter of sale; and all the rules prescribing the acts and ceremonies essential to a transfer of the title of the property and of the risks attaching to the ownership, proceed necessarily upon the supposition that such acts and ceremonies have been done and performed about the subject of the contract. When a merchant orders goods of a certain kind or style to be forwarded 451 to him by a carrier, and *the party to whom the order is given undertakes to fill it by delivering to the carrier goods of a different kind or style, the merchant ordering the goods may refuse to receive them, not because a delivery to a carrier, in pursuance of a contract for the sale of goods, is not such delivery as changes the property so as to cast the risk of loss on the buyer, but because the goods delivered are not the goods ordered. If in such a case the goods are lost after the delivery to the carrier, but before they reach the hands of the buyer, the seller would be defeated in any action he might bring for the price, not because of the want of completeness in the execution of his contract, but because of the want of any contract at all in relation to the goods delivered. It is true, that if the buyer, notwithstanding the want of correspondence between the goods ordered and sent, accepts the latter and treats them as a compliance with his order, he cannot afterwards, as a general rule, set up any want of correspondence, in defeat of the seller's right to recover the price. But this does not go to show that where the goods ordered and the goods sent are the same, an acceptance by the buyer is essential to complete the bargain. On the contrary, if in such a case he refuses to accept, the authorities are clear, that the rights and remedies of the seller are just as complete as if there had been a full and formal acceptance. The authorities to which I have referred seem to place a want of correspondence in respect of quality, in sales by sample, on the same footing with a want of correspondence in respect of the kind of goods, and to allow to the buyer the like right to reject the goods and refuse to pay for them in both cases. This makes it incumbent on the seller, in all cases of the kind, where there has not been an acceptance by the buyer, to prove the correspondence in quality between the sample and the article he contracts to sell by it. But 452 *when he does this, and shows also that he has performed those acts which, in executory contracts for the sale of goods, usually denote the transfer of the property in the thing contracted for, he satisfies fully the very terms of his contract, and occupies, in respect of the question of risk and loss, the same position that he would have occupied had there been no implied warranty or agreement in regard to the quality of the goods.

It is true, that where the contract is for a sale, on trial, or if the goods shall suit the taste of the buyer, the contract is not executed till the buyer has had an opportunity to try or taste. But the difference between such cases and a mere sale by sample, is too obvious to require explanation. There is nothing in the facts of this case to furnish a pretext for the idea that the appellants were to be the sole and exclusive umpires of the quality of the wheat, and were to have the arbitrary right to reject the wheat, if upon comparing the bulk with the sample it did not suit their views in respect to the quality. The true nature of the agreement, implied from a sale in reference to samples exhibited at the time of the sale, is not that the buyer is to have the right of deciding whether there is a correspondence between the bulk and the sample, but that there shall in fact be such correspondence.

We have no reported case in this court bearing directly on this question; but the unreported case of Haxall, &c. v. Barbour, decided by this court at its October term in the year 1851, is directly in point, not only on this question, but also on the other question in this case. The only material difference in the two cases consists in the fact that there the sale was of an entire parcel of wheat, which at the time was in the depot of the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac rail road company, and 453 which was open to *the inspection of the Haxalls, if they chose to inspect before receiving the wheat; whilst here the contract is for the sale of an entire crop which at the time was not ready for delivery, being in the chaff; and which the appellee, by her agent, contracted to transport from her barn and deliver to the Central rail road company, at their Gordonsville depot, to be carried to the Haxalls at Richmond.

Digitized by Google

The first was, strictly speaking, a contract of sale, whilst this was an executory contract for the sale of wheat. But it needs no argument to show that so soon as Mrs. Willis had separated the wheat from the chaff, transported it to Gordonsville, and there delivered it to the carrier agreed on between the parties, she occupied the same position as Barbour did in his case, when he had concluded the negotiation and given the Haxalls his order for the wheat. If not so, the similarity in the two cases becomes most obvious, from the time when the wheat in the present case had reached the depot in Richmond, and the Haxalls had in fact received a portion of the wheat, and carried it to their mills. The two cases plainly call for like judgments.

It is argued, however, that, as the case of Haxall, &c. v. Barbour was decided by a court consisting of three members only, and has never been reported, this court has not such strong reasons for adhering to it as a decision as it would have had, had the case been decided by a full court, and reported as a precedent. Whilst this is so, it is yet proper to state that that case was very fully and ably argued, was maturely considered by the court, and decided without any dissent; it was also selected as a case proper to be reported; and the absence of a report of the case is due entirely to the lamented death of Judge Baldwin, the member of the court to whom had been assigned the task of preparing the opinion of the court. Whilst, therefore, 454 *the case has been very properly regarded as not concluding the discussion and examination of the principles upon which it must have been decided, this court could not properly treat it as entitled to no weight in passing upon questions about which there is a conflict of authority. It is but proper to add also, that the case now before us has been twice argued here; on a former occasion before a court consisting of three judges, who upon conferring on the case, were unanimously of opinion to affirm the judgment; and now before a court consisting of four judges, who, upon a conference, have unanimously arrived at the same result.

Under these circumstances, whilst, owing to the conflict of the authorities and the diversity in the reasoning of judges and courts declaring the same principles, I have experienced much embarrassment and difficulty in stating, in a manner satisfactory to myself, the grounds on which to rest the case, I yet feel confident in the belief that the right and justice of the case will be attained by affirming the judgment.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Daniel, J.

Judgment affirmed.

Note.—The following case of Haxall, Brothers & Co. v. Barbour was decided at the October term 1851 of this court, and is referred to by Judge DANIEL, in his opinion in the foregoing case of Haxall v. Willis:

This was an action on the case in the Circuit court of law for the county of Henrico, brought in March 1850, by Benjamin Johnson Barbour against Haxall, Brothers & Co. to recover the price of certain wheat which the plaintiff alleged he had sold to the defendants. The parties agreed to dispense with a jury, and to submit the case to the court. Upon the trial the following facts were proved:

The plaintiff sent to Deane & Brown, commission merchants in the city of Richmond by the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac rail road, three hundred and seven bags of wheat, to 455 be sold by them for *him. Each bag contained more than two bushels of wheat, though the excess above two bushels was not uniformly the same. On Saturday the 22d of December 1849, between the hours of eleven and twelve o'clock in the forenoon, Dean & Brown offered the wheat for sale to the defendants, who were millers in the city of Richmond, exhibiting to them at the time a fair sample of the wheat, which was then in the depot of the rail road company in the city of Richmond, open to the inspection of the defendants, if they chose to inspect it; and the defendants agreed to purchase it at the price of one dollar for each bushel of sixty pounds: and thereupon Deane & Brown gave to the defendants an order in writing, addressed to the agents of the rail road company at the depot, requiring them to deliver the whole of the said wheat to the defendants; which order the defendants received and filed with the agents of the rail road company at the depot. The sale was intended to be a cash sale, but nothing was said at the sale of the time of payment or of the removal of the wheat from the depot, except a remark by the vendor to the vendee that he hoped he would get the wheat away from the depot as soon as possible. This remark was occasioned by the consideration that it was not usual in Richmond to send in a bill for the price of the wheat sold to a miller until it had reached the mill, and that the vendor intended to leave the city on the following Monday. And the vendees' reply to the remark was, that they had a good deal of wheat in the same depot, which they wished to get away by noon on the following Monday, which would be the day before Christmas, and did not think they could get it away sooner.

According to the usage of the trade in Richmond in such cases, which was well understood by the parties, and with reference to which they contracted, the vendor of wheat in the depot, after he gives a delivery order to the vendee, parts with all control over it; and as soon as the order is filed with the depot agent, he holds the same subject to the order of the vendee, and would not deliver it to the order of the vendor, or any one else except the vendee.

Digitized by Google

The wheat is removed from the depot by the vendee to his mill, the transportation being at his expense and risk; it is there inspected by the vendee, to see if it corresponds with the sample, when the sale is by sample; and if it does not correspond, the vendee has the right to refuse to take it and execute the contract: if it does correspond, then the vendee is bound to take it: and it is then weighed at the mill, and settled for by the miller's weights: and the vendee does not give a final receipt for the wheat or pay for the same until it has been inspected and weighed at his mill.

It was further proved, that the agents at the depot considered the wheat the property of the defendants from the time of the filing of the delivery order at the depot, which was done between 12 and 1 o'clock on Saturday; and the agents of the vendor considered themselves as having no further control of or responsibility for the wheat after the delivery of the order aforesaid; but no time was specified for the removal of the wheat from the depot.

456 The depot was consumed by fire on *the night of Sunday, the next day, and the three hundred and seven bags of wheat aforesaid were consumed in it.

Prior to and at the time of the purchase of the plaintiff's wheat by the defendants, they had a large quantity of wheat in the said depot, which they had been notified by the agent at the depot to remove, because it encumbered the depot and prevented the delivery of other wheat. They kept in their employment a special carrier to haul their wheat from the depot, and no wheat subject to their order would be delivered to any other carrier, unless their regular carrier was unable to carry it. The defendants had twelve wagons employed in hauling wheat from the depot on Saturday the 22d of December 1849, which were able to make only twelve loads, because there was so much other wheat in the depot beside that subject to the order of the defendants, which was in the course of delivery on that day, that the hands and agents at the depot were not able to deliver more than the twelve loads aforesaid to the wagons of the defendants, though the said wagons could have made eighty loads if promptly loaded.

Upon the trial, the court rendered a judgment for the plaintiff for six hundred and fourteen dollars, with interest thereon at six per cent. from the 27th day of December 1849 till paid, and his costs. And thereupon, the defendants excepted; and applied to this court for a supersedeas; which was awarded.

Steger and Macfarland, for the appellants.
Lyons, for the appellee.

The judgment of the Circuit court was unanimously affirmed.

---

457 *Delaplane v. Crenshaw & Fisher.
Same v. Haxall, Crenshaw & Co.

January Term, 1860, Richmond.

1. Custom—Case at Bar.—If there could be in Virginia a legal, valid usage or custom, the effect of which is to operate per se as an exception to the general rules of the common law: a usage or custom for the inspector of flour, who by the statute is to receive a specified money compensation, to take to his own use the flour drawn from the barrel in the process of inspection, called the draft flour, as an additional compensation or perquisite, would be bad, as being unreasonable, unjust and contrary to the policy of the law.
2. Same—Cannot Override a Statute.—Although a custom when otherwise good, may override and displace the common law rule, yet a statute introducing a new principle with a negative either express or necessarily implied, must be strictly pursued, and no custom can be set up against it.
3. Same—Case at Bar.—A custom for the inspector of flour to take the draft flour, may have existed longer then the memory of any living man, yet as the statutes show the commencement of the inspection of flour in Virginia, and as this period is within the limitation prescribed for the commencement of a custom, the custom is bad.
4. Doctrine of Presumptions—To What Applicable.—The doctrine of presumptions cannot be applied to this custom, because, 1st, the presumption is repelled by the evidence; and 2d, because the doctrine of presumptions can only apply to things which lie in grant, and where there is a party by whom the grant could be made as well as one to receive it.
5. Custom—Vesting a Right.—There is no customary law in Virginia which per se can vest a right in a party claiming under it.
6. Same—Effect of Recognition by Statute.—If a custom has been recognized by a statute either expressly or by necessary implication, it will thereby receive vitality, and the right claimed under it may be asserted as conferred by the statute.
7. Inspector of Flour—Right to Keep Draft Flour—Statute.—The act, Code, ch. 88, p. 413, does not recognize either expressly or by implication, the right of the inspector to take the draft flour; or to use an auger or trier more than half an inch in diameter.†
8. Same—Statute Regulating Size of Auger—Effect on Previous Custom.—The act having directed, that an auger of not more than a half inch in diameter shall be used in inspecting flour, a custom to use a larger auger is bad, though the inspector says he cannot execute his duty satisfactorily with an auger of the size prescribed by the statute.†

458 *9. Same—Same—Effect.—The inspector of flour is bound to inspect it by boring through the head of the barrel, with an auger not exceeding a half inch in diameter.†

---

*Custom—Vesting a Right.—In the 5th headnote of the principal case it is held that, there is no customary law in Virginia which per se can vest a right in a party claiming under it. For the above proposition the principal case is cited and approved in Reese v. Bates, 94 Va. 325, 26 S. E. Rep. 865.

In Southwest Va. M. Co. v. Chase, 95 Va. 56, 27 S. E. Rep. 826, it is said: "It is well settled in this state that a local custom or usage cannot be relied on where it is inconsistent with the terms of the written contract between the parties. Harris v. Carson, 7 Leigh 639; Mason v. Moyers, 2 Rob. 613; Gross v. Criss, 3 Gratt. 262; Delaplane v. Crenshaw, 15 Gratt. 457; Richlands, etc., Co. v. Hiltebeitel, 92 Va. 91, 22 S. E. Rep. 806; Reese v. Bates, 94 Va. 321, 26 S. E. Rep. 865, and Hansbrough v. Neal, 94 Va. 722, 27 S. E. Rep. 593."

†The act, Code, ch. 88, p. 413, embraces all articles directed to be inspected; and after providing for the

Digitized by Google

10. Same—Refusal to Inspect as Law Requires—Mandamus.—An inspector of flour refusing to inspect flour by boring through the head of the barrel with a half inch auger, he will be compelled to do it, by mandamus from the court.

11. Statute—Inadmissible Evidence to Ascertain Meaning of.—The evidence of a member of the legislature is inadmissible to prove the knowledge of the members as to the existence of the custom of the inspector to take the draft flour, when the statute was enacted by them, for the purpose of ascertaining the true meaning of the statute.

12. Civil Suits—Instructions—Right of Counsel to Discuss.—In a civil suit (whatever may be the law in a criminal case), after the judge presiding at the trial has given an instruction to the jury, the counsel should not be allowed to discuss before the jury the same matter which the court has already decided.

The first of these cases was an action of trover in the Circuit court of the city of Richmond, brought by Crenshaw & Fisher, millers and partners, against Daniel S. Delaplane, the public inspector of flour in the city of Richmond, to recover the value of a quantity of what is called draft flour; that is, flour taken from the barrel by the inspector for the purpose of the inspection. This flour had been for many years retained by the inspector in Richmond and other cities on tide water, where flour is required by law to be inspected, as his perquisite or compensation in addition to the 459 *specific money compensation allowed by the statute; and the inspector claimed to retain it on the ground of immemorial usage.

The defendant introduced several witnesses, who either were then or had been inspectors of flour in Richmond, Petersburg, Lynchburg and Fredericksburg, all of whom stated that as far back as they had any knowledge on the subject, it had been the usage for the inspector to use an auger and trier of more than half an inch in diameter, to bore the hole in the head of the barrel for the purpose of inspecting it; and to appropriate the flour drawn from the barrel to his own use. And after having introduced certain reports of committees of the house of delegates in relation to the inspection of flour, made before the present act on the subject was passed, he introduced a witness, who stated that he was a member of the general assembly when the act was passed, and that he had been a member for several years previous to that session: and then the defendant proposed to prove by the witness that the members of the assembly who passed the act were well informed at the time, of the usage aforesaid, both as to the size of the auger and trier used by inspectors, and that they retained the flour drawn from the barrel in the process of inspection, as a part of their compensation, in addition to the fee in money allowed by law. But the plaintiffs, by their counsel, objected to the evidence; and it was excluded by the court: and the defendant excepted.

When all the evidence was submitted to the jury, both the plaintiffs and the defendant asked for instructions; but the court declining to give either as asked for, instructed the jury as follows:

If the jury shall believe from the evidence, that at the time and for a long period prior to the occasion, when the flour in controversy was inspected by the 460 *defendant, it was the custom for the inspector of flour in the city of Richmond to take to his own use the flour drawn at the inspections, and this custom was known to the plaintiffs prior to the occasion aforesaid, and had been on other previous occasions acquiesced in by them, and that the flour in controversy was taken and used by the defendant in pursuance of that custom, from a lot of flour inspected for the plaintiffs at their request, without objection on the part of the plaintiffs before the inspection was made, to the defendant's taking the flour as aforesaid, then the jury are to find for the defendant. But if the jury shall believe that the lot of flour from which the flour in controversy was taken, belonged to the plaintiffs, and that at the time the plaintiffs required the defendant to inspect the said flour, and before the same was inspected, they informed the defendant that he should not take the flour drawn at such inspection, and that the plaintiffs claimed it as their own; and that the defendant inspected the flour with the knowledge of this objection and claim on the part of the plaintiffs, and then took the flour drawn as aforesaid, to his own use, without the subsequent acquiescence of the plaintiffs, then the jury are to find for the plaintiffs, although the jury shall further believe that the defendant before and at the time he inspected the flour, claimed the right to retain to his own use the flour drawn as aforesaid: and to this instruction the defendant again excepted.

In the progress of the argument of the cause before the jury, the counsel for the defendant was proceeding to discuss the case upon the law as well as the facts before the jury, for the purpose, as he announced, of inducing the jury to find a verdict for the defendant in opposition to appointment and removal of inspectors, and directing in what condition the different articles must be, that are offered for inspection, and as to flour, meal and bread, that the barrels containing them, "shall have ten hoops well nailed with four nails in each chine hoop and three nails in each bilge hoop," proceeds as follows:

---

"§ 20. Every inspector, by himself or a deputy, shall attend when required, at such time and place, within his county or inspection district, as the owner of any commodity of which he is inspector may appoint, and examine such commodity, either by boring through the head, in case of a barrel, with an auger not exceeding half an inch in diameter, or in some other satisfactory manner as to barrels and all other parcels."

By § 36, the fees for inspections are fixed, and among them, "for each barrel of flour inspected at Richmond, one cent, and at all other places, two cents; on each barrel of corn meal or bread, two cents."

Digitized by Google

the instruction of the court, when he was arrested by the court, who decided that he should not argue against the instruc-461 tion of the court—the *court and not the jury being the proper exponent of the law, and the jury bound to take the law as the court had expounded it: and the defendant excepted.

There was a verdict for the plaintiffs for two thousand three hundred and sixty-one dollars and eight cents damages; and the court rendered a judgment thereon, with interest from the date of the judgment. Whereupon the defendant applied to this court for a supersedeas; which was allowed.

The second of these cases, was an application by Haxall, Crenshaw & Co. millers, to the Circuit court of the city of Richmond, for a mandamus to Daniel S. Delaplane, the inspector of flour in the city, to compel him to inspect a certain lot of flour then in barrels in their mill. To the rule which issued upon this application, the inspector made a return, in which, after setting out the provision of the statute, as requiring that the inspector shall inspect each barrel of flour which is submitted to him for inspection, by boring through the head of it with an auger not more than half an inch in diameter, or in some other satisfactory manner, he said that it had always been the custom of the inspector of flour in the city of Richmond and elsewhere in Virginia, from a time to the contrary whereof the memory of no living man runneth, to inspect flour in barrels, by boring through the head with an auger more than half an inch and less than an inch in diameter; that this had been his custom since he had been inspector; and that he was ready to inspect the flour of the plaintiffs in that manner. Or he was ready and willing to inspect the plaintiffs' flour in some other satisfactory manner, viz: without boring through the heads of the barrels, if the plaintiffs would cause a sufficient portion of the heading to be removed; but they have refused to let it be so inspected. And he averred that he could not in any 462 *other manner properly discharge the duties of his office, because he could not otherwise inspect flour so as to enable him to pronounce honestly and advisedly the judgment upon it which the law requires.

To this return the plaintiffs demurred, and the court sustained the demurrer; and the court having afterwards directed a peremptory mandamus to him, he applied to this court for a supersedeas; which was allowed.

The cases were heard together, and were very elaborately argued by Green, Joynes and Lyons, for the appellant, and Crenshaw, Randolph, Holladay and Crump, for the appellees.

For the appellant, it was insisted:

1st. That there may be customs in this country; and that the custom to take the draft flour was a good custom. And they cited 1 Thomas' Coke, p. 28; 1 Tuck. Com. Book 1, p. 23, 24; Walker v. Chichester, 2 Brevard's R. 67; Doe v. Dauncey, 7 Taunt. R. 674; Knowles v. Dow, 2 Foster's R. 387; 1 Tuck. Com. Book 2, p. 81; Hudson v. Johnson, 1 Wash. 10; Branch v. Burnley, 1 Call 147; Best on Presumptions 87, Law Libr.; 2 Greenleaf Evi. title Presumption, § 538; Archer v. Saddler, 2 Hen. & Munf. 370; Clarke v. Mayo, 4 Call 374; Coolidge v. Larned, 8 Pick. R. 504; Melvin v. Whiting, 10 Id. 295; 1 Greenleaf Evi. § 293; 1 Sugd. Vend. 178; Broome's Legal Maxims 719; Sedgwick's Const. & Statute Law 659-661, 739-747; Packard v. Richardson, 17 Mass. R. 122, 144; Edwards v. Darby, 12 Wheat. R. 206; Isaacs v. Steel, 3 Scam. R. 97; Steiner v. Coxe, 4 Penn. R. 13; Attorney Gen'l North Car. v. Bank of Cape Fear, 5 Ired. Equ. R. 71; Schoff v. Bloomfield, 8 Verm. R. 472; Boyden v. Town of Brookline, Id. 284; Kemion v. Hills, 1 Louis. Annual R. 419; Baring v. Reeder, 1 Hen. & Munf. 154, 161, 163; Findlay v. Smith, 6 Munf. 134, 148; Bodfish
463 *v. Fox, 23 Maine R. 90; Desha v. Holland, 12 Alab. R. 513; Knowles v. Dow, 2 Foster R. 384; Harris v. Nicholas, 5 Munf. 483; Sedg. Const. & Stat. Law, p. 3, 5, 8, 9, 12, 13, 17, 20, 21.

2d. That the usage both as to the draft flour and the auger and trier, had been recognized by the general assembly; and that the money compensation had been reduced by the act of 1849 from two cents to one cent in Richmond, because of the draft flour received by the inspector. They referred to the reports of the committees of the general assembly, to show that the usage was known to the general assembly, and that the law was based upon that usage. And they insisted that the parol evidence offered by the defendant to prove the knowledge of the members of the legislature, was improperly excluded. They cited Rogers v. Goodwin, 2 Mass. R. 475; Stuart v. Laird, 1 Cranch's R. 299; McKeen v. Delancy, 5 Id. 22; S. C. 1 Wash. C. C. R. 525; Steiner v. Coxe, 4 Penn. R. 13; Meriam v. Harsen, 2 Barb. Ch. R. 232, 269-272; Walworth Ch.; Brown v. Farran, 3 Hamm. R. 140; Chesnut v. Shane, 16 Ohio R. 599; Regina v. Ballivos, &c., de Bewdley, 1 P. Wms. R. 207, 214, 224; Myrick v. Hazey, 27 Maine R. 9; Hatch v. Vermont Cent. R. R. Co., 25 Verm. R. 49; Parramore v. Taylor, 11 Gratt. 220; Sorresby v. Hollins, 9 Mod. R. 223; 2 Burns Eccl. Law 481; 1 Collectanea Juridica 327, Dublin edi.; Houghton v. Rushby, Skinner's R. 257; 2 Vin. Abr. 476, p. 12; Ash v. Abdy, 3 Swanst. R. 664; Lilly's Case, 1 Leigh 525; Davis v. Rowe, 6 Rand. 355, 367; Heydon's Case, 3 Coke R. 7 b; Cow. & Hill's notes to Phillipps' Evi. 1408; Sibley v. Smith, 2 Mich. R. 486, 493; Staniels v. Raymond, 4 Cush. R. 314; The King v. Hog, 1 T. R. 721.

For the appellees, it was insisted:

1st. That though there are usages
464 in Virginia in *reference to which parties may contract, and thus be bound by them, yet in the legal sense of the terms, there are no customs, which bind a party independent of contract. And that if there might be a custom, the custom set up in this case was not a good custom. They cited Harris v. Carson, 7 Leigh 632, which they said was recognized in Governor, for Liggatt, v. Withers, 5 Gratt. 24; King v. St. Bartholomew, 22 Eng. C. L. R. 128; King v. Wix, Id. 60; Blewett v. Tregonning, 30 Id. 151; Leuckhart v. Cooper, 32 Id. 59; Lockwood v. Wood, 51 Eng. C. L. R. 30, 50, 67; 1 Phillipps' Evi. ch. 10, p. 660; Sedgw. Const. & Stat. Law 38, 39; 9 Bac. Abr. Statute, letter G, p. 235; Race v. Ward, 82 Eng. C. L. R. 700; Kenyon v. Nichols, 1 Rhode Isl. R. 106; Fletcher v. Seekell, Id. 267; Littlefield v. Maxwell, 31 Maine R. 134; 1 Smith's Lead. Cas. 593-4; Currie v. Page, 2 Leigh 617; Gardner v. Newburgh, 2 John. Ch. R. 161; 2 Kent's Com. 338; Schooner Reeside, &c., claimant, 2 Sumner's R. 567; Anderson v. Pitcher, referred to in 2 Stark. Evi. 566.

Digitized by Google

2d. That the statute having given the inspector a specific money compensation, no usage to take the draft flour could arise. And if the present statute was to be considered as authorizing it, the act is unconstitutional. Richmond and York River R. R. Co. v. Wicker, 13 Gratt. 375; Vanhorne's lessee v. Dorrence, 2 Dall. R. 304, 310, 311, 318; Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill N. Y. R. 140; Wynehamer v. The People, 3 Kernan N. Y. R. 378; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch's R. 87, 134; Satterlee v. Matthewson, 2 Peters' R. 380, 414; Wilkinson v. Leland, Id. 627, 657; 2 Story on Const. p. 252, § 1399.

3d. That neither the usage nor the reports of the committees of the general assembly, nor the evidence of the witness could be referred to in aid of the construction of this statute, in which there was no ambiguity, and in which draft flour was not once mentioned. Currie v. Page, 2 Leigh 617; Barker v. Pool, 6 Missouri
465 *R. 260; Lett v. Horner, 5 Blackf. R. 296; Handy v. The State, 7 Missouri R. 607; Sedgwick Stat. and Const. 382, 241, 257; Garth's Case, 3 Leigh 761.

LEE, J. These cases have been argued together, and from their nature and character may properly be considered in immediate connection. I propose to consider, first, the action of trover in which the right of the inspector to appropriate to his own use, the flour drawn by him from the barrel in the process of inspection, called the "draft flour," is the subject of controversy.

This right is sought to be sustained upon two grounds:

1. The long continued usage or custom of the inspectors of flour in this state to retain the draft flour as a part of the compensation for their services.

2. The recognition of this custom in acts of assembly and the sanction thus given to it by the legislature.

If there could be in Virginia, a legal, valid usage or custom the effect of which is to operate per se, as an exception to the general rules of the common law, and to vest a right which could not be claimed under them but must be claimed expressly against them, I should yet hold that such a custom when invoked for the benefit of a public functionary by transferring to him a portion of the goods of the citizen with which he is called upon to deal in the discharge of his office by way of additional compensation or perquisite, over and above what the law expressly provides, would be bad as being unreasonable, unjust and contrary to the policy of our laws. It would be unjust and unreasonable that a public officer having a specified duty to perfom in relation to the property of others, for a prescribed fee, should by the discharge of that duty acquire a right not only to 466 the fee allowed, *but also to a part of the property itself. It thus makes him the sole judge of the compensation which he shall receive. There is not even the pretense of a contract which might be said to be made with reference to the custom. The manufacturer who designs his flour for shipment has no choice in regard to the inspection. He is required by law to have such flour inspected, and is subject to a heavy penalty if he shall export or ship it without such inspection. He pays the fee because required by law to do so, but in no respect does he stand in the relation of a contracting party to the inspector. Now it is well settled that a custom to take or have any thing from another man's land, or for a profit a prendre, is bad. Gateward's Case, 6 Rep. 60; Grimstead v. Marlow, 4 T. R. 717; Blewett v. Tregonning, 30 Eng. C. L. R. 151; Wilson v. Willis, 7 East's R. 121; Race v. Ward, 82 Eng. C. L. R. 700; Waters v. Lilley, 4 Pick. R. 145; Perley v. Langley, 7 New Hamp. R. 233; Kenyon v. Nichols, 1 Rh. Isl. R. 106. In the case last cited, the claim was of a custom for all the citizens to take sea weed thrown up upon the shore, but it was considered to be a claim to have an interest or profit a prendre in the land of another, and as in the other cases, a custom to sustain such a claim was held bad. And no difference in principle is perceived between such a custom, and one to appropriate part of the personal chattels of another, against his will and without his consent, and without any consideration whatever. It is not an easement, or even a profit that is claimed, but a portion of the principal subject itself; and it seems where the claim is destructive of the subject matter it is held bad even if the party setting up the custom does not claim to carry away and appropriate it to his own use. Bland v. Lipscombe, 82 Eng. C. L. R. 712, n. It is but a petitio principii to say that the inspector may appropriate the draft flour 467 to his own use because he *may destroy it or throw it away. If it be conceded that to "inspect" means more than to make mere ocular examination, and that the inspector is authorized to bake a portion of the flour into bread, or subject it to a chemical test, still that would not authorize him to take away any more than is necessary for that purpose, nor even that for his own use and benefit. Taking away the draft flour is no part of the inspection, for that may be made as well whether the inspector appropriates it to himself, or restores it to the owner.

Digitized by Google

The practice of millers to take toll for grinding gives no countenance to this custom. The cases are in no respect parallel. The shipper of flour has no option; he must have his flour inspected and pay the fees without any thing in the nature of a contract between himself and the inspector. The owner of grain may or may not have it ground at his pleasure, and if he do it is matter of contract between himself and the miller that the toll is yielded. They may agree that the compensation for grinding shall be in money or other thing, instead. Nor is there any real force in the suggestion however plausible it may seem, that the inspector may keep the draft flour for the purpose of vindicating his judgment, if he should be sued for a false brand. It is impossible to believe that such a motive could have been the origin of this custom. No case, I apprehend, has ever occurred in which such an instrument of evidence has been resorted to, nor is it at all likely that ever the flour drawn from a barrel by an inspector was retained for any such purpose. In point of fact, the practice has been universal for the inspectors to mix the flour thus drawn in a common bulk and to sell or otherwise dispose of it. And moreover the gist of any action against an inspection for a false brand, would be the honesty, and not the absolute correctness of the judgment which he had pronounced.

468 *This custom, as it seems to me, is also bad, because in conflict with the general policy of the law, and this in several respects. It is certainly a marked feature in our system of offices that the compensation of public functionaries shall be fixed and certain. It is a great and pervading principle of our Code and is essential to the purity and impartiality of the government. The idea of a "perquisite of office" in the sense of a fee or allowance for services beyond the ordinary salary or settled wages, has no place in our legislation but seems to be repudiated by the most necessary implication. Once to admit it is to open a wide door for imposition and corruption. Dr. Webster tells us that the common acceptation of the word in America is a fee to an officer for a specific service in lieu of an annual salary, but he gives also the other sense in which it is elsewhere used. The salaries fixed in our Code for some officers, the specified fees for services allowed to others and the penalties imposed in some instances for demanding fees for services not performed or for demanding greater fees for services than those allowed by law, all show the intention of the legislature that the compensation to the officer should be restricted to the fees expressly provided. In the inspection laws throughout, the fees are specifically named, and the idea of any further compensation would seem to be plainly excluded. For many years indeed prior to 1792, after the sum named were added the words "and no more" which served, not merely to limit the pecuniary fee to be paid down, but to exclude the idea of any other compensation, and thus discountenance the custom of taking the draft flour; and although in that year these words were dropped, it was doubtless because they were deemed surplusage the idea having been sufficiently expressed, as the words "to be paid down by the owner" found in previous acts had been dropped in 1787.

And when the present Code fixes
469 *the inspector's fee at one cent the barrel, it can hardly mean to give as much more in the form of flour as the inspector may think it necessary to take for the purpose of inspection. Now although a custom when otherwise good may override and displace the common law rule, yet a statute introducing a new principle, with a negative either express or necessarily implied, must be strictly pursued and no custom can be set up against it. Dwarris on Stat. 475, 477; Lord Lovelace's Case, Wm. Jon. 270; Jones v. Smith, 2 Bulstr. R. 36; King v. Bishop of London, Show. R. 413, 420; 9 Bac. Ab. "Statute," G, p. 237. Sedgwick on Stat. and Constit. Law 38, 39. And such is I think the character of these inspection laws; for a negative to any other compensation than the fee expressly given arises from most necessary implication. And although a custom or usage may be invoked to interpret a statute or a contract that needs interpretation, where something is to be done not sufficiently explained, yet where there is no doubt or ambiguity, it cannot be resorted to to contradict what is plain or to control, vary or add to or diminish what is expressed in formal and deliberate terms. 1 Greenleaf Ev. § 292, § 293. and cases cited in nn. Blackett v. Royal Exch. Ass. Co., 2 Cromp. & Jer. 244; The Schooner Reeside, 2 Sumn. R. 567, opinion of Story, J.

This custom, also as it seems to me necessarily contravenes the policy of the provision forbidding an inspector to trade in any commodity of which he is inspector. For when it is considered that this inspector withdrew for his own benefit very nearly sixty thousand pounds of flour on the inspections for one house within a period of seventeen months, and that for the year ending the 30th of June 1858 the number of barrels inspected was six hundred and fifteen thousand two hundred and twenty-nine, and that for two quarters only ending December 31, 1858, the number was 470 *four hundred and one thousand seven hundred and thirty-eight, it must be perceived that the inspector becomes of necessity a large dealer in the commodity of flour. It is true the section authorizes the inspector to sell any commodity which he may have received in payment of his fees: but by this doubtless is meant any article for which he agrees that the fee allowed him by law may be commuted. I cannot think that the act contemplated any thing in the nature of a perquisite to be received in kind by the inspector over and above the fee prescribed. I think it a sound principle of construction that a law imposing burdens, like any act granting privileges in derogation of common right, should be interpreted favorably to the public, and if there be even reasonable doubt as to the extent to which it goes, such doubt should be resolved in their favor. If a definite and described charge be made, there can be no room to presume that some other and further burden in respect of the same subject was intended to be imposed.

Digitized by Google

But I think this custom is also bad because it lacks the necessary age to render it valid as such. Indeed I do not see how any particular custom in derogation of the common law and which prevents the application of the common law rule to the locality in which the custom prevails by showing that the common law as to this subject never had any existence in that locality can be held good in Virginia. In Harris v. Carson, 7 Leigh 632, Judge Cabell in his opinion, in which all the other judges concurred excepting Brooke who was absent, says "a custom to be valid must be as old as the common law; it must be immemorial. And if the particular custom be proved to be immemorial, it necessarily excludes the general custom or common law; for two opposite and inconsistent customs cannot have immemorially existed in the same place and as to the same thing." In that case the question was as to the 471 *right of the offgoing tenant by a lease under seal, for a fixed and determinate period, to take the waygoing crop. And although in Wigglesworth v. Dallison, Doug. R. 201, it was decided that a custom would entitle such tenant to the waygoing crop even where the lease was by writing under seal and to end at a fixed time, yet it was held that in Virginia the tenant could assert no such claim as no such custom could be good because not immemorial. And the judge said: "It is clear that it could not have existed at any time even as a recent custom until after the settlement of the country and after the common law had attached to every part of it. And nobody will contend that a recent usage or practice however general will change the common law."

This opinion concurred in by all four judges of this court who were present, would seem to be conclusive upon the question in this case. Nor do I feel at all prepared to advance a different one. That a custom to displace the common law must be immemorial, and that the time of memory runs back to the reign of Richard Cœur de Lion, are maxims of such ancient, universal and familiar acceptation in the English law, that it is now quite too late to controvert their correctness. And although this period was that fixed for the limitation of the writ of right by the statute of Westminster First, which was afterwards reduced to sixty years by the statute of 32 Hen. VIII. ch. 2, I am aware of no change made in the mode of estimating the period during which to be good a custom must be said to have continued. It is true that it has been made the subject of regret and complaint that the time of legal memory was not shortened by the courts of law upon the same reason which led to the reduction of the period of limitation, yet that it remained unchanged is every where conceded. See Best on Presumptions 187; Cruise's Dig. title XXXI. ch.
472 *1; 2 Greenleaf Ev. § 538; Coolidge v. Larned, 8 Pick. 504. I am aware that cases are to be found in which regular usage short of the prescribed period has been held to be sufficient evidence of the custom alleged, and where uncontradicted or unexplained, deemed sufficient to authorize a jury to find the existence of an immemorial custom. But they do not contradict the general rule as they will be found to depend upon the artificial doctrine of presumptions, which has been introduced, in part, or at least taken advantage of, to evade the rule of legal memory and remedy the inconvenience attributed to the omission of the courts to shorten the period by analogy to the reduction of that of the limitation of the writ of right. But this doctrine cannot be applied to a subject like this. It may not be confined to incorporeal hereditaments but may extend to real estate also; but this falls within neither description: and the presumption of a grant is not a rule of law but is to be the basis of a finding as to a fact by a jury. Moreover, it can only be made where the thing lies in grant and where there is a party by whom the grant could be made as well as one to receive it. Such a right as this could not be the subject of a grant, nor is there any one who could be supposed to have made it, nor any one who could be supposed to have accepted it. The millers of the present day cannot be bound by the concessions of those of former years because in no legal sense can the latter occupy the relation of ancestors or predecessors to them, nor can the inspector of this day claim to have derived any such right by succession. His rights grow out of the statute and not of any relation in which he can be supposed to stand to those who may have happened to precede him in the office.

In reference to those cases in which a jury has been advised to presume a usage to have been immemorial from proof of its continuance for a shorter period 473 than *that of legal memory, it must be observed that this was where the usage was uncontradicted and unexplained and its origin not shown to have been within the prescribed period. This however may always be done and the presumption that the custom was immemorial thus repelled. Nor is it necessary that its origin or a time when it did not exist must be shown by the memory of some living witness: for the "memory of man" which is spoken of is not to be understood as merely living memory, but memory by the means of records or other written memorials. And therefore where there is any proof of the original or commencement of any thing, it cannot be claimed by prescription unless it were before the commencement of the reign of Richard I. Coke Litt. 113; Ibid. 115 a; 3 Stark. Ev. 1204; Bull. Nisi Pr. 248. The origin of the usage in this case, though not in the memory of living men, is shown by the dates of the acts establishing inspections beyond the earliest of which of course the usage could not have existed.

Digitized by Google

I have not thought it necessary to enter into the enquiry as to the origin of the custom of merchants, or into those respecting the origin of the jurisdiction of the Court of chancery or of the King's bench in other than criminal cases, or of the Courts of exchequer and common pleas; nor shall I stop to consider the custom to bar entails by surrender in the Lords' court without a recovery; all of which subjects have been so earnestly discussed by the counsel. Time and space would fail me were I to undertake to enter upon the task. I must content myself with saying that I think these enquiries would not shed much light upon the subject of discussion here, depending, as I think it does, upon a few intelligible legal principles. Neither can I stop to examine the various cases cited from the reports of our sister states and some of the courts of the United States to establish a doctrine different from that of our 474 *own court. It is sufficient for my purpose that this court has by the unanimous opinion of all the four judges sitting, disaffirmed the existence of any customary law in Virginia in a case in which the alleged custom would have been and in fact had been held good in England, and that upon general principles I think that conclusion sound and correct. Counsel, it is true, have sought to distinguish the custom alleged in this case from that claimed in Harris v. Carson, as being a general custom prevailing throughout the state, whilst that in the latter case was a mere local custom prevailing in a limited section of the state. It would be difficult to predicate of a custom prevailing at the few points at which there have been inspections of flour that it was general and prevailed throughout the state: but whether general or local, I think the objections to it are equally fatal. The cases cited will I think for the most part be found to rest upon the doctrine of presumptions to which I have already adverted, or to fall within that class in which the custom has been held to be effectual not per se as such, but because it was supposed to enter into and form part of the contract between the parties, the same being assumed to have been made with reference to it. This class of cases I do not undertake to limit or call in question. I think we have nothing to do with them here. As I have endeavored to show, there is no semblance of a contract between the shipper and the inspector, nor, as I think, is there any between the legislature or the public and a party appointed to exercise a public office. He takes the office on the terms and conditions prescribed by the statute, and when it allows a fixed and definite fee for the service which he is to perform, I think it very far-fetched and illogical to say that he acquires also by virtue of his appointment, a right as by contract, to a portion of the property of the citizen in respect of which his 475 *office is to be exercised because his predecessors in the office may have been in the habit of taking a like portion without objection or protest on the part of those with whose property they had been called upon to deal. The only contract which as it seems to me can possibly be inferred from an appointment to a public office created by statute, with specified fees for the services rendered, and its acceptance, is an agreement on his part to perform the duties of the office, and on the part of the public that he shall be entitled to the fees prescribed by the act when the services shall have been rendered.

In every view which I have been able to take of this case, I have been brought to the conclusion that there is and can be, no such customary law as that contended for, which per se can serve to vest the right claimed by the inspector. Nor can I think that it is any infringement of the right of the people to deny the existence of such customary law unless recognized by the legislature, as contended by the counsel. On the contrary at this day and in this age, in a government like ours, there can be little need of a resort to such a source as custom for legal sanction. And as the constitution vests the whole law-making power in the legislature it is difficult to see how comparatively a few individuals can make a law by custom which shall be binding upon the public at large. It would savor more of encroachment upon the rights of the people to say that they should be bound by a law which had never been assented to by them through their proper representatives. And if the legislature were to declare by express enactment that custom might make law, it might well be questioned whether such a provision would not be void for the want of power in the legislature to delegate to a few men authority to make a law by getting up a custom.

But it is contended that if the cus-
476 tom alleged cannot *operate proprio vigore to vest the right claimed in the inspector, yet that it has been sufficiently recognized by statute and thus has received the legislative sanction. Certainly if it has been recognized either expressly or by necessary implication it would thereby receive vitality, and the right claimed could well be asserted as conferred by the statute. Now I have examined all the acts of the general assembly concerning the inspection of flour commencing with the act of February 1745 and coming down to the chapter upon that subject in the present Code, and I have been unable to find any provision in which the right of the inspector to appropriate the draft flour to his own use is in any way recognized. The draft flour is no where mentioned in any of the various acts that have been passed from time to time, nor have I been able to find a single provision for which the right of the inspector to take it can be derived by necessary or even fair implication. It has been argued, it is true, upon the construction of the act in the present Code upon this subject, that as it had been the usage of the inspectors to take the draft flour under the previous acts, that usage should be regarded as the contemporaneous construction of those acts; and that as the legislature had substantially re-enacted those laws without negativing the usage, it had adopted that construction with the acts themselves. I do not at all impugn the maxim "cotemporanea expositio optima et fortissima est in lege," but I think it has no application here. The usage was no construction of the acts, but was something in direct contravention of their provisions. It was in terms negatived up to the act of 1792 by the addition of the words "and no more" after the fees prescribed; and although those words were dropped in that act, yet the negative was as strongly implied by its terms. That act was entitled "an act reducing into one the several acts for regulating the 477 inspection *of flour and bread," and was special and precise in its provisions, and it is most reasonable to infer that the words were dropped because it was thought that naming a specific fee for the service was a sufficient exclusion of the idea of any thing more being demanded, and that the words were therefore unnecessary. If it had been intended to sanction the usage some allusion would doubtless have been made to it. There might be some little plausibility in the argument if it appeared that the act of 1792 had passed after the reports of the committees to the house ascertaining the fact of such usage, which have been referred to (supposing these reports could be received in aid of the construction of the acts as to which I express no opinion); but the reports which have been cited in the argument appear to have commenced in 1831 and none has been shown prior to 1792. Nor is there a single provision in the act of 1819 or that in the present Code, which can, as it seems to me, with the least plausibility, be referred to the knowledge on the part of the legislature of the existence of this usage. The reduction of the fee at Richmond from two cents to one cent has been relied on, but that should more naturally be referred to the great increase in the quantity of flour inspected at Richmond than to the usage of the inspector to take the draft flour. The legislature no doubt thought from the large number of barrels usually inspected at that point, the statute fee would afford an ample salary to the inspector, without any reference to the draft flour. No reduction was made in the fee at any other place, although the usage appears to have prevailed at all the places at which there were inspections, and although the existence of the usage was as well known as far back as 1831, at least, as it was in 1849, yet during all that period no change had been made that 478 *can be traced directly or indirectly, to the existence of this custom.

Digitized by Google

Upon a review therefore of all the inspection laws, and finding no mention made any where of the draft flour nor any provision which either by necessary implication or even fair intendment can be held to recognize the usage to take it, I think the fair and reasonable inference is that the legislature did not intend either to affirm or disaffirm the right of the inspector to appropriate it to his own use, but did intend to leave the question exactly where it then stood until the right should be denied and the subject contested before the courts. Whilst however we may look in vain to the acts for the explanation of this usage, I think it not difficult to understand its true origin. At first and for a long time the inspections of flour were in small parcels, and the flour drawn was too inconsiderable to attract the attention of the owner or the inspector. In course of time however, it became worth the attention of the inspector whilst the quantity taken from any one owner was not sufficient to induce him to make any objection. It gradually continued to increase until as it appears in one year alone, the quantity of the draft flour received by the inspector and appropriated to his own use must have amounted to upwards of fifteen hundred barrels; and when the large manufacturers of the article began to realize the large quantities of flour which they were thus made to contribute to the store of the inspector, their attention was drawn more closely to the subject, and hence their protests against the right to take it under this litigation.

Being thus of opinion that there is nothing in the statute which confers or recognizes the right of the inspector to take the draft flour, I deem it entirely unnecessary to examine the question discussed by 479 the *counsel whether it would be within the constitutional competency of the legislature to take from the citizen a portion of his property for the benefit of the inspector without making the former any pecuniary compensation, and forbear to express any opinion upon it.

The complaint of the exclusion of the testimony of the witness Stovall admits I think of several answers. In the first place the issue was one of fact before the jury and it certainly could not be material for their purposes that they should be informed as to the state of knowledge of the legislature or of members in respect of the existence of the custom of the inspectors to take the draft flour, at the time the inspection law was passed. The object, it is claimed, was to aid in the construction of the act, and if admissible at all, it was not as evidence to go to the jury, but as matter for the enlightenment of the court. Again: as we have seen, there was no mention of the draft flour in the act, and nothing in its provisions which could be traced to such knowledge as its fruit, the evidence was simply irrelevant for any purpose. But, thirdly, I go further and maintain that the evidence was illegal in itself and inadmissible even for the consideration of the court. Without attempting to define the limits within which a court in construing a statute may properly look to extrinsic matters for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the legislature, I cannot hesitate to say that to call witnesses to the stand for the purpose of proving that facts were known to the legislature or members thereof which may be supposed to indicate their intention in passing the law, must be inadmissible. As has been remarked, if the utmost latitude of proof was allowed, if reports and journals and parol evidence of witnesses and even of the members themselves, were admitted, it would be utterly impossible in the great majority of cases to prove 480 what the intent *of the legislative body actually was; and all attempts by any kind of evidence to get at a meaning different from that embodied in the enactment would from the nature of things prove utterly vain and illusory. Sedgwick on Stat. and Constit. Law, p. 332. See also Ibid. p. 240, et seq.; Bank of Pennsylvania v. Commonwealth, 17 Penn. State R. 144; Southwark Bank v. Commonwealth, 26 Penn. State R. 446; Supervisors of Niagara v. The People, 7 Hill N. Y. R. 504; Sedgwick Stat. & Const. Law 243. Where witnesses are called to prove knowledge on the part of members of particular facts, they can perhaps only speak from the recollections of conversations with them, and thus in the grave matter of expounding a statute, a species of evidence is resorted to which upon an issue of fact is regarded as not entitled to much consideration because so liable to be misunderstood or perverted. The evils that might result from such a mode of interpreting a statute may be curiously illustrated thus: in several cases in different circuits involving the construction of the same act different members might be called as witnesses whose recollections might differ materially as to the facts supposed to be known to the legislative body, and if the construction is made to depend upon their testimony, it would be different in different cases, and yet each case might be right upon its record and contradictory judgments upon the same statute would have to be affirmed. I think the tendency of the modern decisions is to the rule that the meaning and intent of the lawmaker is to be sought for in the statute itself. See Bank of Pennsylvania v. Commonwealth, above cited, in which it was held that evidence of public embarrassment, the proclamation and message of the governor, the journals of the house of representatives, and the reports of committees should be wholly disregarded. In Southwark Bank v. Commonwealth, it was declared that the journals are not evidence of 481 the *meaning of a statute, because this is to be ascertained from the language of the act itself and the facts connected with the subject on which it is to operate. And per Lord Denman, C. J., "in construing an act of parliament we cannot go into what was said in either house of parliament before the act was passed." Regina v. Whittaker, &c., 61 Eng. C. L. R. 635. See also Schooner Paulina's Cargo v. United States, 7 Cranch's R. 52, 60; The King v. Poor Law Commissioners, 6 Adolph. & Ell. 1, 7; King v. Burrell, 12 Adolph. & Ell. 468. I am not aware that it has ever been settled in this state whether extrinsic facts existing prior to the passage of a law, not being themselves rules of law or acts of legislation, can be taken into consideration in any way for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the legislature, but I am clear that the mode of proof offered in this case was wholly inadmissible.

Digitized by Google

The only remaining question in this case is that raised by the exception to the action of the court in arresting the counsel and prohibiting him from arguing before the jury against the instruction of the court. It is a duty which the court owes to its own self-respect as well as to the speedy administration of justice not to allow counsel to discuss before the jury the same matter which had been already decided by it. If the decision was right the party could sustain no injury by not being allowed to controvert it before the jury. If it was erroneous, his remedy was by bill of exceptions and an application to an appellate court to correct the error. The wrong and injustice of any other rule will be apparent on a moment's consideration. If the court has erred, the party aggrieved may have the error corrected how often soever it may be repeated. If the court was right, but the party has succeeded in getting a verdict in defiance of the court's instruction, the party ag-482 grieved has no remedy save *by an appeal to the same court to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial on payment of costs; and the power of the court to administer this remedy is exhausted after the second trial, so that if upon the third the party shall succeed in obtaining another similar verdict notwithstanding the instruction of the court, the party injured is totally without remedy.

Whatever therefore may be the true interpretation of the maxim that "the jury are the judges both of law and fact" as applied to criminal trials, I take it that in civil cases, it is for the court to expound the law and for the jury to pass upon the facts; and where the court has instructed the jury as to the law, it is no more competent for the jury to encroach upon the province of the court by finding a verdict in defiance of its instruction than it is for the latter to trench upon the province of the former by undertaking to direct them as to the facts, and that no counsel should be permitted to argue against the instruction of the court for the purpose of inducing the jury to find a verdict in defiance of it. Smith v. Morrison, 3 A. K. Marsh. R. 81. See Garth's Case, 3 Leigh 778, in which this is admitted by the counsel, Mr. B. W. Leigh to be correct.

Digitized by Google

I pass over the motion for a new trial as it involves no other question than those I have already considered, and proceed to the mandamus case which I shall endeavor to examine as briefly as may be.

The questions presented are whether the inspector of flour is authorized to exercise his office in any other manner than by boring through the head of the barrel; and if not whether he is restricted to an auger not exceeding half an inch in diameter.

The first act providing for the inspection of flour intended for exportation was an act passed in February 1745 which required the inspector to "view and examine" the flour in bulk, and if found clean, pure and 483 *unmixed, to see the same packed in casks and barrels and stamped as therein directed, for which he was allowed a fee of six pence for every barrel of two hundred and twenty pounds or less, and for every cask of greater weight, eight pence. By the act of October 1748, the fee was reduced to three pence for such barrels and six pence for casks of greater weight. By the act of November 1762, the same fees were provided as in the last named act. By the act of October 1765, the mode of inspecting by boring the cask was first provided and the same fees were continued: but nothing was said in the act about the size of the auger. By the act of October 1776 the fee was reduced to one penny half penny per barrel of two hundred and twenty pounds, and in proportion for casks of greater weight, but nothing is said in the act about the mode of inspection. This act expired by its own limitation and was revised and amended by the act of May 1780 which fixed the fee for the inspection of flour at five shillings per barrel of the then standard weight and in proportion for casks of greater weight. The next act on the subject was the act of May 1782 by which the quantity of flour which each barrel intended for exportation was required to contain was fixed at one hundred and ninety-six pounds. In November 1787, another act was passed entitled "an act to regulate the inspection of flour and bread," which after reciting that the laws theretofore made for the inspection of flour had been found defective and further regulations had become necessary, proceeded to designate the different places at which inspections should be had and to prescribe various regulations concerning them. The mode of inspection was to be by boring through the head of the barrel with an instrument not exceeding ha'f an inch in diameter and the fee was fixed at two pence the barrel. This act was followed by that of December 1792 entitled "an act for reducing into one 484 the several *acts for regulating the inspection of flour and bread." This act prescribed general regulations upon the whole subject, and like the previous act directed the inspection to be made by boring through the head of the cask with an instrument not exceeding half an inch in diameter and fixed the fee at several places of which Richmond was one, at two cents. After the date of this act, I do not find that any thing is said in any act about the mode of inspection or the fee until the revisal of 1819 which prescribes the same mode of inspection and the same fee (at Richmond) as the act of 1792: nor after the revisal of 1819 do I find any change made until the revisal of 1849. Of the Code then adopted the eighty-eighth chapter purports to be concerning the inspection of flour and certain other commodities in the number of which are fish, salt, butter, lard, lime, &c.; and the twentieth section provides that the inspector shall attend when requested and inspect any commodity of which he is inspector, by boring through the head in case of a barrel, with an auger not exceeding half an inch in diameter or in some other satisfactory manner as to barrels and all other parcels. Now I think upon a review of all these laws, that it was not the intention of the legislature to change the mode of inspecting flour. Since 1765 the mode of inspection had been by boring with an auger (excepting, perhaps, during the period between 1776 and 1787) nor do I see any sufficient indication of a purpose to change that mode at the revisal of 1849. By the eighth section all barrels containing flour, meal and bread offered for inspection are required to be well nailed with four nails in each chine hoop and three nails in each bilge hoop, and by the thirty-ninth section authority is given to the inspector to unpack any barrel but only in case he shall suspect false marking or the purchaser shall request
it. These provisions would seem to 485 exclude the idea of unpacking *for the ordinary purpose of inspection and although the provision as to nailing was extended to bread which could scarcely be inspected by boring through the barrel, it was probably done through inadvertence. The revisors for the sake of brevity, have sought to embrace a great many different commodities in one chapter and have therefore necessarily used language of a somewhat general character, but I think it should be construed reddendo singula singulis, and in the absence of any manifestation of any purpose to change the long established and familiar mode of inspecting flour, I should construe the section to mean that as to flour and corn meal the inspection should be by boring through the head of the barrel; and as to other commodities, the inspection of which could not be conveniently or satisfactorily made in that way, in some other satisfactory manner. If this had been intended to apply to flour also, there would have been no need to say anything of boring at all, and what was said of it, should for the sake of brevity, so much desired, have been omitted. Looking therefore to all the previous legislation (clearly a legitimate mode of arriving at the true construction of any act), I am of opinion that it was intended that such commodities as had been previously inspected by boring through the head of the barrel should continue to be inspected in the same way, and that it was not intended in respect to the very important subject of flour to leave the mode of inspection in the discretion of the inspector: that in respect to flour boring was considered a satisfactory mode of inspection, but in respect to other commodities to which that mode of inspection was unsuited, the inspector was to adopt some other that would furnish a satisfactory test.

Digitized by Google

As to the size of the auger which the inspector of flour is permitted to use, I think there can be no real question. It is true that the inspector avers in his return 486 *to the writ that he cannot made a satisfactory inspection by boring with an auger of no greater diameter than half an inch, and that it had always been the custom of the inspectors to bore with an auger of greater diameter, such as he had been in the habit of using. But the averment that the inspection could not be made in a satisfactory manner with a half inch auger was one which, I think, it was not competent for the inspector to make. The law had ascertained that a satisfactory inspection could be made with such an instrument and it was not for him to gainsay it. And it is in vain to appeal to custom to justify so plain a deviation from the requirement of the statute.

Much of what has been said upon the other branch of this case, will apply on this point to this, and I shall not therefore repeat it. I will content myself with saying that in my judgment this statute needs and will admit of no resort to a usage or custom for its interpretation. To adopt it would be not to construe the law but to set up something in direct contravention of its provisions. The restriction upon the size of the auger was most probably intended to limit the loss that might unavoidably occur in the process of inspection through injury to the surrounding mass by the admission of air and weakening the head of the barrel, and parties are as much entitled to have it respected as any other requirement of the act; and if the inspector will persist in disregarding it, any party aggrieved is clearly entitled to the mandamus to enforce it.

Thus as it seems to me there is no error in either judgment, and I am of opinion that both should be affirmed.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Lee, J.

Judgments affirmed.

---

487 *Wortham & Co. v. Smith & Sampson.

January Term, 1860. Richmond.

(Absent ALLEN, P., and LEE, J.*)

1. Statute of Limitations—Store Accounts—To What Statute Applies.†—The act, Code, ch. 149, § 5, p. 591, limiting actions on store accounts to two years, does not embrace wholesale dealings of importing and wholesale merchants, but applies exclusively to the store accounts of retail dealers with their customers.‡

2. Store Accounts—Evidence as to Nature of Account.—There being no evidence before the jury to show whether the account filed was of dealings by wholesale or by retail, other than what appears from the face of the account, proved to be correct, if the items of the account indicate that the sales were by wholesale and not by retail, they should be so regarded.

3. Appellate Practice—Plea of Statute of Limitations—Failure to Specify Act Relied on.—A plea of the act of limitations should state on what act the defendant relies. Though if it appears that the plaintiff could not probably be mistaken as to the act relied on, the appellate court will not reverse the judgment for the failure of the plea to specify the act.

This was an action of assumpsit in the Circuit court of Powhatan county, brought to August rules 1855, by Edwin Wortham & Co., merchants and partners, against Josiah Smith and Francis J. Sampson, late merchants and partners trading under the name and style of Smith & Sampson, to recover the sum of twelve hundred and eighty dollars and twelve cents, for goods, wares and merchandise sold and delivered by the plaintiffs to the defendants. The defendants appeared and pleaded "non-assumpsit," and 488 "the statute *of limitations;" to which the plaintiffs replied generally.

On the trial the plaintiffs introduced the account filed with the declaration, the first item of which bore date April 9, 1852, and the last item December 1, 1852. The whole account consisted of charges for articles sold by the plaintiffs to the defendants, and the articles were sold in whole parcels at a time. The correctness of the account was proved, and the written admission of its correctness by the defendants, under date of April 21, 1853, was also introduced, and proved to have been assigned in the name of the firm by Sampson. And this being all the evidence in the cause, the court, on the motion of the defendants, gave to the jury the following instructions: to which the plaintiffs excepted.

If the jury shall believe, from the evidence in the cause, that the acknowledgment in writing now offered in evidence by the plaintiffs, was made more than two years before the institution of this suit, then the plaintiffs have no right to maintain this action, by reason of the said acknowledgment, but that the same is barred by the act of limitations as to store accounts.

---

*JUDGES ALLEN and LEE were sitting in a Special court of appeals.

†See principal case cited in Radford v. Fowlkes, 85 Va. 852, 8 S. E. Rep. 817; Roots v. Salt Co., 27 W. Va. 491. See also, Tomlin v. Kelly, 1 Wash. 190.

‡Code, ch. 149, § 5, p. 591. "Every action to recover money, which is founded upon an award or on any contract other than a judgment or recognizance, shall be brought within the following number of years next after the right to bring the same shall have first accrued, that is to say: * * * * * and if it be on any other contract, within five years, unless it be an action for any articles charged in any store account; in which case, the action may be brought within two years."

Digitized by Google

And the court further instructs the jury, that no action can be maintained for articles charged in a store account, after the expiration of two years after said account is due and payable.

The jury rendered a verdict for the defendants upon the issue joined on the plea of the statute of limitations, and the court entered up a judgment on the verdict: and thereupon the plaintiffs applied to this court for a supersedeas; which was awarded.

Steger, for the appellants.
C. Robinson, for the appellees.

DANIEL, J. The controversy in 489 this case hinges *mainly on the proper construction of the provision of the 5th section of the 19th chapter of the Code of 1849, requiring an action for any articles charged in any store account to be brought within two years next after the right to bring the same shall have first accrued; and in order to ascertain such construction, it is necessary to look somewhat into the history of our legislation and judicial decisions upon the subject.

The first act, the provisions of which it seems to me necessary to notice particularly, is the act of 1748, entitled "an act prescribing the method of proving book debts." 6 Hen. Stat. at Large, p. 53. The preamble recites: Whereas the trade of merchandise in this colony is chiefly carried on by retail, and the goods and merchandises are often delivered to the buyer by the retailer himself, and it frequently happens that nobody is privy thereto but the buyer and seller, so that in many cases there may be a defect of legal evidence to charge such buyer, and by that means a fair trader may be hindered from recovering a just debt; and the act then proceeds to declare that in any action of debt or upon the case where the plaintiff shall declare upon an emisset or indebitatus assumpsit for goods, wares or merchandises by him sold and delivered to any other person or persons, and upon the trial of such action such plaintiff shall declare upon his oath, that the matter in dispute is a store account, and that he hath no means to prove the delivery of the articles therein contained, or any of them, but by his store book; in that case, such book may be given in evidence at the trial, if he shall make out by his oath that such book doth contain a true account of all the dealings, or the last settlement of accounts between them, and that all the articles therein contained were bona fide delivered, and that he hath given all just credits due to the defendant in such account; and such book and oath shall be admitted and 490 *received as good evidence for any of the articles for goods delivered within two years before the same action brought, but not for any article of a longer standing, unless the defendant shall have removed out of the county where he resided at the time of his contracting the debt, and then within three years before action brought.

It is not necessary to advert to the act of 1732, 4 Hen. Stat. at Large, p. 329, which is repealed by the 5th section of the act aforesaid of 1748, further than to observe that it is substantially, as well in its preamble as in all its provisions relating to the matter in hand, identical with the act of 1748, with the exception that the period within which the goods are to be delivered is eighteen months instead of two years.

The act next to be noticed is that of 1779, which is entitled "an act for discouraging extensive credits, and repealing the act prescribing the method of proving book debts." After reciting that the method of proving book debts, and the long and extensive credits formerly given by merchants and traders, had been found by experience injurious to the people of this commonwealth, this statute repeals the act of 1748, and then proceeds to declare that all actions founded upon accounts for goods, wares and merchandise sold and delivered, or for any articles charged in any store account, shall be sued within six months next after the cause of such action, or the delivery of such goods, wares and merchandise, and not after; it requires the date of the articles charged in any such account severally to be particularly specified; affixes a penalty to the post-dating of any article in such account; and makes it the duty of every court and jury before whom any such action shall be tried, ex officio to take notice of the act, although the defendant may fail to plead it.

By the act of 1789 (13 vol. Hen. St.
491 p. 5) the act *of 1779 is altered to the extent of requiring, that the period of limitation for suits on store accounts shall be one year instead of six months, and that a defendant intending to rely upon such limitation shall plead it.

In the case of Tomlin & als. v. Kelly, 1 Wash. 190, decided in 1793, the jury found a special verdict in the following words: "We find for the plaintiffs one hundred pounds nine shillings six and a half pence damages, if the court shall be of opinion that an action can be maintained for goods, wares and merchandises imported for sale by the plaintiffs who kept no retail store, but who sold the same at public auction on a wharf, and delivered them to the defendant twelve months before this suit was brought—otherwise for the defendant." The District court gave judgment for the defendant upon the verdict, and the plaintiffs obtained a supersedeas from this court.

In the course of the argument before this court it was urged that the mischief which it was the aim of the act of 1779 to remedy, existed only in the retail business, which almost entirely formed the internal commerce of this country before the war, and of course must have been alluded to by the legislature; and that additional proof that the retail trade alone was contemplated, was to be derived from the clause of the law requiring each item in the account to be truly dated. In answer to this, it was said that the second clause of the act created a bar against all actions founded upon accounts for goods sold and delivered, or for any articles charged in any store account; and why (it was asked), if the law only meant store accounts, was the former part of that clause inserted, as the latter would have answered the purpose? It was also further said, that if it were politic to prevent extensive credits in the confined sales of a retail store, the reason applied a fortiori to extensive 492 wholesale *negotiations; if it were wise to prevent such credits when the dealings were transacted in a house by private bargain, it was equally so when the sale was upon a wharf, at public auction. The judgment of the District court was reversed by this court without dissent; and as the opinion of the court is very brief, I give it in the language of the president (Pendleton):

Digitized by Google

"In discussing the case of Beall v. Edmondson (he says), it was agreed, by the unanimous opinion of a full court, that the act of 1779 applied only to the store accounts of retail dealers; and we should feel ourselves bound by that opinion, unless it were overruled by as full a court, even if our sentiments at this time, respecting the principle then established, were different from what they then were. But the present court retain the same opinion upon the subject; and must therefore pronounce the law to be in favor of the plaintiff, upon the special conclusion of the verdict."

On referring to the case of Beall v. Edmondson (3 Call 514), mentioned in the foregoing opinion, it will be seen that it was the case of a suit for goods, wares and merchandise, in which the jury found a special verdict for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the court, whether an express assumpsit of the defendant took the debt out of the act of 1779. The true question submitted to the court in that case, it will be seen, was whether the statute of 1779 had any application to the case of an express promise by the defendant to pay the amount of a store account; and in their written opinion they confined themselves to that question, and held that the statute applied only when it was necessary for the plaintiff to produce and rely on his account, and did not embrace the case of an express promise to pay, upon which a suit might be maintained without the account. The court in their written opinion say nothing 493 as to the act of 1779 applying *only to the store accounts of retail dealers; but we have the statement of the president (as has been seen), that in the discussion of the case, such was agreed as the unanimous opinion of the court. This interpretation of the act of 1779, as agreed in Beall v. Edmondson, and adjudged in Tomlin v. Kelly, was doubtless well known to our legislature, when they came to revise the laws in 1819; and we find that the provision in question is then re-enacted in the words of the act of 1779, with the exception that the period of limitation is made (as had been done in 1789) one year in the place of six months. See 1 Rev. Code 1819, ch. 128,

In the case of Moore v. Mauro, 4 Rand. 488, decided by this court in 1826, the declaration was in assumpsit for goods, wares and merchandise sold and delivered; and there was a special plea that the action was founded on an account for goods, &c., and that the supposed cause of action did not accrue within one year. To which there was a special replication, that at the time of the sale of the goods, "the plaintiff and the defendant were merchants, and that the goods were sold and delivered by the plaintiff as such merchant, to the defendant as such merchant." The only question before the court (necessary to be noticed here) was as to the effect of the special replication. The replication was founded on the saving, in the 4th section of the act of 1819, in favor of "such accounts as concern the trade of merchandise between merchant and merchant, their factors and servants;" and it was objected in the argument that this saving did not apply to the actions mentioned in the 7th section of said act. In noticing this objection, the president (Brooke), delivering the opinion of the court, said, "It would be strange indeed if this construction was to prevail; if an action of indebitatus assumpsit between merchant and merchant is not to be barred by the saving in 494 the *act after five years, but is to be barred before, that is after one year. This objection was not well considered, or it would not have been made. In Tomlin v. Kelly, 1 Wash. 190, it was decided by this court that the act of 1779 applied only to the store accounts of retail dealers."

It is perhaps as convenient to state here as any where else, that I cite the case of Moore v. Mauro simply for the purpose of showing that this court still regarded the act of 1779, and consequently the 7th section of the act of 1819, as applying only to the store accounts of retail dealers. There is no ground whatever for supposing that this case can be brought within the saving of the 5th section of the 149th chapter of the present Code relating to accounts concerning the trade of merchandise between merchant and merchant, as that saving in its very terms applies only to cases "where the action of accounts would lie;" and this is obviously not a case of that character: For it is now well established by the English as well as the American decisions, that the saving in the act, 21 James 1, ch. 16, applies only to cases where the accounts are between merchant and merchant, relate actually to merchandise and not merely to mercantile contracts connected with it, and are current and mutual; in which last designation is not included cases where the demand is altogether on one side, though payments on account have been made. Inglis v. Haigh, 8 Mees. & Welsb. 781, and notes; Spring & als. v. Gray's ex'ors, 6 Peters' R. 151; Toland v. Sprague, 12 Peters' R. 300; Coster & als. v. Murrays, 5 John. Ch. R. 522; Murray v. Coster, 20 John. R. 576; 1 Rob. New Pr. 592-3-4-5; Rep. Revisors, note 472.

The case of Moore v. Mauro is, however, as I have already said, useful for the purpose of showing that this court in 1826 gave to the saving in the act of 1819 in relation to store accounts, the same construc-495 tion which, *in 1790 and 1793, in the cases of Beall v. Edmondson and Tomlin v. Kelly, it had given to the like saving in the act of 1779; a construction which we have every reason for supposing has been received and acted upon by the courts and the members of the profession in the state generally as the true one. See 2 Tuck. Comm. 153; Tate's Digest, notes, 649.

Digitized by Google

Such was the state of the law on the subject (with the exception that in 1838 the time was changed from one year to two years) when the legislature came to act on the report of the revisors in 1849. In the 5th section of ch. 149, as reported by them, all actions upon contracts not in writing were placed on the same footing and made subject to a limitation of three years, except actions of account by one partner against another for a settlement of the partnership accounts, or concerning the trade of merchandise between merchant and merchant, their factors or servants, and actions on the case between such parties for not accounting; in either of which cases the parties were allowed five years after a cessation of their dealings, in which to bring their actions. Under this section, as recommended by the revisors, there was no distinction between store accounts and any other accounts (other than those expressly saved). The legislature, however, whilst adopting the other provisions of the section in the very words of the revisors, refused to alter the existing laws in respect to the limitation on open accounts generally, and the limitation on store accounts, and required that actions on the former should be brought within five years, and on the latter, within two years.

The question as to the propriety of adhering to the peculiar policy (known only to the laws of this state and the state of Kentucky) which had prevailed since 1779, of placing the accounts of retail dealers, with their customers, on a special footing,
496 or of abolishing *the restriction, and placing them on the same level with other accounts generally, could not have been more distinctly presented to the mind of the legislature. If, therefore, in rejecting the recommendation of the revisors in this regard, and in inserting the provision in respect to such accounts, the legislature had adopted said provision precisely as it had stood in all the preceding acts on the subject, I cannot conceive how any difficulty or doubt could have arisen in respect to their intention. In such a state of things, no room, it seems to me, would have been left for the argument that they did not mean to confine the limitation to the store accounts of retail dealers exclusively; there would have been an inference of the most conclusive character that they were seeking to accomplish the same ends that the provision had been hitherto construed by the courts as designed to effectuate. In their omitting the words "for goods, wares and merchandise sold and delivered," and retaining simply the words "action for any articles charged in any store account," as the provision now stands, I can perceive no evidence whatever of a purpose on the part of the legislature to alter the effect which was attributed to the law in Tomlin v. Kelly. I cannot see how the provision, as it now stands, is less apt to express a purpose to restrict the limitation to the store accounts of retail dealers than it was when it also contained the words now omitted. The design and policy of the law as it formerly stood, were, and, as it now stands, are, as I conceive, through the instrumentality of short credits and frequent settlements, likely to flow from its provisions, to offer some check to the loose, mischievous, and oftentimes ruinous running up of long accounts at the stores by inconsiderate and careless men and the members of their families. The transactions of the wholesale merchants with their customers do not seem to me to be within the mis-
497 chief which *such a law can be reasonably regarded as designed to cure. The stricter method of conducting such a business, the magnitude of the transaction, and the character of the customers (most generally merchants also, attentive to and fully conscious of, the state of their accounts), would of themselves seem to afford a protection against those evils which the legislature might well contemplate as the probable result of credits given by the retail merchants to their customers, if not in some degree restrained by a provision such as the one they have enacted.

In proceeding to apply these views to the instructions given to the jury by the Circuit court, it is scarcely necessary to say, that the propriety of both instructions must depend on the same question; inasmuch as the written acknowledgment by the defendants of the account of the plaintiffs, as well as all the items of the account, are of a date more than two years antecedent to the bringing of the action; and the 7th section of chapter 149 of the Code gives to a plaintiff relying on such a written promise the same number of years thereafter, within which to bring his action, that is prescribed in the 5th section for bringing the action on the original contract.

In propounding to the jury the other proposition contained in the instructions, it is obvious that the judge must have proceeded either upon the idea that the account of the plaintiffs, whether an account of wholesale or retail dealings between the parties, was barred by the limitation of two years, or, upon the assumption that the account was of the character last mentioned. Upon the first mentioned view of the instructions, the construction which I have given to the statute shows that they were erroneous; in the other alternative, the error in giving the instructions is, I think, equally apparent. In the declaration the plaintiffs are styled as merchants and partners tra-

Digitized by Google

498 ing under *the name, style and firm of Edwin Wortham & Co., and the defendants as late merchants and partners trading under the name, firm and style of Smith & Sampson. It was proved by a witness, that he as salesman for the plaintiffs, sold and delivered to the defendants, upon their orders, the articles mentioned in the account (filed), and that the account was correct; that from time to time, when the goods called for by each order were delivered, he rendered to the defendants a bill of particulars of the goods so delivered, and that he subsequently rendered to the defendants a full account of all the particulars, corresponding with the account. There was no evidence as to whether the defendants were merchants, or as to whether the plaintiffs were wholesale or retail merchants, or in respect to the character of the dealings as being by wholesale or by retail, further than such as appears from the face of the account proved to be correct, as just above stated. The account, however, does on its face show that every dealing or sale was mainly if not exclusively by the hogshead, barrel, box, bag, sack, piece, gross, dozen, &c. Such sales answer to the popular definition of wholesale dealings, and our legislature, in ascertaining in their tax laws who should be regarded as wholesale merchants, have, on one occasion if not on others, designated as such those whose sales were of the character just indicated. Sess. Acts 1839-40, ch. 2, § 7.

Because of the error of the Circuit court in respect to the instructions, the judgment ought to be reversed, the verdict set aside, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the principles herein declared. The mode of pleading the act of limitations—simply "the act of limitations"—was irregular; but no objection was made by the plaintiffs to the receiving and entering the plea in that form; and it is difficult to suppose that they could 499 have entertained *any doubt as to the particular limitation of the statute relied on, inasmuch as the declaration was filed at rules in August 1855; and the first item of the account bears date April 9th, 1852. I would not, therefore, have been willing to reverse the judgment because of such irregularity. As however the case has to go back on account of the error in the instructions, I think it would be proper to direct the Circuit court to strike out the plea, if the plaintiffs shall so insist, and give leave to the defendants to plead anew.

MONCURE and ROBERTSON, Js., concurred in the opinion of Daniel, J.

The following is the judgment of the court:

It seems to the court, that according to the true construction of the provision of the 5th section of the 149th chapter of the Code of 1849, requiring actions for any articles charged in any store account to be brought within two years after said actions shall have first accrued, said provision does not embrace the wholesale dealings of importing and wholesale merchants, but applies exclusively to the store accounts of retail dealers with their customers; and it appearing to the court, from the certificate of the judge of the said Circuit court, that there was no evidence to show whether the account filed was of dealings by wholesale or by retail, other than what appears from the face of said account, proved to be correct, and that the evidence furnished by said account tends to show that the several sales and dealings between the parties were by wholesale and not by retail, it seems to the court that the instructions given by the Circuit court were erroneous.

It seems further to the court, that the plea of the act of limitations by the defendants is defective in not stating on what provision of the statute the defendants 500 *intended to rely; as however it is not probable that the plaintiffs could have been deceived or misled as to the purpose and meaning of the defendants, it appearing that the declaration was filed at August rules 1855, and that the first item of the account is dated on the 9th April 1852, the court would not reverse the judgment because of the defect aforesaid; yet as the judgment must be reversed, because of the error in the instructions, and remanded for a new trial, it seems to the court that the said Circuit court, before proceeding to said trial, should, if the plaintiffs shall so insist, require the said defendants, if they intend to rely on the act of limitations, to amend their pleading, and show distinctly on what provision or provisions of the law they design to rely.

Therefore, it is considered that the said judgment be reversed.

---

501 *Boyd's Adm'r v. City Savings Bank.

January Term, 1860, Richmond.

(Absent ALLEN, P., and LEE, J.*)

1. Demurrer to the Evidence—Evidence Documentary—When Joinder Compelled.†—If on the trial of a cause, the evidence is documentary, and presents a question of law which is not plainly against the defendant, he is entitled to demur to the evidence, and the court should compel the plaintiff to join in the demurrer.

*They were sitting in a Special court of appeals.

†Demurrer to the Evidence—Joinder in—When Compelled.—In Peabody Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 29 W. Va. 535, 2 S. E. Rep. 892, it is said: "Parol evidence is sometimes certain, and no more admitting of any variance than a matter in writing. The reason for obliging the party offering evidence in writing to join in demurrer applies to this sort of parol evidence, but it does not apply to parol evidence which is loose and indeterminate. But if the party who demurs will admit the existence of the fact the evidence of which is loose and indeterminate, or, in the case of circumstantial evidence, if he will admit the existence of the fact which the circumstances offered in evidence conduce to prove, there will be no more variance in this parol evidence than in a

Digitized by Google

2. Same—Plaintiff Entitled to Recover—Refusal of Court to Compel Joinder—Effect.—If the evidence set forth in the demurrer shows that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, the refusal of the court to compel him to join in the demurrer, is not ground for reversing a judgment in his favor.

3. Negotiable Notes—Death of Endorser before Maturity—Notice—Case at Bar.‡—An endorser of a negotiable note dies intestate before it falls due; and when it falls due it is regularly protested for non-payment; and no person having then qualified as administrator on the estate of the endorser, the notary on the same day deposits in the post-office at Lynchburg, where the note had been made payable and discounted, the notice of protest, directed to "the legal representative" of the endorser, "Lynchburg;" the endorser having lived in that place, and his family still living in the same house. The notice is sufficient.

This was an action of debt brought by "The City Savings Bank" at Lynchburg, in the Hustings court of that city, against Robert G. H. Kean, administrator of James M. Boyd, on two notes negotiable and payable at the office of discount and deposit of the Bank of Virginia at Lynchburg, drawn by Paul Jones, and endorsed by said Boyd; one of them for two thousand dollars, dated May 22d, 1855; the other for one thousand two hundred and fifty dollars, dated July 17th, 1855, and each of them payable sixty days after date, to said Boyd, or order, and protested for non-payment.

On the trial of the issue joined on the plea of nil debet, the plaintiff, to sus-
502 tain the action, introduced as *evidence the said notes, with the endorsements thereon, and the notarial certificates of protest; and there rested his case. In the certificate of protest of the note for two thousand dollars, the notary certified that on the same day and year on which the said note became due and was protested, to wit, the 24th day of July 1855, he deposited in the post-office in Lynchburg, notice, signed by him, advising the demand, non-payment and protest of the said note, directed to "the legal representative of James M. Boyd deceased, Lynchburg."

In the certificate of protest of the note for one thousand two hundred and fifty dollars, he certified that on the same day and year on which that note became due and was protested, to wit, the 18th day of September 1855, he "personally informed R. G. H. Kean, administrator of James M. Boyd deceased, of the demand, non-payment and protest of the said note."

The defendant then demurred to the evidence, and moved the court to compel the plaintiff to join in the demurrer; which the court refused to do: and the defendant excepted.

The defendant then proved, that at the time of the maturity of said notes, the said Boyd had departed this life; that the said Boyd, during his lifetime, and at the time of his death, and his family after his death, and at the date of the said protests, and the notices therein referred to, resided in the city of Lynchburg; and it was admitted that there was no administration upon the estate of said Boyd, from the time of his death on the 17th day of July 1855, till the day of August 1855, at which time the defendant duly qualified as administrator with the will annexed of the said Boyd's estate.

And this being all the evidence, the defendant moved the court to instruct the jury, that the notice of the protest of the said note for two thousand dollars, as 503 *stated in the notarial certificate thereof aforesaid, is not sufficient to bind the estate of the said Boyd, by virtue of his endorsement of said note, and that no notice of the protest thereof was given sufficient to bind the defendant.

But the court overruled the motion, and instructed the jury that the said notice was sufficient to bind the estate of the said Boyd on account of his endorsement of the said note: and the defendant again excepted.

The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for the amount of the two notes, with costs of protest and interest, on which verdict and judgment was rendered by the Hustings court, which was affirmed by the Circuit court on a writ of supersedeas. And the defendant obtained from this court a supersedeas to the judgment of the Circuit court.

August and Randolph, for the appellant.
Slaughter, for the appellee.

MONCURE, J. I think the Hustings court ought to have compelled the plaintiff to join in the defendant's demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence; which was documentary, and presented a question of law, at least not plainly against the demurrant. 1 Rob. Pr. (old ed.) 353; Green, &c. v. Buckner's adm'r, 6 Leigh 82. But the judgment ought not to be reversed on that ground, if the evidence set forth in the demurrer shows that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Brockenbrough v. Ward's adm'r, 4 Rand. 352. Nor if all the evidence in the cause, which is set out in the second bill of exceptions, shows that he was entitled to recover. If upon the whole evidence the plaintiff is entitled to matter in writing, and the reasons for compelling the party who offers the evidence to join in the demurrer will then apply. It follows, as a necessary conclusion, that, if the demurrant will confess the matter of fact to be true, then he is admitted to his demurrer; and, wherever a party may properly demur to the evidence, the other party must join in demurrer. Baker's Case, 2 Croke 752; Wright v. Pindar, Aleyn. 18 Style 22; Boyd's Adm'r v. City Sav. Bank, 15 Gratt. 501: Trout v. Virginia & T. R. Co., 23 Gratt. 619; Green v. Buckner's Adm'r, 6 Leigh 82; Rohr v. Davis, 9 Leigh 30; Whittington v. Christian, 2 Rand. (Va.) 357; Hansbrough v. Thom, 3 Leigh 147; Stephens v. White, 2 Wash. (Va.) 203; Heard v. Chesapeake & O Ry. Co., 26 W. Va. 455." See also, Clark v. R. & D. R. R. Co., 78 Va. 713, and cases cited; B. & O. Ry. Co. v. Morehead, 5 W. Va. 299, citing the principal case; also, monographic note on "Demurrer to the Evidence."

---

‡See monographic note on "Bills, Notes and Checks."

Digitized by Google

recover, even though he might not be upon so much of it as is set out in the demurrer, it would be vain to reverse the judgment and remand the cause for a new trial which would result in precisely the same 504 judgment. *I will therefore proceed to consider the case upon its merits.

The main if not the only question arising in the case is presented by the second bill of exceptions; and is as to the sufficiency of the notice stated in the protest of the note for two thousand dollars.

When the said note became due and was protested, Boyd the endorser was dead, and had no personal representative. He resided in Lynchburg at the time of his death, and his family continued to reside there until after the protest of the note. Notice of the dishonor of the note was, on the day of the protest, deposited by the notary in the post-office in Lynchburg, directed to "The legal representative of James M. Boyd deceased, Lynchburg;" and this is all the notice which was given.

The counsel for the defendant in error contends that no notice was necessary; or if necessary, that sufficient notice was given.

He contends that no notice was necessary, because when the note became due and was protested, there was no person in existence to receive notice, the endorser being dead and having no personal representative.

I have seen no case which expressly decides that notice is necessary under such circumstances. And there are many circumstances under which it is unnecessary to give any notice, as may be seen by referring to Story on Prom. Notes, § 356, and other elementary works. There are cases like the present, in which the notice proved to have been given in them was held to be sufficient; which strongly if not necessarily implies that some notice is necessary in such cases. But without expressing any opinion upon the question, and conceding for the purposes of this case at least that notice was necessary, I will proceed to enquire whether the notice given was sufficient.

505 *The only objection taken to the sufficiency of the notice, is that it ought to have been left at the late domicil of the endorser where his family still resided, instead of being deposited in the post-office.

While, on the one hand, it has been long and well settled that if the parties (to give and receive notice) reside in different places, the notice may be sent by mail; so, on the other, it seems to be well settled, at least as a general rule, that if they reside in the same place, the notice must be personal; that is, must be given to the individual, or left at his domicil or place of business. See 1 American Lead. Cas., 4th edition, 396 and the notes; and 2 Rob. Pr. (new ed.) 191.

But of late the courts have strongly inclined to restrict the general rule referred to, and have established many exceptions to it, as may be seen by referring to the case of the Bank of Columbia v. Lawrence, 1 Peters' R. 578, and other cases cited in 1 American Lead. Cas. 402-3, and the notes. The learned authors of that work conclude their commentary on the cases with the following observation: "It is obvious that the rule requiring personal notice, where the parties reside in the same place, has lost its reasonable force, and exists only by authority. Instead of undermining it with exceptions that conflict with it in principle, and render the subject embarrassing in practice, it would be much better to declare that the rule itself has become obsolete, and is abolished."

It cannot properly be said that the rule has become obsolete, having been recognized and acted on in many recent as well as older cases, and having in no case been denied or disregarded. It is therefore too firmly established to be abolished by the courts. "Were it an original question (as is well said by Shaw, C. J., in Eagle Bank v. Hathaway, 5 Metc. R. 212, 216), it is far from certain that notice by the post-office would not frequently reach an endorser 506 as soon and as certainly *as notice at his domicil." But though the rule is settled by a long course of judicial decisions, "it is thus settled by positive law, only so far as the cases are within it." Id. If this case be within it, we must follow it; but if not, and we are untrammeled by any decisions applying to such a case, we must then determine, as an original question, whether the notice given was sufficient.

I do not think this case comes within the general rule. It cannot be said that both parties resided in the same place. The endorser was dead, and had no personal representative at the time of the protest. If there had then been a personal representative, he would have been one of the parties, and entitled to notice, which might have been given to him precisely in the same way as if he had himself been the endorser. But there being none, there was no person in existence entitled to notice; and though it might well be expected there would soon be one, yet who he would be, and when he would qualify, and where he would reside, were probably unknown to the holder.

Nor do I think we are at all trammeled by any decisions applying to such a case. It has never been decided that in such a case notice may not be given through the post-office. It is indeed said in Story on Prom. Notes, § 310, that in such a case "notice may or should be left at the domicil of the deceased" endorser. But the cases cited as authority for that remark, only decide that notice may, not should be given in that way. The learned author seems to infer that the notice should, because it may be given in that way. But I do not think the inference is well founded. We know that under the same circumstances notice may be sufficiently given in several different ways. As the remark of Judge Story has an important relation to this case, and as the authorities bearing upon it are not numerous, it may be proper to review them.

Digitized by Google

507 *In Stewart v. Eden, 2 Caines' R. 121, the endorser at the date of the note resided in the city of New York, but shortly thereafter retired to his country seat, four miles from the city, where he died nearly two months before the note became due. He had no personal representative at the time of the protest, and notice addressed to him was left at his house in the city, which was shut up at the time. It was held that the notice was well served and properly addressed. Livingston, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, used the following observations, which have a strong bearing on the case before us: "We must take care that while proper diligence be imposed on the holder of negotiable paper, we do not exact from him every possible exertion that might have been made to affect an endorser with knowledge of its being dishonored. If he has done all that a diligent and prudent man could naturally do under like circumstances; if the law has prescribed no certain way of sending a notice in the given case;" "and especially, if from what has been done, it may reasonably be presumed that notice has reached the parties concerned, we should be satisfied and not ask for more." "Nor was it fatal to direct the notice to the endorser himself; for as it was not known whether he had made a will, nor who his executors were, until long after, it was full as probable that it would reach the parties interested by this address as by any other; some one of the deceased's family would either open it, or see it safely delivered to an executor."

In the Merchants Bank v. Birch, 17 John. R. 25, when the note became due the endorser was dead without a personal representative, but the fact of his death was unknown, he having died at sea. Notice addressed to him was left at his last residence, which was in the city of New York; another was left with his reputed agent in the city, and another was sent by mail to the residence of his family in the 508 country. It was insisted *that notice should have been given to the executors of the endorser when they qualified, though that was not until some months after the protest. It was held that Stewart v. Eden, supra, governed the case, and that the notice given was sufficient. "If an endorser be dead at the maturity of a note (says Spencer, Ch. J., in delivering the opinion of the court), and there be executors or administrators at that time known to the holder, notice must be given to them, for they represent the testator or intestate, and are as fully entitled to notice as he would be if alive. But it is a novel principle, unsupported either by precedent or authority, that notice is to be given to the representatives of the endorser, and who became such long after the note has fallen due. The rights of the holder of a note or bill, are to be determined by his acts, when the note or bill becomes due; and if he then gives such notice, as under the existing state of facts the law requires of him, his rights are fixed, and he cannot be required to superadd any other notice at a future period."

In Willis v. Green, 5 Hill's N. Y. R. 232, when the note became due, one of two joint endorsers was dead without a legal representative; and notice addressed to him was sent by mail to Little Falls, instead of Salisbury, where he resided at the time of his death. The court admitted that the notice would have been sufficient if it had been sent to the proper place, that is, to Salisbury; but it was unnecessary to decide the question.

In Oriental Bank v. Blake, 22 Pick. R. 206, it was held, in conformity with what was said in Merchants Bank v. Birch, supra, that where the administrator of an endorser of a note had been appointed before its maturity, and had given due notice of his appointment, he was entitled to the same notice of the non-payment of the note as is required by law to be given to an endorser.

In Planters Bank v. White, 2

509 Humph. R. 112, a notice *addressed to the endorser and sent by mail to the place of his last residence, was held to be sufficient, though he was dead and had a legal representative; the fact of his death being unknown to the notary, and the residence of the representative being at the mansion house of the deceased.

In Pillow v. Hardeman, adm'r, 3 Id. 538, the endorser was dead at the time of the protest, and the fact of his death known to the notary, but not the name of his personal representative if there then was one. A notice addressed to the "legal representative" of the endorser, as in this case, and sent by mail to the last residence of the endorser, which was at a different place from that of the protest, was held sufficient, though it did not appear that the administrator ever received it.

These are all the cases I have seen which seem to have a bearing on the subject, and the first four are all which are cited by Story in support of his statement. They certainly do not show that the notice in this case is insufficient.

I regard the question in this case then as an open one; and so regarding it, I ask, Was not the notice given sufficient? In other words, Was it not reasonable, under all the circumstances? For that is the question, whenever it comes up as an original one, unaffected by settled rules of law. When the note was protested, the endorser was dead without a personal representative. And the notary had at once to solve the question, How should notice be given to bind the estate of the endorser? It was necessary to give it, or at least to set it in motion, immediately. It could not be deferred until the qualification of a personal representative. Two modes of giving it naturally suggested themselves. One by sending it through the post-office, and the other by leaving it at the last residence of the endorser, where his family

Digitized by Google

510 *still resided in the same town; and the notary elected the former. Was it not a reasonable choice? Was it so unreasonable as to defeat the right of the holder against the estate of the endorser? No unnecessary restraint should be imposed on the circulation of negotiable paper. No difficult condition should be required to be performed to fix the liability of parties. What was the notary to do under the circumstances of this case? He could not deliver the notice to the personal representative himself, who was the person entitled to receive it, but who was not then known and had not qualified. All he could do was, to put it in a train of being received by the personal representative in a reasonable time after his qualification. He might have left it at the last residence of the endorser, as the cases decide; but that would only have been a means of conveying it to the personal representative after his qualification. The notice is not to the family, but to the personal representative, who stands in the shoes of the endorser. Then, as a means of conveying it to the personal representative, is not the post-office at least as good a place of deposit as the last residence of the deceased? In Stewart v. Eden, the family of the endorser had removed from his last residence, which was shut up, and the notice was stuffed in a key hole; and yet it was held sufficient. A notice given personally, or at the domicil or place of business, may be merely verbal. Would not a written notice, properly addressed and dropped in the post-office, be at least as apt to be received, and as soon received, by the personal representative after his qualification, as any notice, much less a verbal one, left at the last residence of the endorser, even supposing some person should be there to receive it? A notice dropped in the post-office would probably be taken out by the family at once, and delivered to the representative on his qualification, or be-
511 fore, if he were *known. Or, if not taken out before his qualification, would probably be called for and received by him immediately thereafter. It is said the family would have no right to take the notice out of the office, being directed to the legal representative; that drop letters (as they are called) are not advertised; and that after three months they are sent to the dead letter office; so that the personal representative might never receive the notice. This is possible, though it is certainly very improbable. We know that, in practice, letters addressed to a deceased person, or his representative, are taken out of the post-office by members and friends of the family. But if the postmaster should be so strict as to hold the notice for the representative, it would only make the receipt of it by the proper person more certain. That person would be apt to call for it in time to prevent its being sent to the dead letter office. It is not necessary that the notice should be actually received, but only that due diligence should be used to give it.

The reason for requiring notice, in the case of a living endorser, to be left at his domicil or place of business rather than at the post-office, does not apply to the case of a deceased endorser who is without a representative. In the former case, the law presumes that the endorser is always at his domicil or place of business, or has some person there to attend to his business; and a notice left there is considered to be at home, and as having in effect been personally served. In the latter case, no such presumption can be made. A notice left at the domicil of a deceased endorser for his representative when one qualifies, is not at home, but is merely in transitu; and so is a notice left at the post-office for such representative.

If notice given through the post-office would be just as effectual as notice left at the last residence of the endorser, there is one reason at least which would make the former preferable, and which was 512 mentioned *in the argument of the counsel for the defendant in error; and that is, the family of the deceased at the time of the protest, might be in a state of deep affliction (occasioned by his recent death), when it would be painful both to them and the notary, for him to have to visit them on a matter of business.

I am of opinion that the notice given of the protest of the note for two thousand dollars was sufficient.

An objection is taken in the petition to the sufficiency of the notice of protest of the note for one thousand two hundred and fifty dollars; but it was not relied on in the argument, and is clearly without foundation.

And the same may be said of another objection taken in the petition, and not relied on in the argument; being to a supposed variance between the declaration and the proof. There is in fact no such variance, the cause of action being truly set out in the declaration, though it wrongly concludes, that "by reason of the premises, cause of action accrued to the plaintiffs to have and demand of said James M. Boyd, in his lifetime, said sum of money and interest, as above demanded," instead of, his administrator since his death. But this is a mere legal conclusion, which may be rejected as surplusage. And if it were a variance, "it did not prejudice the plaintiff in error, and would have been corrected by an amendment at the trial, if the attention of the court had been called to it." Code, p. 672, § 7.

Upon the whole, I think the defendant in error is entitled to recover, and that there is no error in the judgment for which it ought to be reversed. I am therefore for affirming it.

DANIEL and ROBERTSON, Js., concurred in the opinion of Moncure, J.

Judgment affirmed.

Digitized by Google

513 *Evans v. Pearce & als.

January Term, 1860, Richmond.

[78 Am. Dec. 635.]

(Absent ALLEN, P., and LEE, J.*)

1. Parent and Child—Allowance to Father's Estate for Support of Child—Case at Bar.†—A father has property of his infant children in his possession, and during his life does not apply to the court to have any of the profits of that property applied to their support, nor does he make any charge against them during his life. His estate will not be allowed any thing for their support without the clearest proof that justice requires it.

2. Same—Guardian De Facto—Case at Bar.‡—In such a case the father will be treated as a guardian; and his accounts will be settled on the principles applicable to guardians' accounts.

This was a bill in the Circuit court of the city of Richmond, filed by the administrator and some of the children of William Evans deceased, against his widow and other children, two of whom were infants, for a settlement and distribution of his estate. The widow thinking that the administrator did not attend to the interests of the estate, took upon herself its defence. The only matters of controversy relate to the profits of certain property belonging to two of the children of William Evans, derived from their grandmother, which was in his possession and managed by him.

Evans had been married three times; and at his death he left three children by the first marriage, two by the second, and one by the third; and another child by the second marriage had died after her mother and in his lifetime. The mother of the second wife left by her will certain real estate and slaves to her daughter for life, and after her death to her children. This property went into the possession of Evans in the lifetime of his wife, and after her death he continued 514 *to hold it and rented out the houses, and seems generally to have hired out the slaves.

The accounts having been referred to a commissioner, he made his report, settling the account on the principle applicable to guardians' accounts, and ascertaining the amount due from Evans for the rent of the houses to be one thousand one hundred and seventy-seven dollars and forty-three cents, and for the hires of the slaves, six thousand two hundred and eighty-two dollars and sixty cents; a part of this last sum being for hires and interest thereon, the actual amount for which the slaves were hired not being proved but estimated by the witness.

The defendant Mrs. Evans excepted to the report of the commissioner:

1st. That whilst William Evans was treated by the commissioner as guardian of his sons, and charged with the annual profits of their property, he was allowed nothing for their maintenance and education.

2d. That Evans was charged with interest on the profits of the estate of the children whilst they were living with him.

3d. That he was charged with interest upon conjectural hires.

It appears from the evidence that Evans was the owner of real estate, valued at his death at about fourteen thousand dollars; and he owned twelve or thirteen slaves. He was indebted to other persons beside his children for about the sum of seven thousand dollars; and was a plasterer, and carried on his business until his death in 1854: though it appears that for the last ten years of his life, his circumstances had not improved but had been impaired. The oldest of the sons to whom the property in controversy belonged, had worked at the business of his father as a plasterer for four or five years.

On the hearing of the cause, the 515 court overruled *the exceptions, and gave a decree against the estate of Evans for two-thirds of the amount reported: the other third belonging to him as the heir and distributee of the child who had died. From this decree Mrs. Evans obtained an appeal to this court.

August & Randolph, for the appellant.
Steger, for the appellees.

ROBERTSON, J. The father, in this case, rendered himself responsible as the guardian de facto of two of his infant children, by retaining in his possession the lands and slaves to which they became entitled on the death of their mother, and receiving the rents and hires. His accounts as such guardian have been settled in a suit brought after his death by his administrator. Exceptions have been taken to this settlement by his widow, who has taken upon herself the defence of the estate, because, as she alleges, the administrator has failed to protect it as he ought to have done from the claims asserted against it.

The objection to the compounding of interest, and to the charge of interest upon

*They were sitting in a Special court of appeals.

†Parent and Child—Duty of Parent to Support Child.—It is a well settled principle of law, governing the relation of parent and child, that a father, if of ability, is bound to maintain his infant children even though they may have property of their own. Griffith v. Bird, 22 Gratt. 80; Windon v. Stewart, 43 W. Va. 719, 28 S. E. Rep. 779, both citing the principal case. But see 6 Va. Law Reg. 585, 596, where this proposition of the principal case is said to be a dictum.

See the principal case distinguished in Hauser v. King, 76 Va. 737.

Termination of Guardianship—Allowance for Infant's Support.—In no case will an allowance be made a parent for the maintenance of his child, after the guardianship has terminated, without the clearest proof that justice requires it. Stigler v. Stigler, 77 Va. 171, citing the principal case. See also, Griffith v. Bird, 22 Gratt. 73, and foot-note.

As to both the propositions set forth above, see monographic note on "Guardian and Ward" appended to Barnum v. Frost, 17 Gratt. 398.

‡Guardians De Facto.—See principal case cited in Martin v. Fielder, 82 Va. 460, 4 S. E. Rep. 605.

See generally, monographic note on "Guardian and Ward" appended to Barnum v. Frost, 17 Gratt. 398.

Digitized by Google

conjectural rents and hires, cannot be sustained. The charges of interest are in conformity with the rule which has been established for the settlement of the accounts of guardians; and one who makes himself guardian de facto is certainly not entitled to be treated with more favor than if he had been legally appointed.

The only question in the case, about which there can be any doubt, is whether the estate should be allowed credit for the support and education of the children out of the income of their property.

A father, if of ability, is bound to maintain his infant children, even though they may have property of their own.

The court, however, will look with 516 liberality to the *circumstances of each particular case, and to the respective estates of father and children, and will authorize the income arising from the estates of infants to be applied to their support whenever, under all the circumstances, it appears to be proper. But when the application to allow the income so to be appropriated is not made, as it ought to be, in advance, and is delayed, as it has been in this case, until after the guardianship has terminated, the court will not permit it without the clearest proof that justice requires it.

Such proof is not furnished in this case. One of the infants was kept at work as an apprentice at the trade of his father for several years; during which period his services must, at the least, have been worth his support. It is not alleged that the father was at any extraordinary expense for the support or education of either of these children: and there is nothing in the case from which it can be inferred that he did not consider himself of sufficient ability to support and educate them in the same way that he did his other children, or that he designed to put them on a different footing in this respect. It is very possible that he was not fully aware of the extent of his responsibility as their guardian. He must have known, however, that he was liable to them to some extent, yet there is not the slightest indication of any intention to offset this liability, or to make a charge against them in any form for their support or education. The fact that no such charge was intended, would not, it is true, be conclusive against its allowance, if it appears to be proper; but it is a strong circumstance to show that it is not proper—that he not only considered himself to be, but really was of ability to maintain his children out of his own means, and that he did so maintain them.

If any other person has acted as their guardian, it would hardly be contended
517 that the income of their *property in the hands of such guardian could now be subjected to reimburse to his estate the expenses incurred by him in maintaining them; and I cannot see how the fact that he was himself both father and guardian could give him any right to use their income that he would not have possessed if the guardianship had been in other hands.

The objection to the charge of interest against the guardian, while his wards lived with and were supported by him, rests substantially on the same ground with the claim to charge for their support out of the income of their estate; for the interest is part of their income.

I am of opinion to affirm the decree.

DANIEL and MONCURE, Js., concurred in the opinion of Robertson, J.

Decree affirmed.

---

518 Claytor v. Anthony.

Creasy v. Same.

April Term, 1860, Richmond.

(Absent DANIEL, J.†)

1. Judgments—Injunction by Person Not Party—Liability.—If a person, not a party to a judgment, enjoins it, and the injunction is dissolved, he is liable to pay the ten per cent. damages prescribed by the statute.‡

2. Injunction Bond—Effect of Dissolution of Injunction.—Though the condition of the injunction bond provides for the payment of such damages as may be awarded by the court, and the court simply dissolves the injunction and dismisses the bill; yet the order of dissolution necessarily imports that the damages are to be paid, unless they be expressly remitted by the terms of the order.

3. Judgments—Injunction of—Dissolution—Damages. Where upon a bill of review an injunction is granted to a judgment which is afterwards dissolved, the damages are to be computed, not upon the amount of the judgment at the time it was first granted on the original bill, but on the amount of the judgment at the time it was granted on the bill of review.

4. Injunction Bond—Suit upon—Case at Bar.—If the judgment, principal, interest, costs and damages on the injunction, amount to more than the penalty of the injunction bond, yet the plaintiff in the judgment having sued out execution on the judgment and made the money, principal, interest and costs, may recover the damages by suit upon the bond.

5. Statutory Bonds—Construction.§—Statutory bonds taken by officers in the country, will be construed liberally.

These were two actions of debt in the Circuit court of Bedford county, each founded on an injunction bond, and relating to the same judgment.

Some time prior to the year 1821 Pleasant Creasy, having recovered a judgment against William Trigg, sued out an execu-

---

*For monographic note on Injunctions, see end of case.

†He had been counsel in the case out of which this case arose.

‡See JUDGE LEE'S opinion, and 1 Rev. Code of 1819, p. 200, § 61; Code, ch. 179, § 13, p. 679.

§See monographic note on "Statutory Bonds" appended to Goolsby v. Strother, 21 Gratt. 107.

Digitized by Google

tion thereon, which was levied by 519 *the sheriff upon a slave named Patrick. Mark Anthony thereupon sued the sheriff John Claytor to recover damages for selling the said slave, he claiming the slave as his property; and he recovered a judgment in that action. Pleasant Creasy then enjoined the judgment, and executed an injunction bond with James M. Claytor as his surety. The condition of this bond provided, that Creasy should pay and satisfy the judgment, costs "and all such other costs, damages and charges as shall be awarded by said Superior court of chancery." The first action was on this bond.

The injunction which was awarded to Creasy in 1828, was dissolved by the Chancery court in May 1839; and this decree was affirmed by the Court of appeals in 1846. In July 1846 Creasy filed a bill of review, asking that the injunction might be reinstated or another injunction awarded. And the court made an order awarding an injunction to the judgment according to the prayer of the bill, upon condition of his giving bond and security: and Pleasant Creasy, jr., became the surety in this bond. In March 1854 this injunction was dissolved and the bill dismissed: And then Anthony instituted two actions of debt in the Circuit court of Bedford county; one on the first injunction bond against Pleasant Creasy and James M. Claytor, and the other on the second bond against the two Creasys.

Pleasant Creasy having died, the two cases were tried together at the May term 1856 of the Circuit court of Bedford county, upon the issue made upon the plea of conditions performed. The only difference in the records of the two cases is, that Claytor tendered a plea which was rejected by the court, in which he alleged that since the injunction was dissolved an execution had been issued on the judgment, amounting to more than the penalty of his bond, 520 and that he *had paid the same before the commencement of this suit.

On the trial the defendants demurred to the evidence, which consisted of the judgments of the Circuit court and Court of appeals, and records of the injunction suit and bill of review, and the execution which had been sued out on the judgment, and the admission by the plaintiff that it had been paid. And the jury found in the first case a verdict for "six hundred and seventy-five dollars and four cents damages, being the damages at four per cent. per annum on the amount of the judgment, interest and costs mentioned in the condition of the injunction bond recited in the declaration, from the 23d day of December 1828, when the said injunction was perfected, until the 31st day of May 1839, when it was dissolved." And they found a verdict in the second case for "sixteen hundred and eighty-seven dollars and forty-four cents, the same being the residue of the amount of ten per centum per annum damages on the amount of the debt enjoined, appearing to be due on the day when the injunction took effect, from the time last mentioned until the dissolution of the injunction, after deducting from said amount of damages six per centum per annum interest during the same time, on the principal sum in the forthcoming bond enjoined, until paid;" in both cases subject to the opinion of the court on the demurrer to evidence. At the same term of the court the demurrers to evidence were overruled, and judgments were entered up on the verdicts. And thereupon the defendants applied to this court for writs of supersedeas to the judgments; which were awarded.

Slaughter, for the appellants.

The Attorney General and Patton, for the appellee.

LEE, J. The position taken by the 521 counsel for the *plaintiffs in error, that damages are allowed by law on the dissolution of an injunction only in cases in which the injunction is obtained at the instance of a party to the judgment enjoined, cannot, I think, be maintained. It is true, injunctions to judgments are usually obtained at the suit of parties to them, and rarely is an injunction to a judgment allowed at the instance of a third person: but the terms of the act of 1819 under which the bonds in these cases were taken are sufficiently broad to cover such an injunction. Those terms are that "where any injunction shall be hereafter obtained to stay the proceedings on any judgment * * * and such injunction shall be dissolved, wholly or in part, damages at the rate of ten per centum per annum * * * shall be paid to the party on whose behalf such judgment was obtained on such sum as appears to be due including the costs:" and surely the reason for awarding damages cannot be less strong in the case in which a stranger intervenes and obtains an injunction to a judgment against another than where the judgment debtor himself arrests the execution by such a proceeding. The evil to be remedied, the delay occasioned by causeless injunctions, is the same in either case. That the act directs the damages to be included in the execution to be issued on the judgment after the dissolution of the injunction, presents no real difficulty. This provision from its very nature can apply only to the case in which the injunction is obtained by the judgment debtor, as it would be wholly inadmissible that he should be charged with damages during the pendency of an injunction obtained without his agency at the suit of another (see Garnett v. Jones, 4 Leigh 633); but it does not at all affect or disprove the liability of the party who does obtain it to pay them. This is the very liability which he assumes when he obtains the injunction.

If he be required to give and do give 522 *bond to perfect his injunction, he and his surety will be liable to a suit on the bond for the recovery of the damages although in the case in which he is the judgment debtor, they may also be included in the execution against him. But if not so included or if not made upon the execution, the remedy upon the bond is unquestionable; for the propriety and necessity of the bond grows out of the consideration that the execution may prove ineffectual, and it is intended to afford a new security for the debt including the damages. So far from its being correct then to say that the legislature never intended that the creditor should be driven to an action at law in any case to recover these damages, I take it that that is exactly what the legislature must have intended where the execution was not sued or was ineffectual in the case in which the injunction was at the suit of the judgment debtor, and, always, where the injunction was at the instance of one not a party to the judgment, and who was required to give the injunction bond. To say that because the damages could not be embraced in the execution on the judgment after the dissolution of the injunction in the latter case there is no remedy for their recovery, is entirely illogical, as I think it would be also to hold that in the case where no bond is required, as where the injunction is at the suit of a personal representative or other person from whom it may be in the opinion of the court improper to require bond, there can be no right to the damages or no remedy for their recovery. That the right does exist in such cases, I think is not to be doubted, and I apprehend an ample remedy will be found for its enforcement. Whether in the case put by the counsel, of an injunction to a judgment by one not a party to it, and bond given by another, also a stranger to the judgment, the party obtaining the injunction would be liable to the damages or not, is a 523 question not at *all material to be determined in this case; certainly the latter would be liable on his bond, and if it should even be held that the party in whose name the injunction was obtained in such a case, was not, I do not perceive that any absurdity as supposed by the counsel, would be involved.

Digitized by Google

But it is said that the damages are to be in lieu and satisfaction of interest and that this cannot be unless they can be included in the execution. Hence it is deduced that the provision giving damages cannot apply where the injunction is obtained by one not a party to the judgment; and in this connection the case of Crawford, &c. v. McDaniel, 1 Rob. R. 448 is cited by the counsel. I fully concur in the conclusion to which the court came in that case upon the point referred to, but I do not think it touches the question in this case. There had been in that case an injunction because of some alleged defect of title, which had been dissolved. There was then another bill filed alleging a mistake in the quantity of the land discovered after the former suit; and the court thinking the complainant entitled to relief, by its decree injoined not only the principal money due but also the damages accrued during the pendency of the former injunction: and the Court of appeals held the decree in this respect right upon the ground that the damages were entire and were given in lieu of interest. The whole effect of this decision is that the four per centum damages above the six per centum interest must share the fate of the latter, and if relief is to be given against the latter, that relief shall extend to the former also, as both stand under the law in lieu of the latter. And so far from its being an authority against the right to the damages where the injunction is at the suit of one not a party to the judgment, its tendency is I think rather the other way in replacing the six per cent. interest with the ten per cent. damages; and construing 524 *the statute in the light which it affords, the fair result, I think, is, that whenever an injunction to a judgment is dissolved, the judgment creditor is entitled to the ten per cent. damages; if the injunction be at the suit of the judgment debtor, they may be inserted in the execution and made in that way, or the party may maintain his action on the bond (where one is given) and recover them together with the principal money and costs; if the injunction be at the instance of one not a party to the judgment and a bond be given, the obligors in the bond would clearly be responsible for them. And although in the latter case, payment of the principal money with six per cent. interest and the costs may have been made by the judgment debtor or any other for him, there would still remain due the difference between that amount and the amount of the judgment computing damages at ten per cent. in lieu of interest, to wit four per cent. on the amount due including the costs during the period of the injunction for which recovery upon the bond might well be had.

Conceding, however, for the sake of the argument, the right to the damages and that they might be recovered on a bond with proper condition, the counsel has sought to maintain that there can be no recovery on this bond, because as he contends, the condition has not been broken. The condition is to pay the judgment and costs and such damages as may be awarded by the court, and it is said the court has not decreed the payment of any damages. In express terms, it is true, it has not; but payment of the damages is the penalty of the failure to sustain the injunction and the order of dissolution necessarily imports that this penalty is to be paid unless it be expressly remitted by its terms. Thus "the law allows it and the court awards it;" for to sustain the action it may not be improper to say that in a legal sense in such a case, the damages (which must 525 and can only *be the ten per centum in lieu of interest) are awarded by the court. And here the remarks of a learned judge on a similar occasion, occur as appropriate: "I am of opinion we are not to stick to the letter in these statutory bonds taken by officers of the courts without the supervision of any tribunal and in the absence of the obligee. * * * * It is fair to presume that such was the design of the parties" (to be responsible to the extent that the law required) "however clumsily it may have been expressed by the officer who prepared the bond." Per Tucker, P., White v. Clay's ex'ors, 7 Leigh 68, 80. In that case, the condition of the bond was, not to pay what was due or should become due to the plaintiff as required by the statute but the judgment at law and all costs and damages, in case the injunction should be dissolved. Held, nevertheless, a good statutory bond and that the condition was broken by a dissolution of the injunction as to part. And the same liberality of construction was strikingly illustrated in another case in which the condition of the bond was to pay and satisfy the judgment in case the injunction should be dissolved together with the costs of the injunction if ruled so to do, saying nothing about damages, yet the party recovered the damages and the judgment was affirmed by this court. Fox, &c. v. Mountjoy, ex'or, 6 Munf. 36. In our case the condition stipulates for the payment of damages and as has been already said, the ten per centum on the amount of the judgment including the costs, is the only damages to which the party is liable.

Digitized by Google

The plea that an execution had been sued out on the judgment against the plaintiff in error (in the case of Claytor v. Anthony) and that a sum greater than the penalty of the injunction bond sued on had been paid by him in discharge thereof, before the suit, offered no bar to the action. The amount so paid, was paid upon 526 *the judgment and execution, not upon the injunction bond, and that bond remained as a security for whatever might still be due the judgment creditor after deducting the amount of the principal, the interest at six per cent. and the costs which had been paid, that is to say for the four per centum of the damages not embraced in the payment.

There is an objection made in the case of Creasy v. Anthony to the amount of the damages recovered which it is said should have been only upon the amount due at the time of the original injunction and not at the time of the injunction on the bill of review. I think the objection not well taken. A bill of review forms no part of the proceedings in the original cause. It is allowed only after the suit is completely ended or in England after the decree is signed and enrolled. It differs in this from a petition for a rehearing which may be allowed before the signing and enrolling of the decree, as it does also from a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review which supposes the cause to be still existing, and is received and incorporated into that cause as part of it: and the orders made upon it are taken and considered as orders in the original pending cause. Mitf. Pl. (6th Am. fr. 5th London ed.) p. 100, 105, and n. 107 et seq.; Bowyer v. Lewis, 1 Hen. & Munf. 553; Elizey v. Lane's ex'x, 2 Hen. & Munf. 589; Sheppard's ex'or v. Starke et ux., 3 Munf. 29. The bill of review of the appellant Creasy's principal prayed that the former injunction might be reinstated or, in the alternative, that another injunction might be awarded, and the court granted a new injunction accordingly upon the usual terms of giving bond with condition as the law required. This injunction then I take it must be regarded as an original, independent injunction, and in estimating the damages to be paid upon its dissolution they are to be computed upon the whole amount appearing to be 527 due at the time it was *perfected, and not the amount due at the date of the former injunction.

Thus, as it seems to me, no error is shown in either of these cases and I am of opinion that both judgments should be affirmed.

ALLEN, P., and MONCURE and ROBERTSON, Js., concurred in the opinion of Lee, J.

Judgment affirmed.

INJUNCTIONS.

I. Definition.
II. When Injunctions Will Lie.
  A. In General.
  B. Against Waste.
  C. Against Trespass.
  D. Against Nuisance.
  E. To Protect Easements.
  F. To Protect Franchises.
  G. To Control Corporate Action.
  H. Against Taxes.
  I. Against Railroad Companies.
  J. Against Public Officers.
  K. In Matters Pertaining to Contracts.
  L. In Matters Pertaining to Negotiable Notes.
  M. In Matters Pertaining to Executors and Administrators.
  N. To Restrain Exercise of Power by Committee of Insane Person.
  O. In Matters Pertaining to Wife's Property Rights.
  P. In Partnership Matters.
  Q. In Matters Pertaining to Creditors.
  R. To Prevent or Remove Cloud on Title.
  S. Against Sales under Trusts.
  T. Against Collection of Purchase Money on Failure of Title.
  U. Against Actions at Law.
  V. Against Judgments.
  W. Against Executions.
III. Jurisdiction.
IV. Venue.
V. Parties.
VI. The Bill.
  A. Certainty.
  B. Necessary Allegations.
  C. Allegations on Information and Belief.
  D. Discovery.
  E. Verification of the Bill.
  F. Amendment.
  G. Construction.
VII. The Demurrer.
VIII. The Answer.
IX. Order of Reference.
X. The Bond.
  A. Necessity for.
  B. Conditions.

Digitized by Google

C. Execution.
D. Amount.
E. Requiring New or Additional Bond.
F. Liabilities on the Bond.
1. Accrual of Liability.
2. Liabilities of Sureties.
3. Actions on Bond.
a. Right to Maintain Successive Actions.
b. Parties—Joinder of Plaintiffs.
c. Pleading.
d. Evidence.
e. Defenses.
f. Damages and Costs.
XI. Costs.
XII. Violation of Injunctions.
XIII. Modification of Injunctions.
XIV. Continuance of Injunctions.
XV. Dissolution and Abatement.
A. Courts Which Have Power to Dissolve.
B. Grounds for Dissolution.
1. Existence of Adequate Legal Remedy.
2. Injunction Improvidently Awarded.
3. Laches in Prosecuting Cause.
4. Nonadmission of Attorney Prosecuting Injunction Proceedings.
5. Invalidity of Award.
6. Multifariousness of Bill.
7. Defect of Parties.
C. Right to Dissolution.
1. Discretion of Court.
2. Laches in Seeking Dissolution.
D. Dissolution in Vacation.
E. Stage at Which Dissolution May Be Had.
F. Motion.
1. Necessity for—Want of Jurisdiction.
2. Notice of Motion.
3. Continuance.
4. Cannot Be Made by Party in Contempt.
5. Moving Papers.
6. Evidence.
G. Order of Dissolution—Necessity.
H. Effect of Dissolution.
I. Effect of Refusal to Dissolve.
J. Damages and Costs.
K. Abatement by Death of Parties.
XVI. Reinstatement of Injunction.
XVII. Successive Injunctions.
XVIII. Appeals.
A. From Order Refusing to Award Injunction.
B. From Order Overruling Motion to Dissolve.
C. From Order Dissolving Injunction.
D. From Order Continuing Injunction.
E. From Order Reinstating Injunction and Directing New Trial.
F. Useless Appeals Not Granted.
G. Evidence.
XIX. Wrongful Injunction.

I. DEFINITION.

"An injunction is a judicial process issuing out of a court of chancery, whereby a party is required to do or to refrain from doing a particular thing. The most ordinary form of injunction is that which operates to prevent the performance of an act. The other form of injunction commands that an act shall be done." 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 342.

II. WHEN INJUNCTIONS WILL LIE.

A. IN GENERAL.—"As the general jurisdiction of courts of chancery is founded in a lack of remedy in the courts of law, so especially is relief given by means of injunctions, because there is none, or no adequate remedy at law, and because compensation by way of damages will not be sufficient to restore the party to his rights, or to replace the wrong that may be done to him. It will be found upon careful investigation, that all the grounds upon which the right to an injunction rests, are traceable to this general rule of preventing irreparable wrong or mischief." Moore v. Steelman, 80 Va. 331; Bart. Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 455.

Where an irreparable injury is imminent, against which there is no adequate protection at law, and which cannot be compensated in damages, equity will take jurisdiction by injunction. Moore v. Steelman, 80 Va. 331.

Though the plaintiff have a remedy by action at law, if it is inadequate and repeated suits would not compensate him, the injury is irreparable and calls for a preventive remedy, which equity alone can provide. Sanderlin v. Baxter, 76 Va. 299, 44 Am. Rep. 165.

"By the term 'irreparable injury,' it is not meant that there must be no physical possibility of repairing the injury; all that is meant is, that the injury would be a grievous one, or at least a material one, and not adequately reparable in damages." Sanderlin v. Baxter, 76 Va. 299, 44 Am. Rep. 165; Masonic Temple Ass'n v. Banks, 94 Va. 695, 27 S. E. Rep. 490; Woods v. Early, 95 Va. 307, 28 S. E. Rep. 374; Callaway v. Webster, 98 Va. 790, 37 S. E. Rep. 276.

"The word 'irreparable' means that which cannot be repaired, restored, or adequately compensated for in money, or where the compensation cannot be safely measured." Bettman v. Harness, 42 W. Va. 433, 26 S. E. Rep. 271.

Will Not Lie Where Statutory Remedy Exists.—"Where a positive statutory remedy exists for the redress of particular grievances, a court of equity will not interfere by injunction and assume jurisdiction of the questions involved, nor will it enjoin proceedings under such statutory remedy, since such interference would place the judicial above the legislative power of the government. But * * * to deprive a plaintiff of the aid of equity by injunction, it must also appear that the remedy at law is plain and adequate; in other words, that it is as practical and efficient to secure the ends of justice and its proper and prompt administration as is the remedy in equity." Penn v. Ingles, 82 Va. 65.

Will Not Lie Where Act Is Already Done.—An injunction is a preventative remedy and should not, except under peculiar circumstances, be granted where the act is already done. C. & O. R. Co. v. Patton, 5 W. Va. 234; Coalter v. Hunter, 4 Rand. 58.

Will Not Lie Where It Cannot Be Enforced.—An injunction ought not to be granted which cannot be enforced. Taylor v. Mutual, etc., Life Ass'n, 97 Va. 60, 33 S. E. Rep. 385.

B. AGAINST WASTE.—The jurisdiction of equity in restraining the commission of waste is of comparatively recent origin and rests upon the necessity of preventing irreparable injury. High on Injunctions (2d Ed.) § 649. As to the jurisdiction of equity in restraining waste, see also, Rakes v. Rustin, etc., Co. (Va.), 23 S. E. Rep. 498; Cutting v. Carter, 4 H. & M. 424; Harris v. Thomas, 1 H. & M. 18.

As to what constitutes waste, the commission of which entitles the party injured to relief by injunction, depends upon the circumstances of each particular case, and is often varied by the locality of the act complained of. Thus the cutting of timber in some sections may be considered waste, while in others it is a positive benefit. Hence, in every case, the law on this subject must be applied with reasonable regard to circumstances. Bart. Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 456; Findlay v. Smith, 6 Munf. 134, 8 Am. Dec. 733.

Digitized by Google

One making a fair prima facie showing in support of his title to land may obtain an injunction to restrain the commission of waste, if the injury would be irreparable. Rakes v. Rustin, etc., Co. (Va.), 22 S. E. Rep. 498.

Removal of Fixtures by Execution Creditor.—A court of equity will take jurisdiction by injunction to preserve the inheritance; and, where a mill is about to be dismantled by execution creditors of the owner, who have levied on the fixtures attached thereto, equity will interfere to prevent it. Patton v. Moore, 16 W. Va. 428, 37 Am. Rep. 789.

Removal of Improvements by Tenant.—It is sufficient to sustain a bill for an injunction to stay waste and prevent the removal of improvements, that the bill alleges that the complainant is the owner and entitled to the possession of the premises with the improvements and that the defendants are in possession and threaten to destroy the improvements and that they are insolvent and unable to respond in pecuniary damages. Frank & Co. v. Brunnemann, 8 W. Va. 462.

A court of equity will, in a proper case, grant an injunction to restrain the tenant from doing a certain act, whether it amounts to waste or not, provided it be directly contrary to the tenant's own covenant, or even in contravention of an agreement which may be inferred from the course of dealing between the parties. Frank & Co. v. Brunnemann, 8 W. Va. 462.

Removal of Personal Property—Protection of Vendor's Lien.—To preserve the security of a vendor's lien, a court of equity may properly enjoin the purchaser and his agent from committing waste on the land and from selling or removing the personal property. Clarke v. Curtis, 11 Leigh 559.

Waste of Store Goods.—A judgment debtor ordered a levy on goods in a store kept by the debtor, who claimed that he held the goods under his father's will, as trustee for his wife and children. The sheriff demanded an indemnifying bond, which was denied by the creditor, who filed his bill alleging that the claim of the debtor to be acting as trustee was fraudulent, that the store goods were the debtor's individual property and liable to the lien of his judgment, and praying for an injunction and the appointment of a receiver to prevent waste thereof by the debtor. Held, that the bill presents no case for equitable jurisdiction. Green v. Spaulding, 76 Va. 411.

Title in Litigation—Injunction Pendente Lite.—In 1844, a person took possession of land under a patent and held exclusive possession thereof, paying the taxes for more than the statutory period, the county record showing no other claim to the land. In 1882, after the land had been purchased and paid for at a judicial sale from such person, the defendant entered forcibly under claim of title under an older patent. Held, that the purchaser was entitled to a perpetual injunction restraining waste. Basore v. Henkel, 82 Va. 474.

Cutting Timber by Grantee Where Title Retained by Grantor.—An injunction will lie at the instance of a grantor of land, who has retained the title as a security for the purchase money, to restrain the grantee from cutting timber on the land in a manner calculated to impair the value of the security. Such injunction may be granted as an incident to a suit to subject the land to the payment of the purchase money, and it is not necessary that the bill should allege the insolvency of the defendant. Core v. Bell, 20 W. Va. 169.

An injunction to stay waste ought not to be granted to a vendor against a vendee to whom he has sold a tract of land in fee simple, retaining the title as a security for the purchase money; unless he brings his suit to subject the land to the payment of the purchase money, and charges the defendant with cutting and selling timber in a manner calculated to render the land an incompetent security, in which case such injunction to stay waste pending the suit may be awarded. Scott v. Wharton, 2 H. & M. 25.

Parties Plaintiff.—A party claiming title to land, to which he has the legal title to one-third and an equitable title to the other two-thirds, may go into equity to restrain waste upon the land and to set aside a conveyance from the board of public works of Virginia to a purchaser of the land, the same having been previously legally granted by a valid grant. Garrison v. Hall, 75 Va. 150.

Same—Contingent Remainderman May Enjoin Waste.—A contingent remainderman may maintain an injunction to restrain waste by the life-tenant. University v. Tucker, 31 W. Va. 621, 8 S. E. Rep. 410.

C. AGAINST TRESPASS.—The distinction between waste and trespass consists in the former being the abuse or the destructive use of property by one who, while not possessed of the absolute title thereto, has yet a right to its legitimate use; trespass being an injury to property by one who has no right whatever to its use. High on Injunctions (2d Ed.) § 650; Bart. Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 459.

"The jurisdiction of a court of equity to interfere by injunction, in the case of nuisance, trespass, and the like, to restrain irreparable mischief, to suppress oppressive litigation, or to prevent a multiplicity of suits, is too well established to admit of doubt." Switzer v. McCulloch, 76 Va. 777.

To avoid multiplicity of suits, injunction may lie, because that shows inadequacy of legal remedy. Bettman v. Harness, 42 W. Va. 433, 26 S. E. Rep. 271.

Equity has jurisdiction by injunction, to prevent acts of irreparable injury to land, even though there is a controversy as to title between the parties, and, having jurisdiction on that ground, will go on to give full relief, though in so doing it is necessary to decide between two adverse titles. Bettman v. Harness, 42 W. Va. 433, 26 S. E. Rep. 271; Callaway v. Webster, 98 Va. 790, 37 S. E. Rep. 276.

A court of equity has no jurisdiction to restrain one joint devisee of land from entering thereon, at the suit of a tenant claiming under the other devisees. Baldwin v. Darst, 3 Gratt. 132.

Conditions of Relief.—To warrant the interference of a court of equity to restrain a trespass on land, two conditions must co-exist: First, the plaintiff's title must be undisputed, or established by legal adjudication; and, secondly, the injury complained of must be irreparable in its nature, unless there exists some other grounds of equity. It is not sufficient in such case that the bill alleges irreparable injury; the facts constituting such injury must be set forth. Schoonover v. Bright, 24 W. Va. 698; Cresap v. Kemble, 26 W. Va. 603; Watson v. Ferrell, 34 W. Va. 406, 12 S. E. Rep. 724; Burns v. Mearns, 44

Digitized by Google

W. Va. 744, 30 S. E. Rep. 112; Lazzell v. Garlow, 44 W. Va. 466, 30 S. E. Rep. 171; Becker v. McGraw (W. Va.), 37 S. E. Rep. 532.

An injunction will not lie to restrain a mere trespass to real property, where the bill does not, on its face, clearly aver good title in the plaintiff; nor even then, as a general rule, where the injury complained of is not destructive of the substance of the inheritance, or is not irreparable, but is susceptible of complete pecuniary compensation, and for which the party may obtain adequate satisfaction in the ordinary course of law. McMillan v. Ferrell, 7 W. Va. 223; Western, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Va., etc., Coal Co., 10 W. Va. 250; Cox v. Douglass, 20 W. Va. 175; Schoonover v. Bright, 24 W. Va. 698; Cresap v. Kemble, 26 W. Va. 603; Watson v. Ferrell, 34 W. Va. 406, 12 S. E. Rep. 724.

A bill to enjoin a trespass on land must aver good title, an irreparable injury, or, in lieu of the latter, the insolvency of the trespasser; and a general charge of irreparable injury will not do, but it must be specified wherein the injury is irreparable. Fluharty v. Mills (W. Va.), 38 S. E. Rep. 521.

Where a party comes into a court of equity alleging a good legal title, and asking for an injunction to restrain a trespass, he must charge that irreparable damage will result if the injunction is denied, setting forth the facts constituting such injury, or that the defendant is insolvent. Unless the bill contains one of these allegations, it is fatally defective. Collins v. Sutton, 94 Va. 127, 26 S. E. Rep. 415; Cresap v. Kemble, 26 W. Va. 603.

It is well settled that an applicant in possession of land with a clear title, or a prima facie title, is entitled to an injunction against a trespasser, threatening irreparable injury, or often-repeated trespass. But even in a case of a fair prima facie title, if it turns out from the evidence that the right of the applicant is in doubt, and the title and boundaries of the land are really in issue, such a controversy cannot be settled in equity, though the property, in an urgent case, may be protected by injunction, until the question of right can be settled by a trial at law. Manchester Cotton Mills v. Town of Manchester, 25 Gratt. 825; Callaway v. Webster, 98 Va. 790, 37 S. E. Rep. 276. See Rakes v. Rustin, etc., Co. (Va.), 22 S. E. Rep. 498.

Same—Inadequacy of Remedy at Law.—Although a court of equity will not as a general rule interpose to prevent a mere trespass, yet if the act done or threatened would be destructive of the substance of the estate, or if repeated acts or wrongs are done or threatened, or if the injury is or would be irreparable, wherever, indeed, the remedy at law is or would be inadequate, a court of equity will enjoin a perpetration of the wrong, and prevent the injury. The insolvency or nonresidence of the trespasser is entitled to much weight in determining whether a court of equity will restrain the trespass. Miller v. Wills, 95 Va. 337, 28 S. E. Rep. 337; Callaway v. Webster, 98 Va. 790, 37 S. E. Rep. 276.

As a general rule, an injunction should not be granted to restrain a mere trespass to real property, when the injury complained of is not destructive of the substance of the inheritance—of that which gives it chief value—or is not irreparable, but is susceptible of complete pecuniary compensation, and for which the party may obtain adequate satisfaction in the law courts; and in no such case should it be granted in the absence of an allegation of the insolvency of the defendant. Lazzell v. Garlow, 44 W. Va. 466, 30 S. E. Rep. 171.

It is not necessary, in order to obtain an injunction to restrain the commission of trespass or waste, that the plaintiff should aver or prove that he could not obtain adequate compensation in damages in an action at law; but it is sufficient to invoke the jurisdiction of a court of equity, that the substantial value of the estate in the character in which it is enjoyed is imperiled. Rakes v. Rustin, etc., Co. (Va.), 22 S. E. Rep. 498.

A court of equity will enjoin a mere trespass to real property where good title in the plaintiff is alleged, and it is also alleged in the bill that the trespasser is insolvent, because in such case the party could have no adequate remedy at law. Hanly v. Watterson, 39 W. Va. 214, 19 S. E. Rep. 536; Cox v. Douglass, 20 W. Va. 175.

Equity has jurisdiction by injunction to prevent acts of irreparable injury to land, even though there is a controversy as to title between the parties, and, having jurisdiction on that ground, will go on to give full relief, though in so doing it is necessary to decide between two adverse titles. Bettman v. Harness, 42 W. Va. 433, 26 S. E. Rep. 271, 36 L. R. A. 566.

Illegal Entry on Land by Corporation.—The remedy for illegal entry on lands by a corporation is by injunction; and the plaintiff is not required to show a case of destructive trespass or irreparable damage. The slightest excess of power is sufficient. Hodges v. S. & R. R. Co., 88 Va. 653, 14 S. E. Rep. 380.

Acts of Ownership by Rival Claimant.—A court of equity will not enjoin a solvent defendant from committing acts, not amounting to waste, which are no more than acts of ownership by a rival claimant. Callaway v. Webster, 98 Va. 790, 37 S. E. Rep. 276.

Cutting Timber.—A property owner may obtain an injunction to restrain a resident of another state from trespassing on his land, breaking down fences, driving in cattle and sheep, destroying hay, and cutting and deadening timber. Miller v. Wills, 95 Va. 337, 28 S. E. Rep. 337.

Where the defendant obtains a license from a land company to cut timber from its land, and is aware at the time of the superior rights of the plaintiff lumber company, and such license is revoked, he will be enjoined from further cutting and removing timber. Bruce v. John L. Roper Lumber Co., 87 Va. 381, 13 S. E. Rep. 153.

A party having an option to purchase the timber growing upon a tract of land, which is not limited as to time by his agreement, may by his own acts and by acquiescence in the acts of another in cutting and removing such timber, and by assisting in the removal of the same, pointing out the timber to the men engaged in cutting it, and raising no objection to the disposal of such timber by the party asserting an adverse claim thereto, estop himself from asserting any claim under his option. Hanly v. Watterson, 39 W. Va. 214, 19 S. E. Rep. 536.

Equity will not enjoin the cutting of timber and removing it from land merely because the plaintiff has brought an ejectment suit against the defendant to try the title to the land. Cox v. Douglass, 20 W. Va. 175. See Fluharty v. Mills (W. Va.), 38 S. E. Rep. 521.

A complainant obtained an injunction to prevent the defendant from cutting timber upon premises claimed by both parties, but the only proof of the complainant's title adduced upon the hearing was an award, which the court found to be invalid on account of misconduct of the arbitrator. All the allegations of the complainant's title were denied by the answer and unsustained by proof. Held, that the injunction should be dissolved and the bill dismissed. Tate v. Vance, 27 Gratt. 571.

Digitized by Google

A bill to enjoin the cutting of timber is fatally defective where it does not aver good title in the plaintiff, and does not allege the insolvency of the defendant, or otherwise show that irreparable injury would result therefrom. Western, etc., Co. v. Va., etc., Co., 10 W. Va. 250.

Injuries to Mines—Removal of Iron Ore.—Though certain persons are entitled to a tract of land as heirs and may maintain trespass against a third party, yet equity has jurisdiction to enjoin such third party from taking iron ore therefrom. Anderson v. Harvey, 10 Gratt. 386. In this case the court said: "I think it is clear that, at the time of the alleged trespass on the ore bank by the appellant, the appellees must be regarded as in possession of it, with a clear and incontestible title. They might have instituted their action of trespass against the appellant; but were they bound to do so before, or instead of applying to a court of equity to restrain the appellant from committing further trespasses on the property in dispute? Were they bound to litigate and discuss in a court of law, rights, which had not only been adjudicated as far back as 1807, but which had been solemnly recognized in the conveyances to which the appellant must necessarily refer as the sources of any title which he could assert? I think not. The practice of courts of equity of interfering in such cases by way of injunction, is one comparatively of recent origin; but the jurisdiction is now fully recognized and well established by cases both in England and America. * * * The land upon which the trespass is alleged to be committed is proved to be of little or no value, except for the iron ore found on it, which is proved to be of an excellent quality. The trespass is one which goes to the change of the very substance of the inheritance, to the destruction of all that gives value to it. The fact proved by the appellant, that the value of the ore per load could be readily estimated, does not deprive a court of equity of its right to interfere in the case by way of injunction. The same might be shown in most cases of the kind. The products of most mines have a value already fixed or easy of ascertainment by proof; yet it was in prevention of like trespasses to this very species of property, mines of ore, coal, etc., that the jurisdiction in question had its origin, and still continues to be most frequently exercised." Quoted with approval in McMillan v. Ferrell, 7 W. Va. 223.

Same—Extraction of Oil or Gas.—The unlawful extraction of oil or gas from land, they being part of the land, is an act of irreparable injury, and equity will enjoin it. Moore v. Jennings (W. Va.), 34 S. E. Rep. 793; Bettman v. Harness, 42 W. Va. 433, 26 S. E. Rep. 271, 36 L. R. A. 566; Williamson v. Jones, 43 W. Va. 562, 27 S. E. Rep. 411, 38 L. R. A. 694.

Account of Profits.—In a pure bill by the assignees of the lessees of salt works to enjoin part owners of them from disturbing their possession, the only issue is the right to an injunction, and an account of profits cannot be decreed in that case. Stuart, etc., Co. v. White, 25 Gratt. 300.

D. AGAINST NUISANCE.—"It would be impossible to give all the instances in which courts of equity have interfered, or refused to interfere, in cases of nuisances. It is enough to say that when the right is clear, and the nuisance is established, a court of equity will always interfere, if the nuisance results from an unlawful act, is continuous in its nature, or, if only temporary, if it is not adequately compensable in damages. Injunctions have been granted to prevent the erection of slaughter-houses in the vicinity of dwellings, even where the neighborhood had been in a measure given up to trades of a noxious character. To prevent the continuance of the business of slaughtering cattle in the vicinity of dwellings, even when the slaughter-house was established before any dwellings were erected in the vicinity. To restrain the erection of glue-works; of works for the preparation of blood as an ingredient for Prussian blue; of melting-houses and fat-boiling establishments, bone-boiling establishments; establishments for the preparation of tripe; for the manufacture of gas. To prevent use of cattle-yards; the burning of brick near dwellings; planing-mills emitting dense volumes of smoke; potteries; the use of mineral coal as fuel; the burning of lime-kilns; the maintenance of livery stables near dwellings, impairing their comfort by noxious stenches, noise, and drawing flies to the vicinity; a turpentine distillery; the carrying on of noisy trades near a dwelling at unreasonable hours, so as to impair its comfortable enjoyment, or so as by agitating and various sounds and motions to produce actual injury to property; the performance of brass bands in the vicinity of dwellings, collecting crowds and impairing the comfortable enjoyment of property; a regatta near a dwelling, collecting a crowd; running railroad cars near a church on the Sabbath, and letting off steam, blowing the whistle, and ringing the bell so as to disturb divine worship there, and injure the value of the property for church purposes; the pollution of water so as to impair its use for domestic purposes, or manufacturing purposes, or so as to cause the emission of noxious smells, or so as to destroy it for domestic use, or so as to injure the navigability of the stream, or so as to impair the value of wharf property.' Wood, Nuis. § 809, and cases cited." Snyder v. Cabell, 29 W. Va. 48, 1 S. E. Rep. 241.

A court of equity ought not to interpose to restrain a nuisance, except where there is no adequate remedy at law or where irreparable injury might be done. Wingfield v. Crenshaw, 4 H. & M. 474.

A court of equity will enjoin a nuisance, trespass, and the like, in order to restrain irreparable mischief, suppress oppressive litigation, or prevent a multiplicity of suits. Switzer v. McCulloch, 76 Va. 777.

A court of equity has authority to enjoin the continuance of a nuisance which is likely to produce irreparable injury. Masonic Temple Ass'n v. Banks, 94 Va. 695, 27 S. E. Rep. 490.

The public nature of the work which creates a nuisance does not prevent a court of equity from enjoining the contractor from doing it in such a manner as to create a nuisance, especially where it appears that it might be safely done in another manner at a small additional expense to the contractor. Masonic Temple Ass'n v. Banks, 94 Va. 695, 27 S. E. Rep. 490.

Where the bill, answer and affidavits show a prima facie case of nuisance in favor of the plaintiff, the circuit court commits no error in continuing the injunction until the hearing on the merits. McEldowney v. Lowther (W. Va. 1901), 38 S. E. Rep. 644.

Digitized by Google

Where the thing complained of is not a nuisance per se, and the injury apprehended is contingent, equity will not interfere. Chambers v. Cramer (W. Va.), 38 S. E. Rep. 691.

Public Nuisances.—A court of equity will not interfere to prevent a public nuisance, unless the party asking its aid can show that some private injury is actually sustained or justly apprehended by him. Beveridge v. Lacey, 3 Rand. 63.

Same—Obstruction of Highways.—An individual cannot enjoin a public nuisance, such as the obstruction of a road, unless it works special and peculiar injury to him, and that injury must not be trivial, or such as may be compensated in damages, but must be of a serious character, affecting the substance and value of the plaintiff's estate. Keystone Bridge Co. v. Summers, 13 W. Va. 476; Talbott v. King, 32 W. Va. 6, 9 S. E. Rep. 48; Shepherd v. Groff, 34 W. Va. 123, 11 S. E. Rep. 997.

Sale of Intoxicating Liquors.—Under W. Va. Code, ch. 32, § 18, a court of equity cannot restrain by injunction a party charged with selling intoxicating liquors contrary to law, or abate the house, building, or place where such intoxicating liquors are alleged to be sold contrary to law, until the owner or keeper of such house or place has been convicted of such unlawful selling at the place named in the bill. Hartley v. Henretta, 35 W. Va. 222, 13 S. E. Rep. 875.

Removal of Building by Municipal Corporation.—A court of equity has jurisdiction to restrain a municipal corporation from destroying a building as a nuisance, where by so doing, it encroaches upon private rights and works irreparable injury. Bristol, etc., Lumber Co. v. City of Bristol, 97 Va. 304, 33 S. E. Rep. 588, 5 Va. Law Reg. 242.

In order to secure and promote the public health, safety and convenience, municipal corporations are endowed with power to prevent and abate nuisances. This power, and its summary exercise, may be constitutionally conferred on municipal corporations, and they may be authorized to act against that which comes within the legal definition of a nuisance, but such power, conferred in general terms, cannot be taken to authorize the extrajudicial condemnation and destruction of that as a nuisance which, in its nature, situation, or use, is not such. And where a building is a nuisance merely because of the uses to which it is devoted, the building itself cannot be pulled down to stop the nuisance, but only the wrongful use can be stopped. The occupation of a building by disorderly and lewd persons, its filthy and unsightly condition, and the consequent injury to adjacent property, do not justify its destruction as a nuisance. Bristol, etc., Co. v. Bristol, 97 Va. 304, 33 S. E. Rep. 588, 5 Va. Law Reg. 242.

Peril to Health—Possibility of Warding Off Danger.—One who creates a nuisance on the premises of another, which injures his property and is pernicious to health, will not be allowed to continue it for an indefinite period, because the latter may possibly ward off the evil effects and dangerous results at his own costs and expense, especially where it would endanger human life were the continuance of the nuisance allowed. Masonic Temple Ass'n v. Banks, 94 Va. 695, 27 S. E. Rep. 490.

Blacksmith Shop—Increased Risk of Fire.—To warrant the perpetuation of an injunction restraining, as a threatened nuisance, the erection of a building proposed to be used as a blacksmith shop, the fact that it will become a nuisance if so used must clearly appear. A blacksmith shop is not a nuisance per se. That the erection of a blacksmith shop will increase the rates of insurance on neighboring property is no ground for an injunction to restrain such erection. Chambers v. Cramer (W. Va.), 38 S. E. Rep. 691.

Powder Factory.—Where a company engaged in the manufacture of powder and other explosives, without misrepresentation or concealment on its part, is induced to locate its works at great expense on lands adjacent to the property, and for the prospective benefit of a land development and improvement company, such company cannot, on discovering that the proximity of such powder works has diminished instead of enhanced the value of its adjoining territory, enjoin the continuance of such works as a nuisance. Huntington, etc., Co. v. Phœnix, etc., Co., 40 W. Va. 711, 21 S. E. Rep. 1037.

Furniture Factory—Noise.—A court of equity will not grant an injunction to restrain the operation of a factory whose noise is alleged to be a nuisance to the plaintiff living near by, where the evidence is conflicting, and it appears that the locality is noisy from other causes as well, and that an action at law for damages on account of the alleged nuisance is pending and to be tried by a jury. Powell v. Bentley, etc., Furniture Co., 34 W. Va. 804, 12 S. E. Rep. 1085.

Skating Rink.—A court of equity will not enjoin the maintenance of a skating rink within a short distance of a dwelling house, where the noise from the skating and attending it is of such a character as to materially interfere with the comfort and enjoyment of the inmates of such dwelling. Snyder v. Cabell, 29 W. Va. 48, 1 S. E. Rep. 241.

Slaughter House.—A slaughter house in a city or town is not a nuisance per se, but only prima facie such. Therefore, upon a bill for an injunction, the burden of proof is upon those engaged in the business to show that it is not a nuisance. Pruner v. Pendleton, 75 Va. 516.

Obstruction of Access to Building.—A testator devised to his son S. a store and lot, together with the east half of a privy located on an adjoining lot, which he devises to his son W. The store on the lot devised to W. extended back about 55 feet, while that devised to S. extended back 70 feet, leaving a vacant space on which a privy was located. There was a door in the side of S.'s house entering to this vacant space. W. sold his lot to B., subject to the rights of the owner of the adjoining lot in the one-half of the privy. Upon the death of S., B., as his tenant, closed the door giving access to the privy, and extended his own storehouse back to the rear line of the lot, building a privy on the roof. Held, that the children of S., without proceeding at law to establish their rights, might go at once into equity to compel the removal of the obstruction. Berkeley v. Smith, 27 Gratt. 892.

Annoyance of Neighbors—Malice.—While the doing of certain acts by a person in the use of his premises as a dwelling house might not in themselves amount to a private nuisance, yet when the same acts are done wantonly and maliciously, for the mere purpose of annoying his neighbor and to destroy the peace and quiet of his home, and they have such effect, they may amount to a nuisance which a court of equity will restrain. Medford v. Levy, 31 W. Va. 649, 8 S. E. Rep. 302.

Domestic Broils.—Where two families are occupying rooms in the same house, using in common the halls and stairways, a court of equity will not restrain the one from committing a nuisance against the other, unless the proof of the existence of such nuisance is clear and strong. A court of equity will, as far as it can, discourage a resort to its aid for the purpose of interfering in mere domestic broils. He who comes into a court of equity must come in with clean hands; therefore when there appears to be an unfortunate quarrel between two women, which involves the families of each, and both are in fault, a court of equity will not interfere to protect one against the other, and enjoin as a nuisance what one does against the other. Medford v. Levy, 31 W. Va. 649, 8 S. E. Rep. 302.

Digitized by Google

Nuisances to Water—Obstruction of Stream.—A contractor obstructed a stream for the purpose of doing certain work under a contract with a city, which would require from four days to two months to do, and which might safely be done in another way at a small additional expense to the contractor. The overflow thereby caused filled the cellars of the plaintiff's building with stagnant water, productive of disease to the tenants in the building. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction against the further obstruction of the stream, although he might have warded off the evil effects of the nuisance at his own expense. Masonic Temple Ass'n v. Banks, 94 Va. 695, 27 S. E. Rep. 490.

The owner of a dam in a stream of water cannot enjoin a prior owner of a dam above his from damming back the water for the purpose of raising a pond sufficient to supply his mill with water for operating his machinery, although such use at times keeps back the water to the extent of depriving the lower owner of water. Mumpower v. City of Bristol, 90 Va. 151, 17 S. E. Rep. 853.

Same—Same—Milldam Obstructing Navigation.—Where a corporation claims a right to abate a milldam as a nuisance, because it obstructs the navigation of a stream, and such abatement would produce great loss to the mill owner, and great inconvenience to the public, a court of equity has jurisdiction to prevent such abatement and preserve to the mill owner his establishment, until the question as to whether the mill owner has a right to keep up his dam is decided. Crenshaw v. Slate River Co., 6 Rand. 245.

Same—Same—Rebuilding Milldam—Stagnant Water.—A mill was erected in 1815, by leave of court, according to the statute concerning mills. The stagnation of the water in the mill pond proved injurious to the health of the neighborhood, and one of the neighbors injured thereby brought an action against the mill owners and recovered damages at law. About the time of this recovery, the milldam was washed away, and the pond drained; and the mill owners, after the recovery, proceeded to rebuild the milldam, proposing certain expedients to prevent the stagnation of the water from being again injurious to the health of the neighborhood. Held, that a court of chancery, upon a bill by the person who recovered the judgment at law against the mill owners, should enjoin them from rebuilding the dam, unless it should appear that the expedients proposed by the mill owners, would be effectual to prevent the mischief in the future. Miller v. Trueheart, 4 Leigh 569.

Same—Same—Milldam—Injury by Backing Water on Another's Land.—The defendant was the owner of a grist mill, and the plaintiff applied to the court for leave to build a mill on the same river, above the defendant's mill: and the defendant applied for leave to raise his dam. While their applications were depending, the defendant raised his dam two feet, to the prejudice of the plaintiff, who filed his bill for an injunction, in which he stated that the water was thrown back upon his plantation, which affected the health of his family, and covered his mill-seat fourteen inches, which was done to prevent him from building the mill, and prayed for the abatement of the nuisance and for an injunction to prevent the defendant, in the meantime, from the use of the water. Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction. Wingfield v. Crenshaw, 4 H. & M. 474.

A riparian proprietor will be enjoined from constructing a dike which will destroy the dike of the opposite proprietor and cause an overflow of his lands, where the opposite proprietor claims a legal right to maintain his dike under one who built the dike when he owned the land on both sides of the stream; and the court will cause the abatement of so much of the defendant's dike as will injure the dike or land of the defendant. Burwell v. Hobson, 12 Gratt. 322, 65 Am. Dec. 247.

Nuisance to Water—Diversion of Stream.—"By the general law applicable to running streams, every person through or past whose land a natural watercourse runs, has a right to the reasonable use of the water, and no proprietor, above or below, has a right to divert or obstruct it. This right is not an easement, but is inseparably annexed to the soil, and passes with it. It is, moreover, a principle of the common law that every riparian proprietor on either side of a stream not navigable prima facie owns to the middle or thread of the stream (usque ad filum aquae), and has an equal right to the use of the water without diminution or alteration. * * * Accordingly, the diversion of a natural stream is a private nuisance, and, therefore, from an early period, courts of equity have granted relief by way of injunction, in such cases, at the suit of the injured party. The jurisdiction is founded upon the notion of restraining irreparable mischief, or of preventing vexatious litigation, or a multiplicity of suits. And where the complainant's legal right is clear, and the case is one 'of strong and imperious necessity'; or, in other words, where the right is clear, and its violation palpable, and the complainant has not slept upon his rights, equity will ordinarily interfere, although the right has not been established at law; and in such a case a preliminary mandatory injunction, as it is called, will be granted, which is so framed that it restrains the defendant from permitting his previous act to operate, and, therefore, virtually compels him to undo it—that is, to restore the water to its natural channel." Carpenter v. Gold, 88 Va. 551, 14 S. E. Rep. 329.

No person has a right to divert a watercourse on his own land so as to turn it from the land of his neighbor lower down the stream; and if he claims such right from long enjoyment of it, he must prove that he has had adverse possession more than twenty years. Where a party injured by such act restores the stream to its original channel, equity has no jurisdiction to grant redress, as it is a proper case for damages at law. The only ground of equitable jurisdiction is to prevent the threatened injury. Coalter v. Hunter, 4 Rand. 58.

A bill alleged that complainant was the owner of a tract of land formerly a part of, and now adjoining, the defendant's land: that one of the boundary lines of the two tracts ran for some distance with a stream which had supplied both tracts with water ever since the complainant purchased his land; that the defendants, shortly before the bill was filed, diverted the water of the stream by means of a ditch, and deprived the complainant of access to it, and thereby greatly and irreparably injured him; and prayed that the defendants be enjoined from further diversion of the stream. Held, that the bill stated a proper case for equitable relief. Carpenter v. Gold, 88 Va. 551, 14 S. E. Rep. 329.

Digitized by Google

Two mills owned by different parties were propelled by water taken from the same dam, and the owner of the mill which had the preference in the use of the water transferred it to a purchaser, who altered the construction, requiring more water. Held, that the application for an injunction by the owner of the other mill was a proper method to ascertain the rights of the parties to the use of the water power. Hanna v. Clarke, 31 Gratt. 36.

Nuisance to Water—Pollution of Stream.—The natural pollution of water in its flow through populous regions of country cannot, ordinarily, be restrained. But any use of a stream that materially fouls and adulterates the water, or the deposit or discharge therein of any filth or noxious substance that so far affects the water as to impair its value for the ordinary purposes of life; or anything which renders the water less wholesome than when in its ordinary state, or which renders it offensive to taste or smell, or which is naturally calculated to excite disgust in those using the water for the ordinary purposes of life, will constitute a nuisance which a court of equity will enjoin, or for which a lower riparian owner injured thereby is entitled to redress. Trevett v. Prison Ass'n, 98 Va. 332, 36 S. E. Rep. 373, 6 Va. Law Reg. 148.

Parties.—Two or more persons owning separate and distinct tenements, whether they occupy the premises by themselves or tenants, may, together with the tenants, where the tenements are lessened in value, or made materially uncomfortable as homes, by a nuisance which is a common injury to all the tenements and their residents, join in a suit to restrain such nuisance. Snyder v. Cabell, 29 W. Va. 48, 1 S. E. Rep. 241.

E. TO PROTECT EASEMENTS.—"Where easements or servitudes are annexed by grant, or covenant, or otherwise, to private estates, the due enjoyment of them will be protected against encroachments by injunction. * * * Damages in repeated suits would not compensate in such a case. The injury is irreparable, and calls for a preventive remedy such as a court of equity only can furnish. That court constantly interposes by injunction where the injury is of that character. By the term irreparable injury it is not meant that there must be no physical possibility of repairing the injury; all that is meant is, that the injury would be a grievous one, or at least a material one, and not adequately reparable in damages." Woods v. Early, 95 Va. 307, 28 S. E. Rep. 374; Sanderlin v. Baxter, 76 Va. 299. On the subject of Easements generally, see monographic note on "Easements" appended to Hardy v. McCullough, 23 Gratt. 251.

Where the easement has long been enjoyed and delay would be disastrous, the right will not be required to be first established at law. Sanderlin v. Baxter, 76 Va. 299. See Berkeley v. Smith, 27 Gratt. 892.

Easement in Private Way.—Where a party has acquired an open and unobstructed right of way over land by publicly using the same, without objection, for more than twenty years, he can enjoin its obstruction. Rogerson v. Shepherd, 33 W. Va. 307, 10 S. E. Rep. 632.

A mandatory injunction will lie to cause an obstructed or closed private way to be cleared and opened for the use of the owner. Boyd v. Woolwine, 40 W. Va. 282, 21 S. E. Rep. 1020.

Easement in Streets and Alleys.—Where lands are laid off into lots, streets and alleys, and a map plat thereof is made, all lots sold and conveyed by reference thereto, without reservation, carry with them, as appurtenant thereto, the right to the use of the easement in such streets and alleys necessary to the enjoyment and value of such lots; and where the landowner refuses to the lot owners the use of such streets and alleys, equity will compel him to open them for their benefit. Cook v. Totten (W. Va. 1901), 38 S. E. Rep. 491.

Where a vendor of land in a town assures the vendee, though not in writing, that the piece of ground adjoining thereto is always to be kept open as an alley, and the vendee is induced by such assurance to make the purchase, or to give a higher price for the property, a court of equity will perpetually enjoin the vendor from shutting up such alley. Trueheart v. Price, 2 Munf. 468.

In a suit by the owner of a livery stable opening on a street to enjoin a railroad company from constructing its road along such street under authority granted by the city, the bill alleged that, if the defendant were allowed to construct its road as proposed, it would not only deprive the complainant of his easement in the street, but would render his building almost useless as a livery stable on account of the combustible matter necessarily stored therein, which would easily be ignited by sparks from some passing engine; that the running of trains would frighten the horses kept in the stable, and would prevent his driving teams out of the door opening on the street; and that his stable would be thereby rendered entirely worthless, since no one would come there to hire horses. Held, that the granting of the preliminary injunction was warranted by the bill, as it showed not merely a damage to the complainant's property, but an injury wholly destroying its value. Ohio River R. Co. v. Ward, 35 W. Va. 481, 14 S. E. Rep. 142. See also, R. Co. v. Gibbens, 35 W. Va. 57, 12 S. E. Rep. 1093.

Easement in Turnpike Road.—In 1830, a turnpike company constructed a road through the lands of a property owner, taking rock from quarries on his adjacent lands to use in constructing the same: and no proceedings of condemnation appear to have been instituted against his lands, though the lands of twenty-five others were condemned for the purposes of said road. In 1850, a letter was received by the property owner from the president of the company, recognizing the right of his tenant, when on business, to pass the toll gates of the company free: and, until the death of the property owner in 1877, he and his family and servants passed through the toll gates free. By his will, the property owner devised the land, through which said road ran, to his son, with all the privileges and appurtenances thereto belonging; and the son exercised the same privileges with reference to the road for eleven years after his father's death, when for the first time the company demanded toll of him. Held, that, as the son had the right to travel on the road free of toll, the collection thereof would be restrained by injunction. Lucas v. Smithfield, C. & H. F. Turnpike Co., 36 W. Va. 427, 15 S. E. Rep. 182.

Easement in Passage Way between Offices.—An injunction will lie to restrain one of the tenants in common of a building used for law offices from changing the interior walls so as to narrow the passage way therein from six to three feet, where such alteration would materially damage the property. Woods v. Early, 95 Va. 307, 28 S. E. Rep. 374.

Digitized by Google

Drainage Easement.—The owner of two tracts of land, "Woodlawn and Fairfield," separated only by a public road, drained the former by ditches through the latter to the river. In 1811, he granted "Woodlawn" to A (under whom the plaintiff claims). In 1820, he devised "Fairfield" to D (under whom the defendant claims). The deed and will were silent about draining. In 1878, the defendant undertook to stop up the ditches, and the plaintiff obtained an injunction. When "Woodlawn" was granted, the ditches were open and visible, and, except for a brief time, had been used continuously to drain it. It could be drained in no other way, except by heavy expenditure. Held, that the ditches were necessary to the proper enjoyment of the premises. Sanderlin v. Baxter, 76 Va. 299.

Easement to Pipe Water.—Where the right to pipe water from a spring to a certain tank is granted by the landowners to a railroad company by a recorded deed, and the land is subsequently granted to one knowing that the pipes are laid across the land and that the topography requires them to be laid as they were, the grantee takes subject to the easement, and will be enjoined from interfering, though the tank be located differently from the place named in the deed, where the change does not affect the pipe's position. Diffendal v. Va. Midland R. Co., 86 Va. 459, 10 S. E. Rep. 536.

F. TO PROTECT FRANCHISES.—Unless the grant of the franchise under which the plaintiff claims is exclusive in its terms, equity will not enjoin the operations of persons claiming the right to exercise a similar franchise under legislative authority. High on Injunctions (2d Ed.) 571; Tuckahoe Canal Co. v. Tuckahoe, etc., R. Co., 11 Leigh 42.

Where a railway company is incorporated to run its road through the same valley with a canal company previously incorporated, but whose charter is not exclusive in terms, an injunction will not lie to restrain the railway company from constructing a bridge across the canal, where the termini of the railway are such as to require it to cross the canal. Tuckahoe Canal Co. v. Tuckahoe, etc., R. Co., 11 Leigh 42.

Where a public ferry has been disused for more than three years, though the franchise of the ferry owner has not been declared forfeited on quo warranto or other like proceeding, the ferry owner is not entitled to the aid of a court of equity, to prevent others from invading the franchise, which he has abandoned by such nonuser, under the statute, 2 Rev. Code, ch. 237, §§ 23, 24. Trent v. Bridge Co., 11 Leigh 521.

G. TO CONTROL CORPORATE ACTION.—Courts of equity have jurisdiction to restrain the proceedings of municipal corporations which encroach upon private rights, and are productive of irreparable injury. Bristol, etc., Co. v. Bristol, 97 Va. 304, 33 S. E. Rep. 588. On the subject of Municipal Corporations generally, see monographic note on "Municipal Corporations" appended to Danville v. Pace, 25 Gratt. 1.

Courts of equity cannot interfere by injunction with the exercise in good faith by municipal corporations of discretionary powers conferred upon them by law. The apprehension of a lot owner that a corporation may not perform a lawful work in a proper manner is no ground for an injunction. Harrisonburg v. Roller, 97 Va. 582, 34 S. E. Rep. 523.

In Respect to Indebtedness.—Any taxpaying resident and voter of a city may sue in behalf of himself and all other taxpayers to enjoin the creation of any indebtedness by the city in excess of the constitutional limit. Spilman v. City of Parkersburg, 35 W. Va. 605, 14 S. E. Rep. 279; List v. Wheeling, 7 W. Va. 501. See Brannon v. County Court, 33 W. Va. 789, 11 S. E. Rep. 34; County Court v. Boreman, 34 W. Va. 362, 12 S. E. Rep. 490.

A court of equity has jurisdiction, at the instance of the taxpayers of a municipal corporation, suing for the benefit of themselves and all others similarly situated, to enjoin the corporation and its officers from levying and collecting an unauthorized tax, or creating an unauthorized debt. It is immaterial whether the debt was wholly unauthorized, or authorized only upon conditions which have not been complied with, or that the securities for it would be void in the hands of an innocent holder. Lynchburg, etc., Ry. Co. v. Dameron, 95 Va. 545, 28 S. E. Rep. 951.

To authorize an injunction against a county levy on the ground that it is intended to pay indebtedness incurred in violation of the W. Va. Const., art. 10, § 8, it must affirmatively appear that such indebtedness is in violation of the constitution. He who asserts it must show it. It will not be presumed to be so. Armstrong v. Taylor County Court, 41 W. Va. 602, 24 S. E. Rep. 993.

An injunction will not be allowed to restrain the execution of an order of a county court making numerous allowances to different county creditors merely because some of the allowances are not proper charges on the county. The remedy in such case is to enjoin the payment of the illegal allowances only. Armstrong v. Taylor County Court, 41 W. Va. 602, 24 S. E. Rep. 993.

Same—Issuance of Bonds.—Where a city makes subscriptions to a railroad company and is about to issue bonds in excess of the constitutional limit, a court of equity may perpetually enjoin the making of such subscriptions and the issuing of the bonds. List v. City of Wheeling, 7 W. Va. 501.

Although the statute provides a mode for contesting an election by a county to subscribe to the stock of an internal improvement company, a court of equity may, on a bill filed by fifteen or more of the taxpayers, enjoin the issuing of the bonds of the county in payment of the subscription, if irregular. Redd v. Supervisors of Henry Co., 31 Gratt. 695.

An injunction will lie to restrain the issuance and sale of bonds in payment of public subscriptions to works of internal improvement in advance of the proper time for delivery upon the subscription. Neale v. County Court, 43 W. Va. 90, 27 S. E. Rep. 370, 7 Am. & Eng. R. Cas., N. S., 252.

The terms and conditions as to the issuance of bonds under a public subscription to works of internal improvement contained in the proposition of subscription approved by the popular vote cannot be changed or departed from, and the issuance of bonds contrary to such terms and conditions may be enjoined by taxpayers. Neale v. County Court, 43 W. Va. 90, 27 S. E. Rep. 370, 7 Am. & Eng. R. Cas., N. S., 252.

Same—Guaranteeing Bonds.—An injunction will lie in favor of the taxpayers of a city to restrain the city from guaranteeing bonds, though the guaranty would be void in the hands of innocent purchasers.

Digitized by Google

Lynchburg, etc., Ry. Co. v. Dameron, 95 Va. 545, 28 S. E. Rep. 951.

"The fact that securities, when issued by a municipal corporation, may be void in the hands of innocent holders, is no sufficient reason why the taxpayers of the corporation should not have the right to call upon a court of equity to prevent them from being issued, and thus avoid the threatened wrong and provide a remedy which will at once reach the whole mischief, secure the rights of all, both for the present and the future, and thus avoid a multiplicity of suits." Lynchburg, etc., Ry. Co. v. Dameron, 95 Va. 545, 28 S. E. Rep. 951.

In Respect to Sale of Property Dedicated to Public Use.—An injunction will lie to restrain a county court from selling a public square for the purpose of erecting private buildings thereon, where such square was dedicated to the public in consideration that no public building should be erected thereon. Sturmer v. Co. Court of Randolph Co., 42 W. Va. 724, 26 S. E. Rep. 532.

In Respect to Acceptance of Jail by Board of Supervisors.—An injunction will not lie in favor of the taxpayers of a county to enjoin the board of supervisors from accepting a jail and a jailer's residence merely on the ground that the contractor has acquired an influence over the board by reason of which it has allowed the original cost of the building to be greatly increased, in the absence of any charge of fraud or collusion on the part of the board of supervisors, as a complete remedy by appeal from the decision of the board is given by Va. Code 1887, §§ 836-838. Manly Mfg. Co. v. Broaddus, 94 Va. 547, 27 S. E. Rep. 438.

In Respect to Removal of Houses.—Equity will enjoin the authorities of the town from removing houses until the rights of the parties are ascertained. Where the evidence in the cause leaves the rights of the parties in doubt, equity cannot settle them, as they involve the title and boundaries of land, but will enjoin the removal of the houses until the question of right can be settled by an action at law. Manchester Cotton Mills v. Town of Manchester, 25 Gratt. 825.

In Respect to Removal of County Seat.—An injunction will lie in favor of taxpayers of a county to restrain the illegal removal of the county seat, by carrying away records, books, documents, etc., under a pretended act of the legislature. Osburn v. Staley, 5 W. Va. 85.

In Respect to Streets and Alleys.—An injunction will lie to restrain a town from opening streets and alleys through a person's lands, without condemnation according to law, and the payment of a proper compensation. M. C. S. & M. Co. v. Mason, 23 W. Va. 211; Pierpoint v. Town of Harrisville, 9 W. Va. 215; Yates v. Town of West Grafton, 33 W. Va. 507, 11 S. E. Rep. 8.

Since a tenant for life has the immediate freehold, and therefore the sole right to hold, use and enjoy, he may sue out an injunction to restrain a town from opening streets and alleys through his premises, against his consent, without first having the same lawfully taken and condemned, and compensation to such person ascertained in the manner prescribed by law. Jarvis v. Grafton, 44 W. Va. 453, 30 S. E. Rep. 178.

Equity has jurisdiction to restrain the taking or damaging of private property for public use, without just compensation, even though an action at law will lie for the recovery of damages in such cases after the property has been so taken or damaged. Mason v. Harper's Ferry Bridge Co., 17 W. Va. 408.

Same—Paving Streets.—An injunction will not lie to restrain a municipal corporation from laying a pavement along a street, and making an assessment therefor, on the ground that the abutting property is farm land, where such land has been platted, and building lots have been sold from it, and it is vacant only because of the high price at which it is held. Riddle v. Charlestown, 43 W. Va. 796, 28 S. E. Rep. 831.

Same—Sidewalk Assessment.—A court of equity will not enjoin the collection of a tax assessment on a town lot to pay for the construction of a sidewalk in front of the same, ordained by the council of an incorporated city or town, on the sole ground that such tax or assessment is illegal; some additional circumstances bringing the case under some recognized head of equity jurisdiction must also appear. Wilson v. Town of Philippi, 39 W. Va. 75, 19 S. E. Rep. 553.

Same—Raising Sidewalk.—When a town is authorized by its charter to "close or extend, widen or narrow, lay out, graduate, curb and pave, and otherwise improve" its streets and sidewalks, it cannot be enjoined from raising a sidewalk, although the property of an adjacent lot owner may be injured thereby. Town of Harrisonburg v. Roller, 97 Va. 582, 34 S. E. Rep. 523.

A town will not be estopped from raising the sidewalk on a street by the fact that it was, at a former time, enjoined from raising certain streets at their intersection. Town of Harrisonburg v. Roller, 97 Va. 582, 34 S. E. Rep. 523.

H. AGAINST TAXES.—Injunction is the proper remedy to prevent a city from collecting taxes assessed against persons or property which it has no right to tax. Crim v. Town of Philippi, 38 W. Va. 122, 18 S. E. Rep. 466; Christie v. Malden, 23 W. Va. 667.

An injunction will lie to restrain the collection of taxes upon property which is exempt from taxation. Staunton v. Mary Baldwin Seminary, 99 Va. —, 39 S. E. Rep. 596.

"Whenever the authorities of a municipal corporation make an illegal or an improper assessment of taxes on a person or subject, which they have the legal right and authority to tax properly, the remedy of the party so illegally taxed is confined to a court of law; but where such authorities illegally assess and attempt to collect a tax from a person or a subject which they have no legal right to tax, or levy an improper tax for which a court of law could not afford an adequate remedy, because redress in that court could only be had by repeated actions, then a court of equity will take jurisdiction and enjoin the assessment and collection of such tax. That is, if the municipal authorities erroneously tax property which they have the legal right and power to tax, the remedy must be sought at law; but if they tax property not legally taxable, or if they exceed the limit prescribed by the statute conferring their power to tax, their action being ultra vires and void, equity has jurisdiction to grant relief." Christie v. Malden, 23 W. Va. 667; Tygarts, etc., Bank v. Philippi, 38 W. Va. 219, 18 S. E. Rep. 489.

"If municipal authorities tax persons or property not legally taxable, or if they exceed the limit prescribed by the statute conferring their power to tax, their action being ultra vires and void, equity has jurisdiction to grant relief. No other forum can afford such prompt, complete, and adequate relief. The hand of the would-be spoiler is stayed before it seizes its intended booty. Christie v. Malden, 23 W. Va. 671. Of course, it must clearly appear that the municipality is going beyond the line of its authority." Crim v. Town of Philippi, 38 W. Va. 122, 18 S. E. Rep. 466.

Digitized by Google

"The jurisdiction of a court of equity to restrain a municipal corporation and its officers from levying and collecting an unauthorized tax, or from creating an unauthorized debt, upon the application of one or more taxpayers of the corporation, who sue for the benefit of themselves and all others similarly situated, is too well settled to admit of dispute. Bull v. Read, 13 Gratt. 78; Eyre v. Jacob, 14 Gratt. 422; Redd v. Supervisors, 31 Gratt. 695; Roper v. McWhorter, 77 Va. 214; Crampton v. Zabriskie, 101 U. S. 601; 2 Dillon Mun. Corp., sec. 914, etc.; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur., sec. 260. And this jurisdiction is exercised not only in cases where the corporation has authority under certain conditions, which have not been complied with, to make subscriptions, or lend its credit to another corporation, but it is also exercised in cases where it has no authority to make such subscriptions, or lend such credit under any circumstances." Lynchburg, etc., R. Co. v. Dameron, 95 Va. 545, 28 S. E. Rep. 951.

By a long course of decisions it has been settled, that the remedy against the attempt to coerce the payment of an illegal tax is by injunction. Richmond v. Crenshaw, 76 Va. 936; S. V. R. Co. v. Supervisors of Clarke County, 78 Va. 269.

A court of equity will not restrain the collection of an assessment or tax, imposed by an incorporated town, on the sole ground that the tax is illegal. There must exist, in addition, special circumstances, bringing the case under some recognized head of equity jurisdiction, such as that the enforcement of the assessment or tax would lead to a multiplicity of suits, or produce irreparable injury, or, where the property is real estate, throw a cloud upon the title of the plaintiff, or the like. Douglass v. Harrisville, 9 W. Va. 162; McClung v. Livesay, 7 W. Va. 329; Corrothers v. Board of Education, 16 W. Va. 527; C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Miller, 19 W. Va. 408; Bull v. Read, 13 Gratt. 78.

A court of equity has jurisdiction to enjoin the collection of an illegal tax, where such injunction will prevent a multiplicity of suits. C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Miller, 19 W. Va. 408; Williams v. County Court, 26 W. Va. 488.

County authorities are not authorized without the action of the legislature to assess railroads or other property for taxation and county levies; and if they make such assessment, injunction is the proper remedy. S. V. R. Co. v. Supervisors, 78 Va. 269; Richmond v. Crenshaw, 76 Va. 936; Va. & Tenn. R. Co. v. Washington County, 30 Gratt. 471. For the present legislation on this subject, see Va. Code 1887, ch. 36, § 833, as amended by Acts 1895, p. 274.

Equity will not enjoin municipal assessments merely on the grounds of illegality or irregularity, where the municipality in making such assessments does not exceed the constitutional or statutory limit of its authority, as the person aggrieved in such case has an adequate remedy at law. Riddle v. Town of Charlestown, 43 W. Va. 796, 28 S. E. Rep. 881.

Qualification of Officers, etc.—Where there is no averment in a bill to enjoin a collection of taxes on the ground that the person making the levy was not regularly elected or qualified to do so, that irreparable damage would be done the complainant if the collection were allowed to proceed, or even that the officer seeking the collection is insolvent, and that an action at law against him would be unavailing, it is not error to dissolve the injunction, as the remedy at law is complete and adequate. White Sulphur Springs Co. v. Holly, 4 W. Va. 597.

A bill to enjoin a town and its sergeant from collecting from the plaintiff's employer the amount of a road tax, which, it was alleged, the sergeant had threatened to collect, though not authorized by any town ordinance or general law; and to enjoin the employer from paying the tax and deducting the amount from the plaintiff's wages, is not only multifarious, but presents no case for relief against the town, because it shows that it had not by ordinance directed the collection; and no case against the employer, because the plaintiffs have, as to him, an adequate remedy at law. And for such want of equity such bill will be dismissed at the hearing. Buffalo v. Town of Pocahontas, 35 Va. 222, 7 S. E. Rep. 238.

Cloud upon Title.—As taxes assessed on real estate without any lawful authority create a cloud upon the title thereof, a court of equity will for that cause alone entertain a bill to remove the cloud by perpetually enjoining the collection of such illegal taxes. Powell v. Parkersburg, 28 W. Va. 698; Tygart's Val. Bank v. Philippi, 38 W. Va. 219, 18 S. E. Rep. 489.

Injunction Will Not Lie against Assessment of Foreign Insurance Company.—Equity has no jurisdiction to inquire into and control the internal management of a foreign corporation. Hence, an injunction will not lie against an assessment upon a member by a foreign insurance company. Taylor v. Mutual, etc., Life Ass'n, 97 Va. 60, 33 S. E. Rep. 385.

Collection of Toll by Navigation Company.—A court of equity has no jurisdiction to restrain a navigation company from collecting tolls on the streams to which its charter refers, on the ground that the company has failed to improve the streams as its charter prescribes, or to keep them in order. The only mode of proceeding against a corporation in such case is by quo warranto at the suit of the commonwealth. Pixley v. Roanoke Navigation Co., 75 Va. 320.

Taxation of Bank Shares.—A federal court will not enjoin the collection of taxes levied under the authority of a state upon the shares of a national bank unless it clearly appears not only that the tax is illegal, but also that there are special circumstances which bring the case within some recognized ground of equity jurisdiction and render such relief necessary to the adequate protection of the complainant's rights, and only where the right is clear, the necessity for action urgent, and the absence of any other remedy apparent, should an injunction be granted. People's National Bank of Lynchburg v. Marye, 7 Va. Law Reg. 47.

A bank cannot maintain a suit in equity on behalf of its shareholders to enjoin the collection of taxes levied on their shares where the shareholders themselves could not maintain such suit, and where the statute under which the taxes are levied imposes no duty or liability on the bank in respect to the same. People's National Bank of Lynchburg v. Marye, 7 Va. Law Reg. 47.

Act Virginia, March 6, 1890, providing for the taxation of bank shares, required the banks to pay the taxes levied thereunder against their stockholders and provided that in case a bank failed to make such payment within a certain time the cashier and his sureties should be liable therefor with an added penalty to be recovered at suit of the state. Act March 3, 1896, providing for the collection of delinquent taxes on bank shares, left it optional with a bank to pay such taxes levied against its stockholders, and provided that in case it did not elect to made such payment after notice suits should be instituted for the collection of the same from the stockholders individually. Held, that whether the later act be regarded as repealing the provision of the one under which the taxes were levied, authorizing suit against the cashier, or as merely providing a cumulative remedy, a national bank could not maintain a suit to enjoin the officers of the state from proceeding to collect such taxes, upon an allegation that the statute imposing the same was discriminative and invalid under the laws of the United States as applied to national bank shares, where it was not alleged that any action was threatened or contemplated against the bank itself, since in suits against the stockholders under the later act they had full opportunity to make any defence, and neither they nor the bank in their behalf had any ground for injunction. People's National Bank of Lynchburg v. Marye, 7 Va. Law Reg. 47.

Digitized by Google

The jurisdiction of equity on the ground of preventing a multiplicity of suits, can be invoked only where such suits will be against the same person, and a bank cannot maintain a suit on that ground to enjoin separate suits against its stockholders for the collection of taxes levied upon their shares. People's National Bank of Lynchburg v. Marye, 7 Va. Law Reg. 47.

Where a statute providing for the taxation of bank shares imposes duties and liabilities on the bank, as by requiring it to withhold dividends from its stockholders and apply the same to the payment of the taxes on their stock, and subjecting it to heavy penalties for a failure to comply with such requirements, it may maintain a suit in equity on behalf of its stockholders to test the validity of such statute and to enjoin its enforcement if found invalid. People's National Bank of Lynchburg v. Marye, 7 Va. Law Reg. 47.

Bill to Remove Application to Purchase Delinquent Tax Lands.—Where an application was filed with the county clerk for the purchase of certain lands sold to the state for delinquent taxes, a mandamus to compel the dismissal of the application for insufficiency was not an adequate and complete remedy for the owner of such lands since any delay in granting the writ might allow the conveyance of the lands, and thus render the writ ineffectual; hence a bill to enjoin the conveyance would not fail because of the existence of such remedy. Baker v. Briggs, 99 Va. —, 38 S. E. Rep. 277.

Parties.—A bill by taxpayers to enjoin the collection of illegal taxes should be filed in behalf of the plaintiffs and all others similarly situated, as such averment is essential to a complete determination of the rights affected by the suit. Doonan v. Board of Education, 9 W. Va. 246.

In a bill filed to restrain the collection of taxes for school purposes, in a certain township, the plaintiff must aver that he sues, not only on his own behalf, but also on behalf of all others similarly situated. Such averment is essential to a complete determination of all the rights affected by the suit. McClung v. Livesay, 7 W. Va. 329; Williams v. County Court, 26 W. Va. 488.

A bill to restrain a town and its sergeant from collecting from the plaintiff's employer the amount of a road tax which it is alleged the sergeant had threatened to do, though not authorized by any ordinance or general law, and to restrain the employer from paying the tax and deducting the amount from the plaintiff's wages, cannot be maintained against the town, as it shows that the town had not authorized the collection; nor against the employer, because as against him the plaintiffs have a remedy at law, though they alleged that to assert their rights would cause their discharge. Buffalo v. Town of Pocahontas, 85 Va. 222, 7 S. E. Rep. 338.

A bill to enjoin the collection in a certain district of a tax assessed by the county court on all dog owners in the county, on the ground that the assessment was illegal and the act under which it was made unconstitutional, brought by several owners of dogs in the said district, for themselves and all other dog owners in that district, against the county court, county sheriff, and district constable, was held to be properly dismissed, being maintainable, if at all, only to prevent a multiplicity of suits, for which purpose it should have been brought by one or more in behalf of all dog owners in the county, and against all district constables. Williams v. Grant Co. Court, 26 W. Va. 488, 53 Am. Rep. 94.

I. AGAINST RAILROAD COMPANIES.—It is not competent for a chancery court to award an injunction to stay the proceedings of a company in the prosecution of its works of any kind, unless it be manifest both that it is transcending the authority given by its charter, and that the interposition of the court is necessary to prevent injury that cannot be adequately compensated in damages. The two circumstances must concur to warrant a court in awarding such process. N. & W. R. Co. v. Smoot, 81 Va. 495; Supervisors of Culpeper v. Gorrell, 20 Gratt. 484; James River & Kanawha Co. v. Anderson, 12 Leigh 283; Tuckahoe Canal Co. v. Tuckahoe, etc., R. Co., 11 Leigh 42.

Construction of Railroads.—An injunction will not lie in favor of a canal company to restrain a railroad company from constructing its road across the canal, and where the railroad company does not thereby transcend its authority, the injury to the canal company may be adequately compensated in damages. Tuckahoe Canal Co. v. Tuckahoe, etc., R. Co., 11 Leigh 42.

Same—Damage to Property—Compensation.—Although a bill for an injunction contains an averment that the defendant, by cutting a channel through the plaintiff's land, when he had granted the defendant the right to construct its railroad through his land, would divert the water of a creek from his mill, and would work to him irreparable damage, yet if there is no averment that the defendant is insolvent, or that its officers, agents or servants are transcending their authority, or that any damage which may be done to the property cannot be adequately compensated in damages, the injunction must be refused. C. & O. R. Co. v. Bobbett, 5 W. Va. 138.

Where a property owner is estopped by his acquiescence from claiming damages against a railroad company for excavating a tunnel on his land, an action for such damages may be restrained in equity. N. & W. R. Co. v. Perdue, 40 W. Va. 442, 21 S. E. Rep. 755.

An adjoining property owner cannot restrain the construction of a street railway until the damage to his property is ascertained and paid for, unless the injury is so great as to amount to a virtual taking of the property. Watson v. Fairmont & Suburban Ry. Co. (W. Va.), 39 S. E. Rep. 193.

Digitized by Google

The distinction between mere damage to property by an internal improvement company in the construction of its work, and the actual appropriation or taking of the same, is to be observed and insisted upon where an injunction is prayed for by the owner. Ohio River R. Co. v. Ward, 35 W. Va. 481, 14 S. E. Rep. 142.

In a suit by the owner of city property to enjoin an internal improvement company from irreparably injuring property or actually appropriating it under the power of eminent domain delegated to such company by the city, where the court directs an issue of quantum damnificatus, the question of title is not ordinarily involved, and the jury should assess the value of the fee where the property is taken, or the amount of damage thereto, where the property is only damaged. Ohio River R. Co. v. Ward, 35 W. Va. 481, 14 S. E. Rep. 142.

Where a railroad company neglects and refuses to pay the damages properly assessed against it for the right of way over the plaintiff's land, and proceeds to construct its road over the plaintiff's premises, or continues to operate its road over the land in question, an injunction will be allowed until payment has been made of the damages assessed. High on Injunctions (2d Ed.) 409; Freshwater v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co., 6 W. Va. 503.

Under the West Virginia statute, an injunction will not lie at the suit of a property owner to restrain the operation of a railroad company charged with having entered upon and taken possession of the complainant's land without authority, where it is not averred that the railroad company was, at the time of filing the bill, transcending its authority or about to do so, or that it was insolvent or about to do an injury to the complainant's property which could not be compensated in damages. C. & O. R. Co. v. Patton, 5 W. Va. 234. See also, C. & O. R. Co. v. Bobbett, 5 W. Va. 138.

A railroad company claiming adverse right and title to a right of way lawfully in the possession of a rival company by virtue of condemnatory proceedings, cannot enjoin the latter company from proceeding to construct its road until just compensation is paid to the former company. But the disputed right and title must first be settled at law. Kanawha, etc., R. Co. v. Glen Jean, etc., R. Co., 45 W. Va. 119, 30 S. E. Rep. 86.

Although the plaintiffs can establish that they are entitled to compensation, that the injury they complain of is such that it cannot be adequately compensated in damages, and that it is therefore proper for a court of equity to grant the relief to which they may appear to be entitled, yet it is not proper for the court, pending the enquiry into their right to compensation, and before its assessment by law, to interfere by injunction, or otherwise, to stay the proceedings of the defendant railroad company, in laying or using the tracks on the land in respect to which the injury is alleged to be done or threatened, unless it be "manifest" that the company is transcending its authority, and that the interposition of the court is necessary to prevent injury that cannot be adequately compensated in damages. N. & W. R. Co. v. Smoot, 81 Va. 495.

Same—Railroad in Street—Rights of Abutting Property Owners.—Where a company by consent of a town council is building its road through the streets of a town, and the owner of an adjoining lot seeks an injunction till a court of equity can ascertain the damages he will sustain, giving as a reason for such injunction that the court of common law will furnish no adequate remedy, as the plaintiff would have to bring repeated suits to recover for the damages he might sustain, as he would recover in any one suit only the damages which he might have sustained prior to the institution of such suit, and on its termination would have to bring a like suit for his damages subsequently sustained, and so on for an indefinite period, this reason furnishes no ground for the interposition of a court of equity, as all damages of a permanent character may be recovered in such case in the first suit at law; and there is not only no necessity for such repeated suits at law, but after such first suit, in which the entire damages are recovered, no second suit could be brought, except to recover damages which did not necessarily result from the building and proper use by the company of its track in such street. A second suit could only be brought for the careless running of cars in such street, or for other wrongs done by the company, not including the injury necessarily resulting from the running of its cars in such street, which is the right of the company. Smith v. Point Pleasant & O. R. R. Co., 23 W. Va. 451, 20 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 160.

Where a street-railway company is authorized to construct its line through a city, and is proceeding to lay its track, an abutting property owner cannot enjoin such act unless under the ordinary principles of equity, he has ground for relief. Watson v. Fairmont & Suburban Ry. Co. (W. Va.), 39 S. E. Rep. 193.

In a suit by the owner of a livery stable opening on a street to enjoin a railroad company from constructing its road along such street under authority granted by the city, the bill alleged that, if the defendant were allowed to construct its road as proposed, it would not only deprive the complainant of his easement in the street, but would render his building almost useless as a livery stable on account of the combustible matter necessarily stored therein, which would easily be ignited by sparks from some passing engine; that the running of trains would frighten the horses kept in the stable, and would prevent his driving teams out of the door opening on the street: and that his stable would be thereby rendered entirely worthless, since no one would come there to hire horses. Held, that the granting of the preliminary injunction was warranted by the bill, as it showed not merely a damage to the complainant's property, but an injury wholly destroying its value. Ohio River R. Co. v. Ward, 35 W. Va. 481, 14 S. E. Rep. 142. See also, Ohio River R. Co. v. Gibbens, 35 W. Va. 57, 12 S. E. Rep. 1093.

An injunction will not lie in favor of the owner of a lot abutting on a street, through which a railroad company is laying its track, on the ground that his damages are not ascertainable in one action at law. Smith v. Railroad Co., 23 W. Va. 451.

The owners of lots and lands adjoining a road along which a railroad is constructed, whether they own the fee in the ground occupied by the road or not, cannot enjoin the railroad company from constructing its railroad along the road in the manner required by the statute, unless the injury therefrom will entirely destroy the value of the property, and thereby be equivalent to a taking of it by the railroad company. Yates v. Town of West Grafton, 34 W. Va. 783, 12 S. E. Rep. 1075; Arbenz v. Wheeling, etc., R. Co., 33 W. Va. 1, 10 S. E. Rep. 14.

Under the West Virginia statute authorizing a railroad company, with the assent of the municipal authorities, to construct and operate its road along the public street of a city, the abutting lot owner cannot enjoin the railroad company from building a trestle in the street as an approach to a bridge, unless his injury therefrom will be such as to completely destroy the value of his property, and thus be equivalent to an actual taking of it by the railroad company. Ohio River R. Co. v. Gibbens, 35 W. Va. 57, 12 S. E. Rep. 1093.

Digitized by Google

Same—Same—Road within 60 Feet of House.—Although Va. Code 1887, § 1072, forbidding the invasion by a railroad of any dwelling house or space within 60 feet of one, is impliedly repealed by Va. Code 1887, § 1093, which provides that, in case any lot or street or alley shall be impaired in value, such company shall, before crossing or occupying such street or alley, compensate the owner thereof, the occupation of a street by a railroad company within 60 feet of a dwelling house will be enjoined where compensation has not first been made to the owner. Hodges v. Seaboard, etc., R. Co., 88 Va. 653, 14 S. E. Rep. 380.

Same—Same—Duty to Repair Street.—Where a railroad company constructs its road along a street, under a license from the city, but also under an ordinance and the general laws of the state, requiring it to restore the streets to a passable condition and to make crossings, a failure on the part of the railroad to fulfil these obligations is a nuisance which equity will abate by a mandatory injunction. City of Moundsville v. Ohio R. Co., 37 W. Va. 92, 16 S. E. Rep. 514.

Operation and Management of Railroads.—An injunction will lie to prevent the lessee of a railroad from ceasing to operate it during the lease, when his contract compels him to maintain and operate the road during the whole term of the lease. The remedy at law to recover damages for the breach of the contract is neither complete nor adequate. Southern Ry. Co. v. Franklin, etc., R. Co., 96 Va. 693, 32 S. E. Rep. 485, 44 L. R. A. 297.

Upon enjoining the lessee of a railroad from abandoning its operation, the court should not dismiss the suit from the docket, but should retain it during the term of the lease for the purpose of making such additional orders as circumstances may require. Southern Ry. Co. v. Franklin, etc., R. Co., 96 Va. 693, 32 S. E. Rep. 485, 44 L. R. A. 297.

Although a stockholder in a corporation may enjoin it from employing the property or powers of the corporation for a purpose wholly or materially different from that which was designed by the act of incorporation, yet he has no right to enjoin it from doing what is in direct furtherance of the object of its creation, and is for the benefit of all the stockholders as such; though it may be injurious to such stockholder in another character; or the interest of some other person or the public may be injuriously affected by the work about to be executed. Baltimore & Ohio R. Co. v. City of Wheeling, 13 Gratt. 40.

Same—Appointment of Receiver.—Though a court of equity should properly, under the circumstances, appoint a receiver to take charge of and manage a railroad, it should not enjoin the directors of the company from doing any act as such, where such order is not necessary to accomplish the object of the principal order. Stevens v. Davison, 18 Gratt. 819, 98 Am. Dec. 692.

Same—Consolidation with Other Companies.—A court of equity will not grant a preliminary injunction, on the application of a minority stockholder in a railroad company to restrain the majority from consolidating the company with others, or from taking measures to that end, in anticipation of the passage of a law by a state legislature which will authorize such consolidation, where it is alleged and admitted that under existing laws it cannot legally be effected. Ryan v. Williams (Va.), 100 Fed. Rep. 172.

J. AGAINST PUBLIC OFFICERS.

Against Sheriff.—Where a defaulting, insolvent ex-sheriff, with the proceeds of taxes collected by him, has taken up a large number of county orders, and, instead of having them credited as payments on his arrearage, is selling them to third persons, an injunction will lie at the suit of his sureties to compel the application of such orders to their relief. Maxwell v. Miller, 38 W. Va. 261, 18 S. E. Rep. 449.

Where a sheriff neglects to return an execution at the request of the plaintiff, he is not liable to a fine, and a judgment for such fine may be enjoined; and though the answer denies such request, yet the testimony of one witness proving it is sufficiently corroborated by the fact that the plaintiff has rested for three years without complaint that the execution had not been returned. Goodall v. Bullock, Wythe 328.

A sheriff may file a bill of interpleader to settle the rights of property, taken in execution, to which there are conflicting claims, but an injunction will not be awarded to stay a suit against him in case of his selling the property; because the law provides him an ample remedy. Storrs v. Payne, 4 H. & M. 506.

The plaintiff at law recovered, by successive judgments, many fines against a sheriff for failing to return one execution, to a greater amount in all than the execution itself, with his extra costs added thereto. It appeared that the execution was lost and therefore could not have been returned, that the sheriff's failure to make defence at law to any of the judgments after the first was due to ignorance of the true construction of the act of assembly, and that in relation thereto there was a general delusion among the citizens of the commonwealth. Held, that equity would enjoin any further recovery against him on account of his failure to return such execution, although it appeared that he had received and applied to his own use a part, if not all, of the money upon the execution. Tomkies v. Downman, 6 Munf. 557.

Against Commissioner of County Court.—Equity has no jurisdiction to enjoin commissioners of a county court from certifying to the governor the result of their canvass of the vote in their county for a representative in the congress of the United States. Alderson v. Commissioners, 32 W. Va. 640, 9 S. E. Rep. 868.

Nor will an appeal from a decree in a suit in equity bring up for review an order discharging a rule to show cause why the party shall not be punished for contempt in disobeying an order of injunction made in such suit. Alderson v. Commissioners, 32 W. Va. 640, 9 S. E. Rep. 868.

Against Commissioner of School Lands.—An injunction will not lie to restrain a commissioner of school lands from selling, for the benefit of the school fund, delinquent lands purchased in by the state, at the instance of one claiming to hold a superior title to the lands. Moore v. M'Nutt, 41 W. Va. 695, 24 S. E. Rep. 682.

Digitized by Google

Against Secretary of State.—A court of equity has no jurisdiction to enjoin the secretary of the state from delivering to the speaker of the house of delegates the sealed returns of an election for governor, properly transmitted to him, and such injunction, if granted, will be treated as a nullity. Fleming v. Guthrie, 32 W. Va. 1, 9 S. E. Rep. 23, 25 Am. St. Rep. 792, 3 L. R. A. 53.

Against Auditor of State.—Although the state of West Virginia cannot be sued, an injunction will lie against the auditor of the state to restrain him from the performance of a mere ministerial duty. C. & O. R. Co. v. Miller, 19 W. Va. 408.

Against Commissioner of Agriculture.—A court of equity has jurisdiction to enjoin illegal acts of an officer attempted colore officii; a suit against an officer not being necessarily a suit against the state. Hence, an injunction will lie to restrain the commissioner of agriculture from doing unlawful acts under color of his office. Blanton v. Southern, etc., Co., 77 Va. 335.

Against Overseer of Poor.—The rector of the Protestant Episcopal Church of a certain parish, insisting that the glebe land of such parish was a private donation to the church made before the Revolution and so reserved to the church within the exception of the statute of 1802 for the resumption of glebe lands, and therefore claiming the legal estate in the glebe land, filed a bill in chancery praying an injunction to inhibit the overseers of the poor of the county from selling the same under the general provisions of the statute. Held, that the court of chancery has no jurisdiction of such case. Overseers of Poor of Henrico v. Hart, 3 Leigh 1. See Va. Code 1887, §§ 1419, 1421, 1447. But where the church shows a good title, a court of equity has jurisdiction, and may award an injunction to prevent the sale of glebe lands. Turpin v. Locket, 6 Call 113.

Will Not Lie to Determine Title to Office.—A court of chancery has no jurisdiction to determine the title of an officer to his office, where the same has been determined by competent authority, from whose judgment there can be no appeal. Johnson v. Barham, 99 Va. —, 38 S. E. Rep. 136.

Where title to office is the point in controversy, the remedy is not by injunction, but at law, by information in the nature of quo warranto. Kilpatrick v. Smith, 77 Va. 347. See Dryden v. Swinburn, 15 W. Va. 234.

K. IN MATTERS PERTAINING TO CONTRACTS.—As a general rule equity has no jurisdiction to prevent by injunction the violation of a merely personal contract, unless such contract be of that class or character capable of being enforced by specific performance. The test of the exercise of such jurisdiction in equity in any case is the inadequacy of remedy in a court of law. Shepherd v. Groff, 34 W. Va. 123, 11 S. E. Rep. 997.

The plaintiff engaged the defendants to construct a macadam road on a public county road, reserving to himself the right to cancel the contract if for any reason the work done under it was not satisfactory. Held, that the plaintiff, having notified the defendants to discontinue the work because of noncompliance with the contract, was not entitled to an injunction against the further prosecution of the work by the defendants, there being an adequate remedy at law. Shepherd v. Groff, 34 W. Va. 123, 11 S. E. Rep. 997.

Where a person covenants to make a good title to certain lots of land, including the use and enjoyment of certain streets, he will be enjoined, at the suit of the covenantee, from obstructing such streets. Brooke v. Barton, 6 Munf. 306.

An injunction will not be awarded to suspend the execution of a contract until an issue relative to a tort may be tried. Harris v. Magee, 3 Call 502.

Where a party applies to a court of equity to prevent the issuing of the patent, or an assignment of a survey, and alleges a fraud committed by the defendant in forging an agreement between him and the complainant, the court of equity has jurisdiction to grant an injunction without the party's first resorting to a caveat. Lyne v. Jackson, 1 Rand. 114.

Where a plaintiff has brought the defendant into equity by an injunction claiming property, and the defendant has answered, and the case has been submitted to the court upon full proofs on the issue thus obtained, and the defendant has established an equitable demand against the plaintiff, there is no reason why the court should stop the dissolution of the injunction. On the contrary, it is competent and proper for the court to dispose of the whole case and adjust completely the respective rights and obligations of the parties as established by the proofs before it. Smyth v. Sutton, 24 Gratt. 191.

Usurious Contracts.—See monographic note on "Usury" appended to Coffman v. Miller, 26 Gratt. 698. See also, High on Injunctions (2d Ed.) 731.

L. IN MATTERS PERTAINING TO NEGOTIABLE NOTES.—In a suit by the maker against the payee and assignee of negotiable notes to enjoin them from collecting the same on the ground of an equity affecting the payee only, he being guilty of a fraud against the maker, the court, having before it all the parties concerned, ought not to discharge the maker altogether, nor to turn over the assignee to a suit at law against the assignor, but should decree against the assignor, in the first instance, that he pay the amount of the note to the assignee, and the costs at law, and liberty should be reserved to the assignee to apply to the court to dissolve the injunction as to the maker for so much of the debt as he may not be able to recover from the assignor, in which case a decree ought also to be rendered in favor of the maker against the assignor (the payee) for so much thereof as he may be compelled to pay; and the decree should further direct that the action at law by the assignee against the assignor, if any be pending, be perpetually enjoined, except as to the costs. McNiel v. Baird, 6 Munf. 316.

Where a third endorser endorsed a note on the faith of the solvency of a prior endorser, and, on a renewal of the note, the order of the endorsements was changed without the consent of the third endorser, who, for the convenience of renewing the note, had left his blank endorsement with the makers, equity will relieve him as against the endorser who should have preceded him. Slagle v. Rust, 4 Gratt. 274.

For nonpayment at maturity, a note was protested and suit brought on it. The maker made a partial payment and the payment of the balance was extended to a given day. Upon failure of payment at such time, suit was again brought. The endorser, a nonresident, was induced to accept service of process, without information of the partial payment and extension of time, and judgment was obtained. Afterwards, with knowledge of the partial payment, but in ignorance of the extension of time, the endorser executed a deed of trust to secure the balance. The property was advertised for sale under said deed. Held, that the endorser was entitled to have the sale enjoined. Dey v. Martin, 78 Va. 1.

Digitized by Google

A grantee who has been defrauded by his grantor may come into a court of equity, and, upon a charge that his grantor is insolvent, and has transferred without consideration his unpaid negotiable purchase-money notes to a third person, for the purpose of defrauding the grantee, may enjoin such third person from assigning or transferring the notes, and have the same cancelled so far as necessary to protect such grantee. Dickenson v. Bankers' Loan, etc., Co., 93 Va. 498, 25 S. E. Rep. 548.

A court of equity will interpose by injunction to relieve against a judgment on a note against the maker, where a written contract, without which the maker could not make his defence at law, has been lost. Vathir v. Zane, 6 Gratt. 246.

M. IN MATTERS PERTAINING TO EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.—In a suit upon an administration bond for the benefit of distributees, two of whom were the administrators, judgment was rendered against the executors of the security only, for the amount of the inventory. On a bill in equity to injoin this judgment, it appearing by an ex parte settlement in a county court, that a considerable part of the estate had been bona fide disbursed by that administrator, and partly, to some of the distributees, relief was given, though no defence had been made at law. Wall v. Gressom, 4 Munf. 110.

Where a judgment has been obtained against an executor who, from the perplexed state of the assets, and other causes, was unable to plead at law, a court of equity will afford relief. Pickett v. Stewart, 1 Rand. 478. See Pendleton v. Stuart, 6 Munf. 377.

An executor, against whom judgments have been obtained at law, may be relieved in equity upon showing that assets sufficient to pay all the debts of the estate came into his hands, but that a large portion of them had been since recovered by a paramount title. Royall v. Johnson, 1 Rand. 421.

An executor brought suit on certain notes of his testate, to which the defendant pleaded credits for certain payments in accordance with a written contract between himself and the deceased for the board of the deceased and for the goods furnished him, and that his claim as residuary legatee be a set-off. Held, that there was no reason for equitable interference by injunction. Miller v. Miller, 25 W. Va. 496.

Where a surviving partner qualifies as administrator with the will annexed and resorts to equity to establish and enforce claims against his testator's estate and to set aside conveyances made by him, he places his whole trust and authority under the control of the court, and will be restrained by injunction from proceeding to sell the real estate before there is an adjudication of the matters in controversy between himself and the devisee and legatee. Watson v. Fletcher, 7 Gratt. 1.

A testator by his will directed that his farm should be kept for five years, or longer if his executor thought proper, and cultivated by his widow for the support of his family, at the end of which time the executor was vested with power to sell the farm, and as each child arrived at the age of twenty-one years he should have his share of the estate. The widow lived on the farm and cultivated it for five years, and the oldest child was within a few months of being twenty-one years old, and then the executor offered the land for sale. Held, that if it was the positive duty of the executor to sell the land in time to pay the oldest child his share of the estate, the executor acting in good faith, and being of opinion that the interests of the family required the sale, and that opinion not being disproved by the evidence it would be an uncalled for and improper exercise of power in a chancellor to interfere and substitute his discretion in the place of that of the executor. Dixon v. McCue, 14 Gratt. 540.

An injunction in favor of an administrator, on the ground of a deficiency of assets, should not be made perpetual, but only until assets shall come to his hands, reserving to the creditor liberty to show such assets by a scire facias at law. Haydon v. Goode, 4 H. & M. 460.

A testator bequeathed slaves to his son for life, the remainder to his son's children. The executor, being apprehensive that the son would sell the slaves to persons who would carry them out of the state, applied to a court of equity to restrain him from so doing, and to compel him to give security that the property should be forthcoming at his death for the legatees in remainder, the executor alleging that he had never assented to the legacy, and the legatee for life alleging that he had assented thereto. Held, that if the executor had not assented to the legacy, he had a plain remedy at law to recover the subject, and if he had assented to it to the legatee for life, that assent enured to the benefit of the legatees in remainder, and though they might ask the aid of the court to secure the subject to them in remainder, the executor could not do so. Bishop v. Bishop, 2 Leigh 484.

N. TO RESTRAIN EXERCISE OF POWER BY COMMITTEE OF INSANE PERSON.—Although the appointment of a committee for an insane person is made without notice, and is therefore void, an injunction will not lie to restrain the exercise of powers under such appointment, as there is an adequate remedy at law. Lance v. McCoy, 34 W. Va. 416, 12 S. E. Rep. 728.

O. IN MATTERS PERTAINING TO WIFE'S PROPERTY RIGHTS.—The equitable separate estate of a married woman is the creature of a court of equity, and, notwithstanding the provision of section 2999 of the Code, an injunction will always be granted when necessary to protect, aid, or enforce any equitable estate or interest which she may have. Courts of equity having once acquired jurisdiction never lose it because jurisdiction of the same matters is given to courts of law, unless the statute conferring such jurisdiction uses prohibitory or restrictive words. Filler v. Tyler, 91 Va. 458, 22 S. E. Rep. 235.

Where a party has actual notice of an order of injunction, although it may not have been yet served, or be defectively served upon him, the order becomes operative on him from that time. Such an order is a sufficient incipient sequestration of the visible personal separate estate of a married woman, such estate then being specifically proceeded against by her creditor by bill in equity. A purchaser of such property at a sale made under a deed of trust, with knowledge of the order of injunction, acquires thereby only such right, as against the plaintiff in the suit, as the equity of the trust creditors may, on hearing the cause, be held to confer. Osborn v. Glasscock, 39 W. Va. 749, 20 S. E. Rep. 702.

Digitized by Google

Sums decreed to be paid as alimony should be charged upon the lands of the husband, but it is error to enjoin him from disposing of or encumbering his real estate, unless the facts of the particular case show it to be necessary or proper. Trimble v. Trimble, 97 Va. 217, 33 S. E. Rep. 531.

P. IN PARTNERSHIP MATTERS.—Where an insolvent member of a firm, without the consent or knowledge of his partner, wrongfully obtains a bank certificate in his individual name for partnership funds and transfers it to a foreign bank, equity will enjoin the application of such funds to the payment of such certificate until the partnership can be settled in a suit for that purpose. Grobe v. Roup, 44 W. Va. 197, 28 S. E. Rep. 699.

A court of equity may restrain one partner from persisting in a course jeopardizing the rights of another or depriving him of his due share in the direction of the business. Tillar v. Cook, 77 Va. 477.

Q. IN MATTERS PERTAINING TO CREDITORS.—A creditor of retail store keepers purchased their stock of goods, obtained credit for his debt and assumed certain of their debts. Wholesale merchants, with only personal demands against the storekeepers, obtained an injunction and had a receiver appointed to take charge of the goods and sell the same. There was no evidence of fraudulent intent. Held, that it was error for the injunction to be granted and the receiver appointed. Rorrer v. Guggenheimer, 87 Va. 533, 12 S. E. Rep. 1054.

Process in a foreign attachment was served upon a garnishee having property of the absent debtor in his hands. Afterwards, other creditors sued out attachments at law against the same party as an absconding debtor, which were served upon the same garnishee. Before the foreign attachment was ready for hearing, they obtained judgments and an order for the sale of the property in the hands of the garnishee. Held, that the plaintiff in the foreign attachment may amend his bill and enjoin the sale. Moore v. Holt, 10 Gratt. 284.

A judgment debtor obtained advances from his millers to pay off judgments against himself, upon which executions had issued, and the millers took an assignment of one of the judgments to themselves. These advances were obtained on the debtor's crop of wheat, to be afterwards delivered. The millers subsequently made further advances of money and produce to the debtor on the same account. After the wheat was delivered to the debtor, and before any settlement of the accounts between them, the millers sued out execution on the judgment assigned to them against the debtor. Held, that an injunction lies to restrain the execution of the judgment until a settlement of the account between the debtor and his millers can be had before a commissioner, and upon such account being returned, the injunction should be dissolved in whole or in part, or perpetuated, according to the result of such account. Isler v. Willis, 1 Pat. & H. 43.

A court of equity will not restrain a creditor from enforcing the payment of a debt for which he has obtained a decree, or which the debtor admits to be just and due, until the creditor has acknowledged in writing his liability in another and wholly different transaction, or furnished to the debtor written evidence of it. Solenberger v. Herr (Va.), 27 S. E. Rep. 839.

A creditor cannot obtain an injunction to restrain his debtor from disposing of his property until he has first proceeded as far as he can at law. To enjoin his creditor from disposing of real property, he must have obtained a judgment at law: to enjoin him from disposing of personal property, he must have obtained a judgment and execution. Rhodes v. Cousins, 6 Rand. 187.

Where, pending an injunction to a judgment at law, the plaintiff in equity pays a part of the judgment debt, the injunction should be perpetuated as to the sum so paid. Tapp v. Beverley, 1 Leigh 80.

It is error to grant an injunction against the collection of a whole debt, where the debtor sets up a defence to a specified part only; the injunction should be allowed only as to the part specified. Hutchinson v. Landcraft, 4 W. Va. 312.

R. TO PREVENT OR REMOVE CLOUD ON TITLE.—Equity will interfere in advance, by injunction, to prevent a cloud from being cast on title, upon the same principles on which it will remove a cloud already resting on such title. Moore v. McNutt, 41 W. Va. 695, 24 S. E. Rep. 682.

See supra, title, "Against Taxes"; infra, title, "Against Collection of Purchase Money on Failure of Title."

S. AGAINST SALES UNDER TRUSTS.—Where personal property is conveyed by a deed of trust, and a claim is set up by a third person, a court of equity ought not to enjoin a sale under the deed, but should leave the party to his remedy at law. Poage v. Bell, 3 Rand. 586.

An injunction will not lie to prevent the sale by a trustee of a tract of land conveyed by a deed of trust, where the title to the land offered for sale and the debt for which it is about to be sold are both undisputed, merely because the debtor claims that he is entitled to a conveyance from the creditor of a parcel of land adjoining. To entitle him to an injunction in such case he must further allege that the land offered for sale will not bring a fair price unless sold in connection with the parcel of land adjoining, claimed by him, and also that he is unable to pay the debt and thus prevent the sale. Shonk v. Knight, 12 W. Va. 667.

A court of equity will grant an injunction to protect the interest of the purchaser at a foreclosure sale before it has been confirmed, as against an execution sued out by the creditors of the mortgagor. Crews v. Pendleton, 1 Leigh 297, 19 Am. Dec. 750.

Where the grantor in a deed of trust conveys all his property to a trustee for the benefit of his creditors with power to sell the same immediately, he will not be permitted to enjoin such sale merely because the amount of his debts, their priorities, and the persons to whom they are due and owing have not been ascertained, the amount to be raised by such sale is uncertain, and the legal title is outstanding in trustees in prior deeds of trust. Sandusky v. Faris (W. Va.), 38 S. E. Rep. 563.

Where an injunction has been awarded to stay a sale under a trust deed until certain accounts have been settled, the court may proceed to full relief and render a personal decree for the balance due from the debtor beyond the sum realized by the sale under the trust deed. Beecher v. Lewis, 84 Va. 630, 6 S. E. Rep. 867.

Equity will enjoin the sale of a portion of the property under a deed of trust, where such sale would render the residue of the property valueless and the circumstances require that the property should be sold as an entirety. Anchor Stove Works v. Gray, 9 W. Va. 469.

Digitized by Google

Advertisement—Advertisement of Whole Property When Only Part to Be Sold.—A court of equity will not enjoin a sale of property under a trust deed on the ground that the trustee has advertised to sell all of the property, while the law authorizes the sale of only so much as is necessary to satisfy the debt secured, the presumption being that the trustee will sell no more than is necessary. Moore v. Barksdale (Va.), 25 S. E. Rep. 529.

Same—Length of Time.—No general rule can be laid down as to the length of time property should be advertised for sale. Ordinarily a direction to "duly advertise" is sufficiently complied with by advertising in accordance with the prevailing custom adopted by prudent men in the management of their own affairs, or by following the rule of courts in relation to sales of like property in the jurisdiction in which the property is situated. Wilson v. Wall, 99 Va. —, 7 Va. Law Reg. 43, disapproving Morriss v. Ins. Co., 90 Va. 370, 18 S. E. Rep. 843.

Failure to Give Grantor Notice No Ground for Injunction.—A court of equity will not enjoin a sale under a trust deed for failure to give the grantor notice, unless it appears that the grantor resides in the county. Walker v. Boggess, 41 W. Va. 588, 23 S. E. Rep. 550.

Unpropitious Time of Sale No Ground for Injunction.—An injunction will not lie to prevent a sale of real estate under the provisions of a deed of trust, on the ground that money is scarce, and that, in consequence of the large cash payment required, a sale at that time will result in great if not irreparable loss to the owner of the property. Muller v. Bayly, 21 Gratt. 521; Caperton v. Landcraft, 3 W. Va. 540.

A trustee is not entitled to an injunction against a sale for cash under Va. Code 1873, ch. 113, § 6, on the ground that the sale will be greatly inequitable, inasmuch as real estate, sold for cash at a time of great financial depression, must be disposed of at an unnecessary sacrifice. Muller v. Stone, 84 Va. 834, 6 S. E. Rep. 223.

Inadequacy of Price No Ground for Injunction.—An injunction will not lie to restrain the conveyance by a trustee of lots sold by him under a trust deed, because of the inadequacy of the price bid, and because the lots were offered together in bulk, where no fraud is shown, and the sale appears to have been open and fair and made in accordance with the terms of the trust deed, and it is not alleged or proved that any one else would have bid more had the lots been offered for sale separately. Old Dominion Inv. Co. v. Moomaw (Va.), 25 S. E. Rep. 540; Lallance v. Fisher, 29 W. Va. 512, 2 S. E. Rep. 775.

Usury as Ground for Injunction.—A trust deed was executed to secure a debt usurious under Va. Code 1873, ch. 137, which, by section 9 thereof, exempts the borrower from paying any interest, and directs all payments to be deducted from the principal. An injunction was awarded to prevent a sale under the trust deed. Held, that by Va. Code 1887, § 4204, the mode of procedure is charged to conform to § 2822, which dispenses with a jury to try the issue of "usury or no usury." Edmunds v. Bruce, 88 Va. 1007, 14 S. E. Rep. 840. See Meem v. Dulaney, 88 Va. 674, 14 S. E. Rep. 363. See also, monographic note on "Usury" appended to Coffman v. Miller, 26 Gratt. 698.

A person borrowing money on an usurious contract procured the bond of a third person which he transferred to his creditor in part payment of the usurious debt, giving his own bond, secured by the deed of trust, to the third person for the same amount. At the instance of the usurious creditor, the obligor in the transferred bond directed a sale of the trust property. Held, that equity will enjoin such sale and restrain the usurious creditor from enforcing the payment of the transferred bond. Cabaness v. Matthews, 2 Gratt. 325.

An injunction to restrain a trustee from selling land under a deed of trust to secure a debt on the ground of usury should be dissolved, so that the creditor may enforce his right under the trust, where it appears that there is no usury in the debt, and no other creditors are interested in the case. Watterson v. Miller, 42 W. Va. 108, 24 S. E. Rep. 578.

Parties.—Where a bill is brought by an administrator to enjoin a sale of real estate under a deed of trust in the nature of a mortgage, on the ground that the indebtedness was paid by the intestate in his lifetime, the heirs are necessary parties, being the owners of the real estate and directly interested in the result of the controversy. Stewart v. Jackson, 8 W. Va. 29.

Dissolution of the Injunction.—Where the allegations of the bill upon which an injunction is obtained, restraining a sale of real estate under a deed of trust in the nature of a mortgage, are fully denied by the defendant's answer, and are not supported by evidence upon the hearing, the injunction should be dissolved. High on Injunctions (2d Ed.) 296; Arbuckle v. McClanahan, 6 W. Va. 101. But where it is necessary to ascertain the amount due from the debtor and for which the sale should be made, it is regarded as premature to dissolve an injunction restraining a sale under a deed of trust, although the grounds upon which it was granted are not maintained, and the injunction should be retained until such amount is ascertained. High on Injunctions (2d Ed.) 296; White v. Mechanics', etc., Ass'n, 23 Gratt. 233.

T. AGAINST COLLECTION OF PURCHASE MONEY ON FAILURE OF TITLE.—"The numerous adjudged cases on this subject will show that this court has gone very far in staying the collection of the purchase money for land upon proof of a defect of the title where no suit is pending, or even threatened. But even here a distinction has always been made between an injunction to a judgment for the purchase money and an injunction to a sale under a deed of trust. In the latter case the court interferes the more readily upon the ground of removing a cloud upon the title, in order to prevent a sacrifice of the property; whereas, in a like case, the court will not interfere with the vendor in enforcing his judgment, since the doubt about the title may eventually turn out to be frivolous and groundless." Rosenberger v. Keller, 33 Gratt. 499.

A court of equity will enjoin a sale under a deed of trust given to secure the purchase money of land, where there is a cloud upon the title which would occasion a sacrifice at such sale. Faulkner v. Davis, 18 Gratt. 651, 98 Am. Dec. 698; Miller v. Argyle, 5 Leigh 460; Gay v. Hancock, 1 Rand. 72; Bryan v. Stump, 8 Gratt. 241.

Where there is a cloud on the title, uncertainty as to the debts secured or the amounts thereof, or a dispute as to priorities, the aid of equity may be invoked by any person interested, to enjoin a sale under the trust deed until such impediments to a fair sale are removed. But unless some such impediments exist, it is not the duty of the trustee, in every case where there are liens on the trust subject, to invoke the aid of equity before making sale in pais. Muller v. Stone, 84 Va. 834, 6 S. E. Rep. 223; Shultz v. Hansbrough, 33 Gratt. 567.

The right of a vendee of land to have an injunction to protect him from the payment of the purchase money, upon proof of an actual outstanding superior title in a third person, is now the established doctrine of our courts; yet his right to such relief must depend upon the equity of his case. Keyton v. Brawford, 5 Leigh 39.

Equity will enjoin the collection of the purchase money of land on the ground of defect of title, where the vendee has taken possession under a conveyance from the vendor, with general warranty, if the title is questioned by a suit either prosecuted or threatened, or if the purchaser can show clearly that the title is defective. Kinports v. Rawson, 29 W. Va. 487, 2 S. E. Rep. 85; Wamsley v. Stalnaker, 24 W. Va. 214; Ralston v. Miller, 3 Rand. 44, 15 Am. Dec. 704.

Where the grantor in a deed conveys land with general warranty, and the grantee assigns to him the bonds of a third person in payment of the purchase money, and the title to a part of the land is afterwards discovered to be clearly defective, the grantee may enjoin the collection of so much of such bonds as will compensate him for the land to which the title is defective. Clarke v. Hardgrove, 7 Gratt. 399.

Where a suit is brought to restrain the collection of the purchase money of land on the ground of defect of title, and that the title is questioned by a suit pending or threatened, the bill must allege the grounds upon which such pending or threatened suit is based, which must be such as would put a reasonable man in just apprehension of the loss of his land. Kinports v. Rawson, 29 W. Va. 487, 2 S. E. Rep. 85.

Where the grantor covenants with the grantee for general warranty of title and that the land "shall not be subject to any liability from incumbrances now thereon," and there are recorded judgment liens on the land at the time of the conveyance, equity will not enjoin the collection of a judgment against the grantee for the purchase money of the land, unless the bill shows that the grantor has no other lands sufficient to satisfy such judgment liens, and that he is pecuniarily unable to pay them. Wamsley v. Stalnaker, 24 W. Va. 214.

Where, by an agreement under seal between the vendor and purchaser of a tract of land, it is covenanted, that if any part thereof should be recovered by law from the purchaser, the vendor will abate or refund in proportion, and that he will not bring suit upon the bond for the purchase money until the quantity of land which the purchaser is to get is ascertained, provided the purchaser prosecutes a suit for the purpose in a reasonable time, a court of equity will enjoin a premature suit on the bond, and if it appears that the purchaser prosecuted his suit in a reasonable time, and could not recover the land, the court will decree that the injunction be perpetuated, that the money paid be refunded, that the bond be surrendered and cancelled and that the contract be rescinded. Bullitt v. Songster, 3 Munf. 54.

A vendor in consideration of a certain price per acre to be paid him by the vendee undertook to procure a third person who was in possession of a tract of land as owner thereof to make a good deed for the same to the vendee with general warranty. The vendor purchased the land from such third party, paid the purchase money, and directed him to make the conveyance to the vendee, which was made accordingly with general warranty. The vendee executed to the vendor his notes for the price agreed upon between them, and took possession of the land, which he held without eviction or disturbance. Held, that equity will not enjoin the vendor from collecting the money due him by the vendee, whatever may be the defects of such third person's title to the land; and, that no eviction or disturbance of the vendee's possession having taken place, defect of title is no ground for his coming into equity against such third person. Long v. Israel, 9 Leigh 556.

A testator devised an undivided moiety of specific lands and mills to the defendant, who in turn sold his interest to the plaintiff, specifying that as soon as the plaintiff paid the purchase price, the defendant would make a good and sufficient deed of conveyance of his interest. The testator left a child born after the will was made. His widow renounced the provision made for her by the will, and her dower was assigned to her principally out of the lands devised to the other children. After the contract between the defendant and the plaintiff was made, the guardian of the infant children asked to have the widow's dower reassigned and the after-born child claimed her share of the estate as pretermitted by the will. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to indemnity against these incumbrances, and to an injunction to restrain the collection of the balance of the purchase money, until the extent of his loss from such incumbrances could be ascertained. Price v. Browning, 4 Gratt. 68.

Where a purchaser of land gives bond and security for the price without getting a good title, he may bind his surety, as well as himself, by waiving such title as he might otherwise have insisted upon as a condition precedent to the payment of the money. If, therefore, he does not appeal from an order dissolving an injunction, which was granted him for the want of title, his surety has no right to another injunction for the same ground. But, in such case, the purchaser, or the surety, having a lien on the land for indemnification, is not precluded from obtaining such conveyance as he can show himself entitled to, notwithstanding the dissolution of the injunction. Ross v. Woodville, 4 Munf. 324.

The obligor in a bond for the purchase price of land gave a new bond therefor to an assignee of the original bond, after several intermediate assignments, and the original bond was canceled, renewal being made in consideration of further indulgence. Upon the institution of an action on a new bond, the obligor brought suit to enjoin the judgment, on the ground of an encumbrance on the property, the purchase of which formed the consideration of the bond, alleging that he was ignorant of the encumbrance at the time of the purchase. It appeared that the encumbrance was a mortgage made by the obligor's brother, who had formerly owned the land, and who had become surety in the new bond, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the obligor, who was clerk of the county court, and it did not appear that the assignee who took the renewal of the bond had any notice of the encumbrance. Held, that the obligor was not entitled to relief in equity. Washington v. Pollard, 5 Gratt. 432.

A negro man was conveyed by deeds of trust to secure debts amounting to more than his value, and the grantor sold him, and the purchaser paid to one of the cestuis que trust part of the purchase money, and executed to the other his obligation for the residue. The grantor made to the purchaser a bill of sale of the negro as a slave, and therein warranted and defended the title to him against the claims of all persons whatsoever. The cestuis que trust did not join in the bill of sale or warranty, but, by the arrangement, their liens on the negro were relinquished to the purchaser, and the payment made by him to one of the cestuis que trust, and the obligation executed by him to the other, discharged the grantor's debt to them pro tanto. It turned out that the negro so purchased was a free man; judgment having been obtained at law against the purchaser upon his obligation, an injunction was awarded him. Held, that the purchaser can have no relief against the cestuis que trust and that the injunction should therefore be dissolved and the bill dismissed. Findlay v. Hickman, 10 Leigh 354.

Digitized by Google

Sales of Hazard.—Where a purchaser of land accepts a conveyance without warranty of title, an injunction will not lie against unpaid purchase money, unless the vendor is guilty of fraud or concealment in regard to the title. Price v. Ayres, 10 Gratt. 575. "Such a purchase may properly be termed a sale of hazard, and it may be laid down as a general rule that in sales of hazard equity will not interpose in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation." High on Injunctions (2d Ed.) 256.

Where a sale of land is made in gross, the contract being one of hazard on both sides, the purchaser is not entitled to relief in equity in case of a deficiency in the amount. Keyton v. Brawford, 5 Leigh 39; Russell v. Keeran, 8 Leigh 9; Farrier v. Reynolds, 88 Va. 141, 13 S. E. Rep. 393. But every sale of real estate, where the quantity is referred to in the contract, is presumed to be a sale by the acre, unless the contract plainly indicates a sale in gross; and this presumption can only be overcome by clear and cogent proof. Boschen v. Jurgens, 92 Va. 756, 24 S. E. Rep. 390. For the rules as to abatement in the purchase money for land on account of deficiency in acreage where the sale is by the acre, see Bart. Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 481; Farrier v. Reynolds, 88 Va. 141, 13 S. E. Rep. 393; Grayson v. Buchanan, 88 Va. 251, 13 S. E. Rep. 457; Morgan v. Brest, 34 W. Va. 232, 12 S. E. Rep. 710; Board v. Wilson, 34 W. Va. 609, 12 S. E. Rep. 778.

Where the purchase is, as to the title, one of hazard, there being no fraud or concealment by the vendor in regard to the title, a judgment for the purchase money will not be enjoined, even though the vendor represented the title as good when it was fatally defective, his representation having been made in good faith. In such case the purchaser, having accepted the land without any agreement express or implied for a conveyance with warranty, is considered as having taken upon himself all risk as to the title, and is therefore debarred from relief in equity. High on Injunctions (2d Ed.) 256; Sutton v. Sutton, 7 Gratt. 234, 56 Am. Dec. 109.

Failure of Vendor to Make Deed According to Contract.—A vendee of real estate under an unwritten contract, who has not paid any part of the purchase money, nor been let into possession, and who has refused to complete the purchase because the vendor has declined to make such a deed as the contract called for, has a full, adequate and complete defence at law to an action against him to recover the purchase money, and will not be entertained in a court of equity to enjoin the prosecution of such action by the vendor. Virginia Mining Co. v. Wilkinson, 92 Va. 98, 22 S. E. Rep. 839.

Deficiency in Quantity of Land.—The jurisdiction of a court of equity to enjoin the collection of the purchase money of land, after conveyance executed, on the ground of a deficiency in quantity, the contract being a sale by the acre, is not now to be questioned. And equity will enjoin the collection of the purchase money on the ground of defect of title, after the vendee has taken possession, under conveyance from the vendor with general warranty, if the title is questioned by a suit either prosecuted or threatened, or if the purchaser can show clearly that the title is defective. Koger v. Kane, 5 Leigh 606. See Boschen v. Jurgens, 92 Va. 756, 24 S. E. Rep. 390.

A bill praying for an injunction to restrain the sale by a trustee of a tract of land conveyed to secure the purchase money alleged "that since the purchase was made, the plaintiff had caused a survey of the land to be made, and instead of there being 1,500 acres as represented, there were only 900 acres," and this was the only allegation in the bill, on the ground of which relief was asked. Held, that the bill did not present sufficient equity, on its face, to justify the interference of a court of equity. Reed v. Patterson, 7 W. Va. 263.

Knowledge of Defect in Title.—Where a vendee is in possession of land under a conveyance with general warranty, and the title has not been questioned by any suit prosecuted or threatened, such vendee has no claim to relief in equity against the payment of the purchase money, unless he can show a defect of title respecting which the vendor was guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation or concealment, and which the vendee had at the time no means of discovering. Beale v. Seiveley, 8 Leigh 658.

A court of equity should enjoin a sale by trustees where the title to the property is disputed and full value could not probably be had for it; even if that fact was known to all the parties to the deed, when executed. Lane v. Tidball, Gilmer 130.

The mere fact that some one has asserted a claim on the land, which is generally known in the community where the land is situated, is insufficient to justify a court of equity in restraining a sale under a trust deed given to secure the purchase money on the land. Kinports v. Rawson, 29 W. Va. 487, 2 S. E. Rep. 85.

Injunctions Not Often Perpetuated.—While the jurisdiction of equity in restraint of the payment of purchase money is freely exercised, a perpetual injunction will rarely be granted, and equity will only extend its protection until the defective title is cured. And where the vendee has obtained an injunction on the ground of defective title, the vendor is entitled to a dissolution on curing the defect by a conveyance of the outstanding title, although there are general allegations in the bill of other outstanding title, such allegations being unsupported by proof. High on Injunctions (2d Ed.) 263; Lovell v. Chilton, 2 W. Va. 410.

Judicial Sales.—Where a purchaser at a judicial sale desires relief on the ground of an alleged defect in title, his remedy is by objecting to the confirmation of the sale, and not by an injunction restraining the collection of the purchase money. Threlkelds v. Campbell, 2 Gratt. 199, 44 Am. Dec. 384.

Recovery Barred by Statute of Limitations.—Where a vendee enters under a title bond and holds the land under that title till the statute of limitations bars a recovery against him by an adverse title, he cannot set up defect of title in his vendor, existing at the date of the sale to him, as a ground of injunction to a judgment for the purchase money. Amick v. Bowyer, 3 W. Va. 7.

Digitized by Google

Not Granted Where Deed Perfecting Title Given.—Equity will not enjoin the enforcement of a trust deed to secure the payment of the purchase money of land on account of an ineffectual deed in the claim of title, where a deed perfecting the title is given. Morgan v. Glendy, 92 Va. 86, 22 S. E. Rep. 854.

Vendor's Failure to Procure Outstanding Title.—Where the vendor contracts to procure a conveyance to the vendee of the title of the other joint owners of the premises, but fails to do so, he may be enjoined from enforcing a judgment upon the vendee's bond for the purchase price, although the vendee himself procures the remainder of the title directly from the other owners. Jaynes v. Brock, 10 Gratt. 211.

Set-Off.—In conformity with the principle that unliquidated damages cannot be urged by way of set-off in proceedings in equity, a bill will not lie to enjoin an unpaid balance of purchase money, where the real object is to obtain damages for an alleged fraud in the transaction. The object of such proceeding being simply to obtain damages, the relief should be sought in a court of law. Robertson v. Hogsheads, 3 Leigh 667; Koger v. Kane, 5 Leigh 606.

U. AGAINST ACTIONS AT LAW.—It is well settled that a court of equity will interfere by injunction either pending an action or after judgment, where there is a distinct defence against the claim asserted at law which is solely cognizable in equity. And it is equally well settled that where a court of equity has acquired jurisdiction for one purpose, it will ordinarily proceed to a final disposition of the case. Penn v. Ingles, 82 Va. 65.

Adjustment of Complicated Accounts.—Where the litigation involves the adjustment of complicated accounts, and the remedy at law is inadequate and a complete defence at law is impossible, equity may enjoin the action at law. 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law 367; Penn v. Ingles, 82 Va. 65; Tillar v. Cook, 77 Va. 477; Staples v. Turner, 29 Gratt. 330.

When Granted to Make Set-Off Available.—A court of equity will not ordinarily enjoin an action at law at the instance of the defendant to enable him to set-off an alleged balance due him on a partnership account, as a settlement may show a balance against him instead of in his favor. But where it is certain that the balance will be in favor of the complainant, though the amount thereof is unascertained, and the debtor partner is insolvent, and the complainant would be otherwise without remedy to get the benefit of his offsets, equity will stay the proceeding at law and afford relief. Commercial Bank v. Cabell, 96 Va. 552, 32 S. E. Rep. 53.

Actions Relating to Real Property.—Where a party obtains a patent for land with knowledge of the prior equitable title in another, and brings a writ of right for the land, a court of equity will award an injunction to stay the proceedings at law for a reasonable time, to afford the tenant an opportunity to get in the legal title to the land outstanding in a third person. Goodwin v. McCluer, 3 Gratt. 291.

Same—Action of Ejectment.—Where the complainants are in possession of real estate they cannot enjoin the defendant, who is out of possession, from prosecuting an action of ejectment against them for the recovery of the premises upon the ground that the deed under which the plaintiff claims is absolutely void, either from want of delivery and acceptance or because obtained by duress or fraud, since, in either event, the defence in the action of ejectment would be complete. Hawkinberry v. Snodgrass, 39 W. Va. 332, 19 S. E. Rep. 418.

The defendant in an action of ejectment cannot maintain a bill in equity to enjoin the plaintiff from proceeding with his suit on the ground that the tax deed under which the plaintiff claims was irregularly obtained, unless such defendant shows some privity with the title which was sold at such delinquent tax sale or that he was for some reason entitled to redeem the land. Hawkinberry v. Snodgrass, 39 W. Va. 332, 19 S. E. Rep. 417.

Same—Action of Unlawful Detainer.—Where a mortgagor was present at a trustee's sale of the property, and bid within $25 of the price for which it was sold, interposed no objection on the ground of insufficiency of notice or otherwise, until more than six months after it was made, and induced two persons who were present for the purpose of bidding on the property to refrain from bidding, the property having sold for a fair price, he cannot enjoin the purchaser from maintaining an action of unlawful detainer. Wilson v. Wall, 99 Va. —, 38 S. E. Rep. 181.

Attachment Suits.—An injunction will lie to protect creditors in a foreign attachment who are entitled to a priority of claim over creditors subsequently attaching. High on Injunctions (2d Ed.) 58; Erskine v. Staley, 12 Leigh 406; Moore v. Holt, 10 Gratt. 284.

To Prevent Multiplicity of Suits.—An injunction to prevent multiplicity of suits is allowed only when the subject-matter of the various litigations, as well as the parties, are substantially the same. And the fact that different suits have been brought, each having a distinct object, founded on distinct and separate grounds, brought by different persons, does not constitute such a multiplicity of suits as to bring the case within the rule and warrant an injunction. Zanhizer v. Hefner (W. Va.), 35 S. E. Rep. 4; High on Injunctions (2d Ed.) 50.

The fact that attachments by four distinct creditors are levied on goods of a common debtor, they having no connection, will not give a third party, claiming the goods, an injunction on the ground of preventing multiplicity of suits. Zanhizer v. Hefner (W. Va.), 35 S. E. Rep. 4.

Necessity of Confessing Judgment in Action at Law.—"We have no statutory provision commanding courts of equity to require, in any case, a confession of judgment as a condition of equitable interference with legal proceeding. The terms upon which injunctions are awarded by courts of equity, except where they are controlled by statutory enactments, are, in each case, a question for the discretion of the chancellor. It is not, however, an arbitrary discretion, but a discretion, as was said by JUDGE BOULDIN in Great Falls Manfg. Co. v. Henry's Adm'r, 25 Gratt. 575, 579, 'to be exercised on well-established principles of equity and law, so as to preserve, as far as practicable, the rights of the party restrained, and at the same time to inflict no wrong on the plaintiff in equity.'" Dudley v. Miner, 93 Va. 408, 25 S. E. Rep. 100.

When a defendant in an action at law files a bill to make his defence in equity and asks for a stay of proceedings in the law court, it is a matter within the discretion of the chancellor in granting the injunction, whether he will or will not require a confession of judgment in the action at law. If such confession be required, it should be made

Digitized by Google

"subject to be dealt with as the court shall direct." Dudley v. Miner, 93 Va. 408, 25 S. E. Rep. 100; Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Henry, 25 Gratt. 575; Parsons v. Snider, 42 W. Va. 517, 26 S. E. Rep. 285.

A defendant in an action at law who has a distinct equitable defence as well as a legal defence should not be required, as the price of coming into equity to enjoin the proceedings at law, to confess judgment at law. In such case it is not safe to require him to confess judgment and it is error to require it, and even in proper cases for such confession, it should not be required unconditionally, but the order requiring such confession should provide that the judgment is to be thereafter dealt with as the court of equity may direct. Dudley v. Miner, 93 Va. 408, 25 S. E. Rep. 100; Thornton v. Thornton, 31 Gratt. 212; Staples v. Turner, 29 Gratt. 330; Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Henry, 25 Gratt. 575; Warwick v. Norvell, 1 Rob. 308; Robinson v. Braiden, 44 W. Va. 183, 28 S. E. Rep. 798; Knott v. Seamands, 25 W. Va. 99; Miller v. Miller, 25 W. Va. 495. See High on Injunctions (2d Ed.) 46; Warwick v. Norvell, 1 Leigh 96.

It is error to require the defendant in an action at law on notes to confess judgment at law as a condition precedent to the continuance of an injunction against the action at law, where he denies all liability on the notes on account of fraud, of which the plaintiff in the action at law had notice at the time they were transferred to him. Dudley v. Miner, 93 Va. 408, 25 S. E. Rep. 100.

Where a defendant at law was required to confess judgment at law before the court would give him equitable relief, he cannot, after a decree against him, have the judgment set aside because of legal defences not made known to the court. Robinson v. Braiden, 44 W. Va. 183, 28 S. E. Rep. 798.

In such case, where an injunction has been granted, and the chancellor dissolves the injunction on account of the refusal of the complainant to confess judgment at law, and there is an appeal from the order, the appellate court will not examine the merits of the case, though, at the time the order was made, the cause stood for hearing. Warwick v. Norvell, 1 Leigh 96.

V. AGAINST JUDGMENTS.

Necessity of Taking Advantage of Remedy at Law.—A court of equity will not entertain a party seeking relief against a judgment which has been rendered against him in a court of law in consequence of his default upon grounds which might have been successfully taken in a court of law, unless some reason founded in fraud, accident, surprise, or some adventitious circumstances beyond the control of the party be shown why the defence was not made in that court. Holland v. Trotter, 22 Gratt. 136; Moore v. Lipscombe, 82 Va. 546; Dey v. Martin, 78 Va. 1; Mason v. Nelson, 11 Leigh 227; Mosby v. Haskins, 4 H. & M. 427; Alford v. Moore, 15 W. Va. 597; Knapp v. Snyder, 15 W. Va. 434; Smith v. McLain, 11 W. Va. 654; Harner v. Price, 17 W. Va. 523; Braden v. Reitzenberger, 18 W. Va. 286; Grafton v. Davisson, 45 W. Va. 12, 29 S. E. Rep. 1028.

Equity will not grant relief on the ground of a defence, which might have been made at law, unless the plaintiff alleges and proves a good excuse for not having used it at law. Chapman v. Harrison, 4 Rand. 336.

Where, in a proceeding by one person against another to recover money which he claims to have paid as the surety for the latter, it was determined that both were principals, and judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for a part of the sum paid, the defendant, having made no defence, cannot obtain relief in equity, although he shows that he was the surety, and the plaintiff in the action at law the principal, unless he alleges and proves sufficient reasons for his failure to defend at law. Turner v. Davis, 7 Leigh 227, 30 Am. Dec. 502. See also, Morgan v. Carson, 7 Leigh 238.

Where a party has been fully heard in a court of law in a case in which the rule is the same in equity as at law, he will not be permitted to go into a court of equity on the same controverted points. Morris v. Ross, 2 H. & M. 408.

After a verdict for the plaintiff in an action sounding in damages, and a refusal by the court of law to grant a new trial, a court of equity ought cautiously to interpose. Meredith v. Johns, 1 H. & M. 585.

Judgment was recovered by the assignee of a bond given for the purchase money of land, the contract for which was rescinded. Held, that the obligor is not entitled to enjoin the judgment as against the assignee, nor should the obligor be permitted to enforce payment to himself by the assignor, until he has paid the judgment to the assignee, or released the assignor from his liability as such to the assignee. Drake v. Lyons, 9 Gratt. 54.

Where a judgment in assumpsit is recovered upon an agreement, the defendant at law cannot resort to equity to set up the defence that there never was a complete contract between the parties. He might have made that defence at law under the general issue. Mackey v. Mackey, 29 Gratt. 158.

In an action of debt, the defendant pleaded a special plea in bar, and the issue joined thereon was found against him, and judgment was rendered for the plaintiff. The defendant then exhibited a bill in chancery, stating, that, though he was unable to prove the matter of his plea on the trial at law, he is now able to prove it, without suggesting fraud accident, mistake, or other circumstances which prevented him from establishing his defence at law and praying relief against the judgment. Held, the court of chancery had no jurisdiction to grant relief in such a case. Norris v. Hume, 2 Leigh 334.

Same—Where Relief at Law Doubtful.—A person returned as appearance bail, who denies that he ever executed the bail bond, is not precluded from obtaining relief in equity by his failing to appear and plead non est factum at law, after being informed that his name was subscribed to such bond for if, in fact, he did not execute the bond, he had regularly no day in court, and was, therefore, not bound to take any step for his relief. In a case where the remedy at law is considered doubtful, when the party applies to a court of equity, it will be too strict to deny him admittance into that court for relief. Spotswood v. Higgenbotham, 6 Munf. 313.

Same—Failure to Endorse Payment on Bond.—A surety applied in equity for relief against a judgment on the ground that a payment was not endorsed on the bond on which the judgment was rendered. Held, that this defence might have been made at law, and is no ground for relief. Harnsbarger v. Kinney, 13 Gratt. 511.

Same—Discovery of Receipt after Judgment. Equity may enjoin a judgment at law on a ground of which the party might have availed himself before the jury, where it appears that moral justice and the hardship of the case requires such relief, as where a receipt or other evidence is discovered after the judgment. Barrett v. Floyd, 3 Call 531.

Digitized by Google

Same—Party Guilty of Laches Not Entitled to Relief.—To entitle one to relief in equity against a judgment at law, it is not sufficient that injustice has been done him, but he must have been guilty of no laches, and have done everything required of him to render effectual his defence at law. Canada v. Barksdale, 84 Va. 742, 6 S. E. Rep. 10; Dey v. Martin, 78 Va. 1; Wallace v. Richmond, 26 Gratt. 67; Slack v. Wood, 9 Gratt. 40; Callaway v. Alexander, 8 Leigh 114, 31 Am. Dec. 640.

It must appear that the omission of the defendant to avail himself of the defence at law was unmixed with any negligence of himself or his agent. This rule is absolutely inflexible and cannot be violated, even when the judgment is manifestly wrong in law or fact, or when the effect of allowing it to stand will be to compel the payment of a debt which the defendant does not owe, or which he owes to a third party. Richmond Enquirer Co. v. Robinson, 24 Gratt. 548; Gentry v. Allen, 32 Gratt. 254; Braden v. Reitzenberger, 18 W. Va. 286.

Where a defendant in an action at law has not used due diligence in applying to a court of equity for a discovery to assist his defence at law, he cannot, after the verdict against him, obtain the aid of a court of equity to stay the proceedings at law, or have a new trial. Green v. Massie, 21 Gratt. 356.

A party who might have pleaded non est factum in an action at law, and who merely wrote to counsel to defend him, is guilty of such neglect as will preclude him from relief in equity. Stanard v. Rogers, 4 H. & M. 438.

Where a decree for the sale of land has remained unexecuted for fourteen years, and an injunction is prayed on the ground that the debt, for which the sale was ordered, has been paid in full, the court should grant a temporary injunction, and refer the cause to a commissioner to ascertain what, if anything, is still due on such debt. Buster v. Holland, 27 W. Va. 510.

A party having obtained an injunction to a judgment at law upon the usual condition of a release of errors, omits to execute the release. Pending the injunction suit, he obtains a supersedeas to the judgment at law, but does not perfect the appeal by giving the security. There are repeated applications by him for a renewal of the supersedeas, which are granted, but he does not perfect the appeal. The injunction is proceeded in and decided against him; and he afterwards, more than ten years from the date of the judgment, asks that he may have a writ of error to the judgment at law, without giving security, except for costs, which is granted. His laches in perfecting his appeal being wilful, deliberate and repeated, and the application for the appeal, having been, under the circumstance, improper, the court of appeals will, upon motion by the appellee, dismiss the appeal. Ross v. Reid, 8 Gratt. 229.

Same—Failure to Appeal.—If a defendant at law be ruled into a trial in the absence of some of his witnesses, to whose materiality he has made affidavit, he may except to the opinion of the court, and proceed to obtain relief in a superior court of common law, but not in chancery. Syme v. Montague, 4 H. & M. 180.

An injunction ought not to be granted on the ground that the plaintiff at law was dead before the judgment was obtained in his name; the remedy in such case is by writ of error coram nobis. Williamson v. Appleberry, 1 H. & M. 206.

Judgments Obtained through Fraud.—Where a defendant, who had an adequate remedy at law, has been prevented from resorting to it by a fraudulent representation or promise of the plaintiff, he is entitled to relief in equity. Poindexter v. Waddy, 6 Munf. 418.

Where the defendant in an action on a promissory note might have successfully pleaded non est factum to the action, but was prevented from doing so by the representation of the plaintiff, an injunction will lie to restrain the enforcement of the judgment. Poindexter v. Waddy, 6 Munf. 418.

A bill for an injunction to a judgment obtained against the plaintiff, on a note executed by him as surety, charged that his principal had induced him to sign the note by fraudulent misrepresentations as to the purpose for which the note was given, and of the plaintiff's liability on account thereof, but did not charge or prove fraud or misrepresentation by the defendant to whom the note was executed. Held, that the bill stated no case for relief. Griffith v. Reynolds, 4 Gratt. 46. See Jameson v. Deshields, 3 Gratt. 4.

The mere fact that the plaintiff sues on a false claim, or one which he knows has been previously adjudged invalid by a competent court, is not such a fraud upon the rights of the defendant as to entitle him to an injunction against the prosecution of such claim. Evans v. Taylor, 28 W. Va. 184.

Where the defendant in an action, on being served with process, applies to his regular attorney to defend him, stating to him his grounds of defence, and is informed by him that he is employed as counsel for the plaintiff, but that he is satisfied with the justice of his defence and will take no judgment against him, and the defendant, relying on such assurances, makes no defence to the action and is not aware of the judgment until after it is rendered, the judgment will be enjoined. Holland v. Trotter, 22 Gratt. 136; Moore v. Lipscombe, 82 Va. 546; Dey v. Martin, 78 Va. 1. See also, Lee v. Baird, 4 H. & M. 453.

A person cannot obtain an injunction against a decree rendered in a cause to which he was a party, on the ground that no process was served on him, where the return of the officer and the recitals of the decree show that the process was served on the defendant, unless the false return of service was procured or induced by the plaintiff, or he can in some way be connected with the deception. Preston v. Kindrick, 94 Va. 760, 27 S. E. Rep. 588.

Same—Relief by Injunction in Case of By-bidding.—A plaintiff, known to have a feeling of attachment for certain slaves that were sold at auction was induced by a by-bidder to bid an exorbitant price for them. One of the defendants, suspecting that some would decline bidding in order to favor the plaintiff, instructed the auctioneer not to let the slaves be sold at a reasonable price. The auctioneer then employed the by-bidder, without any special instructions to do so. Held, that the judgment for the purchase money should be enjoined, and the sale set aside as to the excess of price and an issue directed to ascertain a fair price. Hinde v. Pendleton, Wythe 354.

Judgment Obtained through Accident or Mistake.—A judgment in an action at law on accounts will be enjoined on the ground of a mistake and miscalculation on the part of the jury, ascertained by after-discovered evidence, where such mistake, if discovered in time, would have furnished good ground for a new trial at law. The relief in such case should be by reference to a commissioner to ascertain the real amount due. Rust v. Ware, 6 Gratt. 50.

In reducing to writing a contract for the sale of land and the crops thereon, the undertaking of the vendor to put the vendee in possession of the crops was omitted by mistake, and the vendor did not put the vendee in possession of the crops, which were of the value of $100, as estimated in the contract, but recovered judgment for the whole amount of the purchase money against the vendee. Held, that the vendee was entitled to have the judgment enjoined to the extent of $100. Booth v. Kesler, 6 Gratt. 350.

A court of equity will not relieve against a judgment on the ground that the defendant was prevented from making his defence at law by a mistake of law, although it was a mutual mistake by both parties to the suit. R. & P. R. Co. v. Shippen, 2 P. & H. 327. See also, Meem v. Rucker, 10 Gratt. 506.

The fact that process was served on the wrong person, who makes no defence, but allows judgment to be taken against him by default, and execution having issued, gives a forthcoming bond, will not authorize an injunction. Chisholm v. Anthony, 2 H. & M. 13.

After the dissolution of one injunction, another was granted to the same judgment and made perpetual, upon new matter not known to the complainant before the first was dissolved; it appearing that the contract in question, though not tainted with fraud, was founded upon a mistake in relation to the existence of an important fact, of which both parties were ignorant. Armstrong v. Hickman, 6 Munf. 287.

Same—Loss of Instrument.—The loss at the time judgment was recovered on a note of a written agreement between the maker and the payee of the note, relating to the contract in pursuance of which the note was made, and without which the maker could not establish his defence at law, will authorize an injunction against the judgment. Vathir v. Zane, 6 Gratt. 246.

Judgments Obtained through Ignorance or Surprise.—An injunction will lie to restrain proceedings on a judgment or decree obtained by surprise. Callaway v. Alexander, 8 Leigh 114, 31 Am. Dec. 640. See also, Mann v. Drewry, 5 Leigh 296.

Equity will not enjoin a judgment at law on the ground that the defendant at law failed to make his defence from ignorance of the nature of the proceeding against him, and a misapprehension of what was necessary to charge him. And a mere averment in his bill of the facts constituting his excuse for not defending himself at law is not sufficient; he must prove them. Meem v. Rucker, 10 Gratt. 506. For note on this case, see High on Injunctions (2d Ed.) 142.

Equity will not restrain the collection of a judgment, though the bill states that the complainant was ignorant of facts which would constitute a perfect defence to an action at law against him until after judgment had been recovered, unless it be further stated that the complainant had, before the rendition of the judgment, used due diligence to ascertain the facts necessary to his defence. Slack v. Wood, 9 Gratt. 40.

Where the defendant in an action at law on a promise founded on a gaming consideration is surprised at the trial, and there is a verdict and judgment against him, he may come into equity for relief, though he made no effort to obtain a new trial in the common-law court. White v. Washington, 5 Gratt. 645.

Where a defendant has no knowledge of the existence of an action at law against him until after judgment is obtained, an injunction may be allowed on the ground of surprise. Mosby v. Haskins, 4 H. & M. 427.

Erroneous or Irregular Judgments.—A court of equity will not relieve against a judgment on the ground of error in law only: it must appear that justice requires its interposition, and that the party was prevented from obtaining it by legal forms of pleading, or by some fraud or mistake. Kincaid v. Cuningham, 2 Munf. 1. See also, Picket v. Morris, 2 Wash. 255.

Equity cannot relieve against a judgment at law merely on the ground that it was erroneous, even though the plaintiff at law was not entitled to recover, or not entitled in that form of action, and the judgment was obtained by default. To entitle the defendant at law to relief in equity in such cases, there must be some suggestion of fraud or surprise, or some good reason assigned for the failure to make defence at law. Turpin v. Thomas, 2 H. & M. 139, 3 Am. Dec. 615; Graham v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 45 W. Va. 701, 32 S. E. Rep. 245.

A partner withdrew from a mercantile company and was afterwards erroneously included in a suit against a new company formed by the other partners. Held, that he may be relieved in equity against the judgment therein obtained, upon the ground that one of the company prevented his making defence at law by assuring him that the matter would be adjusted. Lee v. Baird, 4 H. & M. 453.

A person cannot obtain an injunction against a decree rendered in a cause to which he was a party, on the ground that no process was served on him, where the return to the officer and the recitals of the decree show that the process was served on the defendant, unless the false return of service was procured or induced by the plaintiff, or he can in some way be connected with the deception. Preston v. Kindrick, 94 Va. 760, 27 S. E. Rep. 588.

A court of equity will not interfere to give relief to a purchaser under a decree of a court having jurisdiction of the subject, or to his sureties, for errors in the decree, or the proceedings under it, where the report of the commissioners has been confirmed. Worsham v. Hardaway, 5 Gratt. 60.

Where the plaintiff at law recovers more than he is in conscience entitled to, and there is no standard by which a court of equity can ascertain how far the judgment is correct, but only that it is unconscionable to some extent, the judgment will be set aside in toto. McRae v. Woods, 2 Wash. 80.

A court of equity will not interfere in a question purely legal and where the case is precisely the same as that decided by the court of law on the ground that the decision of the court of law was erroneous. Terrell v. Dick, 1 Call 546.

Judgments Obtained through Negligence, Mistake, or Fraud of Attorney.—An injunction will not lie against a judgment at law on account of a mistake of an attorney, it appearing that the defendant was guilty of negligence. Wallace v. Richmond, 26 Gratt. 67. See Ayres v. Morehead, 77 Va. 566.

The errors of counsel as to questions of law can furnish no ground for relief in equity; for the party who takes advice must abide by the consequences of it. Nicolson v. Hancock, 4 H. & M. 491.

An attorney brought a bill to enjoin the collection of a judgment on a note for $572, given by him and others to meet the balance of a protested note on which they were sureties, it appearing that notes for collection had been placed in his hands to enable him to pay off the original note, and that he had collected them and procured the execution of the $572 note, while such sufficient funds were in his hands. Held, that he was not entitled to relief in equity. Thompson v. M. & M. Bank, 3 W. Va. 651.

Digitized by Google

Same—Relief Granted Where Defence Prevented by Assurance of Plaintiff's Counsel.—Where the defendant at law has been prevented from making his defence by the assurance of promises of the plaintiff's counsel, the court will relieve him. Moore v. Lipscombe, 32 Va. 546; Dey v. Martin, 78 Va. 1; Holland v. Trotter, 22 Gratt. 136. See also, Lee v. Baird, 4 H. & M. 453.

Void Judgments or Orders.—A judgment pronounced by a justice, without service of process on the defendant or notice to him is void. But as such judgment may be set aside, even when rendered upon the verdict of a jury, by the circuit court, upon a writ of certiorari, the defendant in the judgment cannot obtain relief against it in a court of equity. Kanawha, etc., Ry. Co. v. Ryan, 31 W. Va. 364, 6 S. E. Rep. 924.

Where the order of the court appointing a trustee in the place of one who has died is not in accordance with the requirements of the statute, and therefore void, a sale made by such trustee should be perpetually enjoined. Pitzer v. Logan, 35 Va. 374, 7 S. E. Rep. 385.

Although the pleadings and proof in a suit by a vendor to subject land to the payment of the purchase price do not authorize a personal decree against the defendant for the deficiency after sale, yet, where the court has jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, the rendition of such personal decree is merely an error for which relief may be had under Va. Code 1887, § 3451, and hence injunction will not lie against such decree. Preston v. Kindrick, 34 Va. 760, 27 S. E. Rep. 588.

Judgments by Default or Confession.—An injunction will not be awarded against a judgment by default upon a summons directed to the sheriff of another county than the one where the action is brought, although the summons was issued contrary to law, as the judgment, though erroneous, is not void, and the defendant has a complete remedy at law by motion under Va. Code, § 3451. Brown v. Chapman, 30 Va. 174, 17 S. E. Rep. 855.

The collection of a judgment by default on the agreement of the defendant to transfer a note will not be enjoined merely because of the failure to make such transfer. Equity regards as done that which ought to be done, and the note, by the agreement to transfer, became the property of the plaintiff, and the defendants held it simply as trustees for his benefit. Rollins v. Nat. Casket Co., 40 W. Va. 590, 21 S. E. Rep. 723.

In 1866, a creditor sued a partnership in debt. The sheriff returned on the process, executed on one by leaving a copy in his house with his sister, and on the other by leaving a copy at his house with his wife. On this return, there was an office judgment confirmed. The stay law prevented an execution on this judgment, but there was a judgment upon notice for a year's interest on this judgment in 1867, and also in 1868. In 1870, execution was issued on the judgment when the partnership enjoined it on the ground that a credit of $100 endorsed on the note should have been $600, and that the process was not properly served, and they had no notice of the suit. The creditor demurred to the bill for want of equity. Held, that the judgment was a judgment by default in the sense of the statute, Va. Code 1873, p. 1135, §§ 5, 6 (see Va. Code 1877, §§ 34, 51-2, as amended by Acts 1893-'4, p. 376), and the firm, having had notice of the judgment within the time limited for a motion to quash it, had a remedy at law by motion to quash the sheriff's return, and are not entitled to relief in equity. Goolsby v. St. John, 25 Gratt. 146.

If, by mistake of the sheriff a writ is served on the wrong person, but such person makes no defence at law, suffers judgment to go against him by default, execution having issued, gives a forthcoming bond, and afterwards delays the payment by appealing from a judgment on that bond, he is not entitled to relief in equity. Chisholm v. Anthony, 2 H. & M. 13.

Where a debtor confesses judgment in favor of his creditor for a smaller amount than that claimed, the confession being made by way of compromise, he cannot enjoin the enforcement of the judgment, in the absence of fraud in the adverse party, and when it is not shown that he was prevented from defending by reason of accident, mistake, or surprise as to material facts necessary for his defence. Morehead v. De Ford, 6 W. Va. 316.

An agent in charge of his principal's real estate during his absence rented out a portion of it and received the rents, but neglected to pay the taxes, in consequence whereof the property was sold at a tax sale, and the agent became the purchaser. Held, that the agent would be enjoined from executing a writ of possession under a judgment obtained by default against his principal for the land so purchased. Morris v. Joseph, 1 W. Va. 256, 91 Am. Dec. 386.

Satisfied Judgments.—In a case where, by virtue of an agreement between a judgment debtor and a judgment creditor, the judgment ought to be entered as satisfied, but in lieu thereof the creditor has an execution issued and levied upon the goods of the debtor, the latter cannot obtain relief by injunction in a court of equity, for the reason that he has a complete and adequate remedy at law. Howell v. Thomason, 34 W. Va. 794, 12 S. E. Rep. 1088.

An agent prosecuted a suit to judgment in favor of his principal and endorsed on the execution that it was partly for his own benefit. Before the execution was placed in the hands of the sheriff, the debtor paid the full amount of the debt to the principal and took his receipt in full discharge. Held, that though the debtor might have made a motion to quash the execution, and thus had a remedy at law, yet a court of equity has jurisdiction to give him relief by way of injunction to inhibit further proceedings on the execution. Crawford v. Thurmond, 3 Leigh 85.

A tender of money in payment of a judgment, will not authorize a court of equity to stop the execution, where there is neither allegation nor proof that the defendant in the execution kept the money on hand for the discharge of the judgment. Shumaker v. Nichols, 6 Gratt. 592.

Judgments Affecting Title.—Where a court of equity appoints special commissioners to make a sale of land in a pending cause for the purposes thereof, and the sale is made accordingly, such court should not entertain a bill of injunction to enjoin the collection of a judgment at law rendered upon a bond given to the commissioners for the purchase money, upon allegations that the commissioners have no title to the land, and that no deed has been made or filed as an escrow for the same, and that the title to the land is in another person, especially where such person is a party to the suit in which the decree of sale is made. Shields v. McClung, 6 W. Va. 79.

Digitized by Google

A sheriff levies a fieri facias upon property in possession of the defendant. An action of trespass is then brought against the sheriff, by the executors of the defendant's testator, on the ground that the legal title to the property is in them, and not in the defendant, as they held the property under the will of their testator, and had never given their assent to the legacy to the defendant, who was residuary legatee of their testator. The jury give vindictive damages against the sheriff. In such case, a court of equity will enjoin the judgment in trespass, if it appears that the executors of the testator had only a legal title, without any beneficial interest in the property, the debts and legacies of their testator having been all paid. It would be against conscience, that the debtor should pay his debt, and at the same time recover damages against his creditor, on the distinction, that he held only the beneficial interest, and not the legal title, to the property taken in execution. Lewis v. Wyatt, 2 Rand. 114.

A son was possessed of slaves for life with a limitation to his mother in case of his death without living issue. The mother died first, leaving him her only heir, and he afterwards died without such issue. The administrator of the mother brought detinue for the slaves against one of the heirs and distributees of the son, and also one of his administrators, but not declared as such, and recovered judgment on a case agreed by which the parties rested the decision upon certain specified points of law, to wit, whether the limitation to the mother was legal and valid, and whether the slaves, on the death of the son, became vested in her administrator. Held, that in a suit in equity filed in favor of the son's administrators the judgment should be perpetually enjoined, on the ground that they, as representing him, are entitled to the slaves, and, being in possession, should not be compelled to relinquish that possession and afterwards be put to the circuity of another action to recover them back. Royall v. Royall, 5 Munf. 82.

Judgments Based on Gaming Contracts.—A court of equity has jurisdiction to relieve against a judgment founded on a gaming debt, although the party failed to defend at law, and gives no good reason for such failure. Woodson v. Barrett, 2 H. & M. 80; Skipwith v. Strother, 3 Rand. 214; White v. Washington, 5 Gratt. 645.

On a bill to enjoin a judgment on the ground that the debt on which it was founded was for money won at cards, it being doubtful on the evidence, whether such was the consideration, or if it was, whether the plaintiff in the judgment, who was a transferee of the debt, had not been induced to take the transfer of the debt under the belief, induced by the concealment or misrepresentation of the debtor, that the consideration of said debt was good and lawful, the court should continue the injunction and direct an issue to ascertain the facts. Nelson v. Armstrong, 5 Gratt. 354.

Judgments Based on Usurious Contract.—A decree perpetually enjoining a judgment rendered in favor of an assignee on a usurious note, without decreeing in his favor against the execution of his assignor, was affirmed on appeal by the assignee. Toole v. Stephen, 4 Leigh 581.

Insolvency of Judgment Creditor and Indebtedness to Judgment Debtor.—A judgment on a forthcoming bond may be enjoined at the suit of the surety, on the ground that he has an action pending against the plaintiff in the judgment for a larger amount, and that the plaintiff is insolvent. M'Clellan v. Kinnaird, 6 Gratt. 352. See infra, title "Against Executions."

When Judgment of Another State Enjoined.—A court of equity will not enjoin the enforcement of a judgment of another state upon grounds which might have been urged as a defence to the action at law in such state, and when the defendant in the judgment fails to show good reason for not interposing his defence in the original action. Black v. Smith, 13 W. Va. 780.

Judgment in Slander Suit Enjoined Where Plaintiff Insane.—It is a sufficient ground of equity for a perpetual injunction to a judgment in slander that, at the time of speaking the defamatory words, and when the judgment was obtained, the complainant in the bill, who was the defendant at law, was insane, or in a state of partial derangement on the subject to which the defamatory words related. Horner v. Marshall, 5 Munf. 466.

Relief by Injunction against Awards.—The parties to an action agreed to submit the matters in dispute to certain arbitrators, whose award should be made a judgment of the court. The award of the arbitrators was given against the complainant, but was not made a judgment of the court until about six years afterwards, when execution issued thereon was returned, "no property." The judgment was reported in a pending chancery suit to subject the complainant's real estate to the payment thereof, and finally a sale was directed. Whereupon, the complainant obtained an injunction to restrain such sale. Held, that such injunction must be dissolved on the ground that the complainant's defences had been fully passed upon by the arbitrators and were res judicata. Canada v. Barksdale, 84 Va. 742, 6 S. E. Rep. 10.

An award condemning a party to pay damages for refusing to ratify an illegal and fraudulent contract is not binding; and relief against a bond given in conformity with said award is properly sought in equity. Beverley v. Rennolds, Wythe 121.

Against Judgment in Ejectment.—An agent whose duty it was to pay the taxes of his principal, assessed in the name of the heirs of a party of whom the principal claimed he was the sole heir, failed to pay the taxes, and when the land was sold for the non-payment thereof, purchased the same, professedly for his principal, but took the deed to himself, and brought an action of ejectment against them, being in possession of the land under his principal, and recovered a judgment. Held, that a court of equity will perpetually enjoin the enforcement of such judgment, although the plaintiffs failed to show that the principal was the heir of the person in whose name the land had been taxed. Franks v. Morris, 9 W. Va. 664.

A bill in equity was brought by a husband and wife to enjoin an ouster under a writ of possession in ejectment by the grantee of a party who held merely a tax title, having purchased the land for a nominal sum, and who had, within two years of the delinquent sale, refused a tender of the taxes, interest and damages, duly made by the wife, to whom the land had been conveyed three years before the assessment. Held, that it was a proper case for an injunction as there was no remedy at law. Sperry v. Gibson, 3 W. Va. 522.

Digitized by Google

An injunction will not lie to restrain the execution of a writ of possession in ejectment against a husband, where the wife was not a party, and claims the land as her separate estate, but the parties will be left to test their titles at law. Bushong v. Rector, 32 W. Va. 311, 9 S. E. Rep. 225.

The owner in possession of real estate may obtain an injunction to restrain others from dispossessing him by means of a writ of habere facias possessionem issued by a chancery court, without any notice to him, in a suit to which he was not a party, where he does not claim the land under any party to the suit but by a title paramount and adverse to them. Williamson v. Russell, 18 W. Va. 612.

Effect of Injunction against Part Only of Judgment.—Where an injunction to a judgment is only perpetuated as to a part of it, or a reversal is only as to a part of a judgment, the lien of the part not affected continues from the date of the judgment. Grafton & G. R. Co. v. Davisson, 45 W. Va. 12, 29 S. E. Rep. 1028.

New Trial—Judgment Allowed to Stand as Security for What May Be Found to Be Justly Due.—Upon a bill in chancery to enjoin a judgment at law, and for a retrial, there must not be a decree before such retrial annulling the judgment and granting a new trial in the law court; but the judgment is allowed to stand as security for what may be found to be justly due, and the injunction allowed to stand until after the retrial, and the decree should direct an issue or issues to be tried in the circuit court to find what the nature of the case requires, and upon the verdict the court should perpetuate or dissolve, wholly or partially, the judgment. Grafton & G. R. Co. v. Davisson, 45 W. Va. 12, 29 S. E. Rep. 1028.

Set-Offs.—An injunction against a judgment at law will not be sustained to allow the defendant at law to set up payments or offsets, which he might have pleaded at law; and if a discovery was necessary to enable him to prove them, he should have filed his bill of discovery in aid of his defence at law, or he should have filed interrogatories to the plaintiff under the statute. George v. Strange, 10 Gratt. 499.

A judgment debtor applied for an injunction to the judgment, on the ground that he had offsets which he had intended to plead, but that, owing to the sickness of his family at the time when the court sat, and for some months before, he had not been able to attend the court or prepare for trial, and that his counsel, to whom he had communicated his defence, was also absent. It appeared that the offsets were neither pleaded nor filed, and, though one of the defendant's counsel was present, no motion for a continuance was made, nor was any affidavit filed upon which such application could have been based. Held, that there was no cause for an injunction and new trial. Griffith v. Thompson, 4 Gratt. 147.

In an action at law upon a bond, after the husband's death, by the wife against the obligor, a plea of offsets setting forth an agreement with the husband, that his dealings with certain firms, of which the obligor was a member, should be set-off against the bond, was waived by the defendant's counsel, and there was a judgment for the plaintiff. Held, upon a proceeding in equity by the obligor in his own right and as the administrator of the husband to enjoin the execution of the judgment, that the offset, if valid, constituted a legal defence, and no sufficient excuse having been shown for failing to make the defence at law, equity will not interfere. Perkins v. Clements, 1 P. & H. 141.

Where, in the action at law, the defendant was prevented by unavoidable accident from setting up offsets against the plaintiff's demands, which were not connected with the claim sued upon, and could be enforced by law, he is not entitled to have the judgment enjoined and his offsets set up against it, but must pursue his remedy at law. And if his offsets are only recoverable in equity, he cannot have the judgment enjoined and avail himself of his claims against it. Hudson v. Kline, 9 Gratt. 379.

Where, on a bill of injunction to stay proceedings on a judgment at law, it appears from the commissioner's report that the complainant is entitled to a credit which the defendant failed to give, the court ought not to set aside the order for account and dismiss the bill, on the ground that the complainant had neglected to carry into effect a previous order referring, by consent, the accounts between them to a different commissioner; but, the last order having been made on the defendant's motion, and the report being excepted to for want of notice to the complainant, a new account ought to be ordered. Roberts v. Jordans, 3 Munf. 488.

Where an injunction has been awarded to stay the collection of a judgment, and it appears from the answer of the defendant that there is a considerable sum in his hands, which he has agreed to apply as a credit on such judgment, and it is uncertain what is the amount which he ought, under an agreement into which he has entered, to credit on such judgment, the court ought not to dissolve the injunction till it has ascertained, by sending the cause to a commissioner if necessary, the amount of the credit which should be so given in such judgment. Heatherly v. Farmers' Bank of Phillippi, 31 W. Va. 70, 5 S. E. Rep. 754.

Where a judgment at law is enjoined and an account between the parties directed, the commissioner ought not to give the plaintiff at law credit for claims not exhibited to the jury, nor mentioned in the answer, and which are prior in date to the commencement of the action at law. Lipscomb v. Littlepage, 1 H. & M. 454.

Same—Purely Equitable Set-Offs.—A defendant is not required to plead his equitable set-offs at law, but may come into equity, after the judgment at law, to establish his set-offs and enjoin the judgment. Terry v. Wooding, 2 P. & H. 178; High on Injunctions (2d Ed.) 157. See, however, Hudson v. Kline, 9 Gratt. 379.

Same—Effect of Insolvency of Judgment Creditor.—In general, the insolvency of a creditor who is pressing the foreclosure or enforcement of a lien, and against whom offsets are claimed by the debtor, constitutes good ground for an injunction; but when this is the only ground for equitable interference, and the plaintiff fails to prove the insolvency, the injunction should be dissolved. Farland v. Wood, 35 W. Va. 458, 14 S. E. Rep. 140.

The mere insolvency of a judgment creditor will not, of itself, justify an injunction against the enforcement of a judgment at law upon the ground of a set-off, which might have been pleaded at law at the time such judgment was recovered. Sayre v. Harpold, 33 W. Va. 553, 11 S. E. Rep. 16.

Though generally injunction does not lie against a judgment to let in set-offs, yet it will lie where the judgment creditor is insolvent. Jarrett v. Goodnow, 39 W. Va. 602, 20 S. E. Rep. 575.

Digitized by Google

W. AGAINST EXECUTIONS.—Where the remedy at law is full, summary, adequate, and complete, a court of equity will not assume jurisdiction to enjoin an execution. Hall v. Taylor, 18 W. Va. 544; Howell v. Thomason, 34 W. Va. 794, 12 S. E. Rep. 1088; Morrison v. Speer, 10 Gratt. 228; Crawford v. Thurmond, 3 Leigh 85; Jarrell v. Eddins, 2 Pat. & H. 579.

Where the debtor in an execution objects that a previous execution has been levied by the sheriff upon sufficient property to satisfy the judgment, and that he has improperly misapplied the proceeds of the sale of the property, or if he insists that payment has been made to the sheriff which has not been credited on the execution, if he has an opportunity to apply to the court of law from which the execution issued for redress, he has no right to come into equity for relief. Beckley v. Palmer, 11 Gratt. 635.

The trustee or cestui que trust cannot go into a court of equity to enjoin a sale of trust effects under an execution issued and levied by virtue of a subsequently acquired judgment, there being a complete and adequate remedy at law. Kuhn v. Mack, 4 W. Va. 186.

A party claiming that he has not been credited for all the money paid by him to the sheriff on an execution is not entitled to relief in equity by injunction, as he may have any injustice done to him in that respect corrected by the court from which the execution issued. Morrison v. Speer, 10 Gratt. 228.

An injunction will not lie to restrain the collection of an execution on the ground that it has been paid, as there is an adequate remedy at law by motion to quash the execution; and where the sheriff has paid the execution, without authority from the defendant, it will be quashed on motion, for, by such motion, the payment of the sheriff would be ratified. Hall v. Taylor, 18 W. Va. 544.

An injunction will lie to restrain a sheriff from making a sale of personal property, for the payment of taxes, on which he has levied, where the bill alleges that the taxes have been fully paid and discharged. And upon proof that the taxes have been paid off and discharged, the injunction will be perpetuated. Lewis v. Spencer, 7 W. Va. 689.

An injunction prohibiting a defendant and all other persons from selling slaves until a further order of the court is sufficient and conclusive, while in force, to prevent a valid sale of the slaves, on execution against the defendant, although in favor of persons not parties to the suit. West v. Belches, 5 Munf. 187.

A member of assembly, before its session, obtained an injunction to stay proceedings on an execution at law against his property. Held, that he could not object that his privilege as a member ought to prevent the hearing of a motion to dissolve the injunction during the session. Botts v. Tabb, 10 Leigh 616.

Where an injunction to a judgment at law is made perpetual at the instance of one of two defendants therein, who has been compelled to give a forthcoming bond, and there is no equity in favor of the other defendant, on whom the execution was not served, the court should so extend the decree as to enjoin such defendant from availing himself of the return of the execution and forthcoming bond, to prevent proceedings against him on the original judgment. Poindexter v. Waddy, 6 Munf. 418.

An injunction to restrain the execution of a writ of possession, based on an alleged error in the judgment upon which the execution issued, and also upon a judgment in the complainant's favor for possession of a tract of land of which the land in question is a part, the final decision of which is pending on appeal, should on motion be dissolved Rosenberger v. Bowen, 84 Va. 660, 5 S. E. Rep. 697; Eppes v. Thurman, 4 Rand. 384.

Purchasers at a foreclosure sale, being entitled to the then growing crops, may enjoin creditors of the mortgagor from proceeding under execution to levy upon such crops, the doctrine of emblements having no application to purchasers under a foreclosure sale. High on Injunctions (2d Ed.) 167. Crews v. Pendleton, 1 Leigh 297.

Irregularity in Issuance of Execution.—Where an execution is irregularly issued, and the remedy by motion to quash is inadequate because of the formalities and delay incident thereto, it is competent for the judge in vacation to restrain proceedings upon it by an injunction order. Shackelford v. Apperson, 6 Gratt. 451; Snavely v. Harkrader, 30 Gratt. 487.

Where Judgment Creditor is Insolvent and Indebted to Judgment Debtor.—Where a person sues to enforce a decree for costs obtained in another suit, he may recover judgment thereon, but will be enjoined from collecting the same, where he is insolvent and indebted to the defendant, and has pledged the decree as security for the costs of another suit. Shipman v. Fletcher, 95 Va. 585, 29 S. E. Rep. 325. See supra, title "Against Judgments."

Bankrupt May Enjoin Execution on Judgment Obtained before His Discharge.—Where a judgment debtor has obtained his discharge as a bankrupt subsequent to the judgment, he is entitled to an injunction to the suing out or levy of any execution thereon. Peatross v. McLaughlin, 6 Gratt. 64.

When Granted to Protect Surety against Execution.—A bond with surety was executed upon a settlement of an account for articles furnished by the obligee to the principal obligor. After the articles were furnished but before the execution of the bond, the principal conveyed his property in trust for his wife and children, subject to his then existing debts. The obligee recovered a judgment on the bond and levied an execution on the surety's property. There was a suit in the same court against principal, obligee and others to ascertain the principal's indebtedness at the date of the deed, and to adjust the accounts between his trust estate and the obligee, who was largely indebted to the estate for rent. Held, that the surety was entitled to an injunction to restrain a sale under the execution. Meade v. Grigsby, 26 Gratt. 612.

A surety received a mortgage of slaves from his principal, and afterwards they were levied on for the debt of the principal, while it was uncertain whether the surety would sustain a loss by reason of his suretyship. The surety filed a bill for an injunction to restrain the sale. Held, that equity had jurisdiction to grant relief, and to protect the surety by injunction. Marshall v. Colvert, 5 Leigh 146.

A creditor recovered judgment against the principal debtor and his surety, had execution levied on the property of the principal, and, on receiving part of the money, gave the principal further time for the balance and ordered the sheriff to restore the goods to him, without the assent of the surety. Held, that the judgment was thereby discharged at law, and the surety, not having assented to the agreement, was discharged in equity, and that equity would restrain any subsequent execution on the judgment by injunction. Baird v. Rice, 1 Call 18.

Digitized by Google

Where the sureties in a bond have been released by a contract for forbearance to sue between the creditor and the principal debtor, and the creditor obtains a judgment at law against the sureties, before they have notice of the contract for indulgence, a court of equity, on the application of the sureties, will perpetually enjoin the execution of the judgment. Armistead v. Ward, 2 Pat. & H. 504.

The judgment on a forthcoming bond was enjoined at the instance of a surety therein, on the ground that he had an action pending against the plaintiff in the judgment for a larger amount, and that the plaintiff was insolvent. McClellan v. Kinnaird, 6 Gratt. 352.

Upon a bill in equity by a reversioner of slaves against the husband and a tenant for life, alleging a purpose to remove one of the slaves out of the commonwealth, an injunction was awarded, and bond given by the husband with surety, conditioned to abide by and perform the final decree of the court. Upon an amended bill against the surety as well as the husband, it appeared that the surety while bound as such, and of course with full knowledge of the plaintiff's claim, caused the slaves to be removed and sold out of the commonwealth. Held, that for such removal and sale in contempt of the court's authority, it was competent for the court to give redress and vindicate its jurisdiction by decreeing in favor of the plaintiff against both the obligors in the bond. Johns v. Davis, 2 Rob. 729.

Incumbrancer Cannot Enjoin Execution.—Equity will not enjoin a sale of personalty on execution at the instance of one claiming to hold an incumbrance on it, but will leave him to his remedy at law. "For if an incumbrancer has the right to have the property sold and the proceeds paid to him in satisfaction of his lien, the sheriff may as well sell as anybody, and the incumbrancer will not be injured." Beach on Injunctions, 729; Bowyer v. Creigh, 3 Rand. 25; Rollins v. Hess, 27 W. Va. 570.

Equity has no jurisdiction to enjoin the sale of a slave, belonging to the estate of a decedent, though about to be made under a wrongful levy, at the instance of creditors, or of the administrator acting in their behalf, and alleging that the assets are insufficient to pay the debts; for, in such case, they claim merely as incumbrancers, and the remedy is at law, upon the indemnifying bond, if one is given, or by suit for the recovery of the property. But, if the injunction be asked by the distributees, or by the administrator in their behalf, alleging that a sale of the property would not be necessary for the payment of debts, equity would have jurisdiction; for, in that case, they claim as owners of the property, and it may have a peculiar value, not to be fully compensated in damages in any proceeding at law. Jarrell v. Eddins, 2 P. & H. 579; Bowyer v. Creigh, 3 Rand. 25.

Seizure of Property of Stranger to Writ.—An injunction will not lie against the sale of goods and chattels attached, claimed by a third party, unless they are of peculiar value to the owner, and it is clearly shown and manifestly appears that great injury would result to the owner from consequential damages from the sale, because the owner has a complete and adequate remedy at law. Zanhizer v. Hefner (W. Va.), 35 S. E. Rep. 4; Dunn v. Baxter, 30 W. Va. 672, 5 S. E. Rep. 214; Baker v. Rinehard, 11 W. Va. 238.

Where there are conflicting claims to personal property, possessing no pretium affectionis, the remedy is adequate at law and equity will not take cognizance of the case, though one of the parties be a trustee, claiming the property under a trust deed. Moore v. Steelman, 80 Va. 331. See Sheppards v. Turpin, 3 Gratt. 373.

A nonresident of the state caused an execution to be levied on tobacco, corn, etc., in possession of the debtor, and a third person claiming a legal right to the goods joined the debtor in a forthcoming bond for the delivery thereof at the time and place of sale. Held, that the claimant, if he had such legal right, had an adequate remedy at law by an action against the sheriff, and therefore was not entitled to an injunction to restrain the creditor from proceeding under his execution and upon a forthcoming bond. Miller v. Crews, 2 Leigh 576. In Wilson v. Butler, 3 Munf. 559, the court seemed to lay down a contrary rule. But in that case the plaintiff claimed as owner and the property consisted of slaves. See Bowyer v. Creigh, 3 Rand. 25; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 406.

An injunction will not lie to prevent the sale of personal property of a third person, levied on by an officer for unpaid taxes, when the property is not of peculiar value to the owner and it does not manifestly appear that great injury would result to the owner from consequential or collateral damages occasioned by such sale. In such case the owner has a complete and adequate remedy at law to which he may resort for redress. White v. Stender, 24 W. Va. 615.

The statute providing for the taking of an indemnifying bond by the officer levying on property, does not preclude a party claiming to be the owner of the property levied on, other than the judgment debtor, from his right to go into a court of equity to obtain an injunction against the same, when he has no complete and adequate remedy at law. Walker v. Hunt, 2 W. Va. 491, 98 Am. Dec. 779.

A court of equity has jurisdiction to enjoin the sale of personal property under an execution, where the plaintiffs claim the property as owners, and charge fraud in the sale of it to them by the defendant in the execution, and collusion between him and the judgment creditor, in the procurement of the judgment, and otherwise, and they are without complete remedy at law. McFarland v. Dilly, 5 W. Va. 135.

Same—Property of Peculiar Value to Owner.—Equity will enjoin the sale of property of peculiar value to the owner, which cannot be compensated in damages. 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 407; Randolph v. Randolph, 6 Rand. 194; Kelly v. Scott, 5 Gratt. 479.

Same—Same—Slave Property.—The principle that equity will interfere to prevent the sale of property of peculiar value to the owner has been frequently applied to the seizure and sale of slaves not the property of the execution debtor. Some of the decisions hold that the nature of the property itself is sufficient to justify the interference of a court of equity, and that in every case in which the owner of slaves, wrongfully taken in execution for the debt of another, applies to a court of equity to inhibit the sale thereof, the court should award an injunction, and, if the case be made out, give relief, although it is neither alleged nor proved that the slaves have any peculiar value in the eyes of the owner. Sims v. Harrison, 4 Leigh 546; Kelly v. Scott, 5 Gratt. 479. In other cases it has been held that the slave must be shown to possess some peculiar value which cannot be compensated for in damages. Allen v. Freeland, 3 Rand. 170. Thus it was held that where the slave had no peculiar value to the owner, but was held by him as mere merchandise, equity would not interfere, and the owner should be left to his legal remedy. Randolph v. Randolph, 6 Rand. 197.

An execution was levied on slaves in possession of the debtor, and the slaves were claimed by a third party, whereupon the plaintiff in execution gave the sheriff an indemnifying bond, and he sold the slaves, and subsequently brought suit on the bond, pending which suit the plaintiff in execution filed his bill, alleging that the claimant claimed under a voluntary deed, fraudulent as to both prior and subsequent creditors, praying that it might be avoided, but asking no discovery from the parties to the deed. Held, that the facts alleged in the bill, if true, would constitute a good defence at law to the bond, and that equity was without jurisdiction. Harvey v. Fox, 5 Leigh 444.

A fi. fa. against the estate of a testator was levied on slaves, specifically bequeathed, which were in the possession of the legatees as their property, either by actual delivery from the executor, or by his permission. Held, that a court of equity may award an injunction to prevent the sale of the slaves. Sampson v. Bryce, 5 Munf. 175. See Whitton v. Terry, 6 Leigh 189.

Where a fieri facias against the goods of a testator is levied on slaves, which, by his will, were specifically bequeathed, and after his death were allotted to the legatee by the executor, who thereupon held them and hired them out as guardian for such legatee, a court of equity should enjoin the sale until an account is taken of the unadministered assets; and, upon such account, should decree that the creditor be satisfied out of those assets or, if there be a deficiency, out of the residue of the estate of which the testator died possessed, regard being had to the rights of the several legatees under the will. Scott v. Halliday, 5 Munf. 103.

III. JURISDICTION.

Under the Virginia constitution (see Va. Code 1803, art. 14, p. 4), the judges of the general court and judges in chancery were to be appointed by the joint ballot of both houses, and to be commissioned by the governor, and to continue in office during good behavior. A judge of the general court could not, by law, be vested with chancery powers, unless he was also appointed a judge in chancery by joint ballot, and commissioned as such. Hence, the act of 1792, 1 Rev. Code 1803, pp. 64, 74, §§ 9, 11, directing that the district courts, or a judge thereof in vacation, should exercise the power of granting injunctions, and of dissolving and finally disposing of them, under the same rules as were prescribed for conducting similar suits in the high courts of chancery, was unconstitutional and void. Kamper v. Hawkins, 1 Va. Cas. 20.

An allegation in a bill for injunction that the legislative act, under which the wrong complained of is being committed, is unconstitutional, will not, of itself confer jurisdiction upon the court of equity to grant the relief prayed for. Thomas v. Rowe (Va.), 22 S. E. Rep. 157.

County Court.—Under Va. Code 1873, ch. 175, § 6, a judge of a county court may award an injunction, where the act or proceeding to be enjoined is apprehended, or is to be done, or is doing in his county or district. Rosenberger v. Bowen, 84 Va. 660, 5 S. E. Rep. 697.

A county court has no power to make an order enjoining the judgment of a superior court. Bite v. Fitz-Randolph, 1 Va. Cas. 269.

Circuit Court.—Where an injunction is granted by a county judge, who has no authority to grant the same, and is perpetuated by the circuit court, the order of the county judge is simply inoperative; and the circuit court has authority at the hearing to award an injunction, although not prayed for in the bill, if it is necessary for the purposes of complete justice, and hence may adopt the previous order of the county judge as its own and perpetuate the same. Sanderlin v. Baxter, 76 Va. 299.

Under Va. Code 1887, § 3436, as amended by Acts 1899–1900, p. 966, providing that jurisdiction of a bill for an injunction to restrain any act or proceeding shall be in the circuit court of the county in which such act or proceeding is to be done or is being done or apprehended, the circuit court of a county has jurisdiction of a suit to enjoin the clerk of such county from conveying certain delinquent lands to an applicant for the purchase thereof. Baker v. Briggs, 99 Va. —, 38 S. E. Rep. 277.

Chancery Court of City of Richmond.—The chancery court of the city of Richmond cannot enjoin an act to be done in the county of Prince George. N. & W. R. Co. v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 88 Va. 936, 14 S. E. Rep. 690.

Court of Appeals.—As to the jurisdiction of the supreme court over injunctions, see Va. Code 1887, § 3438, as amended by Acts 1895–6, p. 728. Fredenheim v. Rohr, 87 Va. 764, 13 S. E. Rep. 193; Wilder v. Kelley, 88 Va. 274, 13 S. E. Rep. 483; Mayo v. Haines, 2 Munf. 423; Randolph v. Randolph, 6 Rand. 194; Gilliam v. Allen, 1 Rand. 414; 10 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 882. See also, infra, title "Appeals."

Where an injunction is refused by a chancellor in open court, it is competent for a judge of the court of appeals, out of court, to award it. Toll Bridge v. Free Bridge, 1 Rand. 206.

The judges of the court of appeals, or any one of them out of court, have power to award injunctions which have been refused by the judge of any superior court of chancery, but this power is not possessed by the court itself. Mayo v. Haines, 2 Munf. 423.

The fact that an injunction has been refused by a judge of the circuit court and also by a judge of the supreme court, is no objection to the granting of the injunction by another judge of the supreme court. Jaynes v. Brock, 10 Gratt. 211.

Upon an appeal from an order overruling an injunction, the court awarding the injunction, not the supreme court, has jurisdiction of a proceeding for contempt for its violation. State v. Harness, 42 W. Va. 414, 26 S. E. Rep. 270.

Federal Jurisdiction to Enjoin Collection of State Taxes.—A federal court will not enjoin the collection of taxes levied under the authority of a state upon the shares of a national bank unless it clearly appears not only that the tax is illegal, but also that there are special circumstances which bring the case within some recognized ground of equity jurisdiction and render such relief necessary to the adequate protection of the complainant's rights, and only where the right is clear, the necessity for action urgent, and the absence of any other remedy apparent, should an injunction be granted. People's Nat. Bank of Lynchburg v. Marye, 7 Va. Law Reg. 47.

Digitized by Google

Concurrent Jurisdiction of Equity and Law Courts.—Though courts of equity and courts of law have a concurrent jurisdiction in cases of fraud, yet if a suit be first brought in a court of law, in which the question of fraud may be tried and determined, the party injured by the fraud must make his defence there; and if he neglects to do so, the court of equity has no jurisdiction to relieve him. Haden v. Garden, 7 Leigh 157.

Consent of Parties Cannot Confer Jurisdiction.—Where the law does not give a court of equity jurisdiction of the subject-matter—e. g., to enjoin the building of a railroad pursuant to a valid ordinance—consent of parties cannot invest the court with power to award damages or ascertain and decree compensation. Ohio River R. Co. v. Gibbens, 35 W. Va. 57, 12 S. E. Rep. 1093.

Upon a county court's overruling a motion for the dissolution of an injunction, the parties cannot make the injunction perpetual by consent, in order that an appeal may be taken; but to authorize an appeal, the cause must be regularly proceeded in to a final decree. Blakey v. West, 3 Munf. 75.

Objection to Jurisdiction—When to Be Made.—A bill to enjoin an execution on the ground that a previous execution on the same judgment has been levied on the property of another defendant, must be filed in the county in which the judgment was recovered. In such case, objection to the jurisdiction may be taken at the hearing. Beckley v. Palmer, 11 Gratt. 625.

Where the plaintiff in a pure bill of injunction institutes a suit in one county to restrain a sale of real estate situated in another, and the defendants answer and do not object to the jurisdiction, the plaintiff cannot afterwards raise the question of jurisdiction. Muller v. Bayly, 21 Gratt. 521.

IV. VENUE.

An injunction cannot be maintained in a county other than that in which the act or proceeding is to be done, or is doing, or apprehended. N. & W. R. Co. v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 88 Va. 932, 14 S. E. Rep. 689.

Under the statute, Va. Code 1887, § 3436, providing that the jurisdiction of a bill for an injunction to any judgment, act, or proceeding shall be in the circuit court of the county, or the circuit or corporation court of the corporation, in which the judgment is rendered or in which the act or proceeding is to be done, or is doing or apprehended, an injunction to restrain entry on land cannot be maintained in a county other than that in which the land is situated. Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 88 Va. 932, 14 S. E. Rep. 689; N. & W. R. R. Co. v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 88 Va. 936, 14 S. E. Rep. 690. See also, Beckley v. Palmer, 11 Gratt. 625.

Under W. Va. Code 1887, ch. 123, §§ 1, 2, providing that a suit in equity may be brought in the county in which any of the defendants reside, or in which the cause of action or a part thereof arose, a suit to enjoin the defendants from interfering with the plaintiff's possession of certain railroad ties may be brought in the county where a part of them are found, provided that service on the defendants is had therein, although the defendants reside in another county, and the contract by which the plaintiff became entitled to the ties was made there. Toledo Tie & Lumber Co. v. Thomas, 33 W. Va. 566, 11 S. E. Rep. 37.

Although by statute, Sup. Rev. Code, ch. 109 (see Va. Code 1887, §§ 3436-37), jurisdiction is given to each of the judges of the circuit courts to award injunction without as well as within his own circuit, yet the order of the judge must be directed to the clerk of the court of that county or corporation in which the judgment shall have been rendered or the proceeding is apprehended, and the subsequent proceedings must be had in that county. Randolph v. Tucker, 10 Leigh 655.

A court of chancery has power to grant injunctions to the judgments of all courts of common law within its district, the place where the court is held, and not the residence of the parties, furnishing the rule of jurisdiction in such case. Cocke v. Pollok, 1 H. & M. 499.

Change of Venue.—The superior courts of chancery had power, upon general principles of equity, to direct the venue to be changed after issue joined in a county or other inferior court, where it appeared that strong prejudice existed against the defendant, which was unknown to him until after such issue was joined, and that a fair and impartial trial could not have been expected in the court where the suit was depending. In such case, a judgment was not necessary to authorize the chancellor to grant the injunction. Darmsdatt v. Wolfe, 4 H. & M. 246.

Same—Ancillary Injunction.—Under the statute providing that a suit shall be brought in the county in which the judgment sought to be enjoined is rendered, or in which the act or proceeding sought to be enjoined is being done or apprehended, only a pure bill of injunction is meant, not a bill seeking other relief, to which the injunction sought is merely ancillary. Muller v. Bayly, 21 Gratt. 521; Winston v. Midlothian Coal Mining Co., 20 Gratt. 686. See also, Beckley v. Palmer, 11 Gratt. 625; Pulliam v. Winston, 5 Leigh 324; Singleton v. Lewis, 6 Munf. 397; Hough v. Shreeve, 4 Munf. 490.

Where a bill seeks relief and asks for an injunction to restrain the sale of real estate in another county as ancillary to the relief sought, the court of the county or city where the defendants or some of them reside, has jurisdiction of the cause; and the order for the injunction properly proceeds from the court of that county or city. Winston v. Midlothian, etc., Co., 20 Gratt. 686.

V. PARTIES.

The common-law rule with regard to injunctions is that they will not be granted to restrain a person who is not a party to the suit, but, whether granted in a pending suit or not, the person whose action is sought to be restrained must become a party to the bill or petition upon which the application is based. Lyne v. Jackson, 1 Rand. 119; Robertson v. Tapscott, 81 Va. 533; Bond v. Pettit, 89 Va. 474, 16 S. E. Rep. 666; Baker v. Briggs, 99 Va. —, 38 S. E. Rep. 277.

No person can enjoin a judgment at law to which he is not a party; but if he is aggrieved, he should pray an injunction to the execution. Jordan v. Williams, 3 Rand. 501.

It is error to perpetuate an injunction against a party without having him before the court. Chapman v. Harrison, 4 Rand. 336.

Where a suit is brought to enjoin a trustee's sale under a trust deed, at the instance of the administrator of one of several creditors whose debts are secured thereby, on the ground that all of such debts have been paid, including that of the deceased, not only the testator and trustee but also all the other creditors or their legal representatives should be made parties. Calwell v. Prindle, 11 W. Va. 307.

Where the lessees of oil and gas land bring suit against the lessees of an adjoining tract to enjoin them from boring a well on land claimed by both. the lessors of both leases and all persons having an interest in the product of the well are necessary parties to the suit. Steelsmith v. Fisher Oil Co. (W. Va.), 35 S. E. Rep. 15; Moore v. Jennings (W. Va.), 34 S. E. Rep. 798.

Two infant negroes were entitled to freedom on their attainment to the age of twenty-one, under a bequest in a will to which the executors did not assent. A bill in chancery was filed by their mother, a free negro, showing their prospective rights to freedom, and that the holders of them claimed and intended to sell them as absolute slaves, whereby their freedom might be jeoparded, and praying an injunction to restrain the holders from selling or disposing of them so as to impair their prospective rights, and security for their enjoyment of their freedom when it should accrue. Held, that a court of chancery has jurisdiction to give such relief and that the mother may maintain such suit, in her own name, for the protection of her infant children. Anderson v. Anderson, 11 Leigh 616.

Commissioner of Sale.—A commissioner about to make a judicial sale is a necessary party to a suit to enjoin the sale. Robertson v. Tapscott, 81 Va. 533.

Register.—Where the object of a suit is to prevent the issuing of a patent by the register of the land office, such register is a proper party to the bill. Lyne v. Jackson, 1 Rand. 114.

Holder of Certificate.—In a suit to enjoin the payment of a certificate, the holder of the certificate should be made a party. Grobe v. Roup, 44 W. Va. 197, 28 S. E. Rep. 699.

County Clerk.—In a bill to compel a county clerk to remove an application for the purchase of certain delinquent tax lands and to enjoin him from conveying such lands to the applicant, such county clerk is not only a proper but a necessary party. Baker v. Briggs, 99 Va. —, 38 S. E. Rep. 277.

State Auditor.—Under the act of Feb. 11, 1898, a bill to remove an application for the purpose of delinquent tax lands and to enjoin proceedings thereunder, which shows title to such lands to be in the state, is not defective in failing to make the state auditor a party. Baker v. Briggs, 99 Va. —, 38 S. E. Rep. 277.

Heirs of Grantor.—In a bill by an administrator to enjoin a sale of real estate by a trustee, on the ground that the debt has been paid by the debtor in his lifetime, the heirs of the grantor are necessary parties. Stewart v. Jackson, 8 W. Va. 29.

Joining Officers as Parties.—The officer who returned the writ of bail bond ought, as well as the plaintiff at law, to be made a party defendant to a bill of injunction filed by the person returned as bail, who denies that he ever executed the bond, for the officer is interested in the matter in controversy and should be a party in order that final and complete justice may be done. Spotswood v. Higgenbotham, 6 Munf. 313.

Misjoinder of Parties.—In a suit against oyster inspectors and others to enjoin them from assigning oyster ground to the other defendants, and to require them to assign the same to the complainant, the bill alleged, that the ground in controversy was unoccupied: that the complainant claimed the right to have the whole assigned and rented to him as the first applicant for it; and that the inspector and his deputy were about to assign it to the other defendants because they had occupied it under the old law, though they had not applied for it as the law required, but had abandoned it. Held, that the bill was not bad because of misjoinder of parties. Coleman v. Claytor, 93 Va. 20, 24 S. E. Rep. 463.

VI. THE BILL.

A. CERTAINTY.—The complainants in a suit to restrain a sale of lands under a deed of trust to secure an unpaid balance of the purchase money claimed credit as mortgagors against such balance for damages for the cutting of timber upon a portion of the lands, which portion, they alleged, had been conveyed by their vendor, a defendant in the suit, to other persons prior to the conveyance to them. There was no allegation in the bill that the cutting took place after their purchase, or by whom it was done, or that they did not get all the land for which they had contracted. Held, that the bill was demurrable for want of certainty. Cleaver v. Matthews, 83 Va. 801, 3 S. E. Rep. 439.

The charge in a bill of injunction against a railroad company that they "have entered upon the same (the land), or are about to enter upon the same," is too uncertain, when taken in connection with another charge in the bill that the company has acted without the authority of law, and in the absence of any averment or charge that it is about to act further without authority of law. C. & O. R. Co. v. Patton, 5 W. Va. 234.

B. NECESSARY ALLEGATIONS.—In a bill for an injunction where relief might have been had at law, the plaintiff must state why he did not defend at law. Yancy v. Fenwick, 4 H. & M. 423.

The mere averment, by a plaintiff in his bill asking for an injunction to a judgment at law, of the facts constituting his excuse for not defending himself at law, is not sufficient; he must prove them. Meem v. Rucker, 10 Gratt. 506.

Where a debtor, by way of compromise, confesses judgment for a sum less than the amount of his debt and seeks relief in a court of equity on the ground that he was entitled a credit of which he was aware, he should allege and prove that, though he used proper diligence he was prevented from ascertaining the fact or making defence by fraud, accident, mistake, or surprise. Morehead v. De Ford, 6 W. Va. 316.

Where, in order to sustain a bill of injunction, a jurisdictional fact is necessary to be established, such fact must not only be alleged in the bill, but should be sustained by sufficient evidence to make at least a prima facie case before the court proceeds to refer the cause to a commissioner, or to order an issue out of chancery. Ohio River R. Co. v. Ward, 35 W. Va. 481, 14 S. E. Rep. 142.

The mere allegation in a bill for an injunction that the act complained of is being committed under an unconstitutional statute is not of itself sufficient to confer jurisdiction on a court of equity to grant the relief sought, where the other allegations do not make out a case for such relief. Thomas v. Rowe (Va.), 23 S. E. Rep. 157.

Allegation as to Parties.—In a bill filed to restrain the collection of taxes for school purposes in a township, the plaintiff must aver that he sues, not only on his own behalf, but, also, on behalf of all others similarly situated, such averment being essential to a complete determination of all the rights affected by the suit. McClung v. Livesay, 7 W. Va. 329. See Bull v. Read, 13 Gratt. 78. See supra, title, "Against Taxes."

Allegation of Plaintiff's Title.—A bill to restrain the recording of a paper on the ground that it would cast a cloud on the title to certain land is properly dismissed, where it fails to allege the plaintiff's interest in the land. Smith v. Thomas (Va.), 37 S. E. Rep. 784.

Digitized by Google

A bill of injunction is fatally defective which does not aver good title in the plaintiff, contains no charge of insolvency against the defendants, does not show that irreparable damage will result if the injunction is denied, and prays an injunction to restrain a naked trespass upon real property. The Western, etc., Co. v. Va., etc., Co., 10 W. Va. 250; McMillan v. Ferrell, 7 W. Va. 223. See Cox v. Douglass, 20 W. Va. 175; Schoonover v. Bright, 24 W. Va. 698; Cresap v. Kemble, 26 W. Va. 603; Watson v. Ferrell, 34 W. Va. 406, 12 S. E. Rep. 724.

Allegation of Character of Injury Apprehended.—A bill of injunction should contain a distinct averment of irreparable injury, and the facts must appear on which the allegation is predicated, in order that the court may be satisfied as to the nature of the injury. Farland v. Wood, 35 W. Va. 458, 14 S. E. Rep. 140; Fluharty v. Mills (W. Va.), 38 S. E. Rep. 521. See also; Collins v. Sutton, 94 Va. 127, 26 S. E. Rep. 415; Cresap v. Kemble, 26 W. Va. 603.

A mere allegation of irreparable injury is not sufficient to warrant an injunction. The facts must appear on which the allegations are founded. Hale v. Point Pleasant, etc., R. Co., 23 W. Va. 454.

A bill to enjoin the commission of waste by cutting timber which merely alleges that the injury will be irreparable, and does not show in what respect it will be irreparable, will be dismissed on demurrer. Watson v. Ferrell, 34 W. Va. 406, 12 S. E. Rep. 724.

In order to sustain a bill to enjoin trespass on land, facts constituting irreparable injury must be set out. Becker v. McGraw (W. Va.), 37 S. E. Rep. 532.

A bill to enjoin the foreclosure of a usurious mortgage is demurrable, where it fails to show in what respect the plaintiff would be injured by the sale. Saunders v. Balto. Building & Loan Ass'n (Va.), 37 S. E. Rep. 775.

Allegation of Fraud.—In a bill for an injunction on the ground of fraud, the facts constituting such fraud must be stated. Dickenson v. Bankers' Loan, etc., Co., 93 Va. 498, 25 S. E. Rep. 548.

The facts relied on to sustain a bill for an injunction must be stated in the bill, and must, when taken together, be sufficient to make out a case of fraud. Dickenson v. Bankers' Loan, etc., Co., 93 Va. 498, 25 S. E. Rep. 548.

Allegation of Insolvency.—Although a bill asking for an injunction contains the averment that the defendant, by cutting a channel through the plaintiff's land, the defendant having been granted the right to construct its railroad through such land, would divert the water of a creek from the plaintiff's mill, and would work to him irreparable damage, yet if there is no averment that the defendant is insolvent, or that its officers, agents, or servants are transcending their authority, or that any damage which may be done to the property cannot be adequately compensated in damages, the injunction must be refused. C. & O. R. Co. v. Bobbett, 5 W. Va. 138.

Allegation of Destruction of Original Papers.—It is a sufficient compliance with Va. Code 1887, § 3376, where a sworn bill alleges and the answer admits the destruction of the original papers in a cause in which there was a decree for the sale of certain lands, and there is filed a certified copy of the papers from the supreme court, where the cause was on appeal; and an injunction will not lie on the ground that "no affidavit of the destruction was filed." Hudson v. Yost, 88 Va. 347, 13 S. E. Rep. 436.

C. ALLEGATIONS ON INFORMATION AND BELIEF.—A bill for an injunction charged that the complainant was informed and believed that there were other parties who claimed the land described in the defendant's deed to the complainant, but there was no allegation as to who the parties were, nor was their title shown or indicated. Held, that this allegation was too general to warrant an injunction restraining the collection of the purchase price. Lovell v. Chilton, 2 W. Va. 410.

As a general rule, an injunction will not be allowed upon mere information and belief, and the following affidavit to a bill of injunction is insufficient under the statute: "James Montgomery on his solemn oath says that each and every allegation contained in the foregoing bill are true so far as they are known to him personally, and so far as he has heard, he believes them to be true," Montgomery not being a plaintiff in the bill. C. & O. R. Co. v. Huse, 5 W. Va. 579.

D. DISCOVERY.—As a general rule, where a plaintiff is entitled to relief by injunction he is also entitled to a discovery of the facts upon which his right to relief is based. 10 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 937; N. & W. R. Co. v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 88 Va. 932, 14 S. E. Rep. 689.

The bill should not call upon the defendant to disclose the nature and character of his own title to the subject-matter of the controversy, where such inquiries do not pertain to the title of the plaintiff and are not necessary to maintain the plaintiff's title. N. & W. R. Co. v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 88 Va. 932, 14 S. E. Rep. 689.

An injunction to restrain a telegraph company from going on the plaintiff's land for the purpose of condemning a right of way, until a discovery be had of the company's incorporation, and the proceedings authorizing the condemnation proceedings, should not be granted, as one is not entitled to a discovery of the facts by which another's case is to be established, but only of those necessary for his own. Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 88 Va. 932, 14 S. E. Rep. 689.

E. VERIFICATION OF THE BILL.—The following affidavit to a bill of injunction was held to be insufficient under the West Virginia statute: "James Montgomery on his solemn oath says, that each and every allegation contained in the foregoing bill, are true so far as they are known to him personally, and so far as he has heard, he believes them to be true." C. & O. R. Co. v. Huse, 5 W. Va. 579.

It is no objection to a bill of injunction that it is sworn to by a person not one of the plaintiffs, if the affidavit is good in other respects. C. & O. R. Co. v. Huse, 5 W. Va. 579.

An injunction ought not to be awarded, which is verified only by the affidavit of an agent of the plaintiff, "that the facts and allegations contained in the bill, so far as stated therein on his own knowledge are true, and so far as stated on information, he believes them to be true," where the bill alleges no facts of which the agent had any personal knowledge so far as appears on the face of the bill, and there are no exhibits sustaining the material allegations of the bill. Shonk v. Knight, 12 W. Va. 667.

Although the affidavit filed with the bill is not of itself sufficient to authorize a judge to grant an injunction, yet if there are properly certified copies of documents and records filed with the bill as exhibits and evidence, and they, together with the affidavit, are sufficient to satisfy the judge that the injunction should be granted, it is not error for the judge to grant the injunction. Oil Run Petroleum Co. v. Gale, 6 W. Va. 525.

Digitized by Google

F. AMENDMENT.—As a general rule, the court will at any time before the hearing grant leave to amend, where the bill is defective as to parties, or in the mistake or omission of any fact or circumstance connected with the substance of the bill or not repugnant thereto. The amendment may be made by common order before answer or demurrer, and afterwards by leave of the court. Holland v. Trotter, 22 Gratt. 136. See Bart. Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 344-351. See especially, monographic note on "Amended Bills" appended to Belton v. Apperson, 26 Gratt. 207.

G. CONSTRUCTION.—A preliminary injunction will be construed to be in accord with the allegations of the bill, if the language used admits of such construction. McEldowney v. Lowther (W. Va.), 38 S. E. Rep. 644.

VII. THE DEMURRER.

A bill for an injunction to the judgment of a justice on the verdict of the jury, which shows on its face that the plaintiffs have a plain, adequate remedy at law, is fatally defective; and on demurrer thereto the temporary injunction awarded should be dissolved, and the bill dismissed. Shay v. Nolan, 46 W. Va. 299, 33 S. E. Rep. 225.

Where a complainant in a bill of injunction appears and contests the case on a demurrer, he waives notice of the demurrer. Hyre v. Hoover, 3 W. Va. 11.

Where a bond is executed pursuant to a decree in equity requiring its execution in order to stay the issuance of an injunction, the fact that the bond does not conform to the requirements of the decree is no ground for a demurrer to a declaration on the bond, since the bond does not derive its efficacy from the decree directing its execution. Blankenship v. Ely, 98 Va. 359, 36 S. E. Rep. 484.

Failure to Allege That Complainant's Right Has Been Established in Action at Law.—A bill to enjoin the construction and maintenance of a millidam is not demurrable for want of equity, in that it contains no allegation that the complainant's right has been established in an action at law. Switzer v. McCulloch, 76 Va. 777.

Want of Jurisdiction.—Although a bill of injunction may pray for relief, which a court of equity has not jurisdiction to grant, still if the bill prays for other relief which the statements of the bill prima facie authorize, it is error in the court to sustain a demurrer to the bill and dissolve the injunction and dismiss the bill, because of its want of jurisdiction to grant all the relief prayed for. Frank & Co. v. Brunnemann, 8 W. Va. 462.

Nonjoinder of Parties.—Although it appears on the face of a bill of injunction that the personal representative of a deceased lessee, who died intestate, is a necessary party defendant to the suit, before final adjudication, yet if it appears by the bill that such personal representative had not at the time of the filing thereof been appointed, a demurrer to the bill should not be sustained and the injunction dissolved and the bill dismissed, merely because such personal representative is not made a party to the original bill, at least until a reasonable time for the appointment of such personal representative and making him a party defendant shall have been allowed by the court. Frank v. Brunnemann, 8 W. Va. 462.

Bill Demurrable for Want of Certainty.—The complainants in a suit to restrain the sale of lands under a deed of trust given to secure an unpaid balance of purchase money, claimed credit as mortgagors against such balance for damages for the cutting of timber upon a portion of the lands, which portion, they alleged, had been conveyed by their vendor, a defendant in the suit, to other persons prior to the conveyance thereof to them. There was no allegation in the bill that the cutting took place after their purchase, or by whom it was done, or that they did not get all the land for which they had contracted. Held, that the bill was demurrable for want of certainty and precision. Cleaver v. Matthews, 83 Va. 801, 3 S. E. Rep. 439.

Failure to Set Out in What Respect Injury Would Be Irreparable.—A bill alleging that the plaintiff is the owner of a tract of land covered by valuable growing timber, that the plaintiffs are engaged in cutting and removing the same, that, if not restrained, they will continue to cut and remove said timber, that said waste has greatly injured him, and that if the defendants are allowed to continue the cutting of said timber the injury will be irreparable; but not setting forth in what way the injury will be irreparable, does not show jurisdiction in a court of equity, and will be dismissed on demurrer. Watson v. Ferrell, 34 W. Va. 406, 12 S. E. Rep. 724.

A bill to enjoin the foreclosure of a usurious mortgage is demurrable, where it fails to show in what respect the plaintiff would be injured by the sale. Saunders v. Balto. Building & Loan Ass'n (Va.), 37 S. E. Rep. 775.

VIII. THE ANSWER.

"There seems to be some confusion of opinion among the legal profession, as to when and where an answer may be filed to a bill of injunction, and be considered and have its proper effect on a motion to dissolve. In the case of Goddin v. Vaughn's Ex'ors et al., 14 Gratt. 102, JUDGE LEE in delivering the opinion of the court, at pages 129 and 130 says: 'Another objection taken for the first time in the argument here, is that the motion to dissolve was premature, or at least that the answer should not have been read on the hearing, because it had not been filed in court or at the rules. Generally it is true that an answer can only be filed during the session of the court or at the rules, but by our statute, as I think, an exception is made in cases of injunction. The object, in giving the judge in vacation power to dissolve an injunction, was to prevent delay and this would be to some extent defeated, if a party had to wait until the rule day or a session of the court, before he could put in his answer, and have the benefit of it on a motion to dissolve. I think the larger power to entertain and decide the motion to dissolve, embraces that of receiving the answer and making it a part of the record. If there was anything in the objection, it should properly have been made, when the motion to dissolve was heard,' etc. It seems to me, that these views of JUDGE LEE are correct and well founded, and I think in addition, that the answer may not only be received, as stated by JUDGE LEE and made a part of the record, but that a replication to such answer may likewise be received, and made a part of the record by the judge at the hearing of the motion to dissolve." Hayzlett v. McMillan, 11 W. Va. 464.

Digitized by Google

A conveyed a tract of land in trust to secure to B the payment of a note containing a provision that it was to be subject to any credit which the maker might show he had paid on said claim or debt upon a fair adjustment of all matters between them. The trustee, proceeding to sell the land under the deed of trust, was enjoined by A on the ground, among others, that he did not owe B anything on settlement, and prayed for a settlement to be had between them to ascertain his indebtedness, if anything, to B. The defendants filed an answer in the nature of a cross bill, alleging prior liens on the land by judgments against A, and making the judgment creditors of A parties to the suit, and praying for a convention of the lien creditors, and to ascertain the amounts and priorities of the liens. Held, that the court did not err in permitting the answer and cross bill to be filed. Martin v. Kester (W. Va.), 39 S. E. Rep. 599.

Where a bill of injunction to stay proceedings on a judgment charges the plaintiff at law with having failed to do an act on which the equity of his claim depends, and, in his answer, he takes no notice of the allegation, the court, on the hearing, will consider this as an admission that he has not done the act in question, and will decree against him without any exception to the answer, or any interlocutory order taking the bill for confessed in part. Page v. Winston, 2 Munf. 298.

IX. ORDER OF REFERENCE.

A bill to enjoin a carrier from collecting wharfage, and to require it to account for amounts paid by the several plaintiffs, did not aver how much was paid in the aggregate, or in what proportion or under what circumstances, and was wholly denied by the answer and not supported by proof. Held, that the court, on granting the injunction, could not order a reference to ascertain the amount of wharfage collected from the plaintiffs. Balto., etc., Co. v. Williams, 94 Va. 422, 26 S. E. Rep. 841.

X. THE BOND.

A. NECESSITY FOR.—An order from the chancellor granting an injunction to a judgment at law upon the "usual terms," is not sufficient to stay the proceedings, until the complainant has complied with the terms of the order by giving bond and security. Clarke v. Hoomes, 2 H. & M. 23.

The injunction should not take effect until the bond is given, but if by accident it is made to take effect before, this is not sufficient error to warrant the appellate court in reversing the order granting the injunction. A party ought to be allowed a reasonable time after his attention is called to the defect in the bond, by rule or notice, in which to execute a proper bond, and on his failure to do so the injunction ought to be dismissed. C. & O. R. Co. v. Patton, 5 W. Va. 234.

It is error in the chancellor to grant an injunction, without requiring security, except in the case of executors, administrators, and other fiduciary characters. Lomax v. Picot, 2 Rand. 247.

Same—Personal Representatives Not Required to Give Bond.—Executors and administrators, having given security for their administration, are not generally required to give security on obtaining injunctions. Wilson v. Wilson, 1 H. & M. 16; Lomax v. Picot, 2 Rand. 247; Shearman v. Christian, 1 Rand. 393; Va. Code 1887, § 3442. And if such bond be given it is void both as a statutory bond and at common law. State v. Johnson, 28 W. Va. 56.

B. CONDITIONS.—Where the conditions of an injunction bond are not as extensive as the statute requires, but it contains a material part of the condition required, the bond is not void, but binds the obligors to the extent of such condition or conditions; and where the bond contains some conditions or promises not required by the statute, and some of those which are required, it is valid and binding to the extent of the latter. Holliday v. Myers, 11 W. Va. 276. See Gillespie v. Thompson, 5 Gratt. 132; White v. Clay, 7 Leigh 68; Fox v. Mountjoy, 6 Munf. 36; Pratt v. Wright, 13 Gratt. 175, 67 Am. Dec. 767; Gibson v. Beckham, 16 Gratt. 321; Porter v. Daniels, 11 W. Va. 250.

An injunction bond payable upon the contingency specified in its condition, given before a deed of land which is a preference of one creditor over others, and which stands for the benefit of all creditors, on which bond judgment is recovered after the date of such deed, is entitled, under W. Va. Code 1891, ch. 74, § 2, to share in said land, the owner of such judgment being a creditor. The contingent character of the bond makes no difference. First Nat. Bank of Cumberland v. Parsons, 45 W. Va. 688, 32 S. E. Rep. 271.

Where an injunction bond does not bind the obligors to pay such costs as may become due, this is not a defect of which the obligors can complain. Gillespie v. Thompson, 5 Gratt. 132.

C. EXECUTION.—The Virginia statute (now Va. Code 1887, § 3442) does not require that the bond upon an injunction to a judgment shall be executed in the presence of the court, but it must be executed before the clerk of the court in which the judgment was obtained. The fact that it was given before the court will not, however, vitiate such bond. Harman v. Howe, 27 Gratt. 676.

In an action on a bond given to stay injunction proceedings, the defence was that the defendants signed as sureties under an agreement that the principal should also sign. It appeared that the principal's husband signed her name to the bond, at her request, and that the bond was filed in the injunction suit and proceedings therein accordingly stayed to the principal's benefit. Held, that such signing by the husband was a sufficient compliance with the agreement to bind the sureties. Blankenship v. Ely, 98 Va. 359, 36 S. E. Rep. 484.

The surety in the injunction bond being held insufficient, and another bond being executed with other sureties, upon a dissolution of the injunction the sureties in both bonds are equally liable. Bentley v. Harris, 2 Gratt. 357.

D. AMOUNT.—A bond was given upon an injunction to a judgment for money, and in the penalty it said "in the just and full sum of seven hundred and seventy-six, lawful money of Virginia." Held, that the word "dollars" was obviously left out by mistake, and the bond will be treated as if the word was in it. Harman v. Howe, 27 Gratt. 676.

Where an injunction bond has been signed, sealed and acknowledged by the obligors in the presence of the court, and has been accepted and acted on as their bond, the obligors are estopped to deny that the penalty of the bond conforms to the direction of the judge who awarded the injunction. Harman v. Howe, 27 Gratt. 676. See Wray v. Davenport, 79 Va. 19.

Digitized by Google

E. REQUIRING NEW OR ADDITIONAL BOND.—It is within the power of a judge of the circuit court to make an order in vacation requiring a complainant to give a new injunction bond with additional security. Hutchinson v. Landcraft, 4 W. Va. 312.

If at any time the security for prosecuting an injunction shall prove to be insufficient, the court will require unexceptionable security to be given. Ross v. Pleasants, 1 H. & M. 1.

The power to grant injunctions in vacation and to require a bond to be then given carries with it, as a necessary incident, the right to hear and determine in vacation a motion to require a new bond to be executed with an enlarged penalty. Hutchinson v. Landcraft, 4 W. Va. 316; Mason v. Harper's Ferry Bridge Co., 17 W. Va. 407.

Upon a motion before a judge in vacation to require of the plaintiff a new injunction bond with an enlarged penalty, the proper order, if the old bond is insufficient, is, if the new bond is not given within such reasonable time, as the court under the circumstances shall fix, that after such time the injunction shall be dissolved until such bond be given. Mason v. Harper's Ferry Bridge Co., 17 W. Va. 408.

The order of a judge of the supreme court granting an injunction which had been refused by the lower court is, when returned by the lower court, a record there, in effect an order of the lower court; and the judge of the lower court may act upon it as an order of his own court and increase the bond fixed by the supreme court. This, however, cannot be done at rules, when the court is not in term; but the case must be matured as any other case, and regularly proceeded with. Ruffin v. Commercial Bank, 90 Va. 708, 19 S. E. Rep. 790.

It is error to order an increase of an injunction bond, where the claim of the adverse party is fully protected by collateral security. Ruffin v. Commercial Bank, 90 Va. 708, 19 S. E. Rep. 790.

If the powers of trustees suing in chancery are vacated, pending the suit, upon a bill filed against them by their cestui que trust and other trustees are appointed, it seems that the court may change the plaintiffs after answer filed upon terms of the new trustees paying the costs already incurred and giving security for future costs; but it cannot vacate an injunction bond given by the original trustees, and direct another to be executed, without previous notice to the defendants, that they may show cause against the motion. Galt v. Carter, 6 Munf. 245.

F. LIABILITIES ON THE BOND.

1. ACCRUAL OF LIABILITY.—Where the plaintiff in an injunction suit dismisses his bill at rules, the defendant has an immediate right of action on the injunction bond, and need not wait until the order of dismissal is confirmed at the next term of the court. Roach v. Gardner, 9 Gratt. 89.

The condition of an injunction bond is broken by a dissolution of the injunction in part, as well as by a total dissolution; so that an action lies on the bond, whether the injunction be partly or wholly dissolved. White v. Clay, 7 Leigh 68.

2. LIABILITIES OF SURETIES.—A principal debtor in a judgment obtained an injunction thereto, and executed an injunction bond, with a third person as surety; the surety in the judgment not being a party to the injunction. Upon a dissolution of the injunction, it was held that the surety in the injunction bond was liable for the debt enjoined, before the surety in the judgment. Bentley v. Harris, 2 Gratt. 357.

Where an injunction bond was executed by the obligors before the clerk of the court, and in the presence of the court, and was accepted and acted on as their bond, the surety is estopped from setting up the defence, that by express agreement with his principal he signed the bond upon the express condition that another person named should sign it, and that this fact was announced to the clerk at the time the said surety signed it, the obligee knowing nothing of such agreement. Harman v. Howe, 27 Gratt. 678.

Where an injunction is dissolved upon a condition, and that condition has been complied with by the defendant in equity, the surety in the injunction bond is not exonerated. Gray v. Campbell, 3 Munf. 251.

3. ACTIONS ON BOND.

a. Right to Maintain Successive Actions.—Where an injunction bond is made payable to the state, actions may be prosecuted thereon from time to time for the benefit of the person injured by the breach of the condition thereof, until damages are recovered in the aggregate equal to the penalty of the bond. State v. Hall, 40 W. Va. 455, 21 S. E. Rep. 760.

b. Parties—Joinder of Plaintiffs.—Where an injunction bond is joint as to the obligees, joint and several as to the obligors, a joint action may be brought by the obligees, and a joint judgment rendered for the whole of their demand, although the claims due them respectively may be of different amounts and may bear interest from different dates. Peerce v. Athey, 4 W. Va. 22.

c. Pleading.—In an action on an injunction bond brought to recover damages upon the dissolution of the injunction, where none have been awarded by the decree dissolving the same, the declaration must specify the particular injuries complained of occasioning such damages with such clearness and distinctness of statement that they may be understood by the party who is to answer the same. State v. Purcell, 31 W. Va. 44, 5 S. E. Rep. 301.

In an action on a bond given on an injunction to restrain the collection of a judgment, the plaintiff must show title to the judgment. State v. Hall, 40 W. Va. 455, 21 S. E. Rep. 760.

Where the condition of an injunction bond in pursuance of the statute provides that the plaintiff in the injunction cause shall faithfully prosecute said injunction, and shall pay the amount of the judgment enjoined, and all such costs as may be awarded against the complainants, and all such damages as shall be incurred in case the injunction be dissolved, the declaration must aver that the plaintiff in the injunction, by reason of the dissolution thereof, has incurred and become liable to pay the plaintiff in the suit on said bond some amount of damages. State v. Hall, 40 W. Va. 455, 21 S. E. Rep. 760.

d. Evidence.—On the trial of an action of debt on an injunction bond extracts from the decrees and orders in the injunction cause are competent and sufficient evidence without producing the whole record. White v. Clay, 7 Leigh 68. As to the admissibility of the record of an injunction cause as evidence in an action upon an injunction bond, see Arthur v. Crenshaw, 4 Leigh 394.

e. Defences.—In an action of debt on an injunction bond, the obligors are estopped to deny that there is such a judgment as that which the bond describes, or that the injunction has been awarded. Bank v

Digitized by Google

Fleshman, 22 W. Va. 317. See Blankenship v. Ely, 98 Va. 359, 36 S. E. Rep. 484.

It is no plea to an action on an injunction bond, "that the injunction was not dissolved unconditionally; but upon terms that the plaintiff at law should execute a bond for securing the title to a tract of land;" without averring in the plea that such bond has not been given. Gray v. Campbell, 3 Munf. 251.

The failure of one of the obligors in a bond to sign it in person, if it can be set up as a defence in any case by the other obligors, cannot be set up where it appears that judgment has been rendered against such obligor, and no one has been injured by his failure to sign and acknowledge the bond in proper person. Blankenship v. Ely, 98 Va. 359, 36 S. E. Rep. 484.

f. Damages and Costs.—Where no bond has been required on suing out an injunction, damages are not recoverable, unless the injunction was sued out maliciously and without probable cause. Glen Jean, etc., R. Co. v. Kanawha, etc., R. Co. (W. Va.), 35 S. E. Rep. 978.

Where the condition of an injunction bond provides for the payment of such damages as may be awarded by the court, and the court simply dissolves the injunction and dismisses the bill, the order of dissolution necessarily imports that the damages are to be paid, unless they are expressly remitted by the terms of the order. Claytor v. Anthony, 15 Gratt. 518.

In an action on a bond for prosecuting an injunction to stay proceedings upon a judgment at law, for a debt bearing interest; which injunction is dissolved and the bill dismissed; the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict for the amount of the principal sum with lawful interest to the time of finding such verdict, the costs at law and in chancery (costs being awarded to the plaintiff by the decree), with damages on the said principal sum at the rate of ten per centum per annum, during the pendency of the injunction; although the condition of the bond be, for payment of the "judgment, and costs of the injunction" (if ruled to be paid "by the complainant"),—without mentioning interest or damages. Fox v. Mountjoy, 6 Munf. 36.

The surety in a bond for the prosecution of an injunction is not liable for the costs and damages which may accrue on an appeal to a superior court. Woodson v. Johns, 3 Munf. 230.

Same—Counsel Fees as Damages—West Virginia.—A reasonable amount paid as compensation to counsel as an item of the expense necessarily incurred in procuring the dissolution of an injunction wrongfully obtained may be recovered in a suit for damages upon an injunction bond. State v. Medford, 34 W. Va. 633, 12 S. E. Rep. 864; High on Injunctions (3d Ed.) 1061.

Same—Same—Virginia.—In an action on an injunction bond with condition "to pay all such costs as may be awarded against the plaintiff, and all such damages as shall be incurred in case the said injunction be dissolved," fees paid to counsel in the injunction suit cannot be recovered as damages, although the bill be a pure bill of injunction. Wisecarver v. Wisecarver, 97 Va. 452, 34 S. E. Rep. 50, 5 Va. Law Reg. 462, and notes, pp. 465, 565, 578. See Burruss v. Hines, 94 Va. 413, 26 S. E. Rep. 875.

XI. COSTS.

A defendant who is properly enjoined from collecting a debt, though not from prosecuting it to judgment, is liable for the costs of the injunction proceedings. Shipman v. Fletcher, 95 Va. 585, 29 S. E. Rep. 325.

Where an injunction is granted to a judgment at law, it will, in general, be at the cost of the complainant. Mosby v. Haskins, 4 H. & M. 427.

Where an injunction against a judgment at law is perpetuated as to part, being the amount of just discounts claimed by the plaintiff in equity of which he might have availed himself at law if he had made defence, and is dissolved as to the residue, it is proper for the chancellor to decree that the plaintiff in equity shall pay the defendant there his costs. Donally v. Ginatt, 5 Leigh 359.

Where an injunction is perpetuated in part, the complainant should not, as a matter of course, be decreed to pay costs; and the error of awarding costs against the complainant is sufficient, on his appeal, to reverse the decree, although correct in every other respect. Ross v. Gordon, 2 Munf. 289.

Where, pending a bill for an injunction to a judgment and for the rescission of a contract for the purchase of land on the ground of an incumbrance and defect of title, the vendor removes the incumbrance and procures the title, the injunction should be dissolved, but without damages, and with costs to the plaintiff. Young v. McClung, 9 Gratt. 336; Reeves v. Dickey, 10 Gratt. 138.

Where there is an injunction to a judgment against two or more persons, and only one signs the injunction bond or applies for the injunction upon dissolution there should not be an award of execution for damages and costs against all the judgment debtors, but only against those signing the bond or asking the injunction. Graham v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 45 W. Va. 701, 32 S. E. Rep. 245.

Where a purchaser comes into equity to enjoin a judgment for the purchase money of land, on the ground of failure of title, he is entitled to costs, though the title is afterwards perfected, and the injunction dissolved. Reeves v. Dickey, 10 Gratt. 138.

Costs Cannot Be Decreed until Final Hearing.—Costs should not be taxed upon overruling or sustaining a motion to dissolve an injunction. Barnett v. Spencer, 2 H. & M. 7. See Davenport v. Mason, 2 Wash. 200.

XII. VIOLATION OF INJUNCTIONS.

Where the defendant's employees, without orders, drive across the complainant's railroad after the award of an injunction to restrain trespassing on its roadway, and the defendant disclaims all evil intent, it is error to impose a fine for the contempt. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. N. & W. R. Co., 88 Va. 929, 14 S. E. Rep. 803.

Where an injunction is granted, which is not to take effect or be in force until the plaintiff executed a bond, acts done before the execution of the bond constitute no breach of the injunction. State v. Irwin, 30 W. Va. 404, 4 S. E. Rep. 413.

Where an injunction is granted, but not to take effect or be in force until the plaintiff executes a bond, it is a conditional granting of the injunction So, where such an injunction was granted on the fourteenth of July, 1886, the bond increased on the eighteenth of August, 1886, and no bond executed until the eleventh of October, 1886; and on the twenty-first of August and thirty-first of the same month, in the year 1886, acts were done which would have been contempt had the injunction been in force, it was held that the injunction did not take effect until after the acts were done, that there was no breach of the injunction, and consequently no contempt of the injunction order. State v. Irwin, 30 W. Va. 404, 4 S. E. Rep. 413.

Digitized by Google

Knowledge of Injunction.—Where a party has actual notice of an order of injunction, although it may not have been yet served, or be defectively served upon him, the order becomes operative on him from that time. Osborn v. Glasscock, 39 W. Va. 749, 20 S. E. Rep. 702.

XIII. MODIFICATION OF INJUNCTIONS.

A court of equity may modify an injunction on the furnishing of a bond of indemnity, where it appears that the party interested will suffer by continuing the injunction in force pending the litigation. Campbell v. Point Pleasant, etc., R. Co., 23 W. Va. 448.

Where an injunction, as awarded, is too broad, but the facts call for a more limited one, on a motion to dissolve, the injunction should be modified and made one warranted by the bill; and it is error to wholly overrule the motion to dissolve, and allow the excessive injunction to continue. Neale v. County Court, 43 W. Va. 90, 27 S. E. Rep. 370.

A preliminary injunction must not do what can only be done after full hearing by final decree, as by changing the possession of realty, or depriving one in possession of its benefits, in any other respect than as to the wrongful act proper to be enjoined; the proper purpose of such injunction being to preserve the present status until a full hearing on the merits shall be had. An injunction as to so much of it as is excessive is void, and ought to be modified on motion. Bettman v. Harness, 42 W. Va. 433, 26 S. E. Rep. 271.

An injunction which inhibits a life tenant from "cutting or removing any timber from said land, and from removing the buildings thereon or any part thereof, or from otherwise injuring the same," is entirely too broad and indefinite, and interferes with the life tenant's proper enjoyment of his tenancy. Greathouse v. Greathouse, 46 W. Va. 21, 32 S. E. Rep. 994.

XIV. CONTINUANCE OF INJUNCTIONS.

Although the answer plainly and positively denies the allegations of the bill, yet, if the facts and circumstances shown by the pleadings, exhibits and affidavits are strongly presumptive in favor of the plaintiff's equity, it is not appealable error for the circuit court to continue an ancillary injunction, awarded for the purpose of preserving the status of property, until the final hearing. Robrecht v. Robrecht, 46 W. Va. 738, 34 S. E. Rep. 801.

Where on the bill and answer denying all equity in the bill, there is a motion to dissolve an injunction, it is customary to dissolve; but for good cause the motion may be overruled, and the injunction continued till the hearing without any adjudication of the principles of the cause. Kahn v. Kerngood, 80 Va. 342.

On a motion to dissolve a mere ancillary injunction, the circuit court can only be required to investigate the main cause so far as to ascertain that the equities between the parties are sufficiently doubtful to justify the continuance of the injunction until the final hearing. Robrecht v. Robrecht, 46 W. Va. 738, 34 S. E. Rep. 801.

Upon an application to a court of equity to enjoin a judgment at law, and grant a new trial in the case, it is error in the court to perpetuate the injunction, set aside the judgment, and grant a new trial of the cause which had been terminated; and to finally dispose of the suit in equity. In such case the judgment at law is a security for anything the plaintiff at law may be entitled to; and a court of equity should continue the injunction, and direct proper issues; and upon the coming in of the verdict, perpetuate the injunction, or dissolve it in whole or in part according to the finding of the jury. Knifong v. Hendricks, 2 Gratt. 212, 44 Am. Dec. 385. See Bank of Washington v. Hupp, 10 Gratt. 23.

Injunction against Judgment for Purchase Money Not Dissolved until Vendor Tenders Good Deed.—An injunction to a judgment for the purchase money ought not to be dissolved until a good and sufficient deed for the land is tendered by the vendor. Grantland v. Wight, 2 Munf. 179.

Where Injunction Continued until Indebtedness Ascertained.—Where an injunction is obtained to a sale under a deed of trust on grounds that are insufficient or unsustained, the injunction, nevertheless, should not be dissolved until the indebtedness is ascertained by a commissioner of the court. White v. Mechanics', etc., Ass'n, 22 Gratt. 233.

XV. DISSOLUTION AND ABATEMENT.

A. COURTS WHICH HAVE POWER TO DISSOLVE.—Under the West Virginia statute, the power of the judge of a circuit court to dissolve an injunction in vacation is not confined to the county in which the suit is pending, but may be exercised in any other county of his circuit. Hayzlett v. McMillan, 11 W. Va. 464; Horn v. Perry, 11 W. Va. 694.

B. GROUNDS FOR DISSOLUTION.

1. EXISTENCE OF ADEQUATE LEGAL REMEDY.—An obligation given on the retainer of counsel to defend the obligor on the charge of forgery was assigned by the counsel and judgment was obtained thereupon by the assignees, on which judgment execution issued, under which a forthcoming bond was taken, and judgment was rendered thereupon. After these proceedings, without any defence having been made at law, and without any excuse for not making it, an injunction was obtained on the ground that the obligor was induced to employ the obligee by the menace that if he did not the obligee would act as counsel against him in aid of the prosecution. Held, that the injunction should be dissolved and the bill dismissed, for if in law such a contract was valid, a court of equity has no right to absolve a party from it; and if in law the contract was invalid, the defence should have been made in that forum. Hendricks v. Compton, 2 Rob. 192.

Where the defendant in a bill of discovery makes no discovery, but, on the contrary, denies the allegations of the bill, the injunction awarded on the bill should be dissolved. Webster v. Couch, 6 Rand. 519.

2. INJUNCTION IMPROVIDENTLY AWARDED.—Where a judgment has been enjoined and a new trial at law ordered, the court, if it is satisfied that the injunction ought to have been dissolved, will, although no verdict has been certified, set aside the order for a new trial, and dissolve the injunction. Vass v. Magee, 1 H. & M. 2.

Same—Where Bill Taken for Confessed.—Where a bill of injunction has been taken for confessed, for want of an answer, a motion by the defendant to discharge it as having been improvidently awarded will not be entertained. Turpin v. Jefferson, 4 H. & M. 483.

3. LACHES IN PROSECUTING CAUSE.—Where a plaintiff has failed to use due diligence to expedite his cause and procure the answers of all the defendants, he cannot complain that an injunction was dissolved before they had all answered. Shonk v. Knight, 12 W. Va. 667.

Digitized by Google

If an injunction be obtained to stay proceedings on a judgment or decree, and the plaintiff neglects for an unreasonable length of time to summon other defendants, or to have an order of publication, or to amend his bill, when he knows there are other necessary defendants in the cause, or otherwise unnecessarily fails to expedite the suit, the court will, on motion of the defendant, even before the answer is filed, dissolve the injunction because of such unreasonable delay caused by the plaintiff's negligence in preparing his case. But if the defendant, whose judgment is enjoined, acquiesce in it for years by making no motion to dissolve such injunction, if he then moves to dissolve it, even after the filing of his answer years after the filing of the bill, the court, because of his long delay, ought to refuse to dissolve the injunction on his motion, but ought to continue it till the hearing, unless the evidence to sustain the dissolution is such as to satisfy the court that the case cannot be changed by any proof which the plaintiff can produce; such, for instance, as a judgment or decree estopping the plaintiff from proving the material allegation in his bill. But in such case the court should require the plaintiff to expedite his cause, and as promptly as possible have it matured at rules and set for hearing, under the penalty, in case of failure, of a dissolution of his injunction on motion, before the cause is ready for hearing, because of such unreasonable delay. McCoy v. McCoy, 29 W. Va. 794, 2 S. E. Rep. 809.

An injunction was awarded against a common-law judgment on the ground of newly-discovered evidence. It appeared that the plaintiff suspected the existence of the ground of defence sought to be introduced before the rendition of judgment, and knew of two witnesses by whom it could be proved, if it did exist, but he failed to have these witnesses summoned, and consented to the judgment, upon the agreement that the plaintiff would not enforce the execution for a year. Held, that the injunction should be dissolved at the plaintiff's costs. Hevener v. McClung, 22 W. Va. 81.

4. NONADMISSION OF ATTORNEY PROSECUTING INJUNCTION PROCEEDINGS.—The fact that the attorney who prepared the complainant's bill of injunction had not been admitted to practice in the court where the injunction was granted is no ground for the dissolution of the injunction and dismissal of the bill. Peterson v. Parriott, 4 W. Va. 42.

5. INVALIDITY OF AWARD.—Where an award is held invalid, an injunction depending on it must be dissolved. Tate v. Vance, 27 Gratt. 571.

6. MULTIFARIOUSNESS OF BILL.—If a bill, in part a bill of injunction, is multifarious, that objection cannot be made on a motion to dissolve the injunction. It must be made at the hearing. Beall v. Shaull, 18 W. Va. 258; Shirley v. Long, 6 Rand. 764.

7. DEFECT OF PARTIES.—A motion to be admitted as a defendant is not regular. But in case of an injunction, if it appear that the person making the motion is interested in the subject of controversy, the court will order the injunction to be dissolved, unless the plaintiff will amend his bill, and make him a defendant. Harrison v. Morton, 4 H. & M. 483.

C. RIGHT TO DISSOLUTION.

1. DISCRETION OF COURT.—The dissolution of injunctions, and applications to hear or to postpone the hearing of motions to dissolve them, are largely matters of judicial discretion, and the appellate court will not disturb the action of the court below where it appears that the discretion has been soundly exercised, or where the contrary does not appear in the record. Ingles v. Straus, 91 Va. 209, 21 S. E. Rep. 490.

It rests in the sound discretion of the court to dissolve an interlocutory injunction upon the coming in of the answer denying the equities of the bill, or to continue it to a final hearing on the merits, especially where fraud is the gravamen of the bill, or where dissolution would result in greater injury than continuance till hearing. Jenkins v. Waller, 80 Va. 668.

2. LACHES IN SEEKING DISSOLUTION.—Where an injunction has been granted against a defendant, substantially in accordance with his answer, and the order has been acquiesced in by him for several years, and the practice it was intended to prevent has been abandoned, it is not error to refuse to dissolve it. Balto., etc., Co. v. Williams, 94 Va. 422, 26 S. E. Rep. 841.

D. DISSOLUTION IN VACATION.—Upon a motion in vacation to dissolve an injunction, it is error for the court to proceed to hear the case on its merits, and dismiss the bill, in the absence of the consent of record required by the statute. The injunction may be dissolved in vacation, but the hearing on the merits should stand over until the term. Mount v. Radford Trust Co., 93 Va. 427, 25 S. E. Rep. 244, 5 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas., N. S., 92.

Where a cause has been removed and received by the clerk, the defendant may, upon notice, in vacation before the next term of the court to which the cause is removed, move the judge to dissolve the injunction which had been granted. Muller v. Bayly, 21 Gratt. 521.

The plaintiff in an injunction cannot deprive the defendant of the benefit of his answer, upon the hearing in vacation of a motion to dissolve, by filing exceptions thereto; for the motion and the exceptions may be taken up and heard at the same time and in vacation. Sandusky v. Faris (W. Va.), 38 S. E. Rep. 563.

Upon the hearing in vacation of a motion to dissolve an injunction, the judge may examine the bill, answer and exceptions thereto, and if the exceptions were not well taken, may disregard them. Sandusky v. Faris (W. Va.), 38 S. E. Rep. 563.

It is irregular to dissolve an injunction in court with a direction that the order shall not go out, and then in vacation to direct that the order shall go out. Randolph v. Randolph, 6 Rand. 194.

Where an injunction has been obtained in vacation, the defendant may file his answer and move the court to dissolve the injunction, without filing the answer either at rules or in term. Goddin v. Vaughn, 14 Gratt. 102.

E. STAGE AT WHICH DISSOLUTION MAY BE HAD.

Before Answer.—As a general rule, subject to some exceptions, an injunction, properly granted, will not be dissolved until the defendant has answered. Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Old Dominion Baggage Co., 97 Va. 89, 33 S. E. Rep. 385, 5 Va. Law Reg. 256.

Digitized by Google

It is error to dissolve an injunction where the facts charged in the bill, if true, are sufficient to sustain the injunction, unless an answer has been filed denying the facts charged. Peterson v. Parriott, 4 W. Va. 42.

A preliminary injunction may be dissolved on motion before answer. Russell v. Dickeschied, 24 W. Va. 61.

Before Process Served on Defendant.—An injunction may be dissolved on motion before process is served on the defendant. Shields v. McClung, 6 W. Va. 79.

Before Final Hearing.—Where an injunction was granted on a bill alleging that the respondents were asserting ownership to land claimed to be paid for by the complainant, and the documentary evidence tended to establish the fact of payment, though denied by the respondents, it was error to dissolve the injunction before the cause was matured and came on for final hearing. Gray v. Overstreet, 7 Gratt. 346.

Where no motion is made to dissolve an injunction until the cause is regularly set for hearing on the court docket, the hearing shall be final. Byrne v. Lyle, 1 H. & M. 7.

F. MOTION.

1. NECESSITY FOR—WANT OF JURISDICTION.—Where the bill does not state a proper case for relief in equity, the court will dismiss it at the hearing, though no objection has been taken to the jurisdiction by the defendant in his pleadings. Hudson v. Kline, 9 Gratt. 379; Morehead v. De Ford, 6 W. Va. 816.

2. NOTICE OF MOTION.—Where a motion to dissolve an injunction is made in open court in term time, it is not necessary to give the opposite party notice in writing of the intention to make such motion. Kester v. Alexander (W. Va.), 34 S. E. Rep. 819; White Sulphur Springs Co. v. Robinson, 3 W. Va. 542.

Where a bill of injunction is still at rules, not on the court docket, because not matured for hearing, the defendant may move the court to dissolve the injunction; but the opposite party, who does not appear, must have reasonable notice of such motion. Fadely v. Tomlinson, 41 W. Va. 606, 24 S. E. Rep. 645.

3. CONTINUANCE.—It is a general rule not to continue a motion to dissolve an injunction, unless from some very great necessity, because the court is always open to grant, and, of course, to reinstate, an injunction whenever it shall appear proper to do so; and because, too, the plaintiff should always be ready to prove his bill. Steelsmith v. Fisher Oil Co. (W. Va.), 35 S. E. Rep. 15; Kester v. Alexander (W. Va.), 34 S. E. Rep. 819; Pithole Creek Petroleum Co. v. Rittenhouse, 12 W. Va. 813; Arbuckle v. McClanahan, 6 W. Va. 107; Emmons v. Pidcock, 93 Va. 146, 24 S. E. Rep. 905; Ingles v. Straus, 91 Va. 209, 21 S. E. Rep. 490; Radford v. Innes, 1 H. & M. 7. See also, Tiffany v. Kent, 2 Gratt. 231.

On a motion to dissolve an injunction restraining a sale under a deed of trust, it is error to deny a continuance asked for by the plaintiff to enable him to obtain additional material evidence to prove that the notice of sale was defective, where he has been unable to obtain such evidence by the use of due diligence. Vaught v. Rider, 83 Va. 659, 3 S. E. Rep. 293.

4. CANNOT BE MADE BY PARTY IN CONTEMPT.—A court of equity will not dissolve an injunction upon the motion of a party in contempt for disobedience of an injunction in another suit restraining the same act as that in question. Fadely v. Tomlinson, 41 W. Va. 606, 24 S. E. Rep. 645.

5. MOVING PAPERS.—It is a correct course of proceeding, for a chancellor to dissolve an injunction upon the defendant's tendering a deed to the plaintiff, or filing it with the papers, without requiring it to be approved by the court, before the injunction shall be dissolved. M'Mahon v. Spangler, 4 Rand. 51.

Sufficiency of Answer Alone.—An injunction will be dissolved at the hearing of a motion to dissolve it on the bill and answer sworn to, where the answer fully, fairly, plainly, distinctly and positively denies the allegations of the bill on which the injunction was granted, and the material allegations of the bill are not supported by proof other than the affidavit verifying the truth of its allegations. Wise v. Lamb, 9 Gratt. 294; Hogan v. Duke, 20 Gratt. 244; Hughes v. Tinsley, 80 Va. 259; Moore v. Steelman, 80 Va. 331; Spencer v. Jones, 85 Va. 172, 7 S. E. Rep. 180; Motley v. Frank, 87 Va. 432, 13 S. E. Rep. 26; Ingles v. Straus, 91 Va. 209, 21 S. E. Rep. 490; Thomas v. Rowe (Va.), 22 S. E. Rep. 157; Rosset v. Greer, 3 W. Va. 1; Arbuckle v. McClanahan, 6 W. Va. 101; Hayzlett v. McMillan, 11 W. Va. 464; Shonk v. Knight, 12 W. Va. 667; Cox v. Douglass, 20 W. Va. 175; Livesay v. Feamster, 21 W. Va. 83; Mason City, etc., Co. v. Mason, 23 W. Va. 211; Schoonover v. Bright, 24 W. Va. 68; Bryant v. Groves, 42 W. Va. 10, 24 S. E. Rep. 605; Bronson v. Vaughan, 44 W. Va. 406, 29 S. E. Rep. 1022; Kester v. Alexander (W. Va.), 34 S. E. Rep. 819; Eakin v. Hawkins (W. Va.), 37 S. E. Rep. 622; Steelsmith v. Fisher Oil Co. (W. Va.), 35 S. E. Rep. 15.

Where a motion to dissolve an injunction comes up on the bill, answer and depositions used as affidavits, and the evidence does not show probable cause from which it may reasonably be inferred that the plaintiff will be able to make out his case upon the final hearing, the injunction should be dissolved. But if the complainant's case is supported by evidence regularly taken in the cause in his behalf, and on which he intends to rely on the final hearing, the injunction should not be dissolved on the bill and answer alone, but should be ordered to stand over to the hearing. Ingles v. Straus, 91 Va. 209, 21 S. E. Rep. 490.

Where an answer to a bill to enjoin a sale of land by the trustee denies all the grounds of equity stated in the bill, and there is no proof to sustain them the court may dissolve the injunction and dismiss the bill, or it may dissolve the injunction and have the sale made and proceeds distributed under its direction. Hogan v. Duke, 20 Gratt. 244.

Where an answer to a bill for an injunction denies all its equities and is sworn to, it is entitled to the weight of an affidavit, under Va. Code 1887, § 3281, and, on a motion to dissolve the injunction, heard on the bill and answer, the injunction should be dissolved. Thomas v. Rowe (Va.), 22 S. E. Rep. 157.

A judge in vacation may dissolve an injunction although certain formal defendants have not answered, where the substantial defendants have denied all the material allegations of the bill, and no proof has been taken to sustain such allegations. Livesay v. Feamster, 21 W. Va. 83.

An injunction should be dissolved on motion where the answer denies all the equities of the bill: and an answer may be received for such purpose in vacation. Hayzlett v. McMillan, 11 W. Va. 464.

Where a cause is regularly heard on the bill, answer (the answer denying the material allegations of the bill), general replication, exhibits, and upon a motion to dissolve an injunction, it is error in the court, in the absence of evidence tending to prove the material allegations of the bill, to refuse to dissolve the injunction and refer the cause to a commissioner to take the account prayed in the bill. Arbuckle v. McClanahan, 6 W. Va. 101.

Digitized by Google

Where the court erred, as in the case above stated, it is not error in the judge of the court afterwards upon proper notice and motion in vacation to dissolve the injunction, before the report of the commissioner is made, if the plaintiff, at the hearing of the motion to dissolve, still fails to present evidence tending to prove the material allegations of his bill; and in such case it is not error for the court to dissolve the injunction, before disposing of a report of a commissioner or exceptions thereto, or exceptions of the plaintiff to dispositions of the defendant. Arbuckle v. McClanahan, 6 W. Va. 101.

The debtor in a trust deed obtained an injunction on the allegation that in the lifetime of his creditor they settled, and that the trust deed debt was settled. The answer of the administrator of the creditor denied the allegation on oath and called for proof. The plaintiff failed to produce satisfactory evidence of his settlement. Held, that the bill should be dismissed. Flick v. Fridley, 83 Va. 777, 3 S. E. Rep. 880.

Where a motion to dissolve an injunction is heard upon the bill, answer and affidavits filed, the answer denying the material allegations of the bill, it is not error to consider at the same time, and refuse a petition for a rule against the defendant for contempt for violation of the injunction order, and to enter such refusal in the same order dissolving the injunction. Steelsmith v. Fisher Oil Co. (W. Va.), 35 S. E. Rep. 15.

Where an injunction is awarded under W. Va. Code, ch. 32, § 18, as amended by Acts 1897, ch. 40, the state must prove its case, or, on answer denying the allegations of the bill, a motion to dissolve must be sustained. State v. Reymann (W. Va.), 37 S. E. Rep. 591.

In a bill by a married woman to enjoin the sale of land belonging to her separate estate, under a deed of trust given to secure a note executed jointly with her husband, it was alleged that she was responsible for only half of the sum so secured and that she did not execute the deed of trust willingly but was forced to do so. The answer denied all the allegations of the bill. Held, that the injunction was properly dissolved, there being no proof or offer to prove the allegations of the bill. Spencer v. Jones, 85 Va. 172, 7 S. E. Rep. 180.

A bill was filed to enjoin the sale of property conveyed to secure a debt alleged to be usurious. The plaintiff averred that he expected to make full proof of his allegation, and disclaimed all benefits of any discovery from the defendant. The injunction was awarded. But afterwards the defendant filed an answer denying the allegation of the bill, and the plaintiff relied on the testimony of a single witness, unsustained by any corroborating circumstances. Held, that the injunction should be dissolved and the bill dismissed. Thornton v. Gordon, 2 Rob. 719.

Same—Answer Setting Up New Matter of Defence.—Where the equity of a bill of injunction is not denied, but a new equity is set up by the answer, to repel or avoid it, such answer, read as an affidavit on a motion to dissolve, is not sufficient, of itself, to support the motion. Noyes v. Vickers, 39 W. Va. 30, 19 S. E. Rep. 429. Where the bill sets forth a contract and the plaintiff's construction thereof, and the answer admits the contract and claims under it, but denies the correctness of the plaintiff's construction, this is not such a denial as, per se, entitles the defendant to a dissolution of the pending injunction. Hughes v. Tinsley, 80 Va. 259.

Same—Where Bill Waives Oath.—Although the complainant, in a bill for an injunction, waives an answer under oath from the defendant, yet such answer, denying the equities of the bill, must, on a motion to dissolve the injunction, be treated as a denial of the complainant's case. Ingles v. Straus, 91 Va. 209, 21 S. E. Rep. 490.

Same—Where Material Allegation in Bill is Not Denied.—Upon a motion to dissolve an injunction, a material allegation in the bill, which is not noticed in the answer, must be taken as true, and no other proof will be required. Randolph v. Randolph, 6 Rand. 194.

6. EVIDENCE.—On a motion to dissolve an injunction the defendant is not required to invalidate by full proof the allegations of the bill, but the burden of proving such allegations rests on the plaintiff. It is sufficient for the defendant to show that the evidence of the plaintiff is entitled to no credit. North v. Perrow, 4 Rand. 1.

Where a motion to dissolve an injunction is heard on the bill, answer and affidavits, and the evidence does not show probable cause to believe that the complainant will be able to make out his case upon the final hearing, the injunction should be dissolved. But if the complainant's case is supported by evidence regularly taken in the cause in his behalf, and on which he intends to rely on the final hearing, the injunction should not be dissolved on the bill and answer alone, but should be ordered to stand over to the hearing. Ingles v. Straus, 91 Va. 209, 21 S. E. Rep. 490.

On a motion to dissolve an injunction before the answer is filed, the allegations in the bill must be taken as true. Peatross v. McLaughlin, 6 Gratt. 64; Ludington v. Tiffany, 6 W. Va. 11.

Where, upon a motion to dissolve an injunction, the appellee declines to answer the appellant's bill, he must be regarded as admitting the same to be true. Peatross v. McLaughlin, 6 Gratt. 64.

An administrator who enjoins a judgment against himself in his representative character on the ground that he is a creditor of the estate of the deceased must be prepared, on the motion to dissolve, to show from his account that he is a creditor. Deloney v. Hutcheson, 2 Rand. 183.

It is error to dissolve an injunction on affidavits merely when by the pleadings the burden of proof is on the defendant moving such dissolution, as the plaintiff has the right to cross-examine the defendant's witnesses and rebut their testimony. Grobe v. Roup, 46 W. Va. 488, 33 S. E. Rep. 261.

Upon a motion to dissolve an injunction awarded on a bill filed to enjoin the sale of personal property under executions levied thereon, the court of necessity must consider the executions, and where, upon the evidence in the cause, it appears that they were considered, they are properly copied into the record of the cause. Ford v. Watts, 95 Va. 192, 28 S. E. Rep. 179.

G. ORDER OF DISSOLUTION—NECESSITY.—Where an injunction is awarded until the coming in of the answer, it will not be dissolved by the coming in of the answer, but will remain to await the order of the court. Turner v. Scott, 5 Rand. 332. See, however, Beal v. Gibson, 4 H. & M. 481.

An injunction may be dissolved by necessary implication, as, for example, where the enforcement of a deed of trust is restrained, and the collection of the debt secured enjoined, by the court below, and the appellate court, reversing on that point, decrees the debt secured to be valid and subsisting, and remands the cause with directions to collect under the deeds of trust and apply proceeds in a given order. Atkinson v. Beckett, 36 W. Va. 438, 15 S. E. Rep. 179.

The reversal of a final decree may by necessary implication dissolve an injunction. Atkinson v. Beckett, 36 W. Va. 438, 15 S. E. Rep. 179.

H. EFFECT OF DISSOLUTION.—An order dissolving an injunction, based on the merits of the case, where the only relief sought by the bill is such injunction, is, as regards finality, such a decision as will sustain the defence of res judicata. Gallaher v. City of Moundsville, 34 W. Va. 730, 12 S. E. Rep. 859.

Dismissal of Bill.—Where the bill is not merely a bill of injunction, but is filed for other objects, to which the injunction is auxiliary, the bill should not be dismissed, as a matter of course, on the dissolution of the injunction. Noyes v. Vickers, 39 W. Va. 30, 19 S. E. Rep. 429.

On the dissolution of an injunction, the complainant has a right to continue his cause as an original suit; therefore, if the chancellor, without his consent, dismisses the bill at the same time that he dissolves the injunction, it is error. Blow v. Taylor, 4 H. & M. 159.

Where there is no doubt as to the balance due upon a bond and the injunction against the sale of the land by the trustee might have been dissolved and the bill dismissed, the court may, nevertheless, retain the cause and have the sale made by the trustee under its direction. Michie v. Jeffries, 21 Gratt. 334; Crenshaw v. Seigfried, 24 Gratt. 272. See also, Terry v. Fitzgerald, 32 Gratt. 843.

Virginia Code 1873, § 14, providing that where an injunction is wholly dissolved the bill shall be dismissed at the next term, applies only to a pure bill of injunction, and not where the bill prays for other relief besides the injunction. Therefore, pending the litigation for the subjection of the land to a sale for the purchase money, it it not error to appoint a receiver to rent the land, and, if necessary, to collect the bond given by the vendee for the rent. Adkins v. Edwards, 83 Va. 300, 2 S. E. Rep. 435; Pulliam v. Winston, 5 Leigh 324.

The act passed the 20th of January, 1804, providing that, in all cases where hereafter any injunction shall be wholly dissolved, the bill shall stand dismissed of course, with costs, unless at the next term sufficient cause shall be shown against it, does not apply to bills filed before the act took effect. Gallego v. Quesnall, 1 H. & M. 205.

Under the statute, upon the dissolution of an injunction, the bill should be dismissed of course, unless some ground for retaining the cause be shown at the next term. Anderson v. Ellington, 2 H. & M. 16.

The third section of the act of January 20, 1804, concerning proceedings in chancery, which provides for the dismissal of a bill on dissolving an injunction, does apply to cases in which the bill claims other relief besides injunction. Hough v. Shreeve, 4 Munf. 490; Singleton v. Lewis, 6 Munf. 397; Pulliam v. Winston, 5 Leigh 324.

After an injunction has been wholly dissolved, if the cause be set for hearing on the motion of the defendant in equity, he cannot take advantage of the circumstance that the bill should have been dismissed under the statute. Franklin v. Wilkinson, 3 Munf. 112.

Where an injunction is wholly dissolved in a county or corporation court, the bill is not to stand dismissed until two terms succeeding have been held in such county or corporation; and the appellate court will not presume, from lapse of time, that two such terms have been held; but this must expressly appear in the transcript of the record Pitts v. Tidwell, 3 Munf. 88.

Where the assignor and assignee of a bond are made defendants to a bill exhibited by the obligor for an injunction and general relief, the obligor alleging that he paid the money to the assignor without notice of the assignment, if that allegation is afterwards disproved, the injunction dissolved and the bill dismissed as to the assignee, the cause ought yet to be retained and further proceeded in to give the complainant relief against the assignor. Ruffners v. Barrett, 6 Munf. 207.

Same—Discretion of Court.—Upon the dissolution of an injunction to a sale under a deed of trust, it is within the discretion of the court either to dismiss the bill, or retain it for the purpose of administering the trust. If there are conflicting interests between the parties as to their respective rights and interests they should be decided, and a decree made for the sale of the property and the proper application of the proceeds. But whether the discretion vested in the court has been soundly exercised or not depends upon the facts and circumstances of the particular case. Anderson v. Phlegar, 93 Va. 415, 25 S. E. Rep. 107.

Same—Personal Decree.—Where, upon a bill filed to enjoin a void judgment, the plaintiff is denied all relief because he has an adequate remedy at law, it is error to enter a personal decree against the plaintiff for the amount of the judgment enjoined, upon the dissolution of the injunction. In such case, the only power possessed by the court is to dissolve the injunction and dismiss the bill with costs. Kanawha, etc., Ry. Co. v. Ryan, 31 W. Va. 364, 6 S. E. Rep. 924.

Should the court, after having granted an injunction against the enforcement of a judgment alleged to have been satisfied, dissolve the same at a final hearing, it ought not to enter a personal decree against the plaintiff for the amount of the original judgment enjoined, but should simply dissolve the injunction, and dismiss the bill, with costs, and without prejudice to the plaintiff as to his defence at law against the enforcement of the execution. Howell v. Thomason, 34 W. Va. 794, 12 S. E. Rep. 1088.

Same—Res Judicata.—A decree dismissing a bill generally, without any reservation to the plaintiff to sue thereafter, is conclusive between the parties, and it is error to dismiss an injunction bill on motion for failure to prosecute alone, without adding "without prejudice to such other suit as the plaintiff may see proper to institute." Buskirk v. Chafin (W. Va.), 37 S. E. Rep. 552.

I. EFFECT OF REFUSAL TO DISSOLVE.—A refusal by a court to dissolve an injunction is equivalent to holding that upon full notice and argument the injunction should have been granted. Bristow v. Home Building Co., 91 Va. 18, 20 S. E. Rep. 947.

Although notice should be given to the adverse party of an application for an injunction and the appointment of a receiver, except in cases of obvious necessity to prevent a failure of justice, yet, if upon a motion to dissolve the injunction and discharge the receiver, the court sustains its original order, this is equivalent to holding that, upon full notice and argument, the injunction ought to have been granted, and, on appeal, the decree awarding such injunction and appointing a receiver will not be reversed for the want of such notice in the first instance. Bristow v. Home Bldg. Co., 91 Va. 18, 20 S. E. Rep. 946.

Digitized by Google

J. DAMAGES AND COSTS.—The damages on the dissolution of an injunction to a judgment become, as to the party obtaining such damages, a part of the judgment, and are embraced in the lien of the judgment upon the equity of redemption. Michaux v. Brown, 10 Gratt. 612.

Where there is an injunction to a judgment against two or more persons, and only one signs the injunction bond or applies for the injunction, upon dissolution there should not be an award of execution for damages and costs against all the judgment debtors, but only against those signing the bond or asking the injunction. Graham v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 45 W. Va. 701, 32 S. E. Rep. 245.

Where, on a bill to enjoin a judgment at law, it appears, on the final hearing, that the judgment ought not to be enjoined, and that the plaintiff in equity has had credit for a sum to which he is not entitled, the court should not only dissolve the injunction and dismiss the bill, but should decree that the plaintiff pay that sum to the defendant. Todd v. Bowyer, 1 Munf. 447.

Where, pending an injunction to a judgment for money, the judgment creditor dies, and there is a revival in the name of his administrator of the suit in equity, but not of the judgment at law, it is not regular, though the object be to avoid the delay that would take place after a dissolution of the injunction in reviving the judgment, to make a decree in the suit in equity for the money which will be payable to the creditor upon such dissolution. The court of equity should dissolve or perpetuate the injunction, or perpetuate it in part and dissolve it for the balance, and it may in the latter case direct that no damages shall be paid by the complainant, but in no case should a decree be made for the damages payable to the creditors on the dissolution. Medley v. Pannill, 1 Rob. 63.

Where a stranger to a judgment obtains an injunction against it, and the injunction is dissolved, he is as much liable to pay the ten per cent. damages prescribed by statute as a party to the judgment. Claytor v. Anthony, 15 Gratt. 518.

Order to Pay Damages on Finding of Jury.—In a suit by a property owner against an internal improvement company to enjoin it from prosecuting a work that will irreparably injure his property, where the court has directed an issue of quantum damnificatus, it is error, upon the finding of the jury to decree the amount so found against the company in such form that execution can be issued upon the foot of the decree. The order should be that, when the company pays to the owner, or deposits in court, as the case may be, the sum found by the jury, the injunction shall be wholly dissolved, but until that time it is continued in full force and effect. Ohio River R. Co. v. Ward, 35 W. Va. 481, 14 S. E. Rep. 142; Mason v. Bridge Co., 20 W. Va. 243.

Computation of Damages.—Upon the dissolution of an injunction on a judgment, the damages for retarding execution by the injunction, should be computed on the aggregate of principal, interest and costs, appearing due on the judgment at the date of the injunction. And the damages should be ascertained, and the precept to levy them inserted, in the body of the execution. Washington v. Parks, 6 Leigh 581.

Where an injunction was dissolved, and on appeal the decree was affirmed, it was held that ten per cent. damages should be computed from the time the injunction was granted to the date of the dissolution thereof in the court below, but not for the time it was pending in the appellate court. Jeter v. Langhorne, 5 Gratt. 193.

K. ABATEMENT BY DEATH OF PARTIES.

Death of Plaintiff.—Where a complainant in a bill of injunctions dies after the answer has been filed and before the decision of the cause, an order may be obtained on a motion of the defendant, that, unless the representatives of the complainant shall appear within a certain time fixed by the court and cause the suit to be revived in their names, the injunction shall stand dissolved. Carter v. Washington, 1 H. & M. 203.

Four plaintiffs united in the same bill for an injunction against five defendants to stay proceedings on four several judgments against them respectively, on grounds of equity common to all. The injunction was awarded, and, pending the suit, two of the plaintiffs and three of the defendants died. The chancellor ordered, that, unless the living plaintiffs and the representatives of the deceased plaintiffs should revive the injunction in the name of the representatives of the deceased plaintiffs against those of the deceased defendants, on or before a certain day, the injunction should stand dissolved. Held, that the order was irregular and erroneous. McKays v. Hite, 2 Leigh 145.

A judgment suspended by an injunction may be revived on the death of either the plaintiff or defendant; and the injunction operates on the judgment or scire facias, prohibiting the issue of execution thereon. Richardson v. Prince George, 11 Gratt. 190.

Death of Defendant.—Where the defendant dies after filing his answer to a bill of injunction and before the decision of the cause, an order may be obtained, on the motion of his representatives, that, unless the complainant, within a certain time fixed by the court, shall revive the suit against them, the injunction shall stand dissolved. Kenner v. Hord, 1 H. & M. 204.

Where an injunction has abated on account of the death of the defendant, the court will make a rule that it shall stand dissolved, unless the complainant shall revive it against the representatives of the defendant within a given time after they shall have qualified. White v. Fitzhugh, 1 H. & M. 1.

Where a judgment against a principal and his surety is enjoined by them, and, pending the suit, the surety dies, the injunction should not be dissolved without a rule for his representative to revive the suit in his name. Jackson v. Arnold, 4 Rand. 195.

XVI. REINSTATEMENT OF INJUNCTION.

A court of chancery is always open to reinstate, as well as to grant an injunction. Radford v. Innes, 1 H. & M. 8.

A demurrer to an amended bill praying for the reinstatement of an injunction which had been dissolved was overruled and the bill sustained, and the court refused to reinstate the injunction which had been properly dissolved. Held, that the court did not err in refusing to reinstate the injunction, as the questions arising from the allegations of the bill had never been presented to the court. Spencer v. Jones, 85 Va. 172, 7 S. E. Rep. 180.

Where an injunction is awarded until the coming in of the answer, it is of course at an end upon the filing of the answer; but the plaintiff may move to reinstate it. Beal v. Gibson, 4 H. & M. 481. See Turner v. Scott, 5 Rand. 332.

A motion to reinstate an injunction, on additional evidence tendered by the complainant, is in the nature of an original application, and, if refused, the complainant may apply to any one of the judges of the court of appeals. Gilliam v. Allen, 1 Rand. 414; Webster v. Couch, 6 Rand. 519.

XVII. SUCCESSIVE INJUNCTIONS.

Where an injunction is dissolved, but the bill is not dismissed, its pendency in a county court is no bar to the complainant's obtaining another injunction in the superior court of chancery. Roberts v. Jordans, 3 Munf. 488.

Where a bill for an injunction against a judgment at law has been dismissed, and an appeal taken, it is irregular to apply to the appellate court, pending the appeal, for a new injunction to stay proceedings on the same judgment. Graves v. Graves, 2 H. & M. 23.

XVIII. APPEALS.

A. FROM ORDER REFUSING TO AWARD INJUNCTION.—Where a judge of a circuit court refuses to award an injunction, the remedy is by application, accompanied by the original papers and the order of refusal, to a judge of the supreme court, who may review and reverse the action of the circuit court judge, and award the injunction; which injunction, so awarded, it is the province of the circuit court judge to enforce and restrain any disobedience thereto, by attachment or other proper process. Nor does it matter that the injunction in question is the second or supplemental bill for an injunction, since a motion to reinstate the injunction on additional evidence, is in the nature of an original application for an injunction; and where the circuit judge refuses to enforce obedience to such injunction so awarded by a judge of the supreme court, the writ of mandamus will be issued. Wilder v. Kelley, Judge, 88 Va. 274, 13 S. E. Rep. 483.

B. FROM ORDER OVERRULING MOTION TO DISSOLVE.—The exercise of a sound discretion without abuse by a circuit judge in overruling a motion in vacation to dissolve an injunction is not reviewable and reversable action. McEldowney v. Lowther (W. Va.), 38 S. E. Rep. 644.

Where the principles of a cause are adjudicated in an order rejecting a motion to dissolve an injunction, an appeal may be refused, if the court or judge to whom the petition for appeal is presented, deems it proper that the cause should be proceeded in further in the court below before an appeal is allowed therein. And if, in such case, an appeal is allowed, it may be dismissed as prematurely allowed. B. & O. R. Co. v. Wheeling, 13 Gratt. 40.

An appeal lies to the court of appeals from an order of a circuit court overruling a motion to dissolve an injunction which was improvidently granted. Talley v. Tyree, 2 Rob. 500; Lomax v. Picot, 2 Rand. 247.

Where a bill of injunction is filed in the clerk's office and process issues thereon, it is a case pending in court within the letter and spirit of chapter 136 of the Code of West Virginia, and an appeal will lie from an order of a judge of a circuit court made in vacation in relation thereto. Hutchinson v. Landcraft, 4 W. Va. 312.

An order which refuses to dissolve an injunction and to discharge a receiver decides, in effect, that the property held by the receiver is, for the present at least, in proper hands, and to this extent it adjudicates the principles of the case. From such order an appeal may be taken. Bristow v. Home Bldg. Co., 91 Va. 18, 20 S. E. Rep. 947.

A refusal to dissolve an injunction appointing a receiver is an appealable order, although the causes in which the question arises are still at rules. Bristow v. Home Bldg. Co., 91 Va. 18, 20 S. E. Rep. 947.

C. FROM ORDER DISSOLVING INJUNCTION.—An order dissolving an injunction is reviewable by appeal under Va. Code 1887, § 3454, and a motion may be made for the reinstatement of the injunction, and an appeal taken from the refusal to reinstate: but where the lower court refuses the injunction in the first place, the remedy is not by appeal, but by application to a judge of the supreme court accompanied by the original papers and the order of refusal. Va. Code 1887, § 3436; Fredenheim v. Rohr, 87 Va. 764, 13 S. E. Rep. 193.

The W. Va. statute, Acts W. Va. 1872-3, ch. 17, § 1, allowing an appeal from a decree or order dissolving an injunction, did not authorize an appeal from an order granting or refusing to dissolve an injunction, and an appeal from such order should be dismissed as improvidently granted, notwithstanding the fact that a statute was subsequently enacted authorizing an appeal from such order. Robrecht v. Wharton, 29 W. Va. 746, 2 S. E. Rep. 793.

Where one has taken forcible possession of premises, and an injunction is granted prohibiting him to do anything further, and to permit the plaintiff to cultivate the land, this is not an order "changing the possession of property," within the meaning of the statute, Acts W. Va. 1872-3, ch. 17, § 1, which provides that an appeal shall be allowed "in any case in chancery, wherein there is a decree or order dissolving, or refusing to dissolve, an injunction, or requiring * * * the possession or title of property to be changed." Robrecht v. Wharton, 29 W. Va. 746, 2 S. E. Rep. 793.

Under Va. Code 1887, §§ 3454, 3455, no appeal lies from a decree dissolving an injunction, where the only question involved is whether a partner waived his co-partner's homestead exemption on executing a note for less than $500. Shoemaker v. Bowman, 98 Va. 688, 37 S. E. Rep. 278.

Under the act of January 27, 1810, a judge of the superior court of chancery was not empowered to grant an appeal from an order for the dissolution of an injunction. Spencer v. Smith, 4 Munf. 323.

From an order overruling an injunction and adjudicating the principles of the cause, an appeal lies. Va. Code 1873, ch. 178, § 2; Kahn v. Kerngood, 80 Va. 342.

The order of the lower court failed to show to which of two injunctions it referred,—one enjoining a sale under a trust made to secure purchase money, and the other enjoining an attachment in another court to collect the purchase money. Held, that a dissolution of the first injunction carried with it that of the second, though granted on a supplemental bill reciting grounds other than those set forth in the original bill. Thompson v. Edwards, 3 W. Va. 659.

Whether an act of assembly authorizing the establishment of public roads, which allows appeals to this court on questions of law only, is constitutional, does not arise on an appeal from a decree dissolving an injunction to proceedings under the act, as it is not an appeal from any judgment pronounced in condemnation proceedings under the act. Painter v. St. Clair, 98 Va. 85, 34 S. E. Rep. 989.

If proceedings at law are enjoined by a court of chancery and the injunction is afterwards dissolved, and, on appeal, the order of dissolution is wholly affirmed, an execution may be sued out on the judgment at law, before the decree of affirmance is entered up in the court of chancery. Epes v. Dudley, 4 Leigh 145.

When a party has obtained an injunction from the court of chancery to a judgment at law, which is afterwards dissolved, and he appeals to the court of appeals, he cannot be required to give security for the amount of the judgment enjoined, but only for such costs as may be awarded against him by the appellate court. Eppes v. Thurman, 4 Rand. 384.

A party appealing from an order dissolving an injunction can only be required to give security to perform the decree of the inferior court, and to pay the costs and damages awarded in the appellate court, if the decree shall be affirmed. Quære, whether, where bond and security have been given to perform the decree of the court below, and further security is required in the appellate court, which the party cannot give, the surety in the first bond is discharged. M'Kay v. Hite, 4 Rand. 564.

D. FROM ORDER CONTINUING INJUNCTION.—Although the answer plainly and positively denies the allegations of the bill, yet, if the facts and circumstances shown by the pleadings, exhibits and affidavits are strongly presumptive in favor of the plaintiff's equity, it is not appealable error for the circuit court to continue an ancillary injunction, awarded for the purpose of preserving the status of property, until the final hearing. Robrecht v. Robrecht, 46 W. Va. 738, 34 S. E. Rep. 801.

No appeal lies from a decree overruling a demurrer, giving the defendant leave to answer, and continuing an injunction in force until the further order of the court, where there was no motion to dissolve, and the cause was heard solely upon the demurrer to the bill. Norfolk, etc., Ry. Co. v. Old Dom. Baggage Co., 97 Va. 89, 33 S. E. Rep. 385.

E. FROM ORDER REINSTATING INJUNCTION AND DIRECTING NEW TRIAL.—An order of the superior court of chancery reinstating an injunction and directing a new trial of an issue at law is not an interlocutory decree from which an appeal can be allowed. Price v. Strange, 2 H. & M. 615.

F. USELESS APPEALS NOT GRANTED.—Upon a pure bill of injunction to enjoin the performance of certain acts, but containing no prayer for any mandatory acts to be performed, where the injunction as prayed has been granted, without any mandatory provision, if it appear that the injunction has been dissolved by the trial court, and pending an appeal (without supersedeas) from the order of dissolution the acts enjoined have been performed, the court of appeals will not disturb the action of the trial court, as a reversal would be unavailing to the complainant even if the decree were wrong. Reid Bros. & Co. v. Norfolk City R. Co., 94 Va. 117, 26 S. E. Rep. 423.

G. EVIDENCE.—On an appeal from a preliminary order of injunction made by a judge of the circuit court in vacation, the appellate court will not consider any depositions in the cause taken by the appellant subsequent to the time such order of injunction took effect. Freshwater v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 6 W. Va. 503.

XIX. WRONGFUL INJUNCTION.

An action against a defendant for maliciously and without probable cause suing out an injunction against a plaintiff whereby the operation of his mill was suspended, is barred after one year from the dissolution of the injunction. In case of death, the cause of action would not survive. The damages allowed to be recovered by or against a personal representative under § 2655 of the Code are direct damages to property and not those which are merely consequent upon a wrongful act to the person only. Mumpower v. City of Bristol, 94 Va. 737, 27 S. E. Rep. 581.

---

528 *Warwick & Barksdale v. Mayo, Mayor.

April Term, 1860, Richmond.

(Absent DANIEL, J.*)

1. Prohibition—Variance between Affidavit and Declaration—Demurrer.†—In prohibition, a variance between the affidavit and the declaration, not being a matter in bar of the proceeding, cannot be taken advantage of by demurrer to the declaration.
2. Jurisdiction of Mayor—Obstruction of Street—Claim of Freehold.—In a proceeding before the mayor or other justice to impose a penalty upon a party for obstructing a street, if a claim to the freehold is set up in the defendant or in those for whom he acts, the mayor or justice has jurisdiction to try the fact whether the claim is bona fide made.
3. Same—Same—Same.—In such case if the claim is bona fide made, the jurisdiction of the mayor or justice is ousted; he cannot enquire into the validity of the claim; and he has no power in such case to proceed to a summary conviction.
4. Same—Same—Claim of Incorporeal Hereditament.—This principle applies as well to the case where an incorporeal hereditament or real franchise is claimed or resisted, as to a controversy touching the freehold itself.
5. Ejectment—Judgment—Effect as to Public Easement.‡—A recovery of a judgment in ejectment is subject to any easement in the public to use the land recovered as a street or highway; and the right of the public to the easement, is not drawn in question or in any way affected by a controversy between the plaintiff and the city as to the ownership of the soil.

---

*He was related to one of the parties.

†Prohibition.—See foot-note to West v. Ferguson, 16 Gratt. 270, and other foot-notes there referred to.

‡Public Highways—Ownership of Fee.—It is a well settled rule of the common law that a public highway only vests in the commonwealth a right of passage; but the freehold and profits (such as trees upon it and mines under it), belong to the owner of the soil, who has a right to all remedies for the freehold, subject, however, to the easement. Bolling v. Mayor, 3 Rand. 563.

Digitized by Google

In January 1859 Abraham Warwick and William J. Barksdale presented their petition to the Circuit court of the city of Richmond, praying the court to prohibit Joseph Mayo, the mayor of the city, from imposing a fine upon them for placing an obstruction in what was said to be 12th street. After stating that the mayor had imposed one fine upon them for obstructing said street, and that he was proceeding to impose upon them further fines for the same matter, they alleged that in an action of ejectment which they had brought 529 *against the city of Richmond, they had recovered the ground on which the obstruction had been placed; that they had been put in possession of said ground by the sheriff, under a writ of possession, and that they had proceeded to enclose it. That in return to the summons to them to show cause why they should not be fined for obstructing the street, they could only allege in their defence the judgment and writ of possession aforesaid; but that the mayor, in disregard of the legal effect and authority of said judgment and execution, and of the fact that the petitioners had been put in possession of the premises by the sheriff, rendered a judgment against them for a fine of twenty dollars for enclosing their said ground; and that he was proceeding to inflict a like fine for each day they held the exclusive possession of said ground by enclosing the same as aforesaid. Wherefore they prayed that the mayor might be prohibited from proceeding to inflict fines and judgments upon them. This petition was sworn to by Abraham Warwick.

A summons having been served upon the mayor, he made a return, in which he set out an ordinance of the city, by which any person putting an obstruction in a street of the city was subjected to a fine of not less than one nor more than ten dollars for the first day, and for each day after the first, not less than two nor more than twenty dollars. And that in pursuance of this ordinance, he had imposd a fine of ten dollars upon Warwick & Barksdale; and that the obstruction in the street not having been removed, he had again fined them twenty dollar a day for eight days; the said obstruction being placed and remaining all that time in and upon 12th street, one of the common highways of the city.

The defendant requiring the petitioners to declare in prohibition, they filed a declaration, in which they set out their recovery in the action of ejectment; the 530 *putting them in possession by the sheriff under the writ of possession: and their enclosing the ground according to the boundaries thereof as laid off by the officer. That the mayor well knowing all this, but pretending that the said piece of ground was still lawfully a public street of the city and highway of the commonwealth, did, under pretence of an ordinance, which they set out, summon them to appear before him to show cause why they should not be fined for obstructing 12th street in the city of Richmond. And they aver that in obedience to said summons they appeared before the mayor, and showed and alleged for cause why they should not be fined for the pretended offence aforesaid: First—that the judgment in the aforesaid action of ejectment, the record of which they then and there exhibited before the said mayor, had conclusively determined that the said piece of ground was no part of any street of the city of Richmond; and consequently, he the said mayor, acting on behalf of the city and under a city ordinance, had no lawful power or jurisdiction to re-examine and retry a question already solemnly adjudged by a superior court of law in a controversy between the plaintiffs on the one part and the city of Richmond on the other. Second—that if the judgment in ejectment was not conclusive of the question, still the plaintiffs claimed bona fide the fee simple of the said land, and the right of exclusive

---

See the principal case cited for this proposition in Jordan v. Eve, 31 Gratt. 10; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Williams, 86 Va. 700. 718, 11 S. E. Rep. 106; Hodges v. Seaboard & Roanoke R. Co., 88 Va. 654, 664, 14 S. E. Rep. 380. See principal case also cited in Spencer v. R. R. Co., 23 W. Va. 423. See also, Page v. Belvin, 88 Va. 985, 14 S. E. Rep. 843.

Mr. Lile, in his "Notes to 1 Min. Inst." at p. 42, says: "The statement * * * that the public acquires only an easement of right of way over a public highway, must be understood as applying to highways acquired by condemnation or dedication, and not by an outright conveyance of the fee-simple title." Indeed, at the present day, the whole question as to the ownership of the fee depends upon how the land in controversy became a public highway. If the property was acquired by condemnation proceedings, whether or not the fee simple passed depends upon the statute under which the condemnation was had. Mr. Lile says that, in Virginia, it would seem that under ch. 43, of the Code, the public only acquires an easement of passage in land condemned for public road. But, by Va. Code, § 1083, where land is condemned for the uses of a city, the title to the land absolutely vests in the city, in fee simple.

So, where land is dedicated for a public highway if the dedication is made under the provisions of a statute, the effect necessarily depends upon the terms of the statute under which it is made. See Lile's Note to pp. 14, 15. As to statutory dedication of streets, etc., in Virginia, see Pol. Supp. § 2510a.

There remains one other method by which land may be converted into a public highway, i. e., by common-law dedication. In regard to common-law dedication, Mr. Lile says: "In the absence of a contrary intent, or, probably, in the absence of a formal grant, such a dedication (i. e. a common-law dedication), when not otherwise provided by statute, passes only the easement of use to the public, the fee remaining in the original dedicator or his assigns." Lile's Notes on Mun. Corp., pp. 16, 19. This accords with the proposition first laid down in this note.

See generally, monographic note on "Municipal Corporations" appended to Danville v. Pace, 25 Gratt. 1. On the general subject of Easements, see monographic note on "Easements" appended to Hardy v. McCullough, 23 Gratt. 251.

Digitized by Google

possession of the same, utterly denying the existence of any right in any quarter to use or occupy the same as a street of the city or as a highway of the commonwealth; while the mayor on the other hand was asserting a supposed right of the city to use and occupy the land as a street of the city: and thus it was a plain controversy about the title to the freehold and inheritance of the land; a controversy which the mayor had no lawful power or jurisdiction to decide, try or examine.

531 *The defendant demurred to the declaration; and the court sustained the demurrer. And thereupon Warwick & Barksdale applied to this court for a supersedeas; which was awarded.

Macfarland & Roberts and N. P. Howard, for the appellants, insisted:

1. That though anciently in a case of prohibition a variance between the suggestion and declaration might be taken by demurrer, as seems to have been held in Gomersal & Bishop's Case, 1 Leonard 128, and Harrow's Case, 7 Mod. R. 113, yet this was because the suggestion was held to be in the nature of a writ, 2 Lutwyche's R. 1179, 1181, but that at a subsequent period, the law was settled otherwise in England. 1 Wms. Saund. 318, note 3 and c; Thompson v. Dicas, 1 Cromp. & Mees. R. 768. In Virginia the objection can only be taken by plea in abatement, Code, ch. 171, § 18, p. 648.

2. That there was no variance; but that the first ground of objection to the action of the mayor, involved both grounds stated in the declaration. That the first insisted that the judgment conclusively determined there was no street there. And they referred to King v. Milnrow, 5 Maule & Sel. R. 248; Wills v. Sutherland, 4 Exch. R. 211, 218, 219; affirmed, 5 Id. 718; 4 Rob. Pr. 2, 3. That the averment, that the objection to the jurisdiction was taken before the mayor, was mere surplusage; United States v. Peters, 3 Dall. R. 121; Miller v. Marshall, 1 Va. Cas. 158; Hutson v. Lowry, 2 Id. 42. That there were but two classes of cases in which the objection to the jurisdiction was necessary to be taken: these are, 1st, where the objection is that the cause of action did not arise within the local limits of the jurisdiction, Anonymous, 1 P. Wms. 476, 11 Mod. R. 132; Mendyke v. Stint, 2 Id. 272; and 2d, the case of a prohibition to a suit in the Ec-

532 clesiastical *court for tythes, where a modus is set up. Bannister v. Hopton, 10 Mod. R. 12. But that there was another class of cases substantially like that before the court; and that is where the court prima facie had jurisdiction, but some matter is relied on which shows that the court cannot proceed if it is true. Driver v. Colgate, 4 Burr. R. 2040; Howe v. Nappier, Id. 1944, which is explained in Buggin v. Bennett, Id. 2035; Marsden v. Wardle, 25 Eng. L. & E. R. 146; Hutson v. Lowry, 2 Va. Cas. 42. That application for a prohibition may be made as well after as before sentence or judgment; De Haber v. Queen of Portugal, and Wadsworth v. Queen of Spain, 7 Eng. L. & E. R. 340; and if the court has not jurisdiction, the plaintiff himself may have the writ. Bac. Abr. Prohibition C; Paxton v. Knight, 1 Burr. R. 314; Reese v. Lawless, 4 Bibb's R. 394. That an objection fatal on demurrer to an ordinary declaration may be none to a declaration in prohibition; Comyn's Dig. Prohibition I; Leyfield's Case, 10 Coke's R. 88, 94 b. That the objection on account of the variance was not taken in the court below; and if had been, the affidavit might have been amended. Howe v. Nappier, 4 Burr. R. 1945.

3. That the effect of the recovery in ejectment was to determine that the locus in quo was no part of the street. And they referred to City of Cincinnati v. White, 6 Peters' R. 431; Barclay v. Howell's lessee Id. 514; Hunter v. Trustees of Sandy Hill, 6 Hill's N. Y. R. 407; Dummer v. Selectmen of Jersey City, 1 Spencer's New Jer. R. 86, 109; Doe v. Cowley, 11 Eng. C. L. R. 339; Rowan's ex'ors v. Town of Portland, 8 B. Monr. R. 239; Mayo v. Murchie, 3 Munf. 258; Stiles and others v. Curtis, 4 Day's R. 328.

4. That the appellants objecting to the proceeding of the mayor on the ground that there is no street over the lot enclosed by them, their objection raises a question of title in relation to land. Pritchard v.

533 *Atkinson, 4 N. Hamp. R. 291; Spears v. Bicknell, 5 Mass. R. 125; People v. Onandaga Common Pleas, 2 Wend. R. 263. And that if this objection was made bona fide, of which there could be no question upon the demurrer to the declaration which expressly avers it, the jurisdiction of the mayor was thereby ousted, and he could not proceed further after the objection was made. Regina v. Burnaby, 2 Ld. Ray. R. 900; S. C. Comyn's R. 131; The Queen v. Cridland, 90 Eng. C. L. R. 853, 866 to 872; Paley on Summary Conv. p. 15, 48 to 52; Fitzherbert's Natura Brevium, [47] B. [138] C; 2 Inst. 311, 312; Tinniswood v. Pattison, 54 Eng. C. L. 243; Miller v. Marshall, 1 Va. Cas. 158; Mountney v. Collier, 16 Eng. L. & E. 233; Marsh v. Dewes, 20 Id. 356.

Daniel, for the appellee, insisted:

1. That the demurrer was properly sustained on the ground of the variance between the affidavit and the declaration. That the affidavit showed that the only ground on which the appellants relied before the mayor, was the conclusiveness of their judgment in ejectment; and the other objection to the jurisdiction of the mayor, was not made before him. That the purpose of the declaration in prohibition is merely to set out with more precision and accuracy, the matter of the suggestion, which is here substituted by the affidavit; and if the declaration varies from the suggestion, it is fatal. He referred to Bacon's Abr. Prohibition F; Harrow's Case, 7 Mod. R. 113; Gomersal & Bishop's Case, 1 Leonard's R. 128; Mayo, mayor, v. James, 12 Gratt. 18.

Digitized by Google

2. That looking to the objection to the jurisdiction stated in the affidavit, the judgment in ejectment did not afford any ground of objection to the jurisdiction of the mayor. That by the charter of the city the council had full authority over the 534 streets of the city, *and had exercised that authority by imposing a fine on any person who obstructed a street, and it was made the mayor's duty to impose the penalty. That the judgment in ejectment, though it decided the title to the property, decided nothing as to the easement of the street over it; and it did not appear from the affidavit that any other objection to the existence of the street was set up before the mayor, than was to be deduced from the judgment. He referred to Goodtitle v. Alker, 1 Burr. R. 133; Bolling v. Mayor of Petersburg, 3 Rand. 563; Angel on Highways, ch. 7, § 319, note 1; Note of Hare & Wallace to Dovaston v. Payne, Smith's Lead. Cas. 44 Law Libr. 139, and the American cases cited by these authors.

3. That though it may be true that at common law, a justice of the peace has no authority to decide upon a question of title to real estate, still the authority may be given by statute; and in every such case it is a question of construction. See the case of Brittain v. Kinnaird, 5 Eng. C. L. R. 137, which is said in Mould v. Williams, 48 Id. 472, to be more often recognized than any other case; Regina v. Higgins, note D to In re Appledore Commutation, 55 Eng. C. L. R. 147. That the charter of the city gave to the council authority over the streets in the largest terms; charter of 1842, Sess. Acts 1841-42, p. 133, 136; charter of 1852, Sess. Acts 1852, p. 263, 264; Code, ch. 54, § 17, p. 285; and the council by its ordinance has vested the authority to punish all obstructions in the streets in the mayor. To do this he must necessarily consider the extent of the right claimed—the limits of the streets.

ALLEN, P. The plaintiffs in error preferred a petition to the Circuit court of the city of Richmond, which was verified by affidavit, and by which they prayed for a rule against the defendant in error to 535 *show cause why he should not be prohibited from inflicting a fine of twenty dollars upon the plaintiffs for each day they should continue to hold the exclusive possession of a piece of ground on the western side of twelfth street in the said city, by enclosing the same. The proceeding is founded on the Code, ch. 155, p. 612; which provides that it shall not be necessary to file a suggestion on any application for a writ of prohibition, but the same may be applied for on affidavit only.

Upon filing the petition, treated as an affidavit, the rule asked for was awarded; the defendant made a return thereto, and having afterwards required the plaintiffs to file a declaration, one was filed, to which the defendant demurred generally, and also tendered a special plea, to which the plaintiffs objected, and moved the court to reject it: of which motion the court took time to consider.

At another day the general demurrer to the declaration was sustained; which rendered it unnecessary to pass upon the special plea tendered and objected to; and the same is not copied into the record. To the judgment sustaining the general demurrer refusing the prohibition and dismissing the plaintiffs' application, a supersedeas has been awarded by this court.

In argument here, it is insisted on behalf of the defendant, that there was a variance between the affidavit and the declaration; and for that reason the demurrer was properly sustained.

Conceding, for the purposes of this case, that a suggestion is in the nature of a writ, and the affidavit under the Code comes in the place of the suggestion, the objection could not be taken in this mode. The Code, ch. 171, § 18, declares that a defendant on whom process summoning him to answer, appears to have been served, shall not take advantage of any variance in the writ from the declaration, unless the same be 536 pleaded *in abatement. The objection goes not to the substance but to the form; for taking the matters averred to be true, enough appears to entitle the plaintiffs to judgment as far as relates to the merits of the cause, provided the law be as they suppose it to be. Being matter of form, the objection, in the absence of the provision in the Code referred to, could only be taken by special demurrer; and the effect of the Code, ch. 171, § 30, 31, is to abolish special demurrers in all cases: the 30th section prescribes the form, being the form of a general demurrer, and the 31st declares that the court shall not regard on a demurrer any defect or imperfection in the declaration or pleadings, whether it has heretofore been deemed mispleading or insufficient pleading, or not, unless there be omitted something so essential to the action or defence that judgment according to law and the very right of the cause cannot be given.

Passing by this formal objection, the question on the merits is whether, upon the matters averred in the declaration, it was within the rightful jurisdiction of the mayor to proceed to impose a fine for an alleged obstruction in the place claimed to be a street of the city. It is said in Paley on Convictions, p. 1, that the examination and punishment of offences in a summary manner by justices of the peace, out of their sessions, and without the intervention of a jury, or an open trial, are founded entirely upon a special authority conferred and regulated by statute. The authority of the mayor of the city to impose fines for obstructing the streets is conferred by the act passed March 30, 1852, Sess. Acts, p. 259, entitled an act revising and reducing into one act the provisions of the charter of the city of Richmond. The 1st section provides, that the 54th chapter of the Code of

Digitized by Google

Virginia shall be applicable to the said corporation and the council of the city, as far as may be consistent with the 537 charter. *The 17th section of that chapter confers the powers to lay off streets, &c., and have them kept in good order: and to carry into effect these and other powers, ordinances and by-laws may be made, and fines prescribed for violations thereof. Similar authority is granted to the city council by the charter, § 26, p. 263; and by the 50th section of said act it is provided, that any claim to a fine or penalty under the act, or any ordinance or by-law of the city, if it be limited to an amount not exceeding twenty dollars, shall be cognizable by the mayor, recorder or any alderman of the city. In pursuance of the authority so conferred, and to punish for a violation of an ordinance of the common council for preventing obstructions of the streets and alleys of the city, a copy of which ordinance is set forth in the declaration, the mayor proceeded to impose the fine which has led to the present controversy. In enforcing this ordinance, the mayor must necessarily, in ordinary cases, enquire into the fact whether the place where the obstruction is put, is a street or public alley, and his judgment and sentence on that, as upon every other question properly falling within his conceded jurisdiction, is conclusive and final. But the question still remains, whether, by the principles of the common law, a bona fide claim of title to the property does not oust the jurisdiction of the justice or officer exercising such summary jurisdiction. And the principle involved is, whether the title to lands may, in this collateral way, be subjected to the jurisdiction of police officers, proceeding without writ, deciding without the intervention of a jury, who hold no court of record, and therefore no record of their proceedings is preserved, and from whose judgment there is no appeal. The recognition of such a jurisdiction might in effect submit the whole beneficial interest in the freehold to the absolute control of such inferior tribunal: for by 538 successive fines the *right of the owner might be so impaired as to be of no value.

The author before referred to, Paley on Convictions, p. 48, states, "that it has always been held as a maxim, that where the title to property is in question, the exercise of a summary jurisdiction by justices of the peace is ousted. This principle is not founded on any legislative provision, but is a qualification which the law itself raises in the execution of penal statutes; and is always implied in their construction." For the first proposition he refers to a declaration of Lord Ch. J. Holt in Regina v. Speed, 1 Ld. Ray. R. 583, who is reported to have said, that "without doubt if the defendant has but the color of title, the justices have no jurisdiction." Though whether he did use the expression thus imputed to him, has more recently been doubted.

But for the proposition that this principle is not founded on any legislative provision, but is a qualification which the law itself raises in the execution of penal statutes, no authority is cited.

The principle, I conjecture, flows from a higher source than any mere judicial decision. It is derived, as it seems to me, from magna charta itself, which declared that no freeman should be taken or imprisoned, or be disseized of his freehold, but by the lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land. Coke, in his reading upon magna charta, 2 Inst. 48, 50, says that "by lawful judgment of his peers," is meant the verdict of his equals, and by "the law of the land," the due course and process of the law. That the phrase is defined by 37 Edw. 3, ch. 8; and the words "by the law of the land," are rendered "by due process of law:" that is, he continues, by indictment or presentment by good and lawful men, where such deeds are done in due manner, or by writ original of the common law.

539 *In consequence of this express inhibition, no case has been referred to in which an attempt has been made to hold or maintain a plea by mere plain concerning a freehold, where the freehold was directly in issue; and in the recent statute of 9 and 10 Vict. in relation to County courts, ch. 96, § 58, it is provided that such courts shall not have cognizance of any action of ejectment, or in which the title of any corporeal or incorporeal hereditament comes in question.

In Comyn's Digest, title County (C 8), treating of the County court, it is laid down, "that it cannot hold plea by plaint concerning freehold; and therefore, if a man in a plaint in replevin justifies, avows, or makes cognizance as in the freehold of B, the jurisdiction of the County court is ousted." Again: "If the County court holds plea where it has no jurisdiction, the proceeding is coram non judice and void; and trespass lies against any who act under the process of the court. And if freehold or other plea which ousts the jurisdiction be pleaded, all the subsequent proceedings are void." And the authority for these positions which Comyn refers to is Cannon v. Smallwood, 3 Levinz 203. That case was referred to and recognized as a controlling authority in Tinniswood v. Pattison, 54 Eng. C. L. R. 243. There, in trespass for taking and impounding the plaintiff's beasts, the defendant pleaded a suit in the County court by J. S. against the now plaintiff, where the then defendant pleaded freehold in A, and justified the taking damage feasant in said freehold of A. The then plaintiff to this conusance pleaded in bar that A was bound to repair fences, and that for default of repair the beasts escaped. On this plea issue was taken, and the jury found the fences out of repair, and the plaintiff had judgment, and precept issued thereon, under which the now defendant, being bailiff, seized and impounded the beasts. The effect of the pleadings was a justification of the seizure under 540 *process issued upon a judgment of the County court. Upon demurrer, it was objected that the judgment was void et coram non judice, because after freehold pleaded the County court had not jurisdiction, because freehold cannot be tried without writ "sans brief" in the Norman French of the report. It was replied, that the freehold was not tried there, but a collateral matter, whether the fences were in repair. But the court held that by the trial a charge on the freehold was put in issue, and that the County court had no power after freehold pleaded to proceed in the cause, directly or collaterally, and the proceedings were coram non judice and void. The case in 54 Eng. C. L. R. 243, of Tinniswood v. Pattison, was very similar in its facts; and Tindal, C. J., said, that the case of Cannon v. Smallwood was a distinct authority to show that the County court has lost its jurisdiction in the matter, and that the plaintiff below should have proceeded by the queen's writ of replegiare facias: showing that the principle of magna charta, as expounded by Coke, was at the foundation of the objection.

Digitized by Google

The judge refers to Coke's Commentary on the Statute of Gloucester, ch. 8, 2 Inst. 310, 11. Speaking of the jurisdiction of the sheriff in the County court, he says he shall not hold plea of trespass for taking away charters concerning inheritance of freehold; for it is a maxim of the law, that pleas concerning charters or writings relating to the freehold should not be pleaded without the king's writ in courts not of record, according to the law and custom of England. These authorities, ancient and recent, show what is and ever has been the law of England, and the principle on which it is founded. To these may be added Fitz. Nat. Brev. 47 B; Rex v. Speed, 1 Ld. Raym. 583; Regina v. Burnaby, 2 Id. 900.

In Virginia, it is not pretended
541 that justices of the *peace or officers of corporations have ever been empowered by any statute to try, without writ, titles to land in civil causes. The eleventh article of the bill of rights declares, that in controversies respecting property, and in suits between man and man, the ancient trial by jury of twelve men is preferable to any other, and ought to be held sacred.

Though this provision may not amount to a positive restriction upon the power of the legislature in reference to all controversies respecting property of every kind, and suits between man and man, no matter what may be the amount in dispute, it is nevertheless a provision which should always be kept in mind in construing the acts of the legislature; and we are not warranted in giving such an interpretation to their acts as to impute to the legislature the intention of setting aside this article by mere implication. In civil cases we see no such jurisdiction is conferred, and it would be a strained construction which would impute to the legislature the intention to confer such jurisdiction where such officers were invested with power to impose fines, and the question arose collaterally. We have for instance a provision in the Code, copied from former laws, p. 450, ch. 101, § 2, subjecting a person to a fine of three dollars for each offence of shooting, hunting, &c., within the enclosed bounds of another person, without license from the owner. It would be a forced construction which would authorize the justice, upon complaint for violating this law, to adjudicate upon the question of title: The contrary was held by all the judges in The Queen v. Cridland, &c., 90 Eng. C. L. R. 853, a proceeding under a statute imposing a fine for committing a trespass by entering on land in search or pursuit of game; all concurring that where there was a bona fide claim of title set up, the justices have no longer jurisdiction to proceed to a summary conviction. The regard which 542 the legislature *has always had for this right to a freehold is further manifested by provisions contained in the laws regulating appellate jurisdiction, conferring as a general rule such appellate jurisdiction where the title or bounds of land shall be drawn in question. The principle is recognized also in the 11th section, article 6, of the present constitution, declaring in what cases appellate jurisdiction may be conferred on this court, and providing that it shall not have jurisdiction in civil causes, where the matter in controversy, exclusive of costs, is less in value or amount than five hundred dollars, except in controversies concerning the title or boundaries of land, &c.

The question has never been presented for adjudication in any case in Virginia, where the justice was exercising the jurisdiction conferred to proceed to a summary conviction. But that a justice of the peace had no jurisdiction to try titles to freehold or any fee simple estate or interest in an incorporeal hereditament, was expressly determined in Miller v. Marshall, 1 Va. Cas. 158, where a prohibition was awarded to the justice who was proceeding to try a cause before him for the recovery of a rent reserved by deed to one and his heirs forever. On this branch of the case I conclude that, whether upon a trial of a civil cause, or in the exercise of the general power conferred by statute to proceed to a summary conviction, the justice, mayor, or any such subordinate officer, is bound to dismiss his summons immediately on being convinced that the case involves a bona fide claim of title to real estate, unless the jurisdiction is expressly conferred by statute. Nor is there any difference in this respect between corporeal and incorporeal hereditaments. Indeed, most of the cases where the question arose were cases involving the right to incorporeal hereditaments, or some charge or servitude sought to be imposed on the land.

Miller v. Marshall was the case of 543 a fee simple interest *in rent; Cannon v. Smallwood, an obligation to repair fences—a servitude on the land. In Randall v. Crandall, 6 Hill's R. 342, an action of trespass quare clausum—the defence that the locus in quo was a public highway, raised the question of title to land, which could not be tried before a justice, as a right of way over another's land affects the owner's title. In Striker v. Mott, 6 Wend. R. 465, under a statute that a justice should not have cognizance where the title to lands came in question, it was held that a claim to a right of way involves the title to the premises over which it passes. In Pritchard v. Atkinson, 4 N. Hamp. R. 291, under a statute giving justices jurisdiction to try causes where the sum in controversy did not exceed a certain amount, except such wherein the title to real estate might be drawn in question, covenant was brought assigning as a breach that the land was encumbered with a highway, and one dollar damages recovered; and it was held the justice had no jurisdiction. The question of title was necessarily involved, as such an easement, a highway, was a real franchise. See also Heaton v. Ferris, 1 John. R. 146; Saunders v. Wilson, 15 Wend. R. 338; Spear v. Bicknell, 5 Mass. R. 125; People v. Onandaga Common Pleas, 2 Wend. R. 263, to the same effect.

Digitized by Google

Regarding it to be the law, that the jurisdiction of the mayor to convict summarily is ousted where a claim of title to real estate is set up bona fide, and that the claim to hold it discharged from such an easement as a highway, which is a real franchise, is a controversy concerning the title to real estate, it remains to enquire, in the third place, whether the matters averred in the declaration, or any of them, admitted to be true by the demurrer, do show such bona fide claim by the plaintiffs as to entitle them to the prohibition prayed for?

544 The declaration sets out that the *plaintiffs theretofore instituted an action of ejectment for the property in question against the city of Richmond; that in said suit they claimed the fee simple; and that by default they recovered judgment against the city, which being revived, execution issued thereon, and possession was delivered by the sheriff. Whereupon the plaintiffs forthwith enclosed it, and have ever since held the same so enclosed, in their exclusive possession and occupation, as by said judgment and execution thereupon made, they were authorized to do.

It then sets forth the proceedings of the mayor under the ordinance of the common council of the city imposing fines for obstructing the streets or public alleys, and that in obedience to his summons they appeared before him and showed for cause why they should not be fined: First—that the judgment aforesaid had conclusively determined, that the said piece of ground was no part of any street in the city of Richmond, and that the mayor had no power to re-examine and re-try a question already adjudged. Secondly—that if that question was not determined by the judgment in ejectment, still that the plaintiffs did then and there bona fide claim and still do bona fide claim the fee simple of said land and the right to the exclusive possession thereof, and did then and there bona fide deny and still do bona fide deny the existence of any right in any quarter to use or occupy the same as a street of the city or as a highway of the commonwealth; while the mayor in that proceeding was asserting a right of the city to use and occupy the land as a street of the city.

The cause first alleged why he should not be fined, rests upon the effect of the judgment in ejectment and possession delivered or the execution issued on the judgment. That this without more and irrespective of any other claim of title conclusively determined that the piece of ground was 545 no part of any street, &c. *The cause shown looks rather to the propriety of imposing a fine, upon the proof, than to an assertion of title with any view to oust the jurisdiction. Treating it however as a claim resting solely on the effect of the judgment and execution, the mayor it seems to me, would have had a right to consider whether in passing on the question, he looked to the claim of title so set up, or in any way passed upon it. Notwithstanding the strong language used or attributed to Holt and some of the judges, that any color or pretence of title should oust the jurisdiction of the justice, I think the rule as laid down in The Queen v. Cridland, 90 Eng. C. L. R. 853, is the more reasonable; that is, that the justices have jurisdiction to try the fact whether the claim is bona fide made, or I may add, whether it sets up any claim whatever in opposition to the right asserted. The right to the public easement, if it existed, was incorporeal, and belonged to the public or the commonwealth; and although under the charter the control or superintendence of the street or highway be conceded to the municipal authority, all prosecutions for obstructing, &c., are conducted in the name of the commonwealth. The easement comprehends no interest in the soil. "The right of freehold (says Swift, J., in Peck v. Smith, 1 Conn. R. 103) is not touched by establishing a highway, but continues in the original owner of the land in the same manner it was before the highway was established, subject to the easement. The dedication or laying out of a street within a corporation does not affect the ownership of the soil, and however enlarged the easement may be, when within the limits of a corporation, in order to the beneficial use of it, and to effect the purposes intended when the easement was created; subject to such use, whether enlarged or limited, the title remains in the owner. Notwithstanding the easement, the owner retains many and

546 valuable interests. *He is entitled to the minerals under it; he may make any use of it not inconsistent with the enjoyment of the easement; as is fully shown in the notes of Hare & Wallace to Dovaston v. Payne, 2 Smith's Leading Cases 90 (44 L. Li. 141), where the authorities are collected. Amongst the rights of the owner is the right to maintain trespass: the point decided in Peck v. Smith, 1 Conn. R. 103, and in Lade v. Shepherd, 2 Strange R. 1004: though to maintain trespass he must have not only the right to possession, but the actual possession.

Digitized by Google

The right of the owner to recover in ejectment was affirmed by the Court of king's bench in Goodtitle v. Alker, 1 Burr. R. 133.

Since this decision, the doctrine seems to be considered as settled in England, and the elementary writers lay it down as established law. Runnington 130; Adams 18, 19; Saunders Pl. & Ev. 98. It has been recognized by almost every judge who has had occasion to refer to it in America; as may be seen by reference to the note of Wallace & Hare, ubi supra; and followed in Cooper v. Smith, 9 Serg. & Rawle 26; Alden v. Murdock, 13 Mass. R. 256; and see also Watrous v. Southworth, 5 Conn. R. 305; Wooster v. Butler, 13 Id. 309; Reed v. Leeds, 19 Id. 182.

A doubt has been cast upon the right of the owner of the soil of a highway or public square, to recover in ejectment against one who takes exclusive possession of the ground, by the cases of the City of Cincinnati v. White, 6 Peters' R. 431; and Barclay v. Howell's lessee, Id. 498; cases much relied on in the argument here. The cases are reviewed in the note of Wallace & Hare, and it is shown that the remarks of the learned judge there were the extrajudicial dicta of an individual; for it was obviously well understood that the cases were carried to the Supreme court for the settlement of the right of the public to the ease-547 ment; *and as the plaintiff claimed exclusive possession, the court, in deciding against that claim, probably did not feel called upon to decide on the right to recover subject to the easement, for which the plaintiff cared nothing. Whatever however may be the law of that forum, in Virginia the rule has been established by an authoritative decision of the very point in accordance with the settled doctrine of the English courts and the courts of this country, so far as we have been referred to them, except the Supreme court.

In Bolling v. Mayor of Petersburg, 3 Rand. 563, which was a writ of right by the demandant against the corporation of Petersburg, a special verdict was found, showing title in the demandant and his ancestors, and finding certain proceedings by which a public road was established over the tract of land, which said road, so established, had always been used as a public road from that time; and that the land in controversy was a part of said road. There were other findings, showing the erection of a wharf on said land by the corporation, and that it had exclusive possession of the wharf, &c.

Judge Carr, in his opinion, in which the other judges concurred, after disposing of the question of title, says, "The next question is as to the public highway. Does this disable the demandant from recovering the land? It certainly would not in England, as many cases show." The judge then refers to Lade v. Shepherd, 2 Strange's R. 1004; quotes at length from the opinion of Lord Mansfield in Goodtitle v. Alker; refers also to 1 Wilson 107; 6 East 154; Bac. Abr. title Highways, letter B; and then proceeds, "It is clear from these cases (and others might be added), that in England the right of way has been considered as an easement not affecting the right of soil."

And he then shows that the laws of 548 Virginia *had not changed the common law. And the other questions being determined in favor of the demandant, judgment was rendered in his favor.

The court did not rest its opinion upon any supposed distinction between seizin and possession. They took seizin to be as Lord Coke in 6 Rep. 57b, defines it as being identical with possession, and rely upon the case in 2 Strange 1004, which was trespass for a wrong done to the possession.

It results from these authorities, that no question as to the easement was or could have been raised in the ejectment. Whether the ownership of the soil remained in the original proprietor, or vested in the lot owners whose lots bounded on the street, or was vested in the corporation, did not affect the public easement. As to the public, represented by the commonwealth, if entitled to the easement, a controversy respecting the ownership of the soil, was res inter alios acta, and however determined, having no effect whatever on the public right. The judgment, if it could be used in evidence in a controversy affecting the public franchise, could only be used for the purpose of showing an entry under a claim of right, and to define the extent of the claim and possession; and not as showing or tending to show that no such real franchise attached to the property. If the case had rested on the first ground assigned in the declaration, I think the demurrer would have been properly sustained.

But the second cause assigned, admitted by the demurrer to be true, does show a bona fide claim to the exclusive possession and title, and denies that the land was subject to any easement in the public, or any right in any quarter to use or occupy the same as a street or as a highway. This claim, thus bona fide made, covers the whole ground; it involved the enquiry as to the existence of such an easement, an 549 enquiry *which the mayor had no right to enter into, or jurisdiction to try or determine the question. And the demurrer should therefore have been overruled.

If the judgment in the ejectment, the record of which is exhibited, was entitled of itself to the conclusive effect claimed for it, there could be no reason for remanding the cause for any other proceedings, as the record speaks for itself, and could not be contradicted; and therefore it became necessary to examine the question so elaborately discussed.

Digitized by Google

It is difficult to perceive what question of fact was intended to be raised by the plea offered and objected to, for it would seem, from the affidavit of M. Bates, made part of the mayor's return, that he gave evidence tending to prove a dedication of the place in controversy for a public street, and the enjoyment of the easement by the public, showing that there must have been some claim of and enquiry into the title before the mayor. But this is matter not appearing on the demurrer to the declaration, and therefore can have no influence on the judgment to be rendered on the demurrer.

It results from the foregoing examination of the questions presented and argued, that in proceedings to convict summarily before a justice or other officer exercising the like powers, if a claim to the freehold is set up in the defendant or those for whom he acts, the officer has jurisdiction to try the fact, whether the claim is bona fide made: If it be so made and the jurisdiction is ousted, he cannot enquire into the validity of the claim, and he has no power in such case to proceed to a summary conviction. That the doctrine applies as well to the case where an incorporeal hereditament or real franchise is claimed or resisted as to a controversy touching the freehold itself: That the recovery in ejectment by the judgment referred to, was subject to any ease-550 ment in the public to use the *same as a street or highway, and the right of the public to the easement was not drawn in question or in any way affected by a controversy between the plaintiffs and the city as to the ownership of the soil. But that under the second cause assigned in the declaration it appears, there was a bona fide claim to the exclusive enjoyment of the property, free from the right of way or easement claimed for the public; and that such claim so made, could not be tried by the mayor, but ousted his jurisdiction. It is to be regretted that in a matter, where the public convenience is so much involved, that the right to the easement itself had not been presented either by an action of trespass against the city authorities for removing the obstruction, or some proceeding to abate the alleged nuisance, so that the right might have been settled by a court of record having competent authority. The question before us does not reach the merits, but merely the power of the mayor to enquire into them. The judgment must be reversed with costs. And this court proceeding &c. it seems that the declaration &c. are &c.; therefore considered that the demurrer be overruled, and the cause is remanded for a decision of the motion to reject the plea tendered, and for further proceedings: which is ordered to be certified.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Allen, P.

Judgment reversed.

551 *Cooper v. Hepburn & als.

April Term, 1860, Richmond.

(Absent ALLEN, P., and LEE, J.*)

1. Devises—Contingent Fees—Afterborn Children—Sale of Land by Guardian—Parties.†—H devises real estate to M during his natural life, and to his children if he should have lawful issue; if not, then at his decease to H's grandchildren. At the death of H, M is not married, but he afterwards marries and has lawful children. Upon the birth of the first child of M, the remainder was vested in the child, subject to open and let in the afterborn children as they severally came into being; and the remainder in favor of the grandchildren was defeated. And therefore the grandchildren were not necessary parties to a suit by the guardian of M's children for a sale of the real estate.
2. Sale of Infants' Lands—Statute.‡—M as guardian of his infant children files a bill for the sale of the real estate held by himself for life and by his children in remainder; and it is sold accordingly. This is authorized by the statute.§
3. Same—Failure to Formally Aver Suit Brought as Guardian—Effect.|—Though the bill does not formally aver that the suit is brought as guardian, yet it states that the plaintiff is the guardian, and the whole frame of the bill is in pursuance of what is required to be set out in such a case, and the infants are made defendants. The omission of this formal averment does not vitiate the proceedings.
4. Same—Irregularities—Effect on Purchaser.¶—One of

*They were sitting in a Special court of appeals.

†Wills—Construction—Contingent Fees.—In Walker v. Lewis, 90 Va. 582, 19 S. E. Rep. 258, it is said: "It is a well-established rule of the common law that while no remainder can be limited after a limitation in fee, yet two contingent fees, by way of remainder, may be limited as substitutes or alternatives, one for the other, the latter to take effect in case the prior one should fail to vest in interest, and is immediately avoided if the first does vest in interest. 1 Lom. Dig. 417; 2 Min. Inst. (4th Ed.) 895; Cooper v. Hepburn, 15 Gratt. 551, 559."

In Stokes v. Van Wyck, 83 Va. 733, 3 S. E. Rep. 387, the principal case is cited as authority for the proposition that the law leans in favor of the vesting of estates as soon as possible.

‡Sale of Infants' Lands by Guardian.—The principal case holds that a guardian may file a bill for the sale of the real estate of his infant children held by himself for life and by them in remainder and have the land sold accordingly. This is approved in Zirkle v. McCue, 26 Gratt. 525, and note; Reed v. Hedges, 16 W. Va. 198; Faulkner v. Davis, 18 Gratt. 671, and note, citing the principal case.

§See 1 Rev. Code of 1819, ch. 108, § 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, p. 409; Sup. Rev. Code, ch. 104, § 2, p. 134; Code, ch. 128, § 2, 3, 4, 5, p. 535-6.

|Same—Failure to Aver Suit Brought as Guardian—Effect.—For the proposition that, though the bill, in a suit for the sale of infants' lands, does not formally aver that the suit is brought as guardian, yet it states that the plaintiff is guardian, and the whole frame of the bill is in pursuance of what is required to be set out in such case, and the infants are made defendants, such omission of this formal averment does not vitiate the proceedings, the principal case is cited and followed in Zirkle v. McCue, 26 Gratt. 525. See generally, monographic note on "Infants."

¶Judicial Sale—Reversal of Decree—Effect upon Purchaser's Title.—In Dunfee v. Childs, 45 W. Va. 165, 30

Digitized by Google

the infant defendants having been over fourteen years of age when the bill was filed, it was irregular not to require her to file her answer. But the sale having been decreed, and it having been made more than six months after the decree, and confirmed without objection, it is too late for the purchaser eighteen months afterwards to object to the irregularity.

5. Same—Same—Same.—The court, if it deemed it necessary for the protection of the purchaser, might have directed the infant to file an answer after the objection was made.

552 *6. Same—Private Bids—Bid Accepted by Court—Effect.—Upon a bill for the sale of infants' real estate, the court decrees a sale, and directs the commissioner to sell at private sale; and he advertises for sealed proposals, which are to be opened at a certain day in the presence of the court. Proposals are put in, and the court accepts one of them, and forthwith confirms the sale, and directs the party to execute it according to its terms. Such a purchaser stands upon the same footing as any other purchaser at a judicial sale; and is not entitled to any other or further relief.

7. Appellate Practice—Order of Lower Court Based upon Facts Not Found in Record—Effect.††—When it appears to the Court of appeals that the order of the Circuit court was based upon the evidence of facts not found in the record, that court may reasonably and justly presume that the order is right; that it was in accordance with and justified by the facts.

S. E. Rep. 106, the principal case is cited as authority for the proposition that, under the Virginia statute, Code 1849, ch. 178, § 8, if the sale of property be made under a decree or order of the court, after six months from the date thereof and such sale is confirmed though such decree or order be afterwards reversed or set aside, the title of the purchaser at such sale shall not be affected thereby; but there may be a restitution of the proceeds of the sale. But the case at bar holds that the reversal of a decree under which land is sold will not affect the title of the purchaser, if he is not a party to the suit, or, though a party, has no interest in the debt or cause for which the land is sold; but, if he is a party with such interest in the decree, his title falls with such reversal. If a decree confirming a sale be reversed for error in it, the purchaser's title falls, whether he be a party or not. Where necessary parties, having title, are not before the court, the purchaser's title falls with reversal of decree of sale.

See, in accord with the principal case, Quesenberry v. Barbour, 31 Gratt. 500, and note; Capehart v. Dowery, 10 W. Va. 148; Thomas v. Davidson, 76 Va. 344; Lancaster v. Barton, 92 Va. 626, 24 S. E. Rep. 251, all citing the principal case. See generally, monographic note on "Judicial Sales" appended to Walker v. Page, 21 Gratt. 636.

Code, ch. 178, § 8, p. 676. "If a sale of property be made under a decree or order of a court, after six months from the date thereof, and such sale be confirmed, though such decree or order be afterwards reversed or set aside, the title of the purchaser at such sale shall not be affected thereby; but there may be restitution of the proceeds of sale to those entitled."

††Appellate Practice—Order of Lower Court Based upon Facts Not Found in Record—Effect.—For the proposition contained in the seventh headnote of the principal case that, when it appears to the court of appeals that the order of the circuit court was based upon the evidence of facts not found in the record, that court may reasonably and justly presume that the order is right; that it was in accordance with and justified by the facts, the principal case is cited and approved in Board of Supervisors v. Dunn, 27 Gratt. 620, and note.

Prior to May 1817 William Hepburn, of the city of Alexandria, departed this life, having first made his will, which bears date in February of that year, and which was duly admitted to probate in the Orphan's court of Alexandria county.

As introductory to certain bequests, the testator says: "On the first day of February one thousand eight hundred and sixteen, I sold Esther (whom I bought some years ago of Benjamin Dulany, Esquire) and her three children, Moses, Letty and Juliana Eliza, to Hannah Jackson, and the said Hannah Jackson has since manumitted and set free the said three children, who have been maintained and supported by me since the death of their mother Esther, and are to be supported by me during my life." And after some directions for the care of the three children, he makes the following provision: "I give unto Moses the son of Esther aforesaid, the houses and lots where I now live (one of the aforesaid lots I bought of William Herbert, junior, trustee for the creditors of Robert Conway, and the other I bought of Joseph Manderville) together with my fishing shore during his natural life, and to his children, if he should have lawful issue; if not then I give the said lots and fishing shore, at his decease, to my grandchildren equally and their heirs forever."

553 *In May 1848 Moses Hepburn instituted a suit in the Superior court of law and chancery for Alexandria county, for the sale of the property mentioned in the foregoing devise. The writ directs the sheriff to summon Prudence Crandall Hepburn and three others by name, infant children of Moses Hepburn, to answer a bill exhibited against them by Moses Hepburn in his own right and as their guardian. The bill is in the name of Moses Hepburn, a free man of color, of the town and county of Alexandria, and sets out the devise in the will of William Hepburn, as herein before given. States that the plaintiff in the year 1827 intermarried with Amelia R. Braddock, and had by her four children (the defendants), all of whom were infants under age. That at the March term 1848 of the County court of Alexandria, he had qualified as guardian of said children. That he knows of no property belonging to his children except their reversionary interest in the lots of ground before mentioned. And he sets out at length the grounds upon which he believes it will be for the interest of the infant children that the property should be sold. And making the four children parties defendants, he asks for the appointment of a guardian ad litem, who shall answer the bill on oath: that the lots may be sold, and the proceeds reinvested in such manner as to the court may seem just and proper; and for general relief.

Digitized by Google

At the October rules 1848 William C. Yeaton was appointed guardian ad litem of the infant defendants; and at the December rules he filed their answer, submitting their interests to the protection of the court.

In November 1849 the cause came on to be heard, when the court made a decree appointing a commissioner to contract (after thirty days' notice) for the sale of the land in the bill mentioned, to be paid in Virginia state stock; the said contract to be subject to the approval of the court.

554 *The commissioner having had the property divided into lots, offered it for sale at public auction; but after some of the lots had been struck off, he withdrew the others, thinking the price at which the lots were sold was inadequate. His report of the sale was excepted to by the plaintiff, upon the ground that the property was sold at public sale, instead of by private contract. And when the cause came on again to be heard in June 1852, the exception was sustained; and the commissioner was directed to proceed according to the original decree in the cause.

The commissioner proceeded to advertise for proposals for the purchase of the property, which were to be under seal, and to be opened in the presence of the court on the 10th day of May 1853. Three offers were put in on the 9th of May, of which the highest was that of Lewis Cooper. He proposed to give for the property sixteen thousand two hundred dollars, payable in six per centum stock of the state of Virginia; one-fourth on the acceptance of his bid, or within ten days thereafter; one-fourth on the 15th day of January 1854; one-fourth on the 15th of July 1854; and one-fourth on the 15th of January 1855, with interest until the respective deliveries, and to pay a part of the above, not exceeding two thousand dollars, in money within ten days of the acceptance, should the court require it.

The record does not show what was done on the 10th of May; but the cause came on to be heard on the 13th, when the court made a decree, reciting that Cooper had paid to the commissioner two thousand dollars in money, and had executed his bond with surety, with condition to deliver the Virginia state stock at the times stated in his proposal, and accepting his proposal, and confirming the sale; and directing the commissioner to convey to Cooper the property upon the delivery of the stock.

555 And on the 18th of *the same month the court made another decree in the cause, directing the commissioner to lend to Moses Hepburn the balance of the two thousand dollars, after deducting the expenses of the sale.

In February 1854 the commissioner reported to the court that Cooper had delivered to him two thousand one hundred dollars of the Virginia state stock; but that he had failed to deliver the residue of the stock which was then due; and that about the 26th of July 1853 the commissioner had received from the agent of Cooper a notice that at the next term of the court he would move said court to set aside the sale, and to refund the money paid by him, for defect of title to the property sold to him.

At the February term of the court Cooper presented his petition, stating that since he had made the payments on his purchase, he had accidentally learned from the result of a certain suit lately decided in the same court, that it was very doubtful whether the plaintiff and his children had any title to the land sold, for the reason that the plaintiff in the suit was a slave, and his children in the eye of the law bastards; and therefore the parties were incapable of taking any thing under the will of William Hepburn. He therefore prayed that the court would direct an enquiry into the sufficiency of the title to the property.

At the same term the court, without noticing the petition of Cooper, reciting that it appearing from the report of the commissioner that Cooper had failed to comply with the decree of May 13th, 1853, it was ordered that he appear at the May term next, and show cause why he had failed to comply with the said decree.

At the November term 1854 Cooper was permitted to file a supplemental petition, in which he says that on a further examination of the proceedings in the suit, he had ascertained that they were so ir-

556 regular *that no valid title to the land could be made to him: and he sets out various objections to the proceedings, viz:

1. That the bill of complaint, though it states the fact that the plaintiff had been appointed guardian of the infant defendants, yet does not aver that he sues as such.

2. That the bill is for a sale of his own as well as the infants' interest in the land, which is not authorized by the statute.

3. That the evidence showed one of the infant defendants was over fourteen years of age, and that she had not filed her answer.

4. That the evidence did not appear to have been taken in the presence of the guardian ad litem, or upon interrogatories agreed on by him.

5. That the grandchildren of the testator, to whom the property was limited over on the death of Moses Hepburn without lawful issue, were necessary parties.

At the same term of the court Thomas Dundas and others, the grandchildren and heirs of William Hepburn, presented their petition, in which, after setting out their relationship to William Hepburn, and the proceedings in this suit, they say that the plaintiff Moses Hepburn is a slave; that his guardianship of the infant defendants is void; and they ask that the sale may be set aside and the suit dismissed; or if this may not be done, that they may be made parties, so that as parties interested under the will of William Hepburn, they may have an opportunity of protecting their interests before the court.

Digitized by Google

No further steps seem to have been taken in the case until the May term of the court for 1856, when the cause coming on to be heard upon the petitions, they were rejected. At the November term a rule was made upon Cooper to show cause, on the first day of the next term of the court 557 why the land purchased *by him should not be resold to satisfy the unpaid installments and interest due on his said purchase; and upon his failure to do so, the land would be ordered to be resold at the cost and risk of the said Cooper. And on the same day a decree was made directing the commissioner to pay over to Moses Hepburn the interest and dividends due to him, which had been collected by the commissioner on the Virginia state stock mentioned in his report of February 1854. And the cause was continued for further proceedings.

The evidence on which the sale was decreed, showed that in November 1848, when the depositions were taken, the oldest child of Moses Hepburn was fifteen years old.

Cooper applied to this court for an appeal from the decree; which was allowed.

H. Winter Davis and Beach, for the appellant.

Francis L. Smith, for the appellees.

DANIEL, J. The question, which it seems to me ought to be disposed of first, is that raised by the fifth assignment of error, to wit, whether all the proper parties to the suit are before the court. The grandchildren of William Hepburn the testator, it is insisted, took under his will such an interest in the real estate in controversy as entitled them to be heard in answer to any bill seeking its sale. The clause of the will by which this interest is supposed to be conferred, is as follows:

"I give unto Moses the son of Esther aforesaid, the houses and lots where I now live (one of the aforesaid lots I bought of William Herbert junior, trustee for the creditors of Robert Conway, and the other I bought of Joseph Manderville), together with my fishing shore, during his natural life, and to his children if he should have lawful issue; if not, then I give the 558 said lots and *fishing shore at his decease to my grandchildren equally and their heirs forever."

The will bears date the 28th February 1817, and appears to have been admitted to probate on the 26th of May 1817. At the date of the will Moses Hepburn had no children; indeed, according to the statements of the bill, his marriage did not take place till about the year 1827. There are, as appears from the record, five children, the issue of that marriage. In this state of things, in order to come to the conclusion that the grandchildren of the testator mentioned in the clause in question, have still an interest in the devise, we should have to construe said clause as meaning that the vesting of the first remainder was dependent on the double contingency of Moses Hepburn having children, and of their (or some of them) surviving him. This, it seems to me, we cannot do. The law leans in favor of the vesting of estates: and if, therefore, the meaning of the will was doubtful, we should, instead of seeking for a construction that would postpone the vesting of the estate, and impart to the remainder an additional feature of contingency, incline rather to that construction which would regard the remainder as vesting on the happening of the earliest contingency, to wit, the coming into being of the children of Moses Hepburn. There is, however, no reasonable doubt as to the intention of the testator; the plain and natural effect of the language which he has employed, is to give the estate to Moses for life; remainder to his lawful children, if he shall have any, with an alternative remainder to the grandchildren of the testator, dependent on Moses' dying without having had any lawful children. At the death of the testator, both of the remainders were contingent; and until the birth of the first child of Moses Hepburn, the grandchildren had an interest in the subject of the devise: But on the happening of 559 that event, the first *remainder vested, and the second or alternative remainder was thereby defeated. Doe v. Perryn, 3 T. R. 484; Fearne on Remainders 312; Right v. Creber, 5 Barn. & Cres. R. 866; Hannan v. Osborn, 4 Paige's R. 336; Doe v. Provost, 4 Johns. R. 61; 4 Kent's Comm. 234, and note.

These authorities all show, that in cases of the kind the remainder becomes vested in the children of the life tenant as they severally come into being, subject to open and let in afterborn children, and that the remainders over are gone; and that if any of the children die in the lifetime of the life tenant, the estate descends to their heirs.

It is clear, therefore, as I conceive, that there was no error in the failure of the Circuit court to make the grandchildren of the testator parties to the suit; unless indeed such error arises out of the court's dismissing the petitions of the appellant and the petition of Thomas Dundas and others, so far as they were founded on the allegations that Moses Hepburn is a slave; that his marriage was illegal; and that his children are bastards; and that consequently, the said last mentioned petitioners are entitled to or interested in the lands sold. I am satisfied that the course pursued by the court in that particular was correct. It will be seen, that in the petition of the appellant, filed in February 1854, he states, that since paying a portion of the purchase money of the property in question, he had accidentally learned, from the result of a suit recently decided by the Circuit court of Alexandria (the court by which the decree under consideration was rendered), that it was very doubtful whether he could get any title to the land he had purchased.

Digitized by Google

by reason of the said Moses Hepburn being a slave, and his supposed children being, in the eye of the law, bastards, and consequently unable to take any thing under the will of the testator William Hep-560 burn. *We have before us no record of the suit above referred to, nor any account of, or statement in respect to it, further than what is contained in the petition. We may very reasonably conjecture that the reference is to the suit of Hepburn v. Dundas, which was decided by this court, upon an appeal in January 1856, and is reported in 13 Gratt. 219. Were we at liberty to look into that case, in passing upon this, we should there see that all the grounds on which the petitions were founded, so far as they relate to the matter in hand, had been entirely removed before the Circuit court made its order dismissing the petitions. In that case, the question whether Moses Hepburn was a free man or not, was distinctly presented to, and decided by this court in his favor. The case was an action of ejectment brought by Moses Hepburn and his sister Juliana, claiming to recover a certain tenement of James H. Dundas, as brother and sister and heirs of Letty, a free woman of color, to whom said tenement had been devised by the will of William Hepburn. Upon a demurrer to the evidence, the Circuit court had rendered a judgment, at its March term in 1853, in favor of the defendant. From this judgment an appeal was taken to this court in 1854; and at its January term 1856 (as before stated) this court reversed the judgment of the Circuit court, and rendered judgment for the plaintiffs in error; thus affirming the freedom of Moses and Juliana, and their right to take by descent from their sister.

At its May term 1856 the Circuit court made its order in this case, dismissing the petitions; the court and the parties having doubtless awaited the decision of this court in the case of Hepburn v. Dundas. Could we, therefore, properly regard the record in that case as a part of the record in this, all difficulty as to the question in hand would be at an end. As, however, neither the parties nor the Circuit court have 561 made *any such reference to said record as to identify it, and show conclusively to this court that it was relied on, and acted upon in the court below, we are not, I apprehend, at liberty to treat it as a part of the record in this case, and have therefore to pass upon the action of the Circuit court in respect to the petitions, without the aid of the decisive proof it would afford of the propriety of such action.

Looking at the case in the aspect in which it is presented in the absence of such aid, I am still satisfied that no error has been established in the course of the court in the particular under consideration. It may, I think, be safely affirmed, that when it appears to this court that the order of a Circuit court was based upon the evidence of facts not found in the record, this court may reasonably and justly presume that the order is right; that it was in accordance with, and justified by the facts.

Now, the sole reliance of the appellant, in his petition to the Circuit court to establish that Moses Hepburn was a slave, was upon the proceedings in a suit in that court. We cannot doubt that the Circuit court had full knowledge of all that was proved or decided in that suit. The appellant has failed to furnish us with any record of that suit. He has placed in this record no evidence of what was proved in it, or of what was its ultimate result. In the absence of such record, are we not well justified in concluding, that if produced it would fail to sustain the pretensions of the appellant, and that the order of the Circuit court was in conformity to its true bearing on the rights of the parties? Such a conclusion would seem to me to be just.

If additional support be needed to sustain this view, it may, I think, be derived from other considerations, which will be briefly adverted to. Moses Hepburn is recognized by the testator in his will as far back 562 as *1817 as being then a free man. In his bill he states that he was married in the year 1827. Of this there is no positive proof, but, from the deposition of the witness McKnight (taken in 1848), who states that he is acquainted with his wife and children, and who gives the ages of the latter, his marriage must have occurred at least as early as 1832 or 1833. In neither of the petitions is it stated that there was any further illegality or irregularity in his marriage than such as arises from the alleged fact that he was a slave. There is no allegation that the marriage was not in all its legal observances and forms, such as, if the parties were free persons, would have made it valid.

In his bill he further alleges, that he had duly qualified in the County court of Alexandria as the guardian of his children; and this is admitted in the petition of the Dundases; and in 1848 he institutes the present suit, as a free person of color, and so conducts it till 1854, when the petitions were filed; no question having ever been raised, so far as the record discloses, as to his title to freedom, from 1817 to 1854, a period of nearly forty years. If these circumstances, tending to show that for thirty-seven years he had been acting, and had been recognized and treated by the community, as a free person, are not, of themselves, in the absence of all proof to the contrary, except the presumption derived from his color, sufficient to overcome that presumption, and conclusively establish his freedom, they certainly persuade strongly to such a result; and when I consider them in connection with what has been said in respect to the suit referred to in the first petition of the appellant, I experience no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the Circuit court properly disposed of the petitions, so far as they sought to impede the proceedings on the allegation that Moses Hepburn was a slave.

Digitized by Google

The question which seems to me to 563 be the most *proper to be considered next in order, is that raised by the second assignment of errors. It is there objected, that the court had no power or jurisdiction to make a sale of the lands; that the law does not authorize a guardian to have a sale of the land of his wards, when, as here, according to the bill, he is tenant for life, and the infants have only a remainder in the lands; that the law contemplates the guardian as simply a fiduciary, and no where authorizes him to file a bill for the sale of real estate wherein he has an interest as well as the infant wards. I do not think that the objection is well founded. The law of 1819, as modified by the act of 1826, which governed the subject at the time when the first decree directing the sale was made, authorized the guardians of infants to file a bill for the sale of the real estate of their wards, as well where more than one infant should be interested in the land sought to be sold, as where any one or more of those interested should be of full age; and the 2d section of chapter 128 of the Code, which had taken effect before the court made its order (of the 19th of June 1852) sustaining the exception to the report of the sale under the first decree, and directing the commissioner to proceed according to said decree, provides for the exhibition of a bill by the guardian of any minor when he thinks "that the interest of the ward will be promoted by a sale of his real estate, or real estate in which he is interested with others, infants or adults."

The language of the law as it stood, whether at the date of the original decree or at the date of the order of June 1852, directing the commissioner to execute the original decree, is, I think, sufficiently broad to cover the case. The term "real estate" applies as well to life estates or estates in remainder, as to absolute or entire fees.

Doubtless, one of the leading ob-
564 jects in conferring *the power in question upon the guardians and the courts, was to enable the former more fully to provide for the support, maintenance and education of their wards; and it is urged against the exercise of the power in the present case, that the sale will not in any manner promote that object, inasmuch as the interest upon the fund during the life of the father is to be enjoyed by him, and not by his children.

I cannot think, however, that the object just mentioned, important as it is, is the only one contemplated by the laws in question. It is not difficult to conceive of numerous instances, in which the want of a power in the courts to sell the remainder of a ward, would occasion the most serious injury to his future interests. The call for a sale of the real estate of an infant, looking to his interest alone, may be just as obvious and urgent in the case where he is the owner of a portion, as where he is the owner of the whole of the fee; and no good reason is perceived why language broad enough to cover both cases should be construed to have conferred the power to sell in the one case and to have withheld it in the other.

When, as here, the guardian is himself the owner of the life estate, there may be considerations, arising out of such fact, of a character to quicken the diligence of the court, in scanning the proceedings, and in seeing to it that the rights of the infants are fully protected; but such considerations furnish no serious grounds for supposing that cases of the kind were designed to be wholly excluded from the operation of the laws under consideration.

The objection stated in the fourth assignment of error, namely, that the evidence on which the decree was founded does not appear to have been taken in the presence of the guardian ad litem, has been met and obviated by the supplement to the record brought up and filed since the appeal 565 was allowed; from which *it sufficiently appears that Yeaton, the guardian ad litem, was present at the taking of the depositions.

It is true, as stated in the first assignment of error, that the appellee Moses Hepburn does not formally aver in his bill that he brings the suit in his capacity of guardian; but this surely can furnish no sufficient ground for reversing the proceedings, when it is seen that the bill distinctly states his qualification as the guardian of his children; sets out the property belonging to them; details the facts and reasons going in his opinion to show that it would be to the interest of the children, as the remaindermen, as well as to his own, as the life tenant, that the lands should be sold and the proceeds properly invested; makes the children all parties; asks that a guardian ad litem be appointed; and indeed throughout its whole frame and structure shows that it was filed with reference to the statute, and with the intent to conform the proceedings to its provisions.

It appears from the deposition of McKnight, that one of the children, Prudence Crandall Hepburn, was over fourteen years of age at the date of the institution of the suit; and it is alleged, as the ground of the third assignment of error, that she has not answered the bill in proper person, as required by the statute.

I do not deem it necessary to consider what weight the Circuit court ought to have allowed to this objection, if it had been brought to its notice before the order confirming the sale was made; inasmuch as it appears it was not raised until at the end of some eighteen months thereafter.

It was certainly an irregularity, due doubtless to inadvertance on the part of the court, to order a sale without first requiring the answer in question to be filed. But I cannot think that a purchaser under such an order, who has allowed the sale to 566 be confirmed *without objection on his part, has thereafter a peremptory right to make an irregularity of the kind the ground either of vacating the order of sale, or of delaying the execution of subsequent orders passed to enforce his compliance with the terms of his purchase. If the purchaser regarded the error as one by which his title to the property purchased might be in any manner thereafter affected, he ought to have brought it to the notice of the court before the confirmation of the sale.

Digitized by Google

It is argued, however, that owing to the unusual course pursued in making the sale in this case, to wit, by means of written proposals or bids made by those desiring to purchase, to the commissioner, and by him reported to the court for its acceptance, the purchaser did not, and could not know whether he was the highest bidder, nor whether, if so, his bid would be accepted by the court, until the report had been returned to the court, his bid accepted, and the sale confirmed; the acceptance of his bid, and the confirmation of the sale by the court, being simultaneous—parts of the same order. Under such circumstances, it is argued, that it would be harsh to apply to the purchaser the rules governing in cases where the sale is conducted in the ordinary mode. In neither case, whether the sale is made in the mode pursued in this case, or by way of public auction, is there any complete contract until the report of the commissioner is returned to and approved by the court, and the sale confirmed; and I can see no substantial reasons for making any distinction between the two cases in respect of the time or opportunity to be allowed the purchasers to show why their inchoate bargains should not be perfected. But in truth, in the present case it is apparent that the purchaser did know, before or at the time the sale was confirmed, that his bid had been accepted by the court. For it is seen from the 567 *record, that the report of the bids was returned to the court on the 10th of May, and the order, reciting the payment, by the purchaser to the commissioner, of the cash stipulated for in his proposal, accepting the bid, and confirming the sale, was made on the 13th of May 1853; and on the same (last mentioned) day, he entered into, and acknowledged in open court, his bond, setting out the order, and binding him in all respects to fulfill and comply with its requirements.

It is further seen, that the court, at its May term 1853, was still in session on the 18th of the month, an order in this cause being made on that day; that in July 1853 Cooper notified the commissioner in writing of his purpose to move the court to set aside the sale and refund him the cash he had paid, on the ground of defect of title to the property sold to him; that at the February term 1854 he filed his first petition, setting out the objection already disposed of, of Moses Hepburn being a slave; that at the same term an order was made directing him to show cause, at the following May term, why he had failed to comply with the order of May 1853; and that at the May term 1854 an order was made allowing the filing of the petition, which should have been, but was not, entered at the February term, to be then entered.

It thus appears that Cooper had, after a knowledge of the fact that his bid was accepted, during the term at which the sale was confirmed, as well as repeatedly thereafter, the amplest opportunity to acquaint himself with all the proceedings in the cause, and to show, if he could, why he should not be compelled to complete his purchase. Yet nothing is heard of the irregularity in question till the November term 1854, when it is for the first time brought to the notice of the court by Cooper, in his supplemental petition then filed.

This review of his conduct, in-568 stead of showing him *entitled to any exemption from the rules applicable to the case of a purchaser, at a judicial sale made in the usual mode, seeking, after a confirmation of the sale, to be excused from his purchase, exhibits such a degree of laches on his part as justly subjects his case to the most rigorous application of those rules. He was not in a position to ask that the sale should be set aside, and he discharged from his contract. The most that he could, in accordance with principles repeatedly announced by this court, properly ask, under the circumstances, was, that he should be protected against any future assertion of claim by the infant over fourteen years of age. See Cralle v. Meem, 8 Gratt. 496; Daniel v. Leitch, 13 Gratt. 195; Goddin v. Vaughn, 14 Gratt. 102. If the result of the proceedings is to afford such protection, there was no error to his prejudice in dismissing the petition; and such I think is the case.

It has been shown that the case was one over which the court had jurisdiction; and that all proper parties were before the court. The guardian ad litem had regularly filed his answer as well in behalf of the infant over fourteen years of age as the others; testimony had been duly taken showing that the interests of the infants would be promoted by a sale; and a sale obviously most advantageous to the infants had been made and confirmed. When, in this state of things, the omission in question was brought to the notice of the court, it might, in abundant caution, and out of regard for a strict observance of the provisions of the statute, intended as an additional safeguard to the rights of the infants, very properly, I think, have ordered the answer to be filed, and stayed all further action in the case till it was filed. But the court (as I feel justified in concluding from the history of the case), being fully satisfied that the bargain which it had made for the infants was a good one; that all before 569 *the court representing their interests were satisfied with the sale; and that the effect of calling for the answer would be simply to delay the proceedings, without in any manner changing the result, has not thought it necessary to supply the omission. I am still satisfied, however, that the purchaser is in no danger of any future disturbance of his title; that even without reference to the 8th section of chapter 178 of the Code, the infants would not be allowed, because of the defect in the proceedings complained of, to set aside a sale so manifestly beneficial to their interests. Be this as it may, the provisions of that statute do, I think, afford the purchaser full protection. The sale was not made till more than three years after the first order of sale in the cause, and more than eleven months after the second order directing the commissioner to proceed to execute the first order; and the statute declares, that if a sale of property be made under a decree or order of a court, after six months from the date thereof, and such sale be confirmed, though such decree or order be afterwards reversed or set aside, the title of the purchaser at such sale shall not be affected thereby; but there may be restitution of the proceeds of sale to those entitled. The revisors in their note to this section, at p. 878 of their report, after adverting to the fact that purchasers at judicial sales, especially in cases where there are infant parties, are often liable to have their titles impeached after a great lapse of time, and under circumstances most unjust and oppressive, recommend the adoption of the section as a means of remedying the evil. It was argued here that this section does not apply to cases where the lands of an infant are sold at the instance of his guardian, but to those cases only where the sale is in invitum, and incidental or collateral to the main objects of a hostile suit.

Digitized by Google

570 I can perceive, however, *no just ground for the distinction. The terms of the section are sufficiently comprehensive to embrace both classes of cases; and if it be just and proper that purchasers, under erroneous orders or decrees of sale, in any class of cases, should be protected against impeachments of their titles by infants interested in the cases, it would seem to me peculiarly just and proper to afford them such protection in those cases where the proceedings are for the benefit of the infants, and where the amplest and most efficient means have been prescribed for the protection of their interests.

I see no error in the decree, and think it should be affirmed.

ROBERTSON, J. With a single exception, I concur in the opinion of Judge Daniel.

It seems to me, that when a sale is confirmed by the court at the same time that the bids are opened and one of them accepted, the purchaser should be allowed a reasonable time after such confirmation, within which to make objections to the title.

In the case of a judicial sale made in the ordinary mode, the purchaser has an opportunity, and it is his duty to look into the title after he knows that he is the highest bidder, and before the sale is confirmed. If he fails to avail himself of this opportunity, and allows the sale to be confirmed without objection, it is not unreasonable that he should be precluded from objecting to the title afterwards. But no such opportunity exists when the sale is confirmed at the time of opening and accepting the bid. To hold that the purchaser stands on the same footing in each case, is in effect to require that he shall take the trouble and expense of investigating the title before he bids, or at least before he knows that he is the highest bidder—a rule which, if not known, must operate unjustly 571 *against purchasers at judicial sales; and, if known, can only have the effect of depreciating the price of the property, by diminishing the number of bidders.

Under the circumstances of this case, however, I concur in the affirmance of the decree of the Circuit court.

MONCURE, J., concurred in the opinion of Daniel, J.

Decree affirmed.

---

572 *Mason v. Chappell.

April Term, 1860, Richmond.

1. Sales—What Necessary to Constitute Fraud.—To constitute fraud in a sale, it is not sufficient that there shall be false representations by the vendor: but he must know at the time he makes them, that they are false; or at least he must make them as statements of facts within his own knowledge, when he has no knowledge of the subject.

2. Same—Express Warranty—What Constitutes.†—Any affirmation of the quantity of the article at the time of the sale, intended as an assurance to the purchaser of the truth of the fact affirmed, and acted on by the purchaser, is an express warranty. But no affirmation, however strong, will constitute a warranty, unless it was so intended.

3. Same—Specific Article—Implied Warranty.‡—Where a specific article is ordered and furnished, though the purchaser states the purpose to which he intends to apply it, there is no implied warranty

*Sales—Fraud—Scienter.—Whether the imputation of fraud be suppressio veri, or suggestio falsi, the case of Mason v. Chappell, 15 Gratt. 582, settles the law in Virginia, that the scienter must be shown. Proctor v. Spratley, 78 Va. 267, 268, citing the principal case. See the principal case also cited and approved in Crislip v. Cain, 19 W. Va. 490.

†Same—Express Warranty—What Constitutes.—The rule laid down in the second headnote as to what constitutes an express warranty has met with approval in Herron v. Dibrell, 87 Va. 296, 12 S. E. Rep. 674; Milburn Wagon Co. v. Nisewarner, 90 Va. 717, 19 S. E. Rep. 846; Reese v. Bates, 94 Va. 329, 26 S. E. Rep. 865; Crislip v. Cain, 19 W. Va. 481, 482, 543.

‡Same—Specific Article—Implied Warranty.—See Gerst v. Jones, 32 Gratt. 523, where the principal case is cited and approved as to the proposition laid down in the third headnote. But, in this case (Gerst v. Jones), the transaction was not a sale of an existing chattel selected by the purchasers, but an executory contract to manufacture and deliver, from time to time, as they might be needed, a number of tobacco boxes for a particular purpose, known to the seller.

Digitized by Google

on the part of the vendor that it is suitable for the purpose; and he will not, in the absence of fraud or an express warranty, be held liable, however unfit and defective it may turn out to be.

4. Same—Failure of Article Sold to Answer Representation—Presumption.—The mere fact that an article sold does not answer to the representation made respecting it, is not ground to assume that it was not the genuine article sold, so as to entitle the plaintiff to recover for a failure by the vendor to comply with his contract.

5. Same—Article Worthless—Right to Recover Price.—The mere fact that an article proves to be worthless, will not entitle the purchaser to recover back the price paid.

This was an action on the case in the Circuit court of Alexandria county, by Richard C. Mason against P. Stockton Chappell. The declaration contained two counts. The first was for the breach of a warranty, upon the sale by the defendant to the plaintiff of one hundred and fifty barrels of a manure called "Chappell's fertilizer;" the second was the common money counts in assumpsit. The plaintiff alleged that the article received by him was wholly worthless, and therefore he claimed to recover back the whole price, four hundred and sixty-three dollars and fifty cents, paid by him.

573 *Upon the trial the defendant demurred to the evidence; and the plaintiff joined therein. And from the evidence it appeared, that some time in September or October 1852, the defendant sold to the plaintiff one hundred and fifty barrels of an article manufactured by the defendant, called "Chappell's fertilizer," to be used on the plaintiff's land, at the price of four hundred and sixty-three dollars and fifty cents; and that the defendant, at the time of the sale, recommended highly said article as a manure, and said that on its application to poor lands it would produce good crops. That defendant further said to the plaintiff, "I wish you had some very poor land on which to apply it;" to which plaintiff replied, "I can accommodate you in that particular exactly."

The plaintiff also introduced in evidence an advertisement of the defendant in the Alexandria Gazette, with several letters thereto annexed, in which the value of the fertilizer as a manure was set forth; and also a pamphlet describing the article, and directing the mode of its use; and this was accompanied with numerous letters from persons who had used the article, the most of whom commended it highly; and among these was a letter of Commodore Jones, an acquaintance and friend of the plaintiff.

It was further proved by the plaintiff, that the said fertilizer was well applied to his land, and wheat sown where the fertilizer was applied; that the crop produced on said land was a very indifferent one, and not so good as that produced on the same land two years before; that it was in fact the worst crop the witnesses ever saw on the land, and that they had long been acquainted with it, being near neighbors of the plaintiff.

The court sustained the demurrer, and rendered a judgment for the defendant. And thereupon Mason applied to this court for a supersedeas; which was awarded.

574 *Green, for the appellants:

The evidence, spread out in the demurrer to evidence, most amply sustained (according to the principle established by Green v. Judith, 5 Rand. 1, and the other authorities of that class, now become very numerous) the several allegations, on the part of the plaintiff, respecting his purchase of the (real or pretended) manure in question, his payment of the purchase money for the same, and the utter worthlessness of the article, upon a perfectly fair trial of it; leaving open to debate no points which it would not be inexcusable to discuss but one, namely, whether other facts, necessary for maintaining the action, in connection with these, are sufficiently made out. This enquiry I shall present under the several aspects following:

1. It is not necessary to make out any other facts; because those already stated establish a total failure of the consideration upon which the plaintiff had paid his money; and thus entitle him to recover it back, under the count for money paid, or under that for money had and received. On this trite topic I forbear to cite any authorities.

2. If this be not so, still the plaintiff was entitled to recover upon additional facts, which a jury would have been fully justified in finding from the evidence, and which therefore the court below was bound to consider as established. As against the defendant (no matter what the real truth of the matter may be), we must take it—from his own declarations to the plaintiff—from his written communication to him—from his printed advertisement referred to in the correspondence between them which led immediately to the purchase, and from the pamphlet, bearing in like manner upon the transaction—from each one, and from all of these, we must take it, that the article known by the name of "Chappell's fertilizer," which the defendant professedly sold to the plaintiff, would, if it had

575 *been furnished genuine, have accomplished all the results, or at least, the most important of them, or at the very least, some of them, which the defendant

The court said that the seller, in undertaking to furnish the boxes, impliedly agreed they should be reasonably fit for that purpose: that, if the purchasers had gone to the factory of the seller and themselves selected certain boxes, such as they believed would answer their purpose, the seller would not be liable however worthless the boxes might prove to be; but that the purchasers made no selection, they relied upon the skill and judgment of the seller, as a manufacturer, to furnish an article fit for the purpose for which they were ordered; and, therefore, since the boxes proved unfit for that purpose, the seller was liable in damages for the injury caused thereby.

held out in prospect to the plaintiff, and which constituted the sole inducement to the latter for laying out his money in the purchase. In this point of view, the things published by the defendant, in the shape of certificates from others, are important evidence against him, whether they be real or fictitious; he cannot deny their reality or their truth, after displaying them to the public and to the plaintiff in the manner he did; and therefore, as against him, they (besides his own declarations) establish, that, if the article, furnished under that name, failed upon a fair trial to accomplish the results ascribed by them to it, at least in some good measure—as the article actually furnished by the defendant to the plaintiff did fail—it must be because the article so furnished was not genuine; at least, that it was not of good quality, probably because the ingredients used in making it were spurious or damaged, or because the article itself, after it was manufactured, had become damaged and worthless. On all these points, the court was bound, upon the demurrer to evidence, to make the strongest inferences a jury could make against the demurrant; and I submit that these now stated are not only rational, but moreover, the only fair ones. If so, the defendant violated the warranty which the law implies in all such cases, and which the declaration in this case alleges, that the article sold and delivered was genuine and of good quality. Laing v. Fidgeon, 4 Camp. R. 169; S. C. 6 Taunt. R. 108; Jones v. Bright, 5 Bingh. R. 535; S. C. 3 Moore & Paine R. 155; Brown v. Edgington, 2 Mann. & Grang. 279; S. C. 2 Scott's N. R. 496; Shepherd v. Pybus, 3 Mann. & Grang. 868; 4 Scott's N. R. 434; Gallagher v. Waring, 9 Wend. R. 28; Howard v. Hoey, 23 Id. 350; Carnochan v. Gould, 1 Bailey's R. 179; Barnett v. Stanton, 2 Alab. R. 181.

576 *3. Moreover, there are other additional facts in this case, which in like manner the court was bound to consider as established, that make out against the defendant a case of express warranty. These I shall not here give trouble by pointing out more particularly than is indicated by allusions in the statement which I subjoin of legal propositions bearing upon the point. On this head it has long since been settled, that in order to constitute such a warranty, the word "warrant" need not be used, nor any word of precisely similar import (Cave v. Coleman, 3 Mann. & Ryl. 2; Salmon v. Ward, 2 Carr & P. 211; Wood v. Smith, 4 Carr & P. 45; S. C. 5 Mann. & Ryl. 124; Breemen v. Buck, 3 Verm. R. 53; Roberts v. Morgan, 2 Cow. R. 438; Buckman v. Haney, 6 Engl. Ark. R. 339); that any representation or affirmation concerning the quality or properties of an article sold, put forward, not as matter of opinion or belief merely, but for the purpose of assuring the buyer as to the truth of what is so represented or affirmed, and of inducing him to make the purchase, is, if accordingly received and relied upon by the purchaser, an express warranty (Hillman v. Wilcox, 30 Maine R. 170; Whitney v. Sutton, 10 Wend. R. 413; Osgood v. Lewis, 2 Harris & Gill 495; Kinley v. Fitzpatrick, 4 How. Miss. R. 59; McGregor v. Penn, 9 Yerg. R. 74; Hawkins v. Berry, 5 Gilman 36; Randall v. Thornton, 43 Maine R. 230; Jones v. Bright, 2 Ross. Lead. Cas. 360, 361; Sheppard v. Pybus, 42 Eng. C. L. R. 452; Reese v. Williams, 16 Ill. R. 69; 2 Rob. Pr. 355 to 359, 359 to 363); and that the question, whether such a representation or affirmation was so advanced on the one side, and so accepted on the other, is a question of fact for the jury, which ought to be left to their determination, and concerning which their verdict will in these cases, as it will in all others, not be set aside unless manifestly contrary to a correct finding upon the evidence. Power v. Barham, 4 Ad. & Ell. 473;

577 S. C. 7 Carr & P. *356; Chapman v. Murch, 19 Johns. R. 290; Duffee v. Mason, 8 Cow. R. 25; Cook v. Moseley, 13 Wendell 277; Foggart v. Blackweller, 4 Ired. Rep. 238. And from these now perfectly settled principles the doctrine has been logically deduced, which in a recent case has been asserted, namely, that where the vendor's statements form the sole basis (as in this case they did) of the sale, that his declarations shall ordinarily be regarded as a warranty of what they import. Beals v. Olmstead, 24 Verm. R. 114.

Brent and Kinzer, for the appellees:

The ancient rule of the common law, caveat emptor, is the law of this state. By this law the vendor is not bound to answer to the vendee for that goodness or quality of the articles sold unless he warrants them to be good, or unless he knew them to be otherwise; in other words, there must be either a warranty of fraud to make the vendor answerable for the quality or goodness of the articles sold. 2 Kent Com. 478; Wilson v. Shackelford, 4 Rand. 5.

In the present case there is no imputation of any intention on the part of the defendant to deceive or defraud the plaintiff.

1. To enable the plaintiff to recover, the evidence must show a warranty, either express or implied. We maintain that neither can be drawn from the evidence. It is conceded that no precise words are necessary to create a warranty; but every affirmation of goodness or quality is not a warranty. To constitute a warranty, the intention of the parties must be looked at; the affirmation or representation made by the vendor at the time of sale to constitute a warranty must have been so intended by him, and relied on as such by the vendee. Otherwise every such affirmation will be treated as simplex commendatio, and therefore not binding.

578 *The following cases illustrate this principle: Chandelor v. Lopus, 2 Croke's R. 2; Jackson v. Wetherill, 7 Serg. & Raw. 482; McFarland v. Newman, 9 Watts' R. 55; Swett v. Colgate, 20 John. R. 196; Seixas v. Wood, 2 Caines' R. 48.

The case of Prideaux v. Bunnett, 1 J.

Digitized by Google

Scott, N. S., 613; S. C. 87 Eng. C. L. R. 613, would seem to rule the present case. That was an action to recover the price of an article called "Prideaux's patent self-closing valve," for which plaintiff had a patent. The plaintiff, as did Chappell, issued cards and circulars, highly laudatory of the value and utility of his valves. The defendant returned to the plaintiff one of these circulars with a written order, "Please prepare us a smoke-preventing valve," &c. The plaintiff sent one of his valves, but it was found not to be of any use for the purpose for which it was designed. On being sued for the price, the defendant relied on the statements contained in the circular which had been sent to him by the plaintiff—to the effect that the patent article would consume smoke, and effect a considerable saving in fuel—as amounting to a warranty that it should be fit for the purpose to which it was to be applied; it was held that no such warranty could be implied, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover his price.

2. Was there an implied warranty? The plaintiff maintains, that where an article is ordered to be manufactured for a particular purpose, the law implies a warranty, that it is fit for that purpose. This rule seems to be of modern origin. Down to the period of the decision in Parkinson v. Lee, 2 East. R. 314, year 1802, the common law rule of caveat emptor was maintained in all its integrity. The doctrine of implied warranties was resisted as an innovation sought to be borrowed from the civil law.

It appears, however, that it was at 579 length engrafted on the common *law rule. In Hibbert v. Shee, 1 Camp. R. 113, year 1807, and in Gardner v. Gray, 4 Id. 144, Lord Ellenborough recognized the principle, that a sale by sample implied a warranty, that the bulk of the goods corresponded in quality with the sample. And in a great number of subsequent cases (many of which are cited by the plaintiff in his petition), the English common law courts have fully established the principle of implied warranty as above laid down. But this principle has been applied to cases where warranted by the usage of trade, as in Jones v. Bowden, 4 Taunt. R. 847; to sales by sample, where the difficulty or impossibility of inspecting the goods at the time of sale has been said to justify a presumption of warranty, as appears from the cases cited in the petition; Gallagher v. Waring, 9 Wend. R. 20; Howard v. Hoey, 23 Wend. R. 351; Barnett v. Stanton, 2 Alab. R. 181; Carnochan v. Gould, 1 Bail. R. 179; and to cases where an order was given for an undescribed and unascertained thing, stated to be for a particular purpose, which the manufacturer supplies, as in the cases cited by plaintiff; Jones v. Bright, 3 Moore, p. 155; Brown v. Edgington, 2 Man. & Grang. 279.

But later authorities seem to place the authority of the class of cases above referred to upon a principle wholly distinct from and independent of the doctrine of warranty. In Chanter v. Hopkins, 4 Meeson & Welsb. 399, Lord Abinger regards this principle as applicable to executory sales or contracts where the goods bargained for or ordered do not correspond in specie with those delivered. A warranty is a part of the contract, yet collateral to the main object of it, and the breach of such a contract, a breach of warranty. But where a party undertakes to sell or furnish a particular article, and furnishes a different one, it is a breach of contract, as where a man agrees to sell peas and furnishes beans, and 580 where a man orders *sheathing copper, and does not receive such. In such cases the contract is not complied with. In such cases, therefore, the vendee must seek to recover damages on the ground of a failure of the article delivered to correspond with the article sold, and he must declare on the contract as executory, and not as executed, and aver that the vendor has failed to comply with the stipulations of his contract by delivering a different article. In declaring on a warranty on an executed contract of sale, it is admitted that the right of property in the article sold has passed to the vendee, and in such case nothing is better settled, than that there can be no recovery unless there is fraud, or express warranty. 1 Smith's Lead. C. 222, 226. In the present case the defendant sold and the plaintiff bought "Chappell's fertilizer." "Chappell's fertilizer," plaintiff avers in his first count, was delivered to him, but he avers that it was unfit for the purpose for which it was sold and delivered. In this view of the case, he cannot recover unless there was an express warranty or fraud.

It cannot be pretended that the plaintiff did not receive Chappell's fertilizer; for the plaintiff's witness proved "that one hundred and fifty barrels of Chappell's fertilizer were delivered to him." Even if the fertilizer had not been delivered, but another and different article, still the plaintiff could not recover on the allegations of his declaration.

But the doctrine of implied warranty has never been held to apply to the case of a sale of a known ascertained article. And in addition to the case of Prideaux v. Bunnett, we cite Chanter v. Hopkins, 4 Mees. & Welsb. 399; Olivant v. Bayley, 5 Ad. & El. 288; S. C. 48 Eng. C. L. R. 287; Camac v. Warriner, 1 Man. Gr. & Scott, 356; S. C. 50 Eng. C. L. R. 354.

3. Even if there had been a warranty, the plaintiff has not shown any breach thereof. The plaintiff only proved that the fertilizer was well applied to his land, 581 *and that his crops were indifferent. This alone surely would not authorize any jury to infer therefrom that the fertilizer furnished was not of good quality and of no value.

The plaintiff should have also shown that the directions given for the use and application of the fertilizer, had been followed out by him. If we are to presume a warranty from the printed advertisement and pamphlet of the defendant, such warranty should be qualified or limited by the instructions contained in the pamphlet, and said to be essential "to secure the full effects of the manure." They should be treated as a part of the warranty; and if so regarded, it was at least incumbent on the plaintiff to show that he had observed them. Every description of fertilizers will sometimes fail. The soil may not have been properly prepared. The fertilizer may have been improperly or injudiciously applied. The season may have been unpropitious. On these points the evidence is dumb; and no attempt was made by the plaintiff to exclude the presumption that the failure may have arisen from extrinsic causes. In Jones v. Bright the copper was assayed, and it was shown that its decay arose from intrinsic defects, occasioned by want of skill in its manufacture, or from the use of improper materials.

In Brown v. Edgington evidence was given tending to show that the rope had been badly manufactured, and was of inferior materials.

4. The plaintiff cannot recover under the second count in the declaration, on the ground of "a total failure of the consideration."

We have before shown that it is too late for the plaintiff to say that he did not receive "Chappell's fertilizer." And it seems well settled that a breach of warranty does not entitle a purchaser of a specific article, which has been accepted by him, to 582 rescind *the contract of himself, and bring an action to recover the price, but he must sue on his warranty. Powell v. Wells, 2 Cowp. R. 818; Weston v. Downes, 1 Doug. R. 23; Payne v. Whale, 7 East's R. 274.

Even admitting that the plaintiff did not in point of fact get "Chappell's fertilizer," but another article; yet having received it and used it, he could not sue for the recovery of what he paid under this count, for, there being a part execution of the contract, the parties cannot be placed in statu quo. Hunt v. Silk, 5 East's R. 449.

ROBERTSON, J. It is well settled law, in this state, that in a sale of personal chattels a full price does not import a warranty as to quality. The vendor is not liable for defects in quality unless he warrants, or makes some fraudulent representation, or, knowing of a latent defect, omits to disclose it.

It is unnecessary to enquire into the correctness of the position taken by the plaintiff's counsel, that a recovery for a fraudulent representation may be had under the money counts, because there is no evidence in the case tending to show fraud. To constitute fraud the scienter is necessary. It is not sufficient to show that false representations were made by the vendor; it must also be shown that, at the time he made them, he knew them to be false; or, at the least, that they were made as statements of facts within his own knowledge, when in truth he had no knowledge whatever upon the subject.

Here, there is no evidence that any latent defect, known to the vendor, was concealed by him; or that he did not honestly believe that the representations he made were true. If therefore he can be held liable at all, it must be for a breach of warranty, or for a failure to comply with his contract.

To constitute a warranty, no particular form of expression 583 *is required; an apparent intention to warrant is sufficient. It is enough, if the words used import an engagement on the part of the vendor that the article is what he represents it to be. Any distinct affirmation of quality made by the vendor, at the time of the sale, not as an expression of opinion or belief, but as an assurance to the purchaser of the truth of the fact affirmed, and an inducement to him to make the purchase, is, if accordingly received, and relied on, and acted upon by the purchaser, an express warranty. But no affirmation, however strong, will constitute a warranty, unless it was so intended. If it is intended as a warranty, the vendor is liable, if it turns out to be false, however honest he may have been in making it: but if it is intended as an expression of opinion merely, or as simple praise or commendation of the article, he is not liable, unless it can be shown that he knew at the time that it was untrue. And in that case, it is inaccurate to say that he is liable for a breach of warranty. His liability arises from the fraud of which he was guilty, and should be enforced in an action on the case for deceit.

It is often very difficult to determine whether an affirmation was intended as a warranty, or as a mere expression of opinion. But in this case there is no such difficulty. It is clear that there was no intention to warrant. All that the defendant said and published amounted to no more than simple praise or commendation of the article. The plaintiff too seems not to have relied so much upon the representations of the defendant, as upon those made by Commodore Jones, and others who gave certificates.

But it is insisted that the defendant is liable upon an implied warranty.

If the plaintiff, relying on the defendant's skill and judgment, had applied to him to furnish a manure which would produce such effects as are attributed 584 to *"Chappell's fertilizer," without specifying what particular kind of manure he wanted, and the defendant had accordingly furnished an article, which, instead of producing such effects, proved to be entirely worthless, there would be good ground for the proposition that there was an implied warranty from which liability would arise.

If an order is given for an undescribed, unascertained thing, stated to be for a particular purpose, the vendor will be held liable, unless it answers, in a reasonable degree, the purpose for which it was purchased. But where a specific article is ordered and furnished, the law is well settled that, although the purchaser states the purpose to which he intends to apply it, there is no implied warranty on the part of the vendor that it is suitable for the purpose; and he will not, in the absence of fraud, or an express warranty, be held liable, however unfit and defective it may turn out to be. Chanter v. Hopkins, 4 Mees. & Welsb. 399; Olivant v. Bailey, 48 Eng. C. L. R. 287; Prideaux v. Bunnett, 87 Eng. C. L. R. 613.

In the case of Chanter v. Hopkins, Lord Abinger says, "A good deal of confusion has arisen in many cases on this subject, from the unfortunate use made of the word 'warranty.' Two things have been confounded together. A warranty is an express or implied statement of something which the party undertakes shall be part of a contract; and though part of the contract, yet collateral to the express object of it. But in many of the cases, some of which have been referred to, the circumstance of a party selling a particular thing by its proper description, has been called a warranty, and a breach of such contract a breach of warranty; but it would be better to distinguish such cases as a non-compliance with a contract which a party has engaged to fulfill; as, if a man offers to buy peas of another, and he sends 585 him beans, he does not perform *his contract, but that is not a warranty: there is no warranty that he should sell him peas; the contract is to sell peas, and if he sells him any thing else in their stead, it is a non-performance of it. So if a man were to order copper for sheathing ships—that is, a particular copper prepared in a particular manner—if the seller sends him a different sort, in that case he does not comply with the contract: and though this may have been considered a warranty, and may have been ranged under the class of cases relating to warranties, yet it is not properly so. Now, in the present case the question is, whether or no the order has not been complied with in its terms." 4 Mees. & Welsb. 404-5.

So in this case, the only proper enquiry is, has the plaintiff's order been complied with according to its terms, by furnishing him with "Chappell's fertilizer"—a manure which was well known by that name.

There is no averment in the declaration that a different article from that ordered by the plaintiff was furnished. On the contrary, the allegation there is, that "Chappell's fertilizer" was bought and delivered, and that it was warranted by the defendant to be of good quality, and reasonably fit for the purposes of the plaintiff; and damages are claimed for a breach of that warranty. The testimony shows that the article called "Chappell's fertilizer" was delivered by the defendant to the plaintiff: and there is nothing in the record from which it can be inferred that the precise article known by that name was not furnished, except only the fact that the effects resulting from its use, have not been such as "Chappell's fertilizer" was represented to produce, and may perhaps have generally produced.

It is argued that this of itself is sufficient to show that a spurious article was furnished. That, as against the defendant, it must be taken as true that the article 586 *known by the name of "Chappell's fertilizer," which the defendant professedly sold to the plaintiff, was really as valuable as it was said to be, and would, if it had been furnished genuine, have accomplished the results, or at least some of them, which it was said that it would accomplish; and that the article furnished under that name, having, upon a fair trial, failed to accomplish any of these results, was not genuine and unadulterated, but was, on the contrary, spurious, adulterated, or damaged to such an extent as to be not only not of reasonably good quality, but altogether worthless.

If this argument be sound, then the cases which have been cited, and all others of the same class, have been incorrectly decided; for it was as applicable in them, as it is in this case. But its unsoundness is manifest. To assume that an article is not genuine because it does not answer to the representations made respecting it, in effect converts mere representations into warranty, and destroys the rule that the vendor is not responsible for the truth of such representations, unless they are made fraudulently. To hold that the representation gives a right to infer, if the article does not come up to it, that it is spurious, adulterated, or damaged; and to make the vendor liable for not furnishing a genuine, unadulterated, undamaged article, is obviously the same thing in substance as to make him liable merely because the representation turns out to be untrue.

There is then no reason to doubt that the plaintiff got the identical article that he ordered; and that he occupies "the position of a man who has had the misfortune to order a particular chattel, on the supposition that it will answer a particular purpose, but who finds that it will not."

But it is insisted that if the plaintiff has no other right to recover, he can do so 587 under the money counts, *because of a total failure of the consideration for which he paid his money.

The answer is, that, if he can recover in any mode, upon such a failure of consideration as has been shown to exist in this case, it follows, that whenever an article is bought under the belief (however it may have been induced) on the part of the purchaser, that it is sound and of good quality, and it turns out to be in fact worthless, the rule that the vendor is not liable except for warranty, or for fraudulent representation or concealment, would be entirely abrogated; for, to avoid its effect, the purchaser would only have to declare as for a total failure of consideration.

I can find no ground upon which the plaintiff is entitled to relief, even conceding that upon the demurrer to evidence the court should infer that the article purchased by him was intrinsically and wholly worthless—a concession, the propriety of which may well be doubted; for it is by no means certain that this is such a reasonable inference from the testimony that the court ought to make it.

Digitized by Google

It seems to me to be clear that the judgment should be affirmed.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Robertson, J.

Judgment affirmed.

---

588 *Bennett & als. v. Toler & als.

April Term, 1860. Richmond.

[78 Am. Dec. 638.]

Devise—"To Daughter for Life, Remainder to Children"—Interest of Illegitimate Children.*—Upon a devise to a daughter for life, and at her death the property to be equally divided among her children; an illegitimate child of the daughter will take with her legitimate children.

This was an appeal from the decree of the Circuit court of Pittsylvania, in a suit instituted by the children of Henry Toler deceased, against Crafton Bennett and others. The only question in the case arose on the construction of the sixth clause of the will of Joseph Toler deceased.

Joseph Toler died in 1819, and his will was duly admitted to record in the County court of Pittsylvania. The sixth clause is as follows:

"6th. I give to my beloved daughter Mary Bennett, the tract of land she now lives on, bought of Creps. Also the following negroes: Aggy, Lazenberry, Locky and Sapy. My will is, at the death of my daughter Mary Bennett, that the land and negroes given to her shall be equally divided amongst her children."

The facts are, that Mary Bennett, before her marriage with Lewis Bennett, became the mother of a natural child; and after the birth of this child she married Lewis Bennett and had by him several children, who or whose descendants were the defendants in this case. This natural child, who was called Henry Toler, was born sixteen or eighteen years before the death of Joseph Toler, and was known and recognized by Joseph Toler as the child of Mrs. Bennett. At the death of Joseph Toler, Mrs. Bennett was married to Bennett and had several children by him then liv-589 ing. *Henry Toler was then alive; but died intestate in the lifetime of his mother, having married, and leaving the plaintiffs his children, his heirs and distributees. Mrs. Bennett afterwards died, and this suit was brought by the children of Henry Toler, claiming that he took under the will of Joseph Toler, as one of the children of Mary Bennett. The court below decreed in their favor; and the defendants obtained an appeal to this court.

The case was argued orally before a court of four judges, by Macfarland & Roberts, for the appellants, and Grattan, for the appellees: and the court having directed that it should be argued again before a full court, printed notes of argument were submitted by Read and Macfarland & Roberts, for the appellants, and Grattan, for the appellees. The reporter trusts that on a question of such interest he will be excused for giving the argument at length.

Read, for the appellants:

There is no rule of construction, we submit, better settled by an unbroken chain of English and American decisions, than this: Where there are legitimate and illegitimate children in existence at the death of the testator, gifts to "children" as a class exclude illegitimates. And no case can, we think, be cited in which legitimate and illegitimate children have taken under the same description. 2 Jarm. Wills, 2 Amer. ed. p. 93-4, and American cases cited; Bagley v. Mallard, 4 Cond. Eng. Ch. R. 563. In the last case cited, the testator gave the residue of his property, after the death of his wife and daughter, to all the children of his sons James and William and of his daughter Sarah, in equal shares. William was dead and had an only surviv-

*Devise to Daughter for Life, Remainder to Issue—Interest of Illegitimate Issue.—In Flora v. Anderson, 67 Fed. Rep. 187, Longworth devised a part of his estate in trust for his daughter for life, with remainder to the issue of her body surviving her. At the time the will was made the daughter was nearly fifty years of age and had no legitimate issue. After the death of the daughter, F, alleged to be an illegitimate child of the testator's daughter, claimed the remainder. The court held, that the devise to "issue" meant prima facie legitimate issue, and an intention to include illegitimate issue, must be deduced from the language of the will itself, without resort to extrinsic evidence. And in commenting upon and distinguishing the principal case the court said: "Attention is also called by counsel for the complainant to the fact that the legislature of Ohio appears to have been dissatisfied with the construction given to the statute in Gibson v. McNeely, and as a result passed the act of April 3, 1867 (64 Ohio Laws, 105), which enacts that 'bastards shall be capable of inheriting from and to the mother, and from and to those from whom she may inherit, or to whom she may transmit inheritance in like manner as if born in lawful wedlock.' But that statute was passed four years after the death of Longworth, and after all rights under his will had vested. Particular attention is called by counsel for the complainant to the case of Bennett v. Toler, 15 Gratt. 588, decided by the supreme court of Virginia in the same year that Gibson v. McNeely was decided by the supreme court of Ohio. In that case the law was held to be as claimed for the defendant, but that ruling was made expressly upon the statute of Virginia, and therefore is not to be regarded as applicable in this case." The principal case is cited in the dissenting opinion of RICHARDSON, J., in Greenhow v. James, 80 Va. 650. See also, 5 Va. Law Reg. 112, where the principal case is cited; 1 Min. Inst. (4th Ed.) 450.

Digitized by Google

ing daughter, Elizabeth. It was held that Elizabeth took no part of the residue, 590 although the testator *had, in a previous clause in the same will, devised to her a leasehold in trust, describing her "as his grandchild Elizabeth, the only surviving child of his son William." We also refer to Lomax on Executors, edition of 1857, vol. 2d, top p. 34-36. The same author in his Digest, vol. 3, p. 235-36, lays down the same rule, and adds, "Nor will the application of this rule fail, though the children were described in reference to the mother." In a note on the same page (236), the question is asked, "Has the Virginia statute, as to the capacity of bastards to inherit, any influence in changing this doctrine?" But in his late work on executors, the broad rule of the English courts is laid down, without adverting to the Virginia statute. Lomax on Ex'ors, p. 34.

It will doubtless be conceded that this canon of constructions is entirely settled as a part of the common law of England, and as such, binding in our own courts, unless it is abrogated by our act of descents, which permits bastards to inherit from their mother.

If the act referred to had legitimated all bastards and removed all their disabilities, they might answer the description of "children." But surely a statutory provision which merely removes one of the disabilities of a bastard, in permitting him to inherit from his mother, cannot have the effect of changing his designation and bring him under the description of "children," in a will or deed.

The expression "children," unless qualified, means, in legal technicality and construction, ex vi termini, lawful children. This is its legal meaning in wills and deeds, unless qualified; and every testator in a will or grantor in a deed is presumed to use the word in its technical sense, unless the contrary intention manifestly appears from the face of the instrument itself. But it was contended in the court below, that by the common law a bastard was filius
591 nullius, and *that it was for this reason that he did not take under a bequest to children. It should be borne in mind, however, that the rule that a bastard is "filius nullius," applied only to cases of inheritance: he was subject to no other disability—he had all the privileges of citizenship—he could hold real and personal estate, and give and convey to others. And so far as devises and bequests were concerned, he never was regarded as filius nullius. Jarman says that illegitimate children, born at the time of making the will, may be objects of a devise or bequest by any description which will identify them. 2 Jarm. Wills, p. 94. By the common law a bastard cannot take by descent, but he might always take under a bequest. Now, the reason that in a bequest "children" means lawful children, is founded doubtless on the presumed intention of every testator, in the absence of qualifying expressions, to provide for lawful, in preference to spurious offspring. It is true, that in its primitive sense its more literal meaning, in common vocabulary, might have been legitimate offspring—Qui ex damnato coitu nascuntur, inter liberos non computenter. We have an instance in the Epistle to the Hebrews from which we infer that the word "sons" in common parlance at that day meant only legitimate sons—"Then are ye bastards, and not sons." But doubtless the controlling motive in giving such a construction to the word "children" was, as we have stated, that in a great majority of cases the testator is presumed to prefer, as objects of his bounty, legitimate children to bastards. Such a preference tends to discourage vice —to encourage purity and chastity. Such a preference is a reproof and punishment to the mother; and the parent, as an example and warning to his other children, in legal construction, only intends to provide for legitimate offspring, when he makes a bequest to his "children." The same motive would be presumed to 592 *influence a testator who is a collateral relation, or a stranger in blood to the children of the mother who are the objects of the testator's bounty. And while the legislature, acting on the supposed natural affections of the mother, casts her estate on the unfortunate offspring of her own illicit connexion, and thus in default of a last will provides for the bastard out of the property of one who brought it into being, such a legislative provision could throw no light on the intention of a testator, who is under no legal or moral restraint to provide for the children of the guilty mother; and is presumed by considerations of public morality and decency, to discriminate, in dispensing his bounty, in favor of lawfully begotten offspring.

The argument on the other side seems to us to be no more than this: Whereas by a rule of testamentary construction as well settled as any principle of the common law, children in a bequest means only legitimate children, and the testator is always presumed to intend only legitimate children; yet the act of assembly which permits bastards to inherit from their mothers, changes the supposed intention of the testator, and furnishes the new rule of construction, that "children in testaments shall embrace bastards."

If the English rule is once broken in upon, it would be difficult to foresee all the consequences that would result from its abrogation.

If bastards of a particular female come under the description of children, then in all deeds and in all wills, limiting estates over after the death of a female, to her children, in all instruments in which property is granted or given to the children of nieces or aunts, or to the grandchildren of a particular female, or to grandchildren generally, the words children and grandchildren would let in bastards. Powers of appointment to dispose of property among the children of a particualr female would be improperly executed, unless 593 *bastard children shared in the distribution. A gift to the grandchildren of A, under such a construction, might let in a bastard grandchild whose mother also was a bastard: And possibly the precedent might be stretched to embrace unprocreated and unborn bastard offspring, under the idea that they can inherit from the mother as soon as they come into existence: and even a gift to the "lawful issue" of the mother, might embrace illegitimates, for the argument is, they are lawful issue to inherit, and should be deemed legitimate in a bequest.

Digitized by Google

All the cases show that "child," taken simpliciter, means a legitimate child only. Wigram, V. C., in Dover v. Alexander, 24 Eng. Ch. R. p. 275, 280. Children and legitimate children, in the construction of wills, are convertible terms. And it seems to us the conclusive answer to the argument, that our act of descents has made them children of the mother, quoad their heritable capacity from her, is, that they still continue to be illegitimate children—and are not included in a devise to "legitimate children," or "children," which are convertible terms.

But there are, we submit, strong reasons why judicial construction should not go in advance of legislative action in removing those time honored restraints upon incontinency and vice that have produced their good effects in our own state, as well as in England. It is difficult to estimate the sanative influence of those rules that keep up the legal distinction between bastards and lawful children, on the morality and social happiness of a community. If a morbid feeling for the unoffending offspring, instead of a stern determination to preserve the chastity of the parent, had influenced the decisions of the English chancellors, illicit intercourse would have been encouraged, and its fruits more numerous. The public virtue and happiness of a state can never be promoted by 594 increasing *the number of this unfortunate class by the effort to diminish their disabilities. A testamentary construction that has been so long approved and is so varied in its application, should not be for slight cause abrogated. When Pope Alexander enacted a canon that children born before the solemnization of matrimony might nevertheless become legitimate by the subsequent marriage of their parents, and in consequence of this canon all the Bishops of England, in the reign of Henry the 3d, petitioned the lords to adopt the same rule of legitimation in respect of hereditary succession, all the earls and barons with one voice responded, in the sentiment so often quoted, "We are not willing to change the laws of England which have hitherto been used and approved." The opponents of such an innovation thought "that the great interest of morality is a part of the policy of every well regulated state." They doubtless believed that the inviolable character of the bonds of matrimony and the status of the bastard by the English law operated as a prodigious restraint on vice and lewdness that legislation and judicial decisions soon operate on public opinion—and they could not foresee the effects of such an innovation, and were not disposed to risk it.

It would not become us to enquire into the policy of the existing law of Virginia, which in a humane spirit, consulting as well the supposed inclination of the mother to provide for her offspring, as the condition of the bastard itself, has moderated the rigor of the common law, both in respect to legitimating the offspring of parents who subsequently marry, and which also gives the bastard a capacity to inherit from its mother. But the legislature has stopped at this point. It has not enacted that the word "children" in a bequest shall be held to embrace natural children. At the date of this enactment, the rule which excludes bastards in bequests to children, was 595 as operative *and binding in Virginia as the rule which prevented them from inheriting from their mother. The legislature has repealed the latter and left the former untouched. There is but little connection between the two rules. The repeal or abrogation of the one is entirely compatible with the existence and continued operation of the other. At the date of this enactment a bastard could not inherit from his putative father, from his mother or any other person. After the passage of the act he might well succeed to her property in case of her intestacy, and not acquire the full designation of "legitimate child" or "child;" which in a will are convertible terms. We might go further and concede, that as a bastard might inherit from the mother, in that restricted sense alone, quoad the right of hereditary succession to her property, he has one of the rights of a legitimate child: but he is still the bastard son of his mother, and if, as in the case under discussion, a grandfather uses the expression "children of my daughter Mary," only the legitimate children of Mary are meant. The mother's name is used for the purpose of identifying a particular set of grandchildren. Suppose Mary had been the only child of the testator and he had given the property in dispute to his grandchildren, no one could doubt but that an illegitimate child of Mary would be excluded.

Nor does the abrogation of one of these rules repeal the other on the ground that the rule ceases when the reason of it no longer exists. We have endeavored to show that one of the reasons, and the principal one, that excludes bastards from answering to the description of children, in testaments, is the presumed intention of a testator to prefer lawful to illegitimate offspring, and upon this idea the courts have given as fixed a meaning to "children" as to the word "heir." Not that bastards could not take, by a proper description under a will, but that in order to take 596 as devisee *or legatee, they must be clearly identified. Now if the legislature permits a bastard to succeed to the estate of his mother, it is no reason why the testator should desire the bastard to take his estate under his will. The legislature permitted a bastard to inherit from the mother, under the presumption that if she had made a will, natural affections would have prompted her to provide for him; and that she is under a moral obligation to do so, inasmuch as the disgrace of his status is her fault and not his. This reason, we insist, has no application to a testator who might be a stranger even in blood to the mother and children—who is not supposed to have the feelings of a mother towards her spurious offspring, and who is under no legal or moral obligation to make provision for them.

Digitized by Google

Grattan, for the appellees:

The legal policy of a people upon any social, economical or political subject, is the proper object of consideration and determination by the legislative department of the government; and the frame of their institutions, or their practical administration, must be radically defective and vicious, if the legal policy adopted by the proper department of the government, is thwarted, perverted or defeated by any other department of the same government. A wiser than Solomon has said, "If a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand."

Of the social subjects which must engage the consideration of a legislator, there are none of more importance than those which relate to marriage, the relations of husband and wife, parent and child, and of inheritance; and there are none on which all civilized governments have more certainly adopted a policy for themselves. The considerations which may lead to different conclusions are obvious enough, and the conclusion reached in each case has 597 depended upon the *relative weight which has been given to these considerations. So far as I am informed, the general policy of the civil law has commended itself to the modern European nations, except England; and it has become the basis of their law on these great social subjects, only so modified as to suit their peculiar circumstances.

England stands by herself on these subjects. It was in relation to them that her sturdy barons replied to king and church, nolumus leges Angliæ mutare. She has repudiated the civil law, and has adopted and adhered to a policy of her own, which has been, with some slight modifications, sternly enforced by the legislative and judicial departments of the government, down to the present day. It is truly an English policy, not adopted even by Scotland. Has it been *adopted by the legislature of Virginia?

1st. As to marriages. By the English law the marriage even before the act of 26th George 2d, must have been by a priest. See Addenda 1 to 2 Roper on Husband & Wife, p. 445 and onwards, 32 Law Libr. So it must be since that act, except as to particular religious sects. Id. 483. It must be solemnized in a church or chapel. Id. 484. It must be by publication of banns or by license. Id. And if any of these are omitted, the marriage is null and void. If the parties are within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity or affinity, the marriage was formerly voidable; now it is absolutely void. Shelford on Marriage and Divorce, ch. 3, p. 154, and onwards. So, of idiots and lunatics; Id. p. 183; and by the act of 15 George 2, the marriage of a lunatic as to whom a commission of lunacy has been found, though in a lucid interval, is void. Id. 192. And without going into further detail, it may be stated that the rubrics of the established church in relation to the celebration of marriage, have been enacted by statute; and are therefore to be strictly followed. Id. 29. See 33 Law Libr.

598 *2d. By the law in Lord Coke's time, if the husband was within the four seas, and the wife had issue, no proof was to be admitted to prove the child a bastard, unless the husband had an apparent impossibility of procreation. 1 Thomas' Coke, ch. 11, p. 138, marg. This strictness has been slightly modified since; but even now, if the husband has had access to his wife within a period which would render it possible for the child to be his, he will be held to be the father. 2 Bacon's Abr. 79, title Bastard. Within the enclosure of legal marriage, it is the policy of the English law to hold that the children born of the wife are the children of the husband. If the marriage is according to the prescribed forms and between the proper parties, the policy of the law is to consider whether a child has been born within its folds, rather than whether it is the offspring of the husband. And see Tucker, P., in Garland v. Harrison, 8 Leigh 368, 389.

3d. It is the same policy which has moulded the law of England in relation to bastards. Their legal disabilities are imposed upon them, not because they are illegitimate, but because they are born out of lawful wedlock. If the policy of the law had been only to limit heritable blood to legitimate children, then the law of England might have extended legitimacy, as the laws of other countries have done, to children born out of lawful matrimony; but that was not the policy of the law; that policy was to confine heritable blood to children born in lawful wedlock; and therefore it has illegitimated, as to this purpose, all others. The phrases "legitimate children," "illegitimate children," and "bastards," must necessarily have a larger or more limited meaning, dependent upon the laws of the country to which they are applied. Children are legitimate in Scotland and Virginia who are illegitimate in England; are bastards in England who are born in lawful marriage in Scot-
599 land. And so it *has been held that a child may have heritable blood and inherit an estate in Scotland as heir to his father, and that same child have no heritable blood in England, and be incapable of inheriting an estate there from the same father. Doe ex dem. Birtwhistle v. Vardill, 5 Barn. & Cres. 438, 11 Eng. C. L. R. 266.

Digitized by Google

4th. 1. In England, a child born before the marriage of the parents, though they afterwards marry and the father recognizes the child as his, is a bastard in law as well as in fact, and has no heritable blood. Supra, 5 Barn. & Cress. 438. 2. Children of marriages within the prohibited degrees, are bastards, and cannot inherit. Formerly the marriages were only voidable, and if the father died before the marriage was dissolved, it could not be done afterwards; but now such marriages are null, without more, and the issue cannot inherit. Shelford Marriage and Divorce, ch. 3, p. 154 to 157, 171 to 173, 179, 33 Law Libr. 3. So if a marriage is not solemnized in a proper place, and by proper license or banns, the marriage is null and void to all intents and purposes whatever; Roper Husband and Wife 486; and the children cannot inherit. 4. Children of a marriage, where there was a former marriage, or where the parties were imbecile or lunatic, are bastards, and cannot inherit. Shelford Marriage and Divorce 183, 185, 186, 190; 2 Bac. Abr. 82, title Bastard, letter (A), 87, letter (B). 5. The bastard child of a mother was held not to be within the statute of 32 Henry 8, ch. 1. 1 Th. Coke 147, marg.

It is clear, therefore, that in England, from the earliest times, all persons born out of lawful wedlock, have been incapable of inheriting lands. It must be not only wedlock, but it must be lawful wedlock: that is, the parties must be capable of contracting, must be authorized to contract a marriage with each other; and the marriage ceremony must be performed at the prescribed place and with the prescribed 600 formalities. *Unless born of such a marriage, however he may have been recognized by the parents; however anxiously they may have endeavored to repair the wrong done to the child or to good morals; however ignorant they may have been of any legal prohibition to their marriage, or irregularity in the performance of the ceremony, the child is a bastard, filius nullius, and cannot inherit, even from its mother.

It was under these settled principles of policy and law as to marriage and inheritance, that the courts of England were called upon to construe wills devising estates to children. The settled policy of the law was to confine the transmission of estates to children born of a lawful marriage. The fixed meaning of the term children as to inheritance was the offspring of a lawful marriage. When then these words came to be used in a will, the courts, whether looking to the policy of the law, or the legal meaning of the word in relation to land, or to both, were led to the conclusion that when used in a devise, the word should have the same meaning. But not only did the policy of the law and the legal meaning of the word as to inheritances lead to this conclusion, but this whole doctrine of the law in relation to the inheritance of bastards, and devises to children, has been built up and established in cases, in which the question arose as to the child or children of a man, or of a woman by a particular man. In all that is said in Coke on the subject, the only reference to the children of a woman is in connection with the statute of 32 Henry 8; where a construction favorable to the bastard children was put upon the statute. Of the many cases I have examined in the English books, the first case in which it was held that a devise to the children of a woman without reference to the father was bad, is the case of Mortimer v. West, 3 Cond. Eng. Ch. R. 439 (decided in 1827); and the only other subsequent case which 601 *gives any countenance to it, is that of Dover v. Alexander, 2 Hare 275, 24 Eng. Ch. R. 275: and this was not the case of a will but of a deed. And in both of these cases the question arose in relation to illegitimate children not in esse when the will and deed were made; as to which the courts had frequently decided that a devise to afterborn illegitimate children was void. Methan v. Duke of Devon, 1 P. Wms. R. 529; Earle v. Wilson, 17 Ves. R. 528; Arnold v. Preston, 18 Ves. R. 287.

The question whether illegitimate children are embraced in a devise or bequest, is a question of construction; and I admit that in England, the courts there, under the influence of the settled principles of policy and law in relation to marriage and inheritance in that country, have decided in many cases, that a devise to children, without more, will not include illegitimate children, and that there must be a clear intent, looking to the face of the will, and to the surrounding circumstances, to include them, or they will not be considered as included. Some of the cases have required that the intention to include them should be evidenced by the impossibility of intending legitimate children. Hart v. Durand, cited 2 Jarman Wills 135, marg., and Swaine v. Kennerley, 1 Ves. & Bea. R. 469. These cases even Jarman thinks carry the rule too far; and that they have been overruled by Gill v. Shelley, cited by him, p. 136, marg. The case of Swaine v. Kennerley was decided upon the principle stated by Lord Eldon in Wilkinson v. Adam, 1 Ves. & Bea. R. 422, that the intention to include illegitimate children must appear on the face of the will; which it will be seen, I think, is not now the rule. 2 Jarm. Wills 139-40; and cases which will be referred to presently.

There are other early cases which lay down the rule with great strictness, but with less than those before cited; as Cartwright v. Vawdry, 5 Ves. R. 530; Wil-
602 kinson *v. Adam, 1 Ves. & Bea. R. 422; Godfrey v. Davis, 6 Ves. R. 43; Harris v. Lloyd, 11 Cond. Eng. Ch. R. 174; a case decided upon the rule that you must look alone to the face of the will to ascertain the intention; and in which the lord chancellor is guilty of the folly, if a harsher word is not more appropriate, of deciding against the children, after saying that he had not the least doubt that the testator meant illegitimate children.

Digitized by Google

As I have already said, the cases are cases in which the question arose in relation to the children of a man, or of a woman by a certain man. Of course such children could only be known to be such, after they had acquired the reputation of being the children of such a person. And carrying out this rule in Earle v. Wilson, 17 Ves. R. 528, a bequest to a child of which A may be enceiente by the testator, was held not to be good. This case has however been questioned by Chief Baron Richards. Evans v. Massey, 8 Price Exch. R. 22. In Gordon v. Gordon, 1 Meriv. 141, it was held by Lord Eldon, that a bequest to the natural child of which a woman was enceiente, without reference to any person as the father, was good; and a similar decision was made in Evans v. Massey, 8 Price Exch. R. 22.

In the case of Wilkinson v. Adam, 1 Ves. & Bea. R. 422, in which Lord Eldon laid down the rules on the subject with great strictness, and also held that the intention to include illegitimate children must appear on the face of the will, a bequest was held to include both legitimate and illegitimate children, and was valid; and in the case of Gill v. Shelley, 13 Cond. Eng. Ch. 63, a gift to the children of the late Mary Gladman, there being one legitimate and one illegitimate child, was held to embrace both. And in this case parol evidence was admitted to show the surrounding circumstances. And so in the case of Evans v. Davies, 7 Hare 498, 27 Eng. Ch. R.
603 498, under the word "children," *a bastard child was held to be included in a bequest with legitimate children, upon the obvious intention of the testator. In Beachcroft v. Beachcroft, 1 Madd. R. 234, 430, under the words "to my children," it was held testator's illegitimate children took, upon the evident intention of the testator. And in this case parol evidence was introduced. And so Frazer v. Pigott, 1 Younge's R. 354, upon both points; Meredith v. Farr, 21 Eng. Ch. R. 525; Owen v. Bryant, 13 Eng. Law & Equ. R. 217. In the early case in Moor 10, it was held to be clear that a bequest by a mother to her children would include an illegitimate child: And this case is referred to as authority in 2 Comyn Dig. 245, title Bastard, letter (E); and has never been overruled or questioned in any case. And Lord Eldon said, in Wilkinson v. Adam, 1 Ves. & Bea. R. 422, that he knew no law against the validity of a devise or bequest to the illegitimate children not in esse, of a particular woman, without reference to the father.

It will be seen from the cases herein before referred to, that the sternness of the rules of construction in relation to bequests to illegitimate children, has been somewhat relaxed, even in England; that it is there held to be a question of intention, and although the general rule is, that a bequest to children prima facie includes only legitimate children, yet this rule will yield to an intention, appearing from the will and surrounding circumstances, to include illegitimate children.

I come next to consider the law of Virginia on the subjects of marriage, the relations of husband and wife, parent and child, and of inheritance, as affording the only proper foundation for the policy and principles by which the courts of Virginia are to be guided in the construction of devises and bequests to children. As to the common law in relation to inheritance, we have discarded it utterly, and have 604 adopted a system *of our own, in relation to which, Judge Carr, in Davis v. Rowe, 6 Rand. 355, 364, says, "that the framers of our law looked at the common law canons of descent, to avoid and not to imitate—to pull down and not to build up. All its principles are violated; its landmarks removed; its fences broken down; its traces obliterated." And so the court held in that case, and also in Garland v. Harrison, 8 Leigh 368.

1st. As to marriage, though we require a license or banns; if the marriage ceremony is performed, the marriage is valid, though there has been neither license nor banns. We require no priest, no chapel, and no particular form or ceremony. See the act 1 Rev. Code, ch. 106, p. 393, passim, and §§ 8, 11; which, whilst it inflicts a penalty upon a minister marrying without a license or banns, does not avoid the marriage. Code of 1849, p. 469, 470, §§ 4, 5, 6, 7.

2. By the law of Virginia, a child born before marriage of his parents, if they afterwards marry, and he is recognized by the father, is legitimate. So, the issue of marriages deemed null in law are legitimate. Code of 1849, p. 523, §§ 6, 7; 1 Rev. Code, p. 357, § 19. Under the first provision, the children are legitimated, though the child was born and the marriage took place before the statute was passed. Sleigh v. Strider, 5 Call 439; Rice v. Efford, 3 Hen. & Munf. 225. And a child who died before the marriage of the parents, leaving a legitimate child, is upon the marriage of the parents and recognition by the father, legitimated, so that her child will take as heir to the father. Ash v. Way, 2 Gratt. 203: And this is now engrafted into the statute. Code of 1849, supra. Under the second provision above stated, the issue of a woman by a second marriage, which took place during the lifetime of the first husband, are legitimate, and will inherit from their father. Stones v. Keeling, 5 Call 143. And the act, 1 Rev. Code, p. 400, § 18,
605 which provides for annulling *certain marriages within the prescribed degrees of relationship, provides expressly, that nothing therein contained shall be construed to render illegitimate the issue of any marriage so annulled.

3d. By the law of Virginia, bastards shall be capable of inheriting, or of transmitting inheritance on the part of their mother, in like manner as if they had been lawfully begotten of such mother. 1 Rev. Code, p. 357, § 18; Code of 1849, p. 523, § 5. Under this provision the mother and bastard brothers and sisters of a deceased person may inherit from him. Garland v. Harrison, 8 Leigh 368. So where three negroes, children of the same mother, are born slaves, and the mother and children are afterwards emancipated, on the death of one the others will inherit her estate. Hepburn v. Dundas, 13 Gratt. 219. So under a similar law in Maryland, the children of an incestuous marriage, that of a father and his daughter, the children being illegitimate by the law of Maryland, will inherit from each other. Brewer v. Blougher, 14 Peters' R. 178. Every point stated by the judge in delivering the opinion of the court in Stevenson's heirs v. Sullivant, 5 Wheat. R. 207, has been overruled in Virginia in the cases of Garland v. Harrison, and Hepburn v. Dundas; and in this last case Stevenson's heirs v. Sullivant was expressly repudiated. And the law as settled in these cases, is recognized and enforced in Heath v. White, 5 Conn. R. 228; Brown v. Dye, 2 Root's R. 280; Stover v. Boswell, 3 Dana's R. 232; Black v. Cartmell, 10 B. Monr. R. 188; Flintham v. Holder, 1 Dev. Equ. R. 345.

Digitized by Google

I say then, it is not our legislative policy to confine the inheritance to persons born in lawful wedlock. The issue of no marriage at all may in all cases inherit from and through their mother, either from their grandfather, or brothers and sisters, legitimate or illegitimate. See the opinions of the judges in the case of Garland v. Harrison, 8 Leigh 368. The issue of 606 *marriages utterly null and void in law, of incestuous marriages, of a second marriage where the first husband is alive, are legitimate, and will inherit in every respect, as will a child born in lawful wedlock, according to the English notions of lawful wedlock. He is in no legal sense filius nullius. He is the son of his father as well as of his mother. And certainly as to him and all his class, the English maxim, which is built on their law of descents, and is the foundation of their decisions upon the subject of devises to children, is utterly false. Qui ex damnato coitu nascuntur, inter liberos non computentur, is not true in Virginia certainly; whatever we may think of the superstructure which has been reared upon it.

And as to children whose parents never marry, they are not in legal contemplation, as respects their mother, the children of nobody. In Garland v. Harrison, Judge Parker, p. 372, says, "Even by the common law, the rule that a bastard is nullius filius, applied only to cases of inheritance; and he was subject to no other disability but the incapacity of inheriting and transmitting inheritance. It was the object of the act to effect a change in his legal condition; to abolish this distinction to a certain extent, between legitimate and illegitimate children; and to endow the latter with heritable blood on the part of the mother. There is no reason for thinking that the legislature meant to retain any of the incapacities ex parte materna, under which the bastard labored."—"It was the object of the law to give him a mother, and to place him in all respects upon the same footing as a lawfully begotten child, born of the same mother."

In the same case Judge Brockenbrough says, "A bastard is still nullius patris filius, but he is not in that position as to his mother. As to her he is as if he had been born in lawful wedlock; in other words, he is her legitimate son, so far as re-
607 gards his capacity to inherit *and transmit inheritance." In the same case, Tucker, P., after referring to the provisions of the statute legitimating the issue of void marriages, says, "But there was another and more numerous class to be provided for. They were bastards who were begotten out of wedlock, and whose fathers the law would not undertake to ascertain." "To declare these legitimate, would have been at once to provide them not a mother only, but a father. To such a length the lawmakers were not prepared to go. They were therefore compelled to adopt another phraseology; to use language which, in relation to the mother and her kindred, would put bastards on the footing of legitimates, while it would leave them, as heretofore, in relation to the father, the sons of nobody. But this was the only difference they could have designed. Was the policy of the marriage institution more fatally invaded by concubinage than by bigamy? Was illicit intercourse out of wedlock more to be depreciated than incest in wedlock?"

It cannot need more to prove that the policy of our law is wholly opposed to the policy of the law of England. That in the language of Judge Carr, the framers of our law looked at the provisions and policy of the English law, "to avoid, not to imitate—to pull down, not to build up. All its principles are violated; its landmarks removed; its fences broken down; its traces obliterated." The foundation principle of the English policy is that the inheritance shall be limited to persons born within lawful wedlock—not only wedlock, but lawful wedlock. For that they sacrifice the strongest feelings of our nature; and to carry out that policy their judges knowingly, avowedly defeat the intention of testators, and compel them, even in their graves, to continue the wrong which they had inflicted upon their children in their lifetime, by forcing them to say what they never said, to do what they 608 *never did; and that when they were attempting anxiously to say and to do what these judges admit they ought to have said and done; and what every body but a judge sees beyond a cavil or question that they have said and done. And it is as an offering to this moloch of English policy, a policy variant from that of all the world beside, and from our own, that the court is now asked to defeat our own legislative policy, by defeating sense, justice, the feelings and intentions of the persons whose feelings and intentions it is the very purpose and object of the court to carry into effect. It may be law, but if it is, it is high time it should be changed.

Digitized by Google

The question whether a devise to children will include illegitimate children, has never been decided by this court. Indeed, so far as I have been able to discover, it has never been alluded to by any judge of this court, but once. That was by Judge Carr in the case of Doe on demise of Thomason v. Andersons, 4 Leigh 118. He expresses no opinion on the question. But the question as presented in that case, was not the question involved in the case before this court. There the question was whether a devise to children not in esse would include illegitimate children; and many of the English cases are of that kind; and they hold that a devise to children not in esse, however clearly expressed, is void: and that upon grounds of public policy. But in our case the illegitimate child was in esse; was known and recognized by the mother and the testator, as her child; and the question even in England would be, not whether the devise was void on grounds of public policy; but whether the intention of the testator to include him, was expressed with sufficient clearness.

So far as I have been able to examine, no one of the states has gone as far in its legislation in favor of children born out of lawful wedlock, as Virginia. None have shown so strong a purpose to break 609 down and *discard the rules of the common law in relation to such persons. In New York and South Carolina, the rules of the common law seem to be maintained; and in other states the modifications of these rules have been greater or less. The law in North Carolina is quoted in Thompson v. McDonald, 2 Dev. & Bat. Equ. R. 463; the case so much relied upon by the appellants; and it is most apparent that the legislation of that state in favor of this class of persons falls far short of that of Virginia. The Kentucky law more nearly resembles ours; and under that law the case of Black v. Cartmill, 10 B. Monr. R. 188, has been decided, to which I beg leave to refer.

If we are to look to the principles upon which the decisions in England are based, rather than to the decisions themselves, it seems to me that the conclusions to which we will be led here, will be directly the reverse of these decisions. There, to be born in lawful wedlock and heritable blood, are primary and incident, so far as inheritance is concerned. And this principle is carried into their construction of devises. Having established that every person is a bastard who is not born in lawful wedlock, and that a bastard is filius nullius, it followed as a necessary conclusion, in carrying out their policy, that a bequest to children did not embrace bastards. As Jarman says, in the language of the rule already quoted, qui ex damnato coitu nascuntur, inter liberos non computentur.

But as we have seen, such is not the law in Virginia. To be born in lawful marriage and heritable blood are not primary and incident as to inheritance here. And here under the rule of the English decisions, very many cases which would shock the English judges beyond measure, would be valid devises and bequests to children eo nomine. Thus where the parents of children marry after their birth, and then have other children. Under a devise by the 610 father to his children, in *England, only those born after the marriage would take; for they only are legitimate: In Virginia all would take, for all are legitimate. So in the case of an incestuous marriage, a devise to children, in England, would not include the offspring of the marriage: In Virginia they would take; for they are legitimate. And the same would be the case in cases of bigamy, imbecility and lunacy. It is impossible then that the English rule, that to be born in lawful wedlock is necessary to entitle a person to take under a devise or bequest to children, can be adopted in Virginia.

Is this English rule to be applied to the bastard children of a woman in Virginia? We have seen that it is not and cannot be applied to the case of children born before the marriage of their parents, who are recognized by them. It cannot be applied to the case of children born of an incestuous marriage, not even to such a case as that of Brewer v. Blougher, 14 Peters' R. 178, which was that of a marriage of a father and his child; nor to such a case as that of Stones v. Keeling, 5 Call 143, a case of bigamy; nor to any case which can occur, where there has been a marriage between the parents, however incompetent the parties may be to contract a marriage; however illegal such marriage may be; or however its depravity may shock the moral sense of all men. And when we see that this English rule is utterly repudiated in cases indicating so much greater depravity than such a case as that before the court, is it still to be enforced in the case of a child, true of an erring, but it may be of a penitent and reformed mother? I may well ask in the language of Judge Tucker, "Is the policy of the marriage institution more fatally invaded by concubinage than by bigamy? Is illicit intercourse out of wedlock more to be depreciated than incest in wedlock?"

We have seen, I trust, that in England the rule as to devises is based upon 611 the rule as to heritable blood. *Bastard children cannot inherit even from their mother, because they have no heritable blood. They have no heritable blood, because born out of lawful wedlock. Now our law says, bastard children shall have heritable blood, as to their mother, and to all persons related to their mother by blood, just as fully as if they were born in lawful wedlock. "Bastards s[illegible]

Digitized by Google

capable of inheriting and transmitting inheritance on the part of their mother as if lawfully begotten." Code of 1849, p. 523, § 5. They may be still called bastards, but so far as their relation to their mother is concerned, they are legitimated. It was only as to the inheritance that at the common law such an one was filius nullius; and as to that by the statute he is the son of his mother. He is a bastard, for he was born out of lawful wedlock; he is a legitimate child of his mother, for he may inherit from her. In what sense are any of the issue of marriages deemed null in law legitimate, in which he is not legitimate as to his mother? He takes from her precisely as these others take from their father. In what sense is he a bastard that they are not bastards? They were born out of lawful wedlock. And by the common law definition of a bastard, they are as essentially bastards as he is. The statute does not say they shall cease to be bastards; it only says they shall be legitimate. The fact of bastardy cannot be changed by statute, except by making the marriage lawful; but it is the issue of marriages deemed null in law, or dissolved by a court, that are declared legitimate. The statute then only gives them the rights of property which a legitimate child possesses. It gives them these rights as to the father's as well as to the mother's property. The statute equally gives to a bastard child the rights of property which a legitimate child has; but it gives these rights only as to the property of the mother. And Judge Brockenbrough was well justified in saying, as he 612 *does say in Garland v. Harrison, 8 Leigh 380, "A bastard is still nullius patris filius, but he is not in that position as to his mother. As to her, he is as if he had been born in lawful wedlock; in other words, he is her legitimate son, so far as regards his capacity to inherit and transmit inheritance." And so Judge Parker, Id. 377, says, "The intention I admit was not to legitimate bastards generally; but the object was to make them quasi legitimate on the maternal side; to give the bastard a mother and maternal kindred."

Then why shall a bastard have a rule applied to him in reference to his mother or her estate, which we have seen cannot be applied to the children of marriages deemed null in law. Why shall not he take under this devise of his grandfather, to his mother's children, as he would certainly take if he had been the offspring of an incestuous marriage between his mother and his real father. Is there any principle of public policy which forbids it? If his mother had died in the lifetime of the testator, and the testator had died intestate, in that case this bastard would have taken as one of his heirs and distributees. This the statute has provided for; and he would have taken because he was the child of his mother. The testator gives the property by his will to the children of his mother; and the court whose business it is to regard and carry out the legislative policy, is asked to deprive him of it.

I would quote further from the opinions of the judges in Garland v. Harrison, to show that in their opinions, the provision of our statute in relation to bastards accords with the natural feelings of men, and is such as they would probably make if they made a will; and therefore when a will is made in accordance with its provisions, it ought to be sustained by the courts. But this note is now almost boundless; and I shall therefore conclude by a special reference to those opinions.

613 *Macfarland & Roberts, for the appellants:

The record presents the single question, whether a bequest or a devise to children, includes bastards, when there are both legitimate and illegitimate children of the same parent. In other words, is a bastard child in law, entitled to be counted with the lawful born, in apportioning a bequest or devise to children.

The common law treats bastards as a degraded class: nor is the common law singular in this. All countries professing to be civilized, pagan as well as christian, differ as they may in the degree of their discriminations against bastards, agree in excluding them from a full participation in the privileges of children. They bear, by all codes, some badge of inferiority.

This disparagement has its origin in moral considerations, not to say the religious convictions of all people. It encourages matrimony, and discourages vice. Purity of life is upheld, by enlisting on its side the sensibilities of our nature for the reputation of our offspring. Besides, if offspring were children, however deduced, investigations would be necessary, which could be conducted only at the expense of public decency. Demoralization would ensue from the constant recurrence of questions concerning the actual lineage of persons claiming to be children. Were the law indifferent whether children were born in wedlock or out of it, common opinion would be accommodated to its laxity, and marriage be neglected, as neither enjoined, nor essential to the honor and well being of families.

Our legislation has conformed to the more indulgent spirit of the civil law. It has declared legitimate certain persons who were bastards at the common law, and relieved others, whom it refused so to honor, in part, of their disabilities. It was deemed reasonable and safe, when their parents intermarried, and recognized the antenuptial offspring as their own, that they 614 *should be redeemed from the stain of their birth, and the act therefore declared them legitimate. Such persons are made thereby children, we presume, in a full, legal sense. So again, it was considered unjust and cruel to stigmatize the issue of marriages deemed null in law, or dissolved by a court; and these too are declared legitimate, and become, as we presume, entitled to the name of children. With these changes of the common law we have now no concern, except as they serve to fix with precision the relief conceded to the remaining class—that which includes the case before us. As to this, since manifestly it had not the equity of the other two classes, the act does no more than declare that "bastards shall be capable of inheriting, and transmitting inheritance on the part of the mother, as if lawfully begotten."

Digitized by Google

Now, the exact question is, whether this provision of the statute has repealed the common law rule, which, in the case before us, would exclude the bastard from the devise. Did it do more than change the law of descents quoad the mother? Did it abolish the common law principle, which refused to apply the term children to bastards, when there were lawful born to answer to the description? Did it confer on bastards the name or title of child, so as to constitute it their appropriate legal designation? Did it cancel wholly the distinctions between the natural and lawful children of a mother, and entitle her bastards to the appellation of children, in questions respecting the construction of wills, wherein, not her estate, nor their succession to her, were involved, but rights independent of her, and beyond her control?

It seems to us to state the question is to argue it. The act does not call the bastard a child, nor enact that he shall be so regarded. No change whatever in his designation, or description, is intimated. In the cases in which child was not de-615 scriptive of him antecedently, *he is unrelieved by the statute, and left subject to the reproach he inherited from his birth. It is as bastard he has conferred upon him an interest in his mother's inheritance, and bastard he remains. Between this and the other two classes mentioned in the act, a broad distinction is preserved. Those are inducted into the family as legitimate, and have the stain of their nativity obliterated; whereas these are provided for as bastards, without intimating they should be, or are relieved from the reproach of their birth. As bastards, and notwithstanding they be such, the act confers upon them a special, defined, restricted hereditable capacity.

It would be an inversion of all the rules of rational deduction, to hold the act made the bastard a child in respect to other rights, when he was not so made in the special matter in which he was relieved. We are accustomed to see it ruled, that language shall be understood as used in authoritative expositions. It is but rational to assume that phrases are used in the sense put upon them in our laws. Otherwise the vaguest conjecture, disrespectful to the public intelligence, is substituted for standards tending to precision and accuracy. Since, then, in statutes referring to children, of which our statute of descents is a striking example, the phrase is confined to lawful born, it must be so confined, when standing alone, in wills and grants.

We do not infer an intention to abandon a body of rules, or the policy in which it had its origin, from the repeal of one or more of its provisions. On the contrary, we presume an intention to stop at what was singled out and altered. Hence, the repeal of the rule which excluded a bastard from the inheritance of the mother, does not authorize the presumption of an intention to change his description, and to include him among children, from which, as a class, he was before excluded. Moreover, we must presume the legislature 616 *had in mind the whole of the disabilities to which bastards were subject; and had the intention been to carry the reform beyond what was specifically enacted, they could and would have used apt language to express their purpose. In the very act, containing the section in question, when the purpose was to relieve the bastard generally, or to change his designation, it is done by declaring him legitimate. The conclusion is therefore irresistible, that as the act stopped with investing the illegitimate qua bastard with a limited hereditary capacity, it did not design to redeem him from any other infirmity which attached to his nativity.

There is neither dependence nor connection between a devise and an heritage; and among those who would acknowledge the equal claim of bastards to share with the lawful born, in their mother's inheritance, opinions, at the least, would be divided as to admitting them to a devise. As the mother's estate was at her own disposal, it would sound capricious and unfeeling to exclude, in the accident of her intestacy, the person who, before all others, was the object of her solicitude and protection, and whom she would have remembered in her will. But a devise is a different affair. As to that, even a frail mother might consent to the justice of disposing of it, as a due regard to domestic purity would decide expedient. But if such sternness be beyond her strength, all others must agree, that the case belongs to legislative discretion, to be dealt with so as to advance the cause of good morals. It would seem like an invitation to licentiousness, to admit legitimate and illegitimate children under a common designation; and it is due to the legislature to insist, that they have not declared they shall be so admitted, either expressly or by implication. So far from it, the exact action had, imports consent to the rules not noticed and repealed.

"It is better (said Tenterden) to abide by this consequence (the defeat of the 617 object of the statute) than *to put upon it a construction not warranted by the words of the act." The King v. Barham, 8 Barn. & Cress. 99. "It is safer (said Ashhurst) to adopt what the legislature has actually said, than to suppose what they meant to say." Jones v. Smart, 1 T. R. 44. To bring a case within the statute, "it should be not only within the mischief contemplated by the statute, but also within the plain, intelligible words of the act of parliament." Holroyd, Brand-ling v. Barrington, 6 B. & C. 467. A casus omissus can in no case be supplied by a judgment of law, for that would be to make law. Buller, T. R. 52. Dwar. on Statutes, 9 Law Li. 708–711. The test of the largest latitude which can be claimed for a statute is, that it accomplish its avowed object or end.

Digitized by Google

The conclusion that the statute does not change the bastard's designation, nor bring him within a description antecedently inapplicable to him, is a logical sequence from the fact, that he is treated as bastard in the provision for his relief, and has his distinctive appellation perpetuated; from the consideration, that it does not follow he is entitled to take his place among the lawful born as a child, in respect to rights aliunde the mother, because admitted to share in her inheritance, since there is a substantial difference between the two cases, and the concession of the first, or of either, is consistent with the refusal of the other; from the consideration that bastards have been uniformly excluded from facts, providing simpliciter for children, and it is only reasonable to infer, that it was intended to use the phrase as comprehensively, in laws providing for children, as when used in wills and grants; from the presumption which invariably obtains, that testators and grantors, when they use language found in acts of assembly, or the judgments of the courts, employ it as therein accepted and understood; and from the consideration that the courts 618 *should follow, and not place themselves in advance of the distinct legislative will, in dealing with a class whom, considerations affecting the moral condition of society, consign to disfavor.

Upon the remaining question, we might content ourselves with a reference to 2 Jarman on Wills 94–112, where, after an elaborate examination of the cases, the conclusion is announced, that illegitimate children are not objects of a gift to children, or issue of any other degree, where there are legitimate children to take under such gift. In other words, that the two classes are not comprehended or described by the same generic term, and when it includes legitimate, it excludes illegitimate children. The cases reviewed by the learned author are distinguished for their general concurrence and high authority. See his analysis at page 112. The correspondence between the construction of the term children in wills and in the laws, is literally preserved; which is in itself rational, and was to be expected of courts in the habit of holding, that the phrases "issue of the body," and "heirs," &c.. in the wills of illiterate testators, meant exactly what they imported in learned treatises. "If a mother dispose of all her lands holden in chivalry to her bastard, she is not within the 32 H. 8, c. 1, which forbids the owners to dispose of above two-thirds of such land for preferment of children; for children in any law must be intended such as are lawfully begotten." Dyer 435 a; 1 Bacon's Ab. 1 Am. from 6th London edition, p. 510. 1 Thomas' Coke, 117 (123 b). So it was held, the lawful born only were intended by children in the statute of descents, which in our statute is distinctly shown, by the special clauses therein for bastards, when their relief was intended. In no one instance in our legislation have bastards been intended, when children are mentioned; so far from it, their premeditated exclu-619 sion is apparent from the two *sections in the statute of descents, declaring certain of the class to be legitimate. 2 Wms. Ex'ors 804; Sherman v. Angel, 1 Bail. Eq. R. 351; Vanderzee v. Aclom, 4 Ves. R. 771; Collins v. Hoxie, 9 Paige Ch. R. 81; 1 Roper on Legacies 79, 80; Durant v. Friend, 11 Eng. Law & Equ. R. 2; In re Overhill's trusts, 17 Eng. Law & Equ. R. 323; Thompson v. McDonald, 3 Dev. & Bat. Eq. R. 460, 480; 2 Paige C. R. 11; Coke's Litt. 8; Owen v. Bryant, 13 Eng. Law & Eq. R. 217; 3 Lomax's Digest, new edition, top paging 235, 236, marginal paging 151, 152.

The citations ascertain the antiquity and certainty of the rule.

The admission of bastards in certain cases, when there were no children besides them, and their admission where there was something supplemental to indicate they were actually intended, serve to establish the inflexibility of the general rule.

What is said in Sir F. Moor's Reports, page 10, is obviously entitled to no consideration.

ALLEN, P. This case arises upon the sixth clause of the will of Joseph Toler deceased. By that clause he gave to his daughter Mary Bennett the land on which she then lived, and certain slaves; and the clause concludes with these words: "My will is at the death of my daughter Mary Bennett that the land and negroes given to her shall be equally divided amongst her children." At the testator's death his daughter was married to Lewis Bennett, by whom she had several legitimate children. Previous to her marriage she had an illegitimate child by another man. The will bears date the 10th of July 1818, and was admitted to probate the 15th of November 1819. At the death of the testator the legitimate children and the bastard son were all living. And the only question is, whether the illegitimate child took a 620 vested *interest, equally with the lawful children of Mary Bennett under this clause of their grandfather's will. It is said in 2 Jarman on Wills (2 Amer. edi. by J. C. Perkins) 94, "to be an established rule, that a gift to children, sons, daughters or issue, imports prima facie legitimate children or issue, excluding those who are illegitimate, agreeable to the rule, 'Qui ex damnato coitu nascuntur, inter liberos non computentur.'" We have thus the rule that such a gift imports, not absolutely but prima facie legitimate children; and we have the ground on which it rests in the Latin maxim. The bastard is not computed amongst children. "We term them all by the name of bastards that be born out of lawful marriage." 1 Thos. Coke 115. "A bastard is in law quasi nullius filius, because he cannot be heir to any." Litt. § 188. If possessed of personal estate, he dies intestate and without wife or children, the estate belonged to the crown; if of real estate, it escheated. For he was supposed to have no relations, no heirs or next of kin, except those arising from his own contract of marriage, his wife and children or descendants. In this state of the law, when the courts came to determine what was the import of the words children, &c., of necessity the word was construed to mean such as the law recognized as children. It was the obvious course to hold, that where a testator was in the act of making a disposition of his estate, which the law permitted, and used a word which by law comprehended one class, he could not be supposed to intend a party who the law declared did not belong to the class named; to intend a person who in law was quasi nullius filius, without relations, heirs or next of kin, except his own wife and progeny. There was still another reason which would preclude the court from giving such an enlarged meaning to the words children, &c., when applied to the children or issue of a man. How was the fact of paternity 621 to be ascertained *except by going into an enquiry which the court could scarcely enter into upon the construction of a will. The birth of a child during a lawful marriage is prima facie evidence of its legitimacy. Formerly so strict was the rule, that if the husband be within the four seas, no proof was admitted to prove the child a bastard, unless in case of apparent impossibility of procreation; though the strictness of this rule has long since been relaxed, and the presumption of legitimacy arising from birth in wedlock, may be rebutted by circumstances inducing a contrary presumption, as proof of non-access, &c., &c. Thomas' Coke 109, n. B. But the presumption exists, until rebutted; and therefore, by the use of the words children, &c., in a devise or bequest, the testator must be understood to mean those who are by law presumed to be his children. But no such presumption can arise in respect to his illegitimate children. They still continue nullius filius as to the father. There must be some recognition; something to show that in the particular instance, he did intend to describe the illegitimate child; and this intention must be arrived at by some description which will serve to designate the individual, and not by naming a class which in law is not presumed to comprehend one of his condition. In the construction of wills in reference to this as to other subjects, the intention of the testator controls. The law contains no restriction upon the power of a testator to devise or bequeath to an illegitimate child. If it appears that the testator intended to make such a devise, effect must be given to the disposition.

Digitized by Google

It is said by Jarman, p. 94, "that illegitimate children, born at the time of making the will, may be the objects of a devise or bequest, by any description which will identify them. Hence, in the case of a gift to the natural child of a man, or of a woman, or of one by the other, it is 622 simply necessary to prove *that the objects in question had, at the date of the will, acquired the reputation of being such children." In the same connection, this author reviews the most prominent cases which have been decided on this question; and it is observable that in most if not all the cases cited and commented on by him (except the case of Mortimer v. West, 2 Cond. Eng. Ch. R. 439, 3 Russ. R. 370), were devises or bequests to the illegitimate children of the father, or of a woman by a certain individual. The case last mentioned seems to have been the first in which it was held that a devise to the children of a woman without reference to the father, was bad; and the only subsequent case to which we have been referred of like import, is Dovex v. Alexander, 24 Eng. Ch. R. 275 (2 Hare 275), which arose on the construction of a deed.

But though one of the incidents, the uncertainty in regard to paternity does not exist in case of a devise to the children of a woman, without reference to the father; yet the decision was the logical sequence of the first proposition, that by law the natural child is filius nullius, has no relation, and cannot inherit from or transmit inheritance to the mother. In legal language, he is not comprehended in the class of her children; and therefore, as in the case of the putative father, the court could not say he was comprehended in that class by the use of the term. Whether upon a question of intention, this was not straining the rule to an unreasonable extent, is another question. The principle is the same in both cases. In contemplation of law they were not children; and the use of the word children was not sufficient to embrace them.

Some of the cases, as Wilkinson v. Adam, 1 Ves. & Bea. R. 422; Harris v. Lloyd, 11 Cond. Eng. Ch. R. 174, decide, that the face of the will alone can be looked to for the purpose of ascertaining the intention to apply to natural children. But this 623 rule has been *innovated upon by other cases; as Beachcroft v. Beachcroft, 1 Mad. R. 430; Frazer v. Piggott, 1 Young. R. 354. But none of the cases interfere with the general rule, that illegitimate children may take if clearly designated by a description which identifies them.

Coke, as we have seen, terms all by the name of bastards that be born out of lawful marriage. Subsequent marriage and recognition do not legitimate; children of marriages within the prohibited degrees; of marriages not properly solemnized in proper place or by proper license or banns; of a marriage where there was a former marriage, or where the parties were imbecile —are bastards; and therefore inter liberos non computentur. Shelford Marriage &

Digitized by Google

Divorce, ch. 3, p. 154 to 157, 171-3, 9, 183, 5, 6, 190; Roper Husband & Wife 486. They have no heritable blood, and are not comprehended in the class of children when that word is used in a will, where there are or by possibility may be legitimate children to answer to the description. As where legitimate children were or might have been entitled under a bequest, this possibility excludes the illegitimate. Because children in its primary sense, we have seen, if unexplained, imports legitimate children only.

In Virginia a child born before marriage, born a bastard, if the parents afterwards marry, and he is recognized by the father, is legitimate. So the issue of marriages deemed null in law are legitimate; Code, p. 523; or of a woman by a second marriage which took place during the lifetime of the first husband. It would not be seriously maintained that under this legislation, persons in this condition would not in this state be comprehended by the word children. In England, as we have seen, they would not be, if there were legitimate children or the possibility of there being such children.

Yet both in England and Virginia
624 *the intention of the testator controls in the construction of wills. And guided by this rule, the courts there hold such children not to be intended—here, that they are. And both are correct, for where words are used which in law have received a legal signification, the party is presumed to use them in that sense, unless the contrary appears. In England they are not computed as children, for not being born in lawful wedlock, the law does not presume them prima facie to be children. In Virginia, being recognized after marriage, or being the issue of a marriage, though unlawful, the law prima facie presumes them to be children; declares them to be legitimate, and therefore necessarily computed as children whenever the word is used. To include them in England, there must be something amounting to an express designatio personarum applicable to them; in Virginia, to exclude them from the class in which the law here comprehends them, there must be something to show clearly that such was the intention.

This brings us to the enquiry as to the condition of children in Virginia not born in wedlock or recognized by the father after marriage. On the paternal side their condition is unchanged. As to him the bastard is still quasi nullius filius; the law indulges no presumption as to his paternity. If acknowledged by the father, that is a fact to be proved, not a presumption of law. A devise or bequest to him by his reputed or acquired name, is good, whether made by his father or a stranger; a bequest to children, if there be legitimate children, does not comprehend him, because there is no legal presumption that he is a child.

But how is it ex parte materna? as to her, does he, as in England, remain quasi nullius filius? without relation, without next of kin, except his own wife and progeny? Or, does the law recognize him as her 625 *child; embrace him in the description of her children? The solution of these questions is to be found in our statute of descents, as construed by this court.

The Code, ch. 123, § 5, p. 522; 1st Rev. Code 355, § 2, 18, provides that where any person having title to real estate of inheritance shall die intestate as to such estate, it shall descend and pass in parcenary to such of his kindred, male and female, as are not aliens, in the following course: 1, to his children and their descendants. And further: "Bastards shall be capable of inheriting and transmitting inheritance on the part of their mother, as if lawfully begotten." The framers of this act we are told by Carr, judge, in Davis v. Rowe, 6 Rand. 364, "looked at the common law canons of descent to avoid, not to imitate; to pull down, not to build up. All its principles are violated; its landmarks removed, its fences broken down, its traces obliterated." Its basis (says Judge Parker in Garland v. Harrison, 8 Leigh 368, referring for his positions to the opinions of Judges Tucker and Roane in Stones v. Keeling, 5 Call 143, 147, 148, "was the statute of distributions and the civil law. It is founded on the great principles of justice. Its object was to make such a will for the intestate as he would himself probably make; and its obvious policy was to follow the lead of the natural affections, and to consider as most worthy, the claims of those who stand nearest to the affections of the last occupant. It ought therefore at all times to be liberally construed in favor of those to whom the intestate himself, had he made a will, might be supposed to be most favorable, without reference to common law rules or feudal disabilities."

Under the influence of these principles, the judges in Garland v. Harrison proceeded to the construction of the provision of the act of descents, declaring that bastards shall be capable of inheriting and transmitting inheritance on the part of their mother, as if lawfully begotten: and 626 the *result can be best arrived at by quoting their own expressions. After enumerating his common law disabilities, Judge Parker says: "It was the object of the law to give the bastard a mother, and to place him in all respects on the same footing as a lawfully begotten child, born of the same mother." Again, after commenting on § 6, Code, ch. 123, and § 19, 1 Rev. Code, p. 357, declaring that a child born before marriage and the parents intermarry, if recognized by the father, shall be deemed legitimate, he says, "I have no doubt that it was intended by the section respecting bastards, to bestow upon illegitimate children the same capacities of inheriting from or through the mother, and passing inheritances to or through her, as they possess under the other section in respect to both parents; that is to say, to make them in all respects the legitimate children of their mother." And again: "These relaxations of the severity of the common law rest upon the principle that the relation of parent and child, which exists in this unhappy case, in all its binding and native force, ought to produce the ordinary consequences of consanguinity; and I am convinced that it was the intention of the legislature of Virginia to adopt the most liberal rule in respect to an inheritance in case of bastardy, that was consistent with the certain ascertainment of the parents." So Judge Brockenbrough, in the same case, says, "A bastard may inherit on the part of his mother in like manner as if he were her legitimate son. He may therefore inherit from his mother or from his maternal grandparents in the direct line," &c. And again: "He cannot have whole brothers, but every uterine brother, whether legitimate or spurious, is his half brother." And President Tucker, in the same case, remarks, "To declare them legitimate, would have been at once to provide, not a mother only, but a father.

Digitized by Google

To such a length the lawmakers were 627 not *prepared to go. They were compelled to adopt another phraseology—to use language which, in relation to the mother and her kindred, would put bastards on the footing of legitimates, while it would leave them, as heretofore, in relation to the father, the sons of nobody. But this was the only difference they could have designed." And in conformity with these views, reiterated in every variety of form, it was held in that case, overruling entirely Stevenson's heirs v. Sullivant, 5 Wheat. R. 207, that the estate of the bastard dying intestate, passed to his mother and to his two uterine bastard brothers.

Comment on these opinions is almost unnecessary. At the common law he had no mother; this statute gives him one. He is placed in all respects upon the same footing as a lawfully begotten child born of the same mother. He is therefore no longer, as to her, quasi filius nullius, but her child, inheriting from and through her, transmitting inheritance to and through her. If seized of property, she dies intestate, the act says it shall descend and pass in parcenary to such of her kindred, &c., in the following course—first, to the children and their descendants. If she dies leaving illegitimate and legitimate children, does not the word children comprehend all in the same class? Would it be argued that the illegitimate child would not take with the legitimate children? And when, as we have seen from the extracts aforesaid, this law, as expounded, includes all her children, legitimate and illegitimate, in the same class as her children, so ascertained by birth, not by legal presumption, and for every purpose, as if all were lawfully begotten, what warrant is there for the pretension that the same general term, when used in a will, is to be construed as excepting them for any purpose? If the term children is to be construed in regard to both parents, as including the child recognized, or to be deemed legitimate, being 628 *born in wedlock, though illegal because the testator, by the use of the general phrase, is to be, must be held to use it in the sense of the law, there being nothing to show he uses it in another sense. Must we not apply the same rule when the word is used in reference to the illegitimate child of the female? The law declares the estate shall pass and descend to her children; being a child, he is heir, joint heir with every other child born in or out of wedlock; comprehended in the class, not by any personal designation, but by the general word children, comprising all.

In Edwards v. Freeman, 2 P. Wms. R. 435, 441, Lord Raymond says, "The statute of distributions makes such a will for the intestate, as a father, free from the partiality of affections, would himself make; and this I call a parliamentary will." So in Garland v. Harrison, Parker, judge, says, "The intention was to make such a will for the intestate as, if he had died testate, he would have been most likely to have made for himself." And Tucker, president, says, in the same case, "Our law of descents was formed in no small degree upon the human affections; the legislature very justly conceiving that the object of a law of descents was to supply the want of a will, and that it should therefore conform in every case, as nearly as might be, to the probable current of those affections which would have given direction to the provisions of such will. Under the influence of these opinions, they legislated in relation to bastards."

As a legislative will, we have seen that the word children includes the legitimate and illegitimate children of a woman in the same class, placing all the issue of the woman upon the same footing as if born in wedlock. When the testator comes to write his own will, and uses the same words, which in the legislative will comprehends all, comprehends them because of the supposed conformity to the probable cur-
629 rent of those *affections which would have given direction to the provisions of a will, if he had written it, we are asked to say he does not intend to comprehend all, but to exclude the illegitimate child. The law declares the words in the legislative will includes; the court in expounding the law is asked to say the same words used by the testator in reference to the same matter, excludes them. By the statutory will they are her children; by the written will they continue, as to her, quasi nullius filius, and subject to the common law disabilities of bastards. And this construction is invoked, notwithstanding we are informed by the judges, in the case referred to, that the statute should at all times be liberally construed in favor of those to whom the intestate himself, had he made a will, might be supposed to be most favorable, without regard to common law rules or feudal disabilities. In Sleigh v. Strider, 5 Call 439, it was decided that a child born out of wedlock in the year 1774, was legitimated by the subsequent marriage and acknowledgment of parents in 1776, which was before the passage of the law of 1785, which took effect January 1, 1787. Stones v. Keeling, 5 Call 143, decided, that the issue of a woman by a second marriage, which took place during the lifetime of her first husband, are legitimate after the death of their father. These cases, and the case of Garland v. Harrison, all show, that this law has invariably been liberally construed by this court in favor of the class intended to be relieved from common law disabilities.

Digitized by Google

If we depart from the rule of construction as laid down by the English cases, that by the use of a phrase which has received a legal signification as comprehending a particular class, the testator must have intended to use it in the same sense, when treating of the same subject matter, we are at sea without compass or rudder. In the place of a clear, definite rule, the discretion of the judge is to be substi-
630 tuted. The *enquiry is, who are the beneficiaries intended by the testator? He has used a phrase referring to a class, and the question is, who are comprehended in it? The English courts say, in view of their law, he must have intended legitimate children, because the illegitimate children are not by law treated as children, and because where the children of a man are spoken of, there is no presumption of paternity except in the case of children born in wedlock. If it is attempted to bring in illegitimate children, it must be done by proof, and the hazard is encountered of giving his estate to aliens to his blood; to persons never acknowledged by him as children. And as none are legitimate who were not born in lawful wedlock, the children of marriages deemed void, &c., cannot be distinguished from such as are born in a state of concubinage; it is in law concubinage, and therefore no presumption can arise in favor of the children. And the same principle, by a too rigid adherence to the rule, has been applied to the children of a woman; giving, as to her, more weight to a fiction of law than to the palpable fact that the illegitimate child is her offspring.

But if there be no legitimate children or possibility of legitimate children, as in case of a devise to the children of a man deceased, but there were illegitimate children, they must have been intended, as none other answer the description. In Virginia, guided by the same rule of carrying out the intention, the children of a man born in a state of concubinage, would not be considered as falling within the class of children so as to take by such general description. As to the father, the bastard remains nullius filius, and there is no legal presumption as to his paternity. But I take it to be too clear a proposition to require argument to prove it, that in Virginia a child born before marriage, but afterwards recognized by the father who inter-631 marries *with the mother, or born of a marriage null in law, but by statute deemed legitimate, would in a devise or bequest to children be held to be included with other legitimate children, unless expressly excluded, in conformity with the principle of the English rule; because by the recognition or the birth in wedlock, the law presumes them to be children: though in England it would be otherwise. And so adhering to the principle of the rule, when the law makes the bastard child of a woman her child; endows him with every attribute of a child born in wedlock; includes him in the very class designated as children, to whom her estate is to pass in the event of her dying intestate; a testator speaking of her children, the words must be construed to include in the class all who in law are her children. Instead of departing from, such construction adheres to and carries out the rule. The contrary construction substitutes unlicensed discretion, and involves the courts in a labyrinth without a clew to direct them.

It has been suggested, that this is a will not of the mother, but of the grandfather; and we cannot presume he intended to provide for the child of his daughter's shame. The law presumes otherwise; for if his daughter had been dead, and he had then died intestate, in the statutory will made for him, this child would, equally with the legitimate children have been provided for; and in the language of the judge in Black v. Cartmell, 10 B. Monr. R. 188, it might be furthermore said, "that it cannot be assumed, or even presumed, that if she had an illegitimate son when the will was made, her father would, on account of her fault, have excluded his unoffending grandchild from all participation in his estate, and left him a vagabond dependent upon the charity of others for sustenance and education." Perhaps, indeed, considering that no matter by whom begot, the relationship to the grandfather was the same, and his necessities the greater, 632 *such presumption that he did not intend to include (or rather that he intended to exclude, for the law includes), would be contrary to the fact. And at best, it would be substituting vague conjecture for a certain rule.

The argument against the policy of such construction as affecting female purity and public morality (springing perhaps originally out of the maxims of a fulfilled dispensation, which visited upon the children, to the third and fourth generation, the sins of the parent), may be met by the enquiries of Tucker, president, in Garland v. Harrison, "was the policy of the marriage institution more fatally invaded by concubinage than by bigamy? Was illicit intercourse out of wedlock more to be deprecated than incest in wedlock?" Yet the fruits of such intercourse are legitimate. And in the Lessee of Brewer v. Blougher, 14 Peters' R. 178, which arose under a law similar in substance to ours as to bastards, the court decided that the issue of an incestuous marriage between father and daughter, though illegitimate, were embraced by the statute. Chief Justice Taney says, "the right to inherit would appear to have been given upon the principle, that it would be unjust to punish the offspring for the crime of the parents; and their right therefore is not made to depend upon the degree of guilt of which they were the offspring." But in the language of Judge Brockenbrough in Garland v. Harrison, this argument as to public policy "is a consideration which would be more appropriately addressed to a legislative body than a judicial tribunal." And there I leave it. It is for that body to give the law; for this to declare it.

Digitized by Google

The rule of the English courts had no reference to questions of public policy. It rested upon the intention of the testator, and the mode of arriving at it. The right of an illegitimate child to take, if the testator so intended, was never ques-633 tioned; and this under *circumstances more likely to affect public morals than a construction which includes a bastard amongst the children of his mother under our statute. Jarman, p. 112, deduces these rules, amongst others from the cases: That illegitimate children may take by any name or description which they have acquired by reputation at the time of making the will: That legitimate and illegitimate children may take concurrently under a designatio personarum applicable to both: That a gift to an illegitimate child en ventre sa mere without reference to the father, is indisputably good: And that it is questionable whether, at this day, a gift to the future illegitimate child of a woman would be sustained on the ground of public morals; though there are dicta which would seem to lead to a different conclusion.

These conclusions show the length to which the English courts have gone in giving effect to the dispositions of testators when the intention is clear; though such dispositions may not commend themselves as calculated to preserve purity in the sexual relations.

I think the illegitimate child in this case was by the law of Virginia within the class comprehended by the word children of a woman: that by the use of the word here the testator must be intended to have referred to and included him with the other children of his daughter, whether born in wedlock or not, and that he takes equally with them, there being nothing in the case to show an intention to exclude him.

I am for affirming the decree with damages and costs.

DANIEL, LEE and ROBERTSON, Js., concurred in the opinion of Allen, P.

MONCURE, J., dissented.

Decree affirmed.

---

634 *Bristow v. The Commonwealth.

July Term, 1859, Lewisburg.

1. Jurors—Challenge for Cause—Waiver of.—It is a principal cause of challenge to a juror that he was one of the grand jury which found the indictment. But if the objection is not taken until after the verdict, it will not be set aside on this ground, unless it appears from the whole case that the juror was biased against the prisoner; who therefore has not had a fair and impartial trial.

2. Same—Objection to Mode of Selecting—When Made.†—An objection to the mode of selecting the jury in a trial for murder, must be made at the time the jury are chosen; and prisoner cannot avail himself of it after verdict.

3. Same—Selection of.—After the panel has been completed and the prisoner has struck off eight, the jury may be selected from the remaining sixteen, either by drawing by lot four who shall be discharged, or the twelve who shall constitute the jury.

---

*__Appellate Practice—Jurors—Challenge for Cause—Waiver.__—In Sweeney v. Baker, 13 W. Va. 228, it is said: "The decisions in Virginia and West Virginia show, that here the courts regard with extreme jealousy, all attempts to set aside verdicts on the ground of objections to jurors, existing before they were sworn. Here a verdict will not be set aside for any such cause, unless it appears to have operated, so as to inflict injustice. See Smith's Case, 2 Va. Cas. 6; Poore's Case, 2 Va. Cas. 474; Kennedy's Case, 2 Va. Cas. 510; Brown's Case, 2 Va. Cas. 516; Hughes' Case, 5 Rand. 655; Jones' Case, 1 Leigh 598; Hallstock's Case, 2 Gratt. 564; Heath's Case, 1 Rob. R. 735; Curran's Case, 7 Gratt. 619; Dilworth's Case, 12 Gratt. 689; Bristow's Case, 15 Gratt. 634; Thompson v. Updegraff et al., 3 W. Va. 629; State v. McDonald, 9 W. Va. 456; Zickefoose v. Kuykendall, 12 W. Va. 23." For the above proposition the principal case is also cited and approved in Simmons v. McConnell, 86 Va. 500, 10 S. E. Rep. 838; Gray v. Com., 92 Va. 777, 23 S. E. Rep. 858; State v. Greer, 22 W. Va. 824; State v. McDonald, 9 W. Va. 465; State v. Hobbs, 37 W. Va. 826, 17 S. E. Rep. 385. See, in accord, State v. Williams, 14 W. Va. 851; Beck v. Thomson, 31 W. Va. 459, 7 S. E. Rep. 447; Flesher v. Hale, 22 W. Va. 44; Poindexter v. Com., 33 Gratt. 766, and note; State v. Harrison, 36 W. Va. 729, 15 S. E. Rep. 982; State v. Strauder, 11 W. Va. 745.

†__Jurors—Objection to Mode of Selecting—Waiver.__ In Lawrence v. Com., 30 Gratt. 848, and note, the principal case is cited as authority for the proposition that an objection to the mode of selecting the jury in a trial for murder, must be made at the time the jury are chosen, and the prisoner cannot avail himself of it after verdict. But in Lawrence's Case the court went further than the principal case and held that in a felony case a venire facias may be presumed to have regularly issued from the recital of the record and an objection after verdict comes too late. This is overruled in Jones v. Com., 87 Va. 68, 12 S. E. Rep. 226, and the court, in commenting on the principal case, at page 66 says: "Bristow's Case, 15 Gratt. 634, which has been referred to, has no application. In that case the objection was, not that there was no venire, but that the jury had been improperly selected after the venire had been executed, and it was held that the objection came too late after verdict.

"The difference between that case and this is that here the omission to direct a venire leaves the record destitute of an essential part, which, therefore, cannot be supplied by presumption nor affected by the doctrine of waiver; whereas any defect in selecting the jury from the persons brought in under the venire, not being thus essential, may be waived; and so, upon the same principle, objection

Digitized by Google

4. Criminal Law—Murder—Case at Bar.‡—Deceased strikes the prisoner's father with his fist and a fight ensues, when the prisoner, who sees it, comes up, and catches the deceased by the collar of his coat behind, and strikes the deceased from behind with a pocket knife, wounding him in the right side. The prisoner, who was about seventeen years old, had lately left the school of the deceased, and had used language on more than one occasion before the affray, and also used language after it, but before it was known deceased was dangerously wounded, which evinced hostility to him. HELD: The killing is murder.

At the November term 1858 of the Circuit court of King & Queen county, Robert B. Bristow was indicted for the murder of L. J. Gogerty. He was put upon his trial at the same term; but the jury not being able to agree upon a verdict, was discharged. At the April term 1859 he was again put upon his trial, when the following facts were proved:

On the morning of Friday the 18th of June in the year 1858, L. J. Gogerty the deceased, was at the office of Dr. Cox, in the village of Centerville, in the county of King & Queen, together with several 635 other *persons. It was stated by some person to the deceased that James Bristow, the father of the prisoner, had said that the deceased had struck his son Julian Bristow (who was a pupil of the deceased, and whom the said deceased had corrected) in the eye with his fist. Thereupon Gogerty said it was a lie, and he intended to ask James Bristow about it the first time he saw him; and if he said so, he would tell him he lied; and if he cut up any rustys, he would thrash him. In a short time some one said James Bristow was coming then, and was in fact in the road passing from his house to his store, approaching the store of D. Butrick, a point necessary to pass in order to get to his store. Gogerty immediately started off in the direction of Butrick's store, and went a short distance up the road, and beyond Butrick's store, to meet James Bristow. When he got within a short distance of James Bristow, he said to him, "he had understood that he had said that he (Gogerty) had struck his son with his fist, and if any person said so, he told a lie." James Bristow said he never had said so—it was his son who said so. Gogerty then said, if either said so, it was a lie. James Bristow replied, "If it had come from any other person than a contemptible flat-footed Yankee, he would notice it." Gogerty thereupon struck him in the face, and one or two blows passed between James Bristow and the deceased. Just as the first blow was struck, Dr. Cox, a justice of the peace (who with others from his office had come up), commanded the peace. The prisoner, who had preceded his father, and had nearly reached his father's store, when attracted by the quarrel, was seen coming back (apparently whittling a stick, which was a habit with him, or cutting his finger nails), gesticulating very much, and talking to himself; and at the moment the deceased and James Bristow closed in fight, the prisoner rushed in to the back of the 636 deceased, somewhat to *his right, laid his left hand upon the collar in the middle, or a little to the left, apparently pulling the deceased off, and did pull him a little back, and struck the deceased round his body at the same time with his right hand. The prisoner was unobserved by the deceased when he came up behind him, as described. A witness, who was within reach of the prisoner when he came up to the back of the deceased, immediately caught prisoner by the skirt of his coat, and pulled him around; and at the instant this was done, the deceased turned from James Bristow, and advanced, striking at the prisoner, and did strike him one blow on the right or left cheek with his hand. The prisoner struck the deceased no other blow than that above mentioned, round the body. The prisoner retreated, warding off the blows as long as the deceased continued to advance on him, which was five or six paces; then a bystander interfered and separated them; and after this, the prisoner did not advance towards Gogerty. Gogerty then advanced towards James Bristow, as if to renew the fight with him, when another bystander interfered. As the prisoner, immediately after striking deceased the blow above mentioned, was pulled around as above stated, an open knife was seen in his hand.

It was proved that there was no impediment to prevent the prisoner from retreating further, when deceased was advancing upon him, and that before and during the fight, there was nothing to indicate any danger of death, or serious bodily harm to any of the combatants.

---

to the competency of a juror must be made before he is sworn upon the jury, unless by leave of the court." See monographic note on "Juries" appended to Chahoon v. Com., 20 Gratt. 733.

Upon the question of competency of jurors, see principal case cited in Jackson v. Com., 23 Gratt. 931, and note, and cases cited. See monographic note on "Juries" appended to Chahoon v. Com., 20 Gratt. 733.

‡Criminal Law—Homicide—Instructions—Self-Defense.—In Clark v. Com., 90 Va. 369, 18 S. E. Rep. 440, it is said: "In Valden's Case, 12 Gratt. 717, it was held that to make out a case of self-defense in a case of homicide, the accused must show to the jury that the defense was necessary to protect his own life, or to protect himself against grievous bodily harm; and that with regard to the necessity that will justify the slaying of another in self-defense, the accused must not have wrongfully occasioned the necessity, for a man shall not in any case justify the killing of another by a pretense of necessity, unless he were without fault in bringing that necessity upon himself. See, also, Bristow's Case, 15 Gratt. 634; Lewis' Case, 78 Va. 732; Honesty's Case, 81 Va. 283, 298; Brown's Case, 86 Va. 466, 470, 10 S. E. Rep. 745; Gaines' Case, 88 Va. 682, 693, 14 S. E. Rep. 375." See Gray v. Com., 92 Va. 775, 22 S. E. Rep. 858, and cases cited, where the instructions given in the principal case are approved. See monographic note on "Homicide."

Digitized by Google

It was also proved, that after the fight, and the crowd had dispersed, the prisoner, who was at his father's store, said he had stabbed the deceased; and taking his knife from his pocket, said he had stabbed him with that knife, and asked if there was not blood on it. He also at this time took 637 from the shelf a *larger knife, of the value of sixty-two and half cents, and said if he had had that knife at the time of the fight, he would have killed the deceased on the spot. A short time after, prisoner said to another person, he had interfered that morning in a fight between Gogerty and his father James Bristow, and that if they had not interfered with him (prisoner) after the first blow, he would have killed Gogerty the second blow, if he had not been pulled off. That the deceased had taken advantage of his absence to whip his brother Julian at school, and that had he been present he would have killed him at that time; and that if Gogerty ever interfered with him, he would kill him. That about fifteen minutes after the fight, the prisoner said to another witness, "Where is the damned rascal? (meaning Gogerty). I will shoot him or his horse either." That about an hour after the fight, the physician, who attended the deceased, after he had made the first examination of the wound, and at that time thought it slight, said to prisoner, "You have marked Gogerty." He replied, "That is exactly what I intended to do."

When the foregiong expressions were used by the prisoner, he was not apprised of the serious nature of the wound the deceased had received.

It was also proved, that about a week before the fight, the deceased, who was a schoolmaster, and the prisoner at that time his pupil, called him up and asked him about a difficulty which the prisoner had had with another boy, and the prisoner replied, he would whip any boy who would do what that boy had done to him. That upon this, the deceased rebuked the prisoner; and that after the school was dismissed for that day, the prisoner said to one of his schoolmates that at the time the deceased rebuked him, he had his knife open in his pocket, and if the deceased had 638 *touched him, he would have killed him on the spot. That on the day before the fight, about twelve o'clock, the prisoner said he had left the school of the deceased. That he had treated him in an ungentlemanly manner, and he intended to tell him so, and if he resisted him or struck him, he meant to kill him. At this time the prisoner exhibited a knife, saying, "It is a small one, but I always have one about me, even though it is a small one." Early in the night of the last mentioned day, the prisoner said that if he went to the debating society that night, and deceased interfered with him there, he would kill him. The fatal wound was inflicted with a knife, the blade of which had a sharp point, and was from two to two and a half inches long. The wound was located on the left side of the person of the deceased, about midway between the lower rib and the hip bone. It was directed downwards and inwards, and the narrow edge was towards the anterior medium line of the body. In consequence of the compressible nature of that portion of the body, it penetrated about four inches, transfixing two of the small intestines, and entered the large intestine. The wound was inflicted on Friday morning, between eight and nine o'clock, and the deceased died from the effects thereof on the following Sunday, in the afternoon. Some few hours before his death, the deceased, who was then aware of his approaching end, sent for the father of the prisoner, and had an interview with him. In this interview the deceased said that he did not wish the prisoner punished. That it was perfectly natural for the son to defend the parent. That the prisoner had only done what he (the deceased) or any other person would have done.

It was also proved that the age of the prisoner at the time of the homicide was eighteen years and five months.

639 *After the evidence had been introduced, the prisoner, by his counsel, moved the court to instruct the jury as follows:

1st. That every homicide is presumed in law to be murder in the second degree—and in order to elevate the offence to murder in the first degree, the burden of the proof is on the commonwealth; and to reduce the offence to manslaughter, the burden of the proof is on the prisoner.

2d. That if the jury shall believe from the evidence, that there was an existing grudge on the part of the accused against the deceased, but that the killing occurred on a sudden affray and by reason of a new provocation, they are bound to presume the killing to have been caused by the impulse of the affray, unless it be clearly shown by the commonwealth to have been on the old grudge.

3d. That a child will be excused by the law for any injury done by him to one assailing his parent offensively, to the same extent that he would be if the attack was made on himself instead of his parent.

4th. That if the jury shall have rational doubt as to any important fact necessary to convict the accused of any offence whatever, they are bound to give to the accused the benefit of that doubt.

5th. That if the jury shall believe from the evidence that the accused gave to Gogerty the wound which caused his death, whilst Gogerty was advancing on him and striking at him, under the belief at the time that it was necessary to protect his life or his person from serious bodily harm, and whilst he was retreating from Gogerty, that then he was excusable.

6th. If, upon the whole evidence in the case, there is any rational hypothesis consistent with the conclusion that the homicide was justifiable or excusable, the accused cannot be convicted.

Digitized by Google

7th. That there is no presumption
640 of malice in this *case, if any proof of alleviation, excuse or justification arise out of the evidence for the prosecution.

To which instructions the attorney for the commonwealth objected. Whereupon, the court, refusing to give the said instructions as prayed for by the prisoner, instructed them as follows:

1st. That every homicide is presumed in law to be murder in the second degree; and in order to elevate the offence to murder in the first degree, the burden of the proof is on the commonwealth; and to reduce the offence to manslaughter, the burden of the proof is on the prisoner.

2d. If the jury shall believe from the evidence, that at the time of the killing there was an exsiting grudge on the part of the accused to the deceased, but that the blow struck by the prisoner, which caused the death of the deceased, was given in a sudden affray, and because of fresh provocation, then the presumption is that the killing was because of the fresh provocation; and to elevate the offence to murder, it devolves on the commonwealth to show that the killing was because of the old grudge.

3d. That a child will be excused by the law for any injury done by him to one assailing his parent offensively, to the same extent that he would be, if the attack was made on himself instead of his parent.

4th. That if the jury shall have any rational doubt as to any important fact necessary to convict the accused of any offence whatever, that they are bound to give the accused the benefit of that doubt.

5th. That if the jury shall believe from the evidence that the accused gave to Gogerty the wound which caused his death, whilst Gogerty was advancing on him, and striking at him, and that he then struck the mortal blow through mere necessity, in order to protect himself from serious bodily injury or death, having first retreated until his further retreat was pre-641 vented *by some impediment, or as far as the fierceness of the assault permitted, then he was excusable in striking the said blow.

6th. If upon the whole evidence in the case, there is any rational hypothesis consistent with the conclusion that the homicide was excusable or justifiable, the accused cannot be convicted.

7th. Every homicide is presumed in law to be murder in the second degree. It is, however, the duty of the jury to consider the whole testimony (both that introduced by the commonwealth and the prisoner), and ascertain whether the prisoner has been guilty of murder in the first degree, murder in the second degree, or manslaughter (voluntary or involuntary), or whether the homicide was not excusable.

To which opinion of the court, refusing the instructions prayed for by the prisoner, by his counsel, and giving the instructions last aforesaid, the prisoner, by his counsel, excepted.

The attorney for the commonwealth then moved the court to instruct the jury as follows:

1st. Every homicide is presumed by law to be murder in the second degree. If the commonwealth would elevate the offence to murder in the first degree, she must prove the characteristics of that offence; and if the prisoner would reduce the offence, the burden of proof is on him.

2d. If the jury believe from the evidence that previous to the time of killing there was a grudge on the part of the prisoner towards the deceased; that the prisoner had previously declared his purpose to kill the deceased if the deceased interfered with him, and that he killed the deceased because and in pursuance of such declared purpose on the aforesaid grudge, then such killing was willful, deliberate and premeditated. and is murder in the first degree.

3d. If the jury believe from the
642 evidence that the *killing aforesaid was malicious, but not willful, deliberate and premeditated, then such killing was murder in the second degree.

4th. If the jury believe for the evidence that the prisoner killed the deceased in execution of a malicious purpose to do the deceased a serious personal hurt, by wounding or beating him, the offence is murder.

5th. If the jury believe from the evidence the prisoner killed the deceased, even after his own retreat, the excuse of necessity will not prevail, unless there was reasonable ground to apprehend that he would otherwise be killed himself, or that he would suffer great bodily harm; and the same rule applies when the killing is by a child in defence of a parent. The danger to either, in order to excuse the killing. must be serious and imminent.

6th. Where death ensues on a sudden provocation or upon a sudden quarrel, without prepense malice, the killing is manslaughter; and in order to reduce the killing to self-defence, the prisoner must prove two things: First, that before the mortal blow was given, he had declined any further combat, and had retreated as far as he could with safety; and secondly, that he killed his adversary through mere necessity.

To which the counsel for the prisoner objected. But the court, overruling the objections of the prisoner, by his counsel. to the said instructions, granted the same, and gave them to the jury. And the prisoner again excepted.

The jury found the prisoner guilty of murder in the second degree, and ascertained his term of imprisonment in the penitentiary at five years. And thereupon the prisoner, by his counsel, moved the court to set aside the verdict, on the ground that the jury was not drawn and selected in the mode prescribed by law. The point of the objection was, that after the 643 panel of *twenty-four had been completed, and the prisoner had struck off eight, out of the remaining sixteen four were selected by lot and discharged; and the other twelve were sworn as the jury.

Digitized by Google

The court overruled the motion; and the prisoner again excepted. There was also a motion for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence, which the court overruled: and there was another exception setting out the facts hereinbefore stated. And afterwards there was another motion to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial, on the ground that Richard Wayne, one of the jury which rendered the verdict, had been a member of the grand jury which made the indictment. This application was accompanied by the affidavit of the prisoner, in which he says that he did not know and had no means of knowing, by ordinary diligence on his part, that the said Richard Wayne was on the grand jury which found the indictment, before or during the trial, and not until after the discharge of the jury. There was also the affidavit of the two counsel for the prisoner, who were present when the jury was impaneled, who say that Wayne was sworn on his voir dire before he was sworn in chief as a juror in the case, and that he did not disclose the fact that he was one of the grand jury which found the indictment; and that they did not know, nor were they informed of the fact until after the verdict was rendered.

Wayne was himself examined, and said that he was a member of the grand jury, but that he had no recollection of the fact at the time that he was called, examined and sworn on the jury; nor did he recollect it until his attention was called to it on the morning after the verdict was rendered. He further stated that he did not when on the jury, nor did he then recollect any of the evidence given before the grand jury which found the indictment; and that such evidence did not weight with him, or in any manner influence his mind 644 *in rendering the verdict; but that his mind was perfectly free and unbiased for or against the prisoner. The court overruled the motion; and the prisoner again excepted. And the court having rendered a judgment upon the verdict, the prisoner applied to this court for a writ of error; which was awarded.

Crump, for the prisoner, insisted:

1st. That Wayne having been a member of the grand jury which found the indictment against the prisoner, he was not a competent juror; and the objection having been made as soon as it was known, the prisoner was not to be subjected to the consequences of a trial by an incompetent jury; because having used the only means in his power to ascertain the juror's competency, he had failed to do so by the misconduct of the juror himself. He referred to Dilworth's Case, 12 Gratt. 689; Cain v. Cain, 1 B. Monr. R. 213; Williams v. The State of Georgia, 3 Georgia R. 453; McKinley v. Smith, Hardin's R. 167; Herndon v. Bradshaw, 4 Bibb's R. 45; Sellers v. The People of Illinois, 3 Scam. R. 412; Booly v. The State, 4 Yerg. R. 111; Monroe v. State of Georgia, 5 Georgia R. 85, 140; and the cases cited in 9 Bac. Abr. 597, title Trial, 3 L; Wharton Cr. Law 850, 923.

2d. That the jury were not chosen in the mode prescribed by the statute. If the twelve who were to constitute the jury had been drawn, the four who were rejected would have been upon it, and four of those upon it would have been rejected.

3d. That the evidence did not make out a higher grade of offence than manslaughter. That the prisoner was justified in going to the assistance of his father, who had been insulted and was then beaten by the deceased; and if in the heat of blood he killed the deceased, it was not murder, unless there was previous malice which prompted the killing. And he insisted 645 *earnestly that the idle talk or even threats of a mere boy, as was the prisoner, was not to be regarded as evidence of previous malice, especially when the circumstances and excitement of the moment were sufficient to account for his conduct. Certainly it was for the commonwealth to satisfy the court that the prisoner was prompted by the previous grudge. He referred to Foster's Cr. Law 290, Mason's Case; Davis' Crim. Law 83. 1 Russ. Crimes 513, 588, 589; Copeland v. The State, 7 Humph. R. 479; The State v. Ford, 1 Spears' R. 150, 154.

The Attorney General, for the commonwealth, insisted:

1st. That the objection to the juror not having been taken until after the trial, the objection came too late. That the act is broad enough in its terms to exclude all objections to a juror after he is sworn. Code, ch. 162, § 4, p. 628. And this seems to have been the construction of the act in Jones' Case, 1 Leigh 598; though Judge Daniel supposes that it does not refer to common law objections. Dilworth's Case, 12 Gratt. 689. He referred also to Tooel's Case, 11 Leigh 714; Heath's Case, 1 Rob. R. 735. And he insisted, that after verdict the only question is, whether the verdict is a just and proper one?

2d. That the evidence made out a case of murder. That without looking to the evidence of previous malice, the circumstances attending the killing, and the manner in which it was done, made out a case of murder. But that the evidence of previous malice and threats was abundant, and his conduct showed he was acting on that previous malice. He referred to Wharton's Cr. Law 368; Davis' Cr. Law 86; Johnston's Case, 5 Gratt. 660; Davis' Cr. Law 85, 98, 99; Whart. Cr. Law 373, 374.

ROBERTSON, J. If the juror
646 Wayne had been challenged *before he was sworn, because of his having been a member of the grand jury that found the indictment, there can be no doubt that the court would have been bound to exclude him from the jury for the trial of the prisoner. But not having been so challenged, his serving upon it was not of itself sufficient ground upon which to set aside the verdict. A party is not entitled to a new trial, as a matter of right, because he is able after verdict to show such cause of challenge against a juror as would have been allowed if made before he was sworn.

Digitized by Google

"When the prisoner excepts to a juror for cause, before he is sworn, it is matter of right, to be adjudged by the court; when he excepts after trial, for cause existing before the juror was elected and sworn, it is matter addressed to the discretion of the court: in the exercise of this discretion the court ought to consider the whole case, and be satisfied that justice has been done."

This is the rule as laid down in Jones' Case, 1 Leigh 598; and it has been uniformly adhered to in this state. In applying it, the court regards with extreme jealousy all attempts to set aside verdicts on the ground of objections to jurors existing before they were sworn. A verdict will not be disturbed for any such cause, unless it appears to have operated so as to inflict injustice upon the prisoner. Heath v. The Commonwealth, 1 Rob. R. 735; Curran's Case, 7 Gratt. 619.

In the case of Dilworth v. The Commonwealth, 12 Gratt. 689, the objection that one of the jurors had been a member of the grand jury that found the indictment, was made after the jury were sworn, but before any of the evidence was heard. The prisoner's affidavit that he did not know of the objection until after the juror had been sworn, was sustained by the affidavit of the jailor who gave him the information. The prisoner brought the matter to the notice of the court as soon as possible, and there was no reason to 647 *suspect that, in making the objection, he had any other object in view than to secure an impartial jury for his trial.

Under these circumstances, this court held that the court below exercised its discretion erroneously, in refusing to set aside the juror and substitute another in his place. But the case was carefully distinguished from that of an attempt on the part of a prisoner to avoid the effect of an adverse verdict, "on the score of objections to his triers, existing before they were chosen and sworn;" and the decision was rested on the ground that "the principles to be deduced from the modern decisions justify an indulgence to motions to set aside jurors after they have been sworn and before they have rendered a verdict, which would not be allowed to applications for new trials founded on exceptions to jurors taken after verdict."

In England, after a juror has been sworn, he cannot, except by consent, be challenged for any pre-existing cause. Hawkins' Pleas of the Crown, book II, ch. 43; Bacon's Abr. tit. Juries E. 11; 1 Chitty's Crim. Law 545. But (as was suggested in Dilworth's Case) it is probable "that English judges would not now deny their power to set aside a juror, at the instance of a prisoner, at any time before the examination of the witnesses had commenced."

In the United States, the decisions on this subject are conflicting, the English rule being adhered to in some of the states, while in others it appears to be held that where the objection to the juror would be good cause of challenge for favor, if discovered in time, it will be ground for a new trial, as a matter of right, if not found out until after verdict.

Even if we were not bound by our own decisions, we would not hesitate to prefer the rule which has been established here, as being the one most consonant with justice and public policy.

648 *It is a principal cause of challenge to a juror, that he was one of the grand jury which found the indictment. But unless he is challenged before he is sworn, the objection will be considered as waived, and his being on the jury will not vitiate the verdict. The only case in which the failure to make the challenge cannot properly be regarded as a waiver, is where the objection was not known, and could not, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, be known to the prisoner until after the juror was sworn. But while in such case the prisoner ought not, on the one hand, to be treated as if he had waived the objection, he should not, on the other, be allowed the same benefit of it after verdict, as if it had been made before the jury were sworn. The juror is excluded if objected to before he is sworn, because of his presumed bias. It is probable, from his position, that he will not be able to act impartially; and because of this probability, the prisoner has the right to exclude him. But it is a different matter after verdict. The fairness of the juror has then been tested by experiment. The court can, upon a review of the whole case, and of every thing relating to the conduct of the juror in reference to it, determine, with a reasonable degree of certainty, whether the apprehended bias did really exist. If it appears that it did exist, the prisoner is entitled to have the verdict set aside, because his trial has not been fair and impartial; but if it is obvious that the juror was not influenced by any bias against the prisoner, and that justice has been done, surely the circumstance that it was at one time probable that he would be so influenced, can afford no reason for disturbing the verdict.

To permit prisoners to avail themselves, after verdict, of pre-existing objections to the competency of jurors, as a matter of right, would not only be unreasonable, but most mischievous in its consequences.

649 *The delays in the administration of criminal justice, and the chances for the escape of the guilty, would be greatly increased. Proper verdicts, especially in trials for grave offences, would be continually set aside. A prisoner knowing, or willfully remaining ignorant of the incompetency of a juror, would take the chances of a favorable verdict, with him upon the jury; and if the verdict should be adverse, would readily enough make the affidavit necessary to avoid its effect.

I think, therefore, if it be conceded that the prisoner in this case was ignorant until after the verdict that Wayne was a member of the grand jury, and that he could not, by an exercise of proper diligence, have sooner ascertained the fact, that the court was not bound to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial because Wayne was also upon the petit jury, unless it appeared that his serving on it caused injustice to be done to the prisoner.

Digitized by Google

But there is no sufficient evidence that it could not, by the exercise of due diligence, have been ascertained before the verdict was rendered, that Wayne was a member of the grand jury. It is true, the affidavit of the prisoner states that he had no means of knowing it before or during the trial, by the exercise of ordinary diligence on his part. But what is "ordinary diligence," is a matter for the court, and not for the prisoner to determine. The affidavit should have stated the circumstances under which, and the person from whom the information was obtained, so as to enable the court to judge for itself whether due diligence was used; and for the further purpose of affording the means of testing the truth of the allegation of want of knowledge.

The prisoner was entitled to a list of the jury summoned for his trial; and it was his duty to inform himself, before they were sworn, whether objections 650 *existed to any of them. If there was as much anxiety before as after the verdict, to discover objections to the competency of jurors, it is difficult, in the absence of any statement of the circumstances under which the discovery was made, to understand how it happened that a fact apparent on the record of his own case, should have remained unknown to the prisoner until the termination of a trial which lasted five days, and should then have been ascertained just in time to be used on a motion for a new trial.

But waiving all objections to the sufficiency of the affidavits, and regarding the prisoner as having brought himself within the rule applicable to those who, having exercised a reasonable degree of diligence, are ignorant until after verdict of a pre-existing objection to a juror, it does not appear that the court, in the exercise of its discretion, ought to have granted a new trial because of the objection to Wayne as a juror.

There is nothing to warrant the conclusion by this court that Wayne was guilty of perjury or corruption. His explanation of his position seems to have been credited by the judge of the Circuit court, and the prisoner did not attempt to impeach its truth.

In determining whether such injustice was done the prisoner as to make it proper to set the verdict aside, the third ground of error assigned in the petition, namely, that "the facts certified do not warrant a conviction for murder," must necessarily be disposed of.

The court committed no error in substituting for the instructions asked for by the prisoner, those which were given in their stead, or in giving those asked for by the commonwealth's attorney. The law applicable to the case, in any aspect in which it might be viewed by the jury, and especially in reference to the questions of provocation and malice, was stated in a full and perspicuous manner; and there is nothing in any of the instructions of which 651 the prisoner has a right to *complain.

The question then for consideration is, did the facts proved justify the conclusion that the killing was malicious? It seems to me, after making all possible allowances for the youth and indiscretion of the prisoner, that the finding was proper.

It is true, there was provocation at the time, which, in the absence of proof of express malice, might have been sufficient to reduce the killing to manslaughter. But the proof that malicious and revengeful feelings existed, and that the prisoner acted under their influence, is abundant. He had for a week previously manifested strong animosity against the deceased, and had repeatedly stated that, on receiving any provocation from him, he would kill him. The first thing that he did, on taking part in the contest between his father and the deceased, was to use a deadly weapon, without warning and from behind, when there was no necessity, real or apparent, for the use of such weapon. His declarations, after the fight and before he knew the serious character of the wound he had inflicted, showed that he had been prompted by the desire and intent to kill, and referred that desire and intent not to the immediate provocation, but to the previous act of the deceased in whipping his brother Julian.

If all this does not show express malice, it is difficult to say what would be sufficient proof for the purpose.

The prisoner, then, was guilty of murder, and as the verdict ascertained the minimum punishment prescribed by law for that offence, it cannot possibly be regarded as harsh or unjust. It may be further observed, that no effort was made by the prisoner to show that the verdict was more severe than it probably would have been if Wayne had not been a member of the jury.

The only remaining assignment of error relates to the mode of selecting the 652 jury. If the objection were *valid, the prisoner, having failed to make it at the time the jury were chosen, could not avail himself of it after verdict. But there would have been nothing in the objection if made at the proper time. The mode adopted was as full a compliance with the law requiring the jury to be selected by lot, as is the more usual one of drawing out the names of the twelve who are to serve.

I am of opinion to affirm the judgment.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Robertson, J.

Judgment affirmed.

Digitized by Google

653 *Shumate v. The Commonwealth.

January Term, 1860, Richmond.

1. Statute*—Betting on Elections—Remedial.†—The 10th section of chapter 198 of the Code, in relation to betting on elections, is to be construed as a remedial statute.

2. Statute—Ch. 198, § 20—To What it Applies.†—The 20th section of chapter 198 of the Code applies to all the preceding sections of that chapter.‡

3. Elections—Wager on—Case at Bar.†—A short time before the election of county officers for A to be made in May 1858, M sold to S a wagon at the price of one hundred and fifty dollars, and worth that sum, to be paid by S when K, one of the candidates for the office of county court clerk at said election, should be elected to that office, and not at all, if he was not elected; and S at the time of said sale put up his check agreeably to that understanding; and upon these terms took possession of the wagon. HELD:

1. Same—Same—Same.†—This is a wager on the part of both M and S, within the meaning of the Code, ch. 198, § 10, p. 744.§

2. Same—Same—Limits of Fine.†—Both M and S are liable to a fine not exceeding the amount that either might lose.§

This was an indictment for betting on an election, in the Circuit court of Augusta county. The facts are fully stated in the opinion of Judge Robertson.

Imboden, for the appellant.

The Attorney General, for the commonwealth.

ROBERTSON, J. Joseph T. Mitchell and William J. Shumate were jointly indicted, at June term 1858, in the Circuit court of Augusta, for a violation of the law prohibiting betting on elections.

654 *The defendants having elected to be tried separately, an issue was made up as to the defendant Shumate, upon the plea of "not guilty," and a jury sworn. Upon the trial it was proved that a short time before the election of county officers for Augusta, to be made in May 1858, Joseph T. Mitchell sold to the defendant Shumate a wagon, at the price of one hundred and fifty dollars, to be paid by the defendant when Jefferson Kinney, one of the candidates for the office of County court clerk, at said election, should be elected to that office, and not at all, if he was not elected: and that the defendant at the time of said sale put up his check agreeably to that understanding, and upon those terms took possession of the wagon. The witness who proved these facts further stated that he was under the impression that at the time of the sale, Mitchell remarked that the wagon had cost him one hundred and thirty dollars. The witness himself was of the opinion that it was fully worth that sum, and perhaps as much as one hundred and fifty dollars, to any one who needed such a wagon.

The defendant then introduced a witness, who proved that he was a master mechanic and contractor, and thought he was well acquainted with the value of such a wagon as that which the defendant had purchased from Mitchell; that he had seen and examined the identical wagon in question, and regarded it, at the time the defendant got it from Mitchell, as fairly worth one hundred and fifty dollars in money.

This being all the evidence, the case was argued before the jury; and then the defendant, by his counsel, moved the court to give the jury the following instructions, to wit:

"1st. A bet implies risk in both parties; and where one person sells another property at a fair valuation, to be paid for when a particular candidate shall be elected, it is not a wager, within the mean-

655 ing of the *act of assembly under which this prosecution is had; therefore, if the jury believe from the evidence in this case, that the wagon sold by Joseph T. Mitchell to the defendant, was worth one hundred and fifty dollars, they must find the defendant not guilty.

2d. Under section 10 of chapter 198 of the Code, the limit of the fine to which a party can be subjected for a violation of said section, is the amount or value of such money or other thing bet or wagered by him; and therefore, if the jury believe that the defendant purchased property at more than its fair valuation, to be paid for when a particular candidate was elected, then the amount so bet or wagered by him was the difference between a fair valuation of the property so purchased and the price at which it was sold, and the jury cannot impose a fine of greater amount than such difference in value and price.

3d. The act under which this prosecution is had, must be construed as a penal and not a remedial statute."

But the court refused to give said instructions. To which opinion of the court the defendant excepted: and the jury having found him guilty, and assessed his amercement at one hundred and thirty dollars, he moved the court to set aside the verdict and grant him a new trial, on the ground that said verdict was contrary to the law and the evidence of the case; but the court overruled the said motion: to which ruling of the court he again excepted. And judgment having been entered in conformity with said verdict, a writ of supersedeas has been awarded from this court, on the petition of said Shumate, who assigns as matters of error, the refusal of the court to

*See principal case cited in State v. Griggs, 34 W. Va. 81, 11 S. E. Rep. 741.

†See monographic note on "Elections" appended to West v. Ferguson, 16 Gratt. 270; monographic note on "Gaming" appended to Neal v. Com., 22 Gratt. 917.

‡See JUDGE ROBERTSON'S opinion for the act.

§Code, ch. 198, § 10, p. 744. "If a free person bet or wager money or other thing, over the value of five dollars, on any election, or appointment to any office or place, to be made under the authority of the constitution and laws of this state, or of the United States, he shall be fined not exceeding the value of money or other thing."

Digitized by Google

give the three several instructions prayed for as above stated.

The question which it will be most convenient to consider first, is, whether the act, under which the prosecution was had, is to be construed as a penal 656 or *as a remedial statute. The 20th section of chapter 198 of the Code provides, that "All laws for suppressing gaming, lotteries, unchartered banks, and the circulation of bank notes for less than five dollars, shall be construed as remedial."

The question under consideration is, therefore, narrowed to the enquiry, whether the act prohibiting betting on elections is a law "for suppressing gaming," within the meaning of the 20th section; which, as it changes the rule of interpretation prescribed by the common law in reference to penal statutes, must itself be construed strictly.

Under a strict construction of this section, and on the authority of Chubb's Case, 5 Rand. 715, it might well be doubted whether we would be justified in coming to the conclusion that the law against betting on elections is embraced by the general words "all laws for suppressing gaming," were it not for the light which is thrown on the subject by the history of the legislation respecting it, and by the table of contents prefixed to chapter 198 of the Code, and the captions to the sections of that chapter.

Our first statute against betting on elections was passed in the year 1840. Acts 1839-40, ch. 21, p. 30. It declared that any person violating it should "be guilty of unlawful gaming." The offence was of course thus brought within the operation of the act providing that all laws against gaming should be construed remedially.

In the revisal of the criminal code, made in 1848, the provision against betting on elections is to be found in the chapter relating to offences against public policy, and is in the following words:

"Any free person who shall bet or wager any money or other thing over the value of five dollars upon any election or appointment to any office or place, to be made under authority of the constitution 657 and laws of *this state, or of the United States, shall be deemed guilty of unlawful gaming, and be punished by fine not exceeding the value of the money or thing so bet or wagered." Acts 1847-8, ch. 10, § 11, p. 115.

The revisors, in their report, follow the whole of this chapter very closely, adopting not only, for the most part, its provisions, but adhering to the same arrangement of the subjects. Wherever any substantial alteration is proposed, attention is generally called to it by means of a note; but the phraseology of most of the sections is changed by them for the sake, it would seem, of brevity and supposed clearness.

The 11th section above quoted is, in the report, made the 10th section of the chapter, and is to be found there in the following words:

"If a free person bet or wager money or other thing over the value of five dollars, on any election or appointment to any office or place, to be made under the law, he shall be fined not exceeding the value of such money or other thing."

No note, indicating that any change in the law was designed, is appended.

The committee of revision proposed to amend the section, by striking out the words "the law," and inserting, in their place, the words "authority of the constitution and laws of this state or of the United States." This amendment was adopted by the legislature, so that the section as now to be found in the Code, is in the following words:

"If a free person bet or wager money or other thing over the value of five dollars, on any election or appointment to any office or place to be made under authority of the constitution and laws of this state or of the United States, he shall be fined not exceeding the value of such money or other thing."

The fair presumption is, that the 658 words "shall be *deemed guilty of unlawful gaming," were omitted simply because they were regarded as superfluous and unnecessary. If there could be any doubt about it, it would be removed by reference to the table of contents prefixed to the chapter, and the captions to the sections. These may be looked to as showing the contemporaneous construction of the Code by the revisors when engaged, under the authority of the legislature, in preparing it for publication.

The first general head is "Gaming, lotteries and lottery tickets." Under it are included the first fifteen sections—the tenth occupying the same relative position that the eleventh did in the act of 1848—following immediately after the sections relating to "gaming," and preceding those relating to "lotteries and lottery tickets."

The next general head is "Unchartered banks and illegal circulation," the sections under it extending from 16 to 19, inclusive. Then we find, as a caption to sections 20 and 21, the words, "Previous sections remedial; attorney's fee under them."

The 20th section has been already quoted. It refers to the subjects treated of in the sections preceding it, instead of the sections themselves, but does not mention eo nomine the law against betting on elections, although it is contained in one of the preceding sections of the chapter.

The 21st section, however, refers to the preceding sections themselves, and shows that all of them are embraced under it. It is in these words:

"In every case of conviction for an offence under any preceding section of this chapter, an attorney's fee of ten dollars shall be taxed in the costs."

The caption to the two sections shows that the provision for the attorney's fee applies to the same sections which it is declared shall be construed as remedial, *thus making it apparent that the words "previous sections" were intended to mean all previous sections. This is rendered still more certain by reference to the table of contents prefixed to the chapter. We find there, opposite to section 20, the words, "All previous sections remedial."
659

Digitized by Google

But it may be asked, why it is, if precisely the same previous sections are referred to in the 20th and 21st sections, that the same language was not used in each. The answer is, that it was designed by the 20th section to fix a general rule of construction, which should embrace not only the laws then enacted, but all such as might thereafter be passed upon the subjects referred to.

It is manifest that no change was intended to be made in the law prohibiting betting on elections, or in the rule of construction applicable to it; and that the act under which this prosecution was had, should, like the previous laws on the same subject, be construed as remedial.

We come next to the consideration of the propriety of the refusal to give the other instructions asked for.

The fine being limited to an amount not exceeding the value of the money or other thing bet or wagered by the party prosecuted, it is insisted, that "if A bets ten dollars against one thousand dollars, with B, that a particular candidate will be elected, the value of the money bet by A is only ten dollars, and if prosecuted, he could only be fined ten dollars, whilst B might be fined one thousand dollars. The risk, therefore, must fix the amount of the fine. Hence, if a man buys property at a fair valuation, payble when a particular candidate is elected, he risks nothing; and it is not a bet or wager, within the meaning of the statute."

Such cannot have been the intention of the legislature. It could never have 660 been designed that where *parties are equally guilty, the punishment should be so unequal that, in the case supposed, the loser of one thousand dollars should be liable to a fine one hundred times greater than that which could possibly be imposed on the winner of the same amount. Yet this conclusion seems logically to follow from the premise that the amount bet by a party is the amount risked by him.

The reasoning which leads to such results must be fallacious. The fallacy consists in the assumption that the amount bet by a party must always and of necessity be the amount risked by him, and that one cannot be without incurring some risk of loss.

It is true, that a bet does imply risk, but it does not necessarily imply risk in both parties. There must be between them a chance of gain and a chance of loss; but it does not follow that each of the parties to the bet must have both these chances. If, from the terms of the engagement, one of the parties may gain but cannot lose, and the other may lose but cannot gain, and there must be either a gain by the one or a loss by the other, according to the happening of the contingency, it is as much a bet or wager as if the parties had shared equally the chances of gain and of loss. The amount bet by them is the amount which the one may win, and the other may lose; and each of them may, under the statute, be fined "not exceeding" that amount, the fine, within that limit, being in the discretion of the jury, who may, if they choose, discriminate between the winner and the loser: a discrimination which may often with great propriety be made in favor of the loser, and against the winner.

One person alone cannot be guilty of the offence of betting. There must be always at least two parties engaged in it. It is a joint act: and when the chance of gain and the chance of loss are created, it matters 661 *not how those chances are distributed between the parties there exists all that is necessary to constitute a bet. The parties are jointly and equally guilty, and each of them is liable to the same penalty, unless the jury think proper to discriminate —it being in their power to fine each the full amount risked, or which may be won by either; or by anyone of them when more than two are engaged in the bet.

It might therefore well be insisted, that even upon a strict construction of the statute, the court was right in refusing both the first and second instructions asked for. But, as has been shown, the act is a remedial one, and it is therefore to be construed liberally, so as to suppress the mischief and advance the remedy. So construing it, there cannot be the slightest doubt upon the subject. The object of the law is to preserve the purity of elections; which is always impaired whenever private and personal interests are brought to bear upon them, instead of those high considerations of public duty by which alone the voters ought to be influenced.

One of the worst forms in which private interest is made to operate on elections, is that of betting upon the result. It is not only calculated to prevent the parties to the bet from exercising the right of suffrage in a proper manner themselves, but it exposes their friends and all within their reach to improper influences and solicitations.

It cannot be pretended that a bet, under the form of a sale, by which one party sells for its precise value an article to be paid for only in the event of the election resulting in a particular way, is not as fully within the mischief intended to be remedied, as any bet whatever can be. The party selling is influenced by the fear of losing his property for nothing—the party purchasing, by the hope of getting it for nothing. Each has a pecuniary 662 *interest in the result, which must affect him in the same manner, although it may be not to the same degree, as if he had the chances of both gain and loss.

But a Tennessee case (Quarles v. The State, 5 Humph. R. 561) is relied on as an authority to show that in order to constitute a bet or wager, there must be a risk incurred by both parties; and it is directly in point for the purpose.

Digitized by Google

The same question, however, seems to have been decided differently elsewhere. In the case of Marean v. Longley, 21 Maine R. 26, it appeared that a horse, estimated to be worth one hundred dollars, was sold for that amount, to be paid when Mr. Van Buren should be elected president of the United States. The transaction was held to be a bet. And if the reporter's abstract of the case of Tramwell v. Gordon, 11 Alab. R. 656, is correct in the statement that the notes were given for the value of the land, that is a decision to the same effect. So that if this case were to be determined upon the authority of decisions in other states, the preponderance would seem to be in favor of the conclusion to which I have arrived. But such decisions have no binding force here, and are of authority only so far as they commend themselves to our approval, by the reasons on which they are founded. The Tennessee case simply announces the judgment of the court, without giving any reason or referring to any authority, while in the cases referred to from Maine and Alabama, this particular point does not seem to have been discussed either at the bar, or by the court, it appearing to be taken for granted that the circumstance that one of the parties incurred no risk, did not affect the question (which was controverted on other grounds) whether the transaction amounted to a bet or wager.

It was therefore proper to examine 663 the question irrespective *of authority; and having done so, I entertain no doubt that the Circuit court correctly refused to give the instructions asked for.

The court was right also in overruling the motion for a new trial, the verdict being in accordance both with the law and the evidence.

I am for affirming the judgment.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Robertson, J.

Judgment affirmed.

---

664 *Commonwealth v. Young.

January Term, 1860, Richmond.
(Absent ALLEN, P., and LEE, J.*)

1. Retailing Ardent Spirits†—Indictments.††—In an indictment under § 18, ch. 38 of the Code, p. 209, for retailing ardent spirits, the words "not to be drank where sold," not being in the statute, need not be in the indictment.‡
2. Same§—Same.††—In an indictment under § 18, ch. 38 of the Code, the words "without having a license therefor according to law," are not equivalent to the words "without paying such tax and obtaining such certificate as is prescribed by the 14th section," which are the words used in the statute; and the indictment is defective.‡
3. Indictments¶—Statutory Offence—Description of Offence.††—In an indictment for a statutory offence, it is generally proper and safest to describe the offence in the very terms used by the statute for the purpose. But it is sufficient to use in the indictment such terms of description, as that, if true, the accused must of necessity be guilty of the offence described in the statute.
4. Same—When Insufficient.††—If the indictment may be true, and still the accused may not be guilty of the offence described in the statute, the indictment is insufficient.

---

*They were sitting in the Special court of appeals.

†Retailing Ardent Spirits—Indictments.—See principal case cited in Arrington v. Com., 87 Va. 96, 12 S. E. Rep. 224; State v. Church, 4 W. Va. 748; State v. Cain, 8 W. Va. 738.

See Boyle's Case, 14 Gratt. 674; monographic note on "Intoxicating Liquors" appended to Thon v. Com., 31 Gratt. 887.

§Same—Same.—See monographic note on "Intoxicating Liquors" appended to Thon v. Com., 31 Gratt. 887.

‡See JUDGE MONCURE'S opinion for the statute.

¶Indictments—Statutory Offence—Description of the Offence.—"JUDGE MONCURE, in delivering the opinion of the court in Commonwealth v. Young, 15 Gratt. 666, said: 'In an indictment for a statutory offence, it is generally proper and safest to describe the offence in the very terms used by the statute for that purpose. But it is sufficient to use in the indictment such terms in the description, as that, if true, the accused must of necessity be guilty of the offence described in the statute; and especially so in a case failing, as this does, in that class, concerning which the law provides, that "no exception shall be allowed for any defect or want of form in the presentment, indictment or information, but the court shall give judgment thereon according to the very right of the case." Code, ch. 207, sec. 24, p. 772. * * *.' I adopt the language of the learned judge, because in my view, it not only clearly enunciates the true principle, but is exceedingly appropos in this case." MOORE, J., delivering the opinion of the court in State v. Riffe, 10 W. Va. 797.

The principal case was also cited and approved as to this proposition in Dull v. Com., 25 Gratt. 974; Morgenstern v. Com., 27 Gratt. 1020; Benton's Case, 91 Va. 793, 21 S. E. Rep. 495; State v. Charlton, 11 W. Va. 334; Cousins v. Com., 19 Gratt. 812, and foot-note; State v. Boggess, 36 W. Va. 719, 15 S. E. Rep. 425; foot-note to Burner v. Com., 18 Gratt. 778; foot-note to Taylor v. Com., 20 Gratt. 825; State v. Cain, 9 W. Va. 564.

Same—Inference.—See principal case cited in foot-note to Boyle's Case, 14 Gratt 674.

Same—When Insufficient.—In State v. Bruce, 26 W. Va. 157, it was said: "In Young's Case, 15 Gratt. 664-66, the court, after quoting the Virginia statute, says: 'If the indictment may be true, and still the accused may be not guilty of the offence, the indictment is insufficient, even though it fall within the class to which the provision aforesaid refers. This decision shows plainly that the statute does not cure the defect in the indictments now before us; for, as we have seen, every averment they contain may be true and still the accused may not be guilty of a subsisting, indictable offence." See also, the principal case cited and approved as to this proposition in Morgan v. Com., 26 Gratt. 993; State v. Riffe, 10 W. Va. 797; State v. Cain, 9 W. Va. 564. See, in accord, Glass v. Com., 33 Gratt. 832, and foot-note, where the principal case is cited.

††Concerning each of the propositions contained in the syllabus and foot-note to this case, see, further, monographic note on "Intoxicating Liquors" appended to Thon v. Com., 31 Gratt. 887; monographic note on "Indictments" appended to Boyle v. Com., 14 Gratt. 674.

Digitized by Google

At the October term 1858 of the Circuit court of Jackson county, the grand jury indicted Henry Young, for that he "unlawfully and without having a license therefor according to law, on the home farm of Charles Carney, in the said county of Jackson, and within the jurisdiction of the Circuit court for said county, did sell, by retail, wine, ardent spirits, and mixtures thereof, contrary to the form of the statute," &c.

At the May term of the court for 1859 the defendant appeared, and moved the court to quash the indictment; which motion the court sustained. And thereupon the commonwealth applied to this court for a writ of error; which was allowed.

665 *The Attorney General, for the commonwealth.

There was no counsel for the appellee.

MONCURE, J. This is a supersedeas obtained by the commonwealth to a judgment of the Circuit court of Jackson county quashing an indictment against Henry Young, for that he, "on the first day of October in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-eight, unlawfully, and without having a license therefor according to law, on the home farm of Charles Carney, in the said county of Jackson, and within the jurisdiction of the Circuit court for said county, did sell, by retail, wine, ardent spirits, and mixtures thereof, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace," &c.

The indictment was no doubt intended to be for the offence described in the first branch of § 18, ch. 38 of the Code, p. 209; which section is in these words: "If any person shall, without paying such tax and obtaining such certificate as is prescribed by the 14th section, sell, by retail, wine, ardent spirits, or a mixture thereof, he shall forfeit thirty dollars. And if any person sell, by retail, wine, ardent spirits, or a mixture thereof, to be drank in or at the store, or other place of sale, he shall, unless he be licensed to keep an ordinary at such store or place, forfeit thirty dollars."

No counsel appeared for the defendant in error in this court; and it does not appear what specific objections were made to the indictment in the court below, except from the petition for the supersedeas and the argument of the attorney general. From them it appears the objections were twofold: First, that the words "not to be drank where sold," are not in the indictment; and secondly, that the words "without having a license therefor according to 666 law," are used *in the indictment, instead of the words "without paying such tax and obtaining such certificate as is prescribed by the 14th section," contained in the statute.

To the first objection, it is a sufficient answer, that the words "not to be drank where sold," are not in the statute, and therefore need not be in the indictment.

The second objection is a more serious one. In an indictment for a statutory offence, it is generally proper and safest to describe the offence in the very terms used by the statute for that purpose. But it is sufficient to use in the indictment such terms of description, as that, if true, the accused must of necessity be guilty of the offence described in the statute; and especially so in a case, falling, as this does, in that class, concerning which the law provides, that "no exception shall be allowed for any defect or want of form in the presentment, indictment or information, but the court shall give judgment thereon according to the very right of the case." Code, ch. 207, § 24, p. 772. If the indictment may be true, and still the accused may not be guilty of that offence, the indictment is insufficient, even though it fall within the class to which the provision aforesaid refers. Let us apply this principle to the present case, and enquire, whether the words "without having a license therefor according to law" in the indictment, are a sufficient substitute for the words "without paying such tax and obtaining such certificate as is prescribed by the 14th section," which are material terms of description used in the statute? In other words, whether, if the indictment be true, the accused must of necessity be guilty of the offence described in the statute? May he not have retailed ardent spirits "without having a license therefor according to law," and still not "without having paid such tax and obtained 667 such certificate" *as aforesaid? To enable us to answer this question, it will be necessary to notice briefly the sections of chapter 38 of the Code which precede the 18th section (on which the indictment in this case is founded), and relate to the same subject.

The 10th section declares, that "no person shall, without obtaining a license as a merchant, sell at any store," &c., "any goods," &c., "except," &c. "Any person who shall violate this section, shall pay a fine of not less than twenty nor more than two hundred dollars."

The 11th, 12th and 13th sections relate to the tax to be paid for the license.

The 14th section, which is expressly referred to in the first branch of the 18th (on which the indictment in this case is founded), is in these words: "If the merchant shall desire his license to include permission to sell, by retail, wine, ardent spirits, or a mixture thereof, he shall pay the additional tax prescribed for this privilege, and obtain from the court of the county or corporation in which his store or place of sale is situated, a certificate that he is a person of good character, and that the court sees no objection to such permission being granted."

If this had been all, it might well have been contended, that upon the mere payment of the additional tax and obtaining the certificate mentioned in the 14th section, the merchant's license (in addition to its general effect under the 10th section), became, ipso facto, a license to retail ardent spirits; and therefore that the word "without having a license therefor according to law," in the indictment, were equivalent to the words "without paying such tax and obtaining such certificate" as aforesaid in the statute.

Digitized by Google

But the 15th section follows in these words: "Such certificate shall be pro-668 duced, with the receipt for the *tax, to the commissioner, who shall grant to the merchant such license as he may be entitled to. The license shall, in addition to what is prescribed by the second section, state the fact of such certificate, and the situation of the store or place of sale. If the person applying for such license asks that it shall be to him as a commission merchant, the commissioner shall so express on its face."

So that if a merchant desire his license to include permission to retail ardent spirits, he is not only required by the 14th section to pay the additional tax and obtain the certificate therein mentioned, but is directed by the 15th section to obtain a license which will include such permission on its face. If he comply with the requisition of the 14th section, he will be entitled as a matter of course to such a license, upon the mere production of such a certificate with the receipt for the tax to the commissioner, as directed by the 15th section. A penalty is imposed by the 18th section on a person who retails ardent spirits without having complied with the requisition of the 14th section; but not on a person who does so without having complied with the direction of the 15th section. The indictment in this case is for the latter act; that is, for retailing ardent spirits "without having a license therefor according to law." This plainly refers to the license mentioned in the 15th section, which includes on its face permission to retail ardent spirits; and not to the general merchants' license mentioned in the 10th section. The indictment may be true, and still the accused may not be guilty of the offence described in the statute, and therefore the motion to quash it was properly sustained.

The construction I have put upon the law in question, not only agrees with its literal meaning, but with the probable intention of the legislature. It would 669 *have been at least as easy to have said, "without license therefor," as to say, "without paying such tax and obtaining such certificate as is prescribed by the 14th section;" and the former would no doubt have been said, if it had been intended by the legislature. In every other instance, I believe, in which a license to do an act is required to be obtained, the law imposes a penalty on doing the act without license; not on doing it without paying the tax required to be paid. The difference of phraseology in this instance indicates a difference of intention; for which, indeed, there seems to be some reason. But whether there be or not, the literal import of the law is sufficiently plain; and, being a penal law, it must be construed strictly.

There are two decisions of the late General court, which would seem at first view to be in conflict with the conclusion to which I have come; but, upon examination, they will be found not to be so. I mean Peers' Case, 5 Gratt. 674, and Hatcher's Case, 6 Id. 667. In each of these cases the indictment was for retailing ardent spirits not to be drank where sold, without having obtained a license therefor; and yet was held to be sufficient. But they were founded on the act of March 7, 1834 (Sess. Acts, ch. 3, p. 7), or the act of March 3, 1840 (Sess. Acts, ch. 2, p. 5), which acts are almost identical; the 3d section of which subjects to the penalty therein mentioned, any person, &c., who shall, otherwise than as thereinafter expressly provided, retail ardent spirits, &c.; and the 5th section of which provides, that if any person, having obtained a merchant's license, &c., shall, in addition thereto, have obtained a certificate as therein mentioned, he shall, "by virtue of such certificate, but not otherwise, be authorized, during the time for which his merchant's license may have been granted," to retail ardent spirits, &c. In 670 an indictment on either of these acts, the *words "without having obtained a license therefor," were plainly equivalent to the words, "without having obtained a merchant's license and certificate, as required by the 5th section." The merchant's license and certificate together constituted a license to retail ardent spirits. After the certificate was obtained, nothing more was directed by these acts to be done. In this respect, they materially differ from the Code.

I think there is no error in the judgment, and am for affirming it.

DANIEL and ROBERTSON, Js., concurred in the opinion of Moncure, J.

Judgment affirmed.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

INDEX.

APPELLATE COURT.

1. A court having set aside an office judgment and the execution which had issued upon it, after the fifteenth day of the term, and permitted the defendant to plead, the plaintiff may have a supersedeas from this order; and though that part of the order setting aside the judgment is interlocutory, the appellate court will reverse the whole order.
Enders' ex'ors v. Burch, 64

2. On an exception to an opinion of the court overruling a motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, if the exception states neither the facts proved nor the evidence introduced on the trial, nor refers to another bill of exceptions in which all the facts or evidence given on the trial are shown to be stated, the appellate court cannot review the judgment of the court below.
Washington & New Orl. Tel. Co. v. Hobson & Son, 122

3. It must appear from the record that a point decided by the court has been saved before the jury retires; though the exception may be prepared and may be signed by the judge either during the trial or after it is ended during the same term. If this appears from the whole record it is sufficient, though it is not expressly stated in the bill of exceptions: but if it does not so appear from the record, the appellate court cannot review the judgment of the court below upon the point. Idem, 122

4. Secondary evidence having been admitted in the court below without objection, it cannot be objected to in the appellate court.
Shue v. Turk, sheriff, 256

5. The decree appealed from reciting that the suit had been revived in the name of the heirs of the plaintiff, and they being parties to the appeal as appellees, the appellant cannot object that the suit was not regularly revived in their names.
Mustard v. Wohlford's heirs, 329

6. A purchaser of land which had been sold by the vendor when an infant, having sued the first purchaser to recover the land, and the decree having directed the first purchaser to convey to the plaintiff, without providing for the payment of the purchase money due from the plaintiff, the appellate court will amend the decree and affirm it. Idem, 329

7. Though the service of an attachment upon garnishees and the return thereon may be irregular, yet if the garnishees appear to the action and defend it without objecting to their irregularity, they cannot afterwards make the objection in the appellate court.
Pulliam, &c., v. Aler, 54

8. In a bill to set aside a deed of trust for payment of debts as fraudulent per se, no account is prayed for, but there is a prayer for general relief. The court below having dismissed the bill generally, and it not appearing that the plaintiffs asked for an account or that the court considered the question, the appellate court will affirm the decree sustaining the deed, and reverse as to the account; but without costs.
Marks & als. v. Hill & als., 400

9. A plea of the act of limitations should state on what act the defendant relies. Though if it appears that the plaintiff could not probably be mistaken as to the act relied on, the appellate court will not reverse the judgment for the failure of the plea to specify the act.
Wortham & Co. v. Smith & Sampson, 487

10. If the evidence set forth in a demurrer to evidence shows that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, the refusal of the court to compel him to join in the demurrer is not ground for reversing the judgment.
Boyd's adm'r v. City Savings Bank, 501

11. When it appears to the Court of appeals that the order of the Circuit court was based upon the evidence of facts not found in the record, the court may reasonably and justly presume that the order is right; and that it is in accordance with and was justified by the facts.
Cooper v. Hepburn & als., 551

672 *ARDENT SPIRITS.

See Indictments, No. 1, 2, and Young's Case, 664

ASSIGNOR AND ASSIGNEE.

1. See Contracts, No. 1, and Iaege, &c., v. Bossieux, 83
2. See Liens, No. 2, 3, 4, and Idem, 83

ATTACHMENTS.

1. An attachment may be issued under the first section of the Code, ch. 151, p. 600, after the action has been commenced, if it be done before the abatement of the suit by the return of the officer.
Pulliam, &c., v. Aler, 54

2. An attachment is not defective because it does not designate any person in whose possession property or effects of the absent debtor may be found. Idem, 54

3. Though the service of an attachment upon garnishees and the return thereon may be irregular, yet if the garnishees appear to the action and defend it without objecting to the irregularity, they cannot afterwards make the objection in the appellate court. Idem, 54

4. Money is left with a person who is a member of a firm, on a special deposit, and in his absence it is entered on the books of the firm to the credit of the depositor, and paid out by the firm for their own uses, they paying the depositor's checks upon it, by checks in their name upon the bank, and then an attachment is served upon the firm as garnishees in a suit against the depositor; the summons being served on the other member of the firm. The attachment binds the money in the hands of the firm. Idem, 54

5. Justifiable probable cause for suing out an attachment against the effects of a debtor, is a belief by the attaching creditor in the existence of the facts essential to the prosecution of the attachment, founded upon such circumstances as supposing him to be a man of ordinary caution, prudence and judgment, were sufficient to produce such belief.
Spengler v. Davy, 381

ATTORNEYS AT LAW.

In a civil suit (whatever may be the law in a criminal case), after the judge presiding at the trial has given an instruction to the jury, the counsel should not be allowed to discuss before the jury the same matter which the court has already decided.
Delaplane v. Crenshaw & Fisher, 457
Same v. Haxall, Crenshaw & Co., 457

BASTARDS.

Upon a devise to a daughter for life, and at her death the property to be equally divided among her children; an illegitimate child of the daughter will take with her legitimate children.
Bennett & als. v. Toler & als., 588

BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

See Promissory Notes and Bills of Exchange.

BONDS.

1. See as to bonds of sheriffs and their sureties, Sheriffs, No. 3, 5, and
Commonwealth v. Drewry, 1
Monteith, sheriff, & als. v. The Commonwealth, 172

2. Statutory bonds taken by officers in the country, will be construed liberally.
Claytor v. Anthony, 518
Creasy v. Same, 518

BUILDING FUND COMPANIES.

When the lien of a building fund company for advances made to a member to enable him to build a house, will have priority over the lien of the mechanic who builds the house.
Iaege, &c.. v. Bossieux, 83

CARRIERS.

1. Rail road companies conveying passengers, combining in themselves the ownership as well of the road as of the cars and locomotives, they are bound to the most exact care and diligence not only in the management of the trains and cars, but also in the structure and care of the track, and in all the subsidiary arrangements necessary to the safety of the passengers.
Va. Central R. R. Co. v. Sanger, 230

2. The duty of a rail road company to employ the utmost care and diligence in guarding their road against obstructions on the track, is clearly embraced within its warranty to carry their passengers safely, so far as human foresight and care can go.
Idem, 230

3. If a rail road company, whilst using its track for the carriage of passengers,
673 *engages in a work to be done on its road and in the immediate proximity of its track, negligence in the performance of which would, in the opinion of cautious persons, involve the hazard of obstructions to the passage of its cars, and an accident to a passenger is caused by an obstruction arising from negligence in the performance of the work; it is no defence to show merely that they had placed the work in the hands of a contractor, and that the obstruction was caused by the carelessness of his employees. Idem, 230

4. In such case it is for the jury to enquire whether there was not danger in the work arising from the mode and manner in which it was done; whether the company did not know, or by the exercise of proper diligence might not have ascertained, the existence of such danger; and whether they have used due care and foresight in guarding against it: And if they have failed in this, the company is responsible to the passenger for the injury he has sustained.
Idem, 230

CAVEATS.

The entry and survey of both the caveator and caveatee, being upon land which had been previously granted by the commonwealth, and which had never been forfeited, the commonwealth having no interest in the land which could be vested in the caveator, he can have no right to it; and therefore cannot maintain a caveat; though the caveatee may have no better right.
Carter v. Ramey, 346

CHARITABLE TRUSTS.

1. The case of Gallego's ex'ors v. The Attorney General, 3 Leigh 450, recognized as law, except so far as it may have been modified by statute.
Seaburn's ex'or v. Seaburn & als., 423

2. The act, Code, ch. 77, § 8, p. 362, does not authorize a devise of land for the use of a religious congregation, but only a conveyance by deed. Idem, 423

3. A fortiori the act does not authorize a bequest of money to be expended in building a church at a specified place, or for the support of the pastor of such church.
Idem, 423

Digitized by Google

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF STATUTES.

1. The act of March 15, 1856, Sess. Acts 1855-56, ch. 8, § 2, p. 8, extending the term of the sheriff from July 1, 1856, to January 1857, is constitutional.
Commonwealth v. Drewry, 1

2. The act does not embrace two subjects in the sense of the constitution, article 4, § 16. Idem, 1

3. When sheriff will be held to hold over his office under article 6, § 23 of the constitution. See Sheriffs, No. 3, and
Idem, 1

CONSTITUTION OF VIRGINIA.

See Constitutionality of Statutes, and
Commonwealth v. Drewry, 1

CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES.

See Statutes—construction of.

CONTINUANCE OF A CAUSE.

A case in which the party asking for a continuance of a cause, having failed to inform his witness who was present, of the facts to which he was to be examined, so as to enable him to examine his books to ascertain the facts; and the witness therefore being unable to state them, a continuance was properly refused.
Spengler v. Davy, 381

CONTRACTS.

1. By the contract for building a house the builder is to furnish the materials and build the house in a workmanlike manner, and the price is to be fixed by referees chosen by the parties. Soon after the work is finished, it is valued and the price fixed; but afterwards defects become apparent by the shrinking of the timber, showing that the work was executed in a very defective and unworkmanlike manner. The valuation does not conclude the owner of the house; but he is entitled to compensation for the defects: And in a suit by the assignee of the builder to enforce the lien for the price of building the house, the owner will only be required to pay what the building was really worth.
Iaege, &c., v. Bossieux, 83

2. "The trustee of N & A will pay to B the sum of one thousand and eighty dollars, with interest from the 15th of March 1850, out of any moneys in his hands belonging to me, A," is not a bill of exchange, nor does it import a valuable consideration, or a promise by the drawer to the payee, to pay if the money is not paid by the drawee.
Averett's adm'r v. Booker, 163

674 *3. Contracts by infants for sale of their lands, the power and mode of avoiding the same, and its effects. See Infants, No. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and
Mustard v. Wohlford's heirs, 329

4. W sells her crop of wheat to H by sample, the wheat not then being cleaned from the chaff; and W is to deliver it to H at G depot of a rail road, to be carried by the rail road company to Richmond; W paying the freight to Richmond, and H to take it from the depot in Richmond at his own cost, to his mill, where it is to be weighed and tested by the sample, and when thus weighed and tested, the price to be paid. The wheat is delivered at the depot at G, and taken by the rail road company to their depot in Richmond, and all but four hundred and forty bushels is taken away by H. This four hundred and forty bushels is consumed by fire at the depot in Richmond before it can be removed. The title to the wheat was vested in H, and he is to bear the loss.
Haxall, Brothers & Co. v. Willis, 434

CONVERSION.

1. Real estate may in equity be converted out and out into personalty by the agreement of partners or the manner in which it is conveyed to them. So real estate bought with partnership effects for partnership purposes, though conveyed to the individual partners, is thereby converted into personalty, at least to the extent that may be necessary for the purpose of paying the debts of the partnership, and adjusting the accounts between the partners: Quære: if it is converted to any further extent, or out and out.
Davis v. Christian & als., 11

2. But every conversion of real estate into personalty, whether express or implied, complete or partial, is equitable only; and the property can only be conveyed as real estate, and by each partner, in order to pass the whole to the grantee.
Idem, 11

CONVEYANCES—Fraudulent.

1. A provision in a deed of trust to secure creditors, that the trustee may continue the business and replenish the stock, if intended merely as a means of realizing the trust fund, and with a view to winding up the business, is not fraudulent per se, so as to avoid the deed.
Marks & als. v. Hill & als., 400

2. In such a case a provision in the deed that one of the grantors shall attend to the business, but he being under the control of the trustee, who may at any time on his own motion, and shall at the request of creditors, sell the property at auction, is not fraudulent per se, so as to avoid the deed.
Idem, 400

COURTS.

A cause which has been pending in a County court for more than a year, is called for trial, and a motion by the defendant for a continuance is overruled; and he then moves the court to remove the cause to the Circuit court. The motion is properly overruled.
Spengler v. Davy, 381

CRIMINAL JURISDICTION AND PROCEEDINGS.

1. It is a principal cause of challenge to a juror, that he was one of the grand jury which found the indictment. But if the objection is not taken until after the verdict, that will not be set aside on this ground, unless it appears from the whole case that the juror was biased against the prisoner; who therefore has not had a fair and impartial trial.

Digitized by Google

Bristow's Case, 634

2. An objection to the mode of selecting the jury in a trial for murder, must be made at the time the jury are chosen; and prisoner cannot avail himself of it after verdict. Idem, 634

3. After the panel has been completed, and the prisoner has struck off eight, the jury may be selected from the remaining sixteen, either by drawing by lot four who shall be discharged, or the twelve who shall constitute the jury. Idem, 634

CUSTOMS.

1. If there could be in Virginia a legal, valid usage or custom, the effect of which is to operate per se as an exception to the general rules of the common law; a usage or custom for the inspector of flour, who by the statute is to receive a specified money compensation, to take to his own use the flour drawn from the barrel in the process of inspection, called the draft flour, as an additional compensation or perquisite, would be bad, as unreasonable, unjust, and contrary to law.

Delaplane v. Crenshaw & Fisher, 457
Same v. Haxall, Crenshaw & Co., 457

2. Although a custom when otherwise good, may override and displace the common law rule, yet a statute introducing a new principle, with a negative either ex-
675 press or necessarily implied, must be strictly pursued, and no custom can be set up against it. Idem, 457

3. A custom for the inspector of flour to take the draft flour, may have existed longer than the memory of any living man, yet as the statutes show the commencement of the inspection of flour in Virginia, and as this period is within the limitation prescribed for the commencement of a custom, the custom is bad. Idem, 457

4. The doctrine of presumption cannot be applied to this custom, because, 1st, the presumption is repelled by the evidence; and, 2d, because the doctrine of presumptions can only apply to things which lie in grant, and where there is a party by whom the grant could be made as well as one to receive it. Idem, 457

5. There is no customary law in Virginia which per se can vest a right in a party claiming under it. Idem, 457

6. If a custom has been recognized by a statute, either expressly or by necessary implication, it will thereby receive vitality, and the right claimed under it may be asserted as conferred by statute.

Idem, 457

7. The act, Code, ch. 88, p. 413, does not recognize either expressly or by implication, the right of the inspector to take the draft flour; or to use an auger or trier of more than half an inch in diameter.

Idem, 457

8. The act having directed, that an auger of not more than a half inch in diameter shall be used in inspecting flour, a custom to use a larger auger is bad, though the inspector says he cannot execute his duty satisfactorily with an auger of the size prescribed by the statute. Idem, 457

DAMAGES.

1. For measure of damages for mistake of a telegraph company in carrying a message, see Telegraph Companies, passim, and

Washington & New Orl. Tel. Co. v. Hobson & Son, 122

2. As to damages on dissolution of injunction to judgment, see Injunctions, No. 1, 2, 3, 4, and

Claytor v. Anthony, 518
Creasy v. Same, 518

DEEDS.

M gives to J a power of attorney to sell her lands in the county of R, with power to J to appoint other agents or attorneys. J executes a power to C to act in the name of J, and it is signed by J in his own name, without any reference to his principal. This power does not authorize C to convey the land by deed in the name of M.

Stinchcomb v. Marsh, 202

DELINQUENT AND FORFEITED LANDS.

1. A certificate purporting to be made by the auditor of the state, in pursuance of the act of March 15, 1838, Sess. Acts, p. 16, § 7, of land forfeited for non-payment of taxes, being in the usual form in which he certifies such papers from his office, is evidence of the execution of such certificate, and of the official character of such paper, and also of the facts therein contained.

Ushers' heirs v. Pride, 190

2. Though such certificate was made in 1844, yet it having been offered in evidence in 1856, it is prima facie evidence by the act, Code, ch. 176, § 4, p. 660, though said act was passed after the certificate was made. Idem, 190

3. Lands returned delinquent for non-payment of taxes between 1820 and 1831, were forfeited by the act of April 1, 1831, Sup. R. C. p. 345, § 2, if not redeemed before the 1st November 1833; and by subsequent acts the time was extended; but the forfeiture became complete on the 1st of October 1834; and was not released unless the owner redeemed the land in the mode provided by statute. Idem, 190

4. The heirs of a patentee of land forfeited for non-payment of taxes and not redeemed, cannot maintain ejectment for it against a party who has entered upon it peaceably, though the tenant has no title to the land.

Idem, 190

Digitized by Google

5. Purchasers under a decree are in possession; and the decree is reversed and a reconveyance directed. Pending the appeal the land is returned delinquent for non-payment of taxes, in the name of the original owner, and is sold and bought by the purchasers under the decree. Quære: If it was not their duty to pay the taxes, and if they can set up a title under that sale and purchase against the original owner.
Miller v. Williams & al., 213

6. J, a commissioner of forfeited and delinquent land, sells a tract of land and receives the purchase money. He is then removed, and B is appointed in his place. B has no authority to convey the land to the purchaser; and his conveyance does not pass the title. Idem, 213

676 *7. In such a case the court must make an order directing B to convey the land, before he can make a valid conveyance. Idem, 213

8. The report of J of the forfeited lands in the county being lost, and the report of the sale of the land not showing plainly the land sold or the interest which the person in whose name it was forfeited had therein, it was not competent for the commissioner to resort to evidence aliunde to ascertain these facts; and therefore his deed is invalid. Idem, 213

9. Where there are two commissioners of forfeited and delinquent lands in one county, they are not required to act jointly; but each may act separately, and his deed will convey title to land sold by him.
Idem, 213

DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE.

When the plaintiff is entitled to demur to the evidence.
Boyd's adm'r v. City Savings Bank, 501

DOWER.

How wife's contingent right of dower in the remainder of the proceeds of sale of land, after satisfying a prior lien in which she had joined, shall be provided for. See Practice in Chancery, No. 3, and Iaege, &c., v. Bossieux, 83

EASEMENTS.

A recovery of a judgment in ejectment is subject to an easement in the public to use the land as a street or highway; and the right of the public to the easement is not drawn in question or in any way affected by a controversy between the plaintiff and the city as to the ownership of the soil.
Warwick & Barksdale v. Mayo, mayor, 528

EJECTMENT.

1. The heirs of a patentee of land forfeited for non-payment of taxes, and not redeemed, cannot maintain ejectment for it against a party who has entered upon it peaceably, though the tenant has no title to the land.
Ushers' heirs v. Pride, 190

2. In an action of ejectment, the record of another action of ejectment between other parties, is not competent evidence upon a question of boundaries or the location of the land in controversy.
Stinchcomb v. Marsh, 202

3. When defendant in ejectment will not be held to be tenant of plaintiff so as to dispense with proof of title by plaintiff. See Landlord and Tenant, No. 1, and
Miller v. Williams & al., 213

4. A recovery of a judgment in ejectment is subject to any easement in the public to use the land as a street or highway; and the right of the public to the easement is not drawn in question, or in any way affected by a controversy between the plaintiff and the city as to the ownership of the soil.
Warwick & Barksdale v. Mayo, mayor, 528

ELECTION.

As to election by legatees. See Legacies and Legatees, No. 1, 2, 3, and Hill & wife v. Huston's ex'or & others, 350

ELECTIONS.

As to betting on elections. See Gaming, passim, and Shumate's Case, 653

EMANCIPATION.

A resident of Ohio being in the county of R, there acquires a slave and emancipates him. That was a sufficient residence in R to authorize the recording of the deed in the clerk's office of that county.
Shue v. Turk, sheriff, 256

EQUITABLE JURISDICTION AND RELIEF.

D sells a slave to H at half his value, with a condition that when H is reimbursed from the earnings of the slave, H shall emancipate him. When H is so reimbursed D may in equity enforce the condition against H.
Shue v. Turk, sheriff, 256

ESTOPPEL.

Sheriff's bond recites his election for two years from the 1st of January 1857, is acknowledged in open court and ordered to be recorded, and he is permitted to qualify and act as such. The sureties are estopped by the recitals thereof, from saying he was not sheriff, and the bond is binding upon them.
Monteith, sheriff, & als. v. The Commonwealth, 172

EVIDENCE.

1. A certificate purporting to be
677 made *by the auditor of the state, in pursuance of the act of March 15, 1838, Sess. Acts, p. 16, § 7, of land forfeited for non-payment of taxes, being in the usual form in which he certifies papers from his office, is evidence of the execution of such certificate, and of the official character of the paper, and also of the facts therein contained.

Digitized by Google

Ushers' heirs v. Pride, 190

2. Though such certificate was made in 1844, yet it having been offered in evidence in 1856, it is prima facie evidence by the act, Code, ch. 176, § 4, p. 660, though said act was passed after the certificate was made. Idem, 190

3. In an action of ejectment the record of another action of ejectment between other parties, is not competent evidence upon a question of boundaries or the location of the land in controversy.
Stinchcomb v. Marsh, 202

4. What evidence sufficient to prove the appointment of public officers. See Public Officers, No. 1, and
Callison v. Hedrick, 244

5. When the plat of the location of a turnpike road is evidence of the location, in action of trespass by the owner of the land against a contractor. See Turnpike Roads, No. 2, and
Idem, 244

6. In action by landlord against his tenant to recover possession, tenant may show he was in possession claiming title to the land and was induced by the fraud or mistake of the landlord to take a lease for it. And for this purpose may rely on a decree in favor of landlord against G for all of a large tract not conveyed by G before 1837, and on a deed from G to tenant before that date, tenant stating that he intends to show by proof that the lease was obtained from him by a party claiming under the decree, by fraud or mistake.
Alderson v. Miller, 279

7. If the court shall believe the decree and deed were offered without the purpose to introduce the other evidence, the court may require the party to reverse the order of his proofs. Idem, 279

8. In suits for freedom, what declarations of testator of defendants are evidence for plaintiffs. See Suits for Freedom, No. 1, 4, and
Fulton's ex'ors v. Gracey & als., 314

9. In suits for freedom, what the effect as evidence, of the registry of the ancestress of the plaintiffs. See Suits for Freedom, No. 2, 3, and Idem, 314

10. What evidence to repel the presumption of slavery from African descent. See Suits for Freedom, No. 5, and
Idem, 314

11. In suits for freedom entries of testator of defendants, are not evidence against the plaintiffs. Idem, 314

12. The evidence of a member of the legislature is inadmissible to prove the knowledge of the members as to the existence of the custom of the inspector to take the draft flour, when the statute was enacted, for the purpose of ascertaining the true meaning of the statute.
Delaplane v. Crenshaw & Fisher, 457
Same v. Haxall, Crenshaw & Co., 457

EXCEPTIONS—Bill of.

1. What bill of exceptions to the opinion of the court overruling a motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict is contrary to evidence, must show. See Appellate Court, No. 2, and
Washington & New Orl. Tel. Co. v. Hobson & Son, 122

2. When a point must be saved and how record must show it. See Appellate Court, No. 3, and Idem, 122

EXECUTIONS.

The trustee and beneficiaries in a deed to secure bona fide debts, without notice, are purchasers for valuable consideration, within the meaning of the exception in the statute, Code, ch. 188, § 3, p. 717; and will be preferred to an execution creditor of the grantor in the deed, as to a chose in action thereby conveyed.
Evans, trustee, v. Greenhow & als., 153

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

1. It seems that a power given to executors by name, if the will does not point to a joint exercise of it, may be executed by the survivor.
Davis v. Christian & als., 11

2. A power given to executors will survive, though a discretion is given to them in regard to the exercise of the power.
Idem, 11

3. Where a discretionary power to sell is given to executors, a purchaser from them, if he acted bona fide, will not be affected by the manner in which they exercised their discretion. And if the power is to sell for the payment of debts generally, the purchaser is not bound to see to the application of the purchase money.
Idem, 11

4. What notice will or will not be sufficient to affect a purchaser with notice of a fraud by the executor in making the sale. See Vendor and Purchaser, No. 2, 3, 4, and
Idem, 11

678 *5. A case in which an executrix holding and employing the estate of her testator in her own business, held not to be bound for profits, but only for a rent.
Hill & wife v. Huston's ex'or & others, 350

FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION.

1. The mere fact that an article sold proves to be worthless, will not entitle the purchaser to recover back the price paid.
Mason v. Chappell, 572

FRAUD.

1. To constitute fraud in a sale, it is not sufficient that there shall be false representations by the vendor; but he must know at the time he makes them, that they are false; or at least he must make them as statements of facts within his own knowledge, when he has no knowledge on the subject.
Mason v. Chappell, 572

Digitized by Google

2. What notice will or will not be sufficient to affect a purchaser with notice of a fraud, by an executor in making a sale of real estate. See Vendor and Purchaser, No. 2, 3, 4, and
Davis v. Christian & als., 11

GAMING.

1. The 10th section of chapter 198 of the Code, in relation to betting on elections, is to be construed as a remedial statute.
Shumate's Case, 653

2. The 20th section of chapter 198 of the Code, applies to all the preceding sections of that chapter. Idem, 653

3. A short time before the election of county officers for A, to be made in May 1858, M sold to S a wagon at the price of one hundred and fifty dollars, and worth that sum, to be paid by S when K, one of the candidates for the office of county court clerk at said election, should be elected to that office, and not at all, if he was not elected; and S at the time of said sale put up his check agreeably to that understanding; and upon these terms took possession of the wagon: held:

1st. This is a wager on the part of both M and S, within the meaning of the Code, ch. 198, § 10, p. 744. Idem, 653

2d. Both M and S are liable to a fine not exceeding the amount that either might lose. Idem, 653

GUARDIAN AND WARD.

A County court having regularly appointed a guardian for an infant under fourteen years of age, the infant after he attains that age has not the right, at his mere election, to have his guardian thus appointed displaced, and a new one of his own nomination substituted.
Ham v. Ham, 74

HABEAS CORPUS.

A slave having been emancipated and registered as a free man, an execution is levied upon him by the creditors of his former owner: if he is not liable to be taken under the execution he may obtain relief by habeas corpus.
Shue v. Turk, sheriff, 256

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

1. The principles applicable to a wife's right to a settlement out of her property, stated.
Poindexter & wife v. Jeffries & als., 363

2. It seems real, as well as personal, estate is subject to the wife's equity.
Idem, 363

3. The settlement should be reasonable and adequate; and may be of a part or of the whole of the property, according to the sound discretion of the court, upon all the circumstances of the case. Idem, 363

4. If the husband lives with and supports his wife, the settlement may be made to take effect when he ceases to do so, or at his death. But if he has deserted or ill-treated her, or is insolvent, or unable or fails to support her, it will be directed to commence immediately. Idem, 363

5. If property of the wife which a court of equity would direct to be settled upon her, is conveyed by the husband to a trustee for her benefit, the court will sustain the deed against creditors of the husband.
Idem, 363

6. The wife's portion as one of the distributees of her father, of his personal estate, though there are no debts or they are satisfied, and the administrator who is also a distributee, files a bill for the distribution of the estate, and commissioners are appointed to divide the property, who make the division before the wife petitions for a settlement, and although the division is afterwards confirmed, but subject to the future decision of the court upon her right, is not so vested in the husband as to 679 deprive her *of her right to a settlement out of her property.
Idem, 363

7. The wife's real estate descended to her from her father, though undivided, is immediately and before the actual entry upon possession of it by the husband, so vested in the husband to the extent of his life estate, as that the wife is not entitled to a settlement out of the life estate of the husband, though he is insolvent and doing nothing to support her; and though advancements had been made to the wife by her father in his lifetime, which renders it necessary to resort to a court of equity for a settlement of accounts and for partition.
Idem, 363

8. Where land sold, wife's contingent right of dower in the surplus to be provided for by the court.
Iaege & als. v. Bossieux, 83

INDICTMENTS.

1. In an indictment under § 18, ch. 38, of the Code, p. 209, for retailing ardent spirits, the words "not to be drank where sold," not being in the statute, need not be in the indictment.
Young's Case, 664

2. In an indictment under § 18, ch. 38, of the Code, the words "without having a license therefor according to law," are not equivalent to the words "without paying such tax and obtaining such certificate as is prescribed by the 14th section," which are the words used in the statute; and the indictment is defective. Idem, 664

3. In an indictment for a statutory offence, it is generally proper and safest to describe the offence in the very terms used by the statute for the purpose. But it is sufficient to use in the indictment such terms of description, as that, if true, the deceased must of necessity be guilty of the offence described in the statute.
Idem, 664

4. If the indictment may be true, and still the accused may not be guilty of the offence

Digitized by Google

described in the statute, the indictment is insufficient. Idem, 664

INFANTS.

1. An infant sells his tract of land, puts the purchaser in possession, and executes a bond in a penalty with condition to make the title. The contract is voidable, but not void.

Mustard v. Wohlford's heirs, 329

2. In such a case the infant on coming of age, sells the land to another person, and executes to him a bond in a penalty with condition to make the title. This is an avoiding of the first contract.

Idem, 329

3. In this state a party out of possession may sell and convey his interest in land; and therefore, though the first purchaser from the infant has been put in possession of the land, and has received a conveyance, the infant on coming of age, may convey, and his deed will avoid the first deed.

Idem, 329

4. The effect of the disaffirmance of the first contract of the infant, by his sale after coming of age, is to render the first contract void; to extinguish any interest, in law or equity, which the first purchaser may have acquired under it; and to entitle the vendor, or second purchaser in his name, to recover possession of the land at law; and hold it free from any equity of the first purchaser.

Idem, 329

5. If an infant after coming of age disaffirm a sale made by him whilst an infant, he becomes reinvested with the title to the property, and may demand and recover it not only from his vendee, but from any other person who may have it in possession, though he may be a purchaser from his vendee. Idem, 329

6. If an infant after coming of age avoids his contract for the sale of his property, and sues to recover it, the purchaser is entitled to recover the consideration received by the infant, or so much of it as may then remain in his hands in kind.

Idem, 329

7. But in a contract executory on his part, if he has during his infancy wasted, sold or otherwise ceased to possess the consideration, and has none of it in his hands in kind on his arrival at age, he is not liable therefor; and may recover the property sold by him without accounting for the consideration received. Idem, 329

8. The purchaser from the infant, with knowledge of the sale made by him of the land after he came of age, obtains from him a deed for it. He can derive no benefit from the deed; but holds the legal title acquired under it in trust for the second purchaser; and may be compelled by a court of equity to convey said title to such second purchaser; or if he dies, to his heirs.

Idem, 329

9. Though the second purchaser purchase with knowledge of the first purchase from the infant, he is not affected thereby; the same having been disaffirmed and avoided by the second sale. Idem, 329

680 *10. Any claim which the purchaser from the infant may have on account of payments made under his contract, or to obtain the deed, is a personal claim against his vendor, and cannot be enforced in a suit brought by the second purchaser to recover the land; he has no interest in or to the land or the purchase money due from the second purchaser. Idem, 329

11. A father has property of his infant children in his possession, and during his life does not apply to the court to have any of the profits of that property applied to their support, nor does he make any charge against them during his life. His estate will not be allowed any thing for their support without the clearest proof that justice requires it.

Evans v. Pearce & als., 513

12. In such a case the father will be treated as a guardian; and his accounts will be settled on the principle of guardians' accounts. Idem, 513

13. Where a contingent limitation over is defeated by the vesting of a previous contingent limitation, the remaindermen under the defeated limitation are not necessary parties to a suit by the guardian of the other remaindermen, for the sale of the real estate.

Cooper v. Hepburn & als., 551

14. M as guardian of his infant children files a bill for the sale of the real estate held by himself for life, and by his children in remainder; and it is sold accordingly. This is authorized by the statute.

Idem, 551

15. Though the bill does not formally aver that the suit is brought as guardian, yet it states the plaintiff is the guardian, and the whole frame of the bill is in pursuance of what is required to be set out in such case, and the infants are made defendants. The omission of this formal averment does not vitiate the proceedings.

Idem, 551

16. One of the infant defendants having been over fourteen years of age when the bill was filed, it was irregular not to require him to file an answer. But the sale having been decreed, and it having been made more than six months after the decree, and confirmed without objection, it is too late for the purchaser eighteen months afterwards, to object to the irregularity.

Idem, 551

17. The court, if it deemed it necessary for the protection of the purchaser, might have directed the infant to file an answer after the objection was made.

Idem, 551

18. Upon a bill for the sale of infant's real estate, the court decrees a sale, and directs the commissioner to sell at private sale; and he advertises for sealed proposals, which are to be opened on a certain day in the presence of the court. Proposals are put in, and the court accepts one of them,

Digitized by Google

and forthwith confirms the sale, and directs the party to execute it according to its terms. Such a purchaser stands upon the same footing as any other purchaser at a judicial sale; and is not entitled to any other or further relief. Idem, 551

INJUNCTIONS.

1. If a person, not a party to a judgment, enjoins it, and the injunction is dissolved, he is liable to pay the ten per cent. damages prescribed by the statute:
Claytor v. Anthony, 518
Creasy v. Same, 518

2. Though the condition of the injunction bond provides for the payment of such damages as may be awarded by the court, and the court simply dissolves the injunction and dismisses the bill; yet the order of dissolution necessarily imports that the damages are to be paid, unless they be expressly remitted by the terms of the order. Idem, 518

3. Where upon a bill of review an injunction is granted to a judgment which is afterwards dissolved, the damages are to be computed, not upon the amount of the judgment at the time it was first granted on the original bill, but on the amount of the judgment at the time it was granted on the bill of review. Idem, 518

4. If the judgment, principal, interest, costs and damages on the injunction, amount to more than the penalty of the injunction bond, yet the plaintiff in the judgment having sued out execution on the judgment and made the money, principal, interest and costs, may recover the damages by suit upon the bond. Idem, 518

INSPECTION OF FLOUR.

1. What custom in the inspection of flour is bad. See Customs, No. 1, 3, and
Delaplane v. Crenshaw & Fisher, 457
Same v. Haxall, Crenshaw & Co., 457

2. The act, Code, ch. 88. p. 413, does not recognize either expressly or by implication, the right of the inspector to take the draft flour; or to use an auger or trier more than half an inch in diameter. Idem, 457

681 *3. The act having directed, that an auger of not more than half an inch in diameter shall be used in inspecting flour, a custom to use a larger auger is bad, though the inspector says he cannot execute his duty satisfactorily with an auger of the size prescribed by the statute. Idem, 457

4. The inspector of flour is bound to inspect by boring through the head of the barrel, with an auger not exceeding a half inch in diameter. Idem, 457

5. An inspector of flour refusing to inspect flour by boring through the head of the barrel with a half inch auger, he will be compelled to do it, by mandamus from the court. Idem, 457

INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction which is susceptible of two constructions, one of which is erroneous, and which may therefore mislead the jury, should not be given.
Va. Central R. R. Co. v. Sanger, 230

JEOFAILS.

In an action for maliciously suing out an attachment against the effects of the plaintiff, the declaration alleges, that the attachment was sued out "wrongfully and without good cause," instead of "maliciously and without probable cause." Though this was irregular, it is cured by the verdict.
Spengler v. Davy, 381

JUDGMENTS.

1. If the term of a Circuit court lasts more than fifteen days, all office judgments in which no writ of enquiry is ordered become final judgments on the fifteenth day; and cannot be afterwards set aside by the court.
Enders' ex'ors v. Burch, 64

2. When a court authorizes executions to issue upon judgments recovered during the term, the judgments become final from the time when execution may issue, and cannot be afterwards set aside by the court. Idem, 64

JUDICIAL SALES.

1. A judicial sale of land is partly on a credit, and the purchaser pays the cash payment, and executes his bonds with security for the deferred payments; and the sale is confirmed by the court. When the bonds become due the purchaser fails to pay them. He may be proceeded against by a rule made upon him to show cause why the land shall not be sold for the payment of the purchase money; and upon that proceeding a decree may be made for a sale of the land.
Clarkson v. Read & als., 289

2. How purchaser at private sale under decree will be treated. See Infants, No. 18, and
Cooper v. Hepburn & als., 551

JURISDICTION.

1. In a proceeding before the mayor or other justice to impose a penalty upon the party for obstructing a street, if a claim to the freehold is set up in the defendant or in those for whom he acts, the mayor or justice has jurisdiction to try the fact whether the claim is bona fide made.
Warwick & Barksdale v. Mayo, mayor, 528

2. In such case if the claim is bona fide made, the jurisdiction of the mayor or justice is ousted; he cannot enquire into the validity of the claim; and he has no power in such case to proceed to a summary conviction. Idem, 528

3. This principle applies as well to the case where an incorporeal hereditament or real franchise is claimed or resisted, as to a controversy touching the freehold itself. Idem, 5[illegible]

Digitized by Google

JURORS.

It is a principal cause of challenge to a juror that he was one of the grand jury which found the indictment. But if the objection is not taken until after the verdict, it will not be set aside on this ground, unless it appears from the whole case, that the juror was biased against the prisoner, who therefore has not had a fair and impartial trial. Bristow's Case, 634

JURY.

1. An objection to the mode of selecting a jury in a trial for murder, must be made at the time the jury are chosen; and prisoner cannot avail himself of it, after verdict. Bristow's Case, 634

2. After the panel has been completed, and the prisoner has struck off eight, the jury may be selected from the remaining sixteen, either by drawing by lot four who shall be discharged, or the twelve who shall constitute the jury. Idem, 634

682 *JUSTICES.

As to jurisdiction of justices where title to land, or interest in land, is involved, see Jurisdiction, No. 1, 2, 3, and

Warwick & Barksdale v. Mayo, mayor, 528

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

1. Purchasers under a decree put a tenant in possession. The decree is afterwards reversed, and a reconveyance directed, which is done; and then tenant attorns to this party. The attornment was not illegal, and the party, getting possession through and from the tenant, is not the tenant of the purchasers so as to entitle them to recover in ejectment without showing title in themselves.

Miller v. Williams & al., 213

2. Though, as a general rule, a tenant is not allowed to question his landlord's title; yet if a person in possession of land claiming title to it, is by fraud or mistake induced to believe that another has a better right to it, and to take a lease from him; in an action by the landlord to recover possession, the tenant may set up such fraud or mistake, and show that he has a good title to the property.

Alderson v. Miller, 279

3. A is in possession of land under a deed from G, made in 1829, and there is a decree in 1855 in favor of S against G, for all of a large tract in the possession of G or not conveyed by him before 1837. M induces A to take a lease of his land from him, and at the end of the term sues A to recover possession, and relies alone on the lease. A offers in evidence a copy of the decree and his deed from G, and states that he proposes to follow it up with proof that the lease was obtained from him by a person claiming under the decree, by fraud or mistake. The evidence is admissible.

Idem, 279

LEGACIES AND LEGATEES.

1. A party accepting a legacy coupled with a condition, may bind himself to the performance of the condition, although the burden may exceed the benefit.

Hill & wife v. Huston's ex'or & others, 350

2. But to bind a person in such a case, it must appear that he elected to accept the legacy and perform the condition, with full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances necessary to enable him to make a judicious choice. To make an election conclusive, the party must be informed as to the relative values of the things he elects between.

Idem, 350

3. Where a party has made an election without sufficient information or under a mistake, he will be relieved against the consequences, upon the terms of restoring other persons whose rights may be affected by his acts, to the same situation as if those acts had not been performed.

Idem, 350

4. The bequest of testator's whole property to a legatee, in consideration of which she is to pay testator's debts, though accepted, does not bind the legatee to pay the debts beyond the value of the legacy.

Idem, 350

LIENS.

1. Under the statute, Code, ch. 119, § 2, p. 510, creating the mechanic's lien upon the building, the suit may be brought within six months from the time the building is finished, to enforce the lien as to the installments of the contract price due; and though some of them are not due and payable at the time the suit is commenced, the court may in its decree provide for them.

Iaege, &c., v. Bossieux, 83

2. The contract and lien under the statute may be assigned, and the assignee may enforce the lien in the same mode that the mechanic might do it. Idem, 83

3. When the lien of a building fund company, for advances made to a member to enable him to build a house, will have priority over the lien of the mechanic who builds the house. Idem, 83

4. In a controversy between a building fund company claiming a lien for advances made to a member to enable him to build a house, and the assignee of the mechanic's lien, before decreeing a sale of the house and lot, the court should determine the priority between them. And it is error merely to decree a sale and direct the proceeds to be brought into court.

Idem, 83

5. The trustee and beneficiaries in a deed to secure bona fide debts, without notice, are purchasers for valuable consideration, within the meaning of the exception in the statute, Code, ch. 188, § 3, p. 717; and will be preferred to an execution creditor of the grantor in the deed, as to a chose in action thereby conveyed.

Evans, trustee, v. Greenhow & als., 153

Digitized by Google

6. Vendor retaining title, his right to subject the property for the purchase 683 *money continues until it is actually paid.
Yancey v. Mauck & als., 300

LIMITATION OF ESTATE.

H devises real estate to M during his natural life, and to his children if he should have lawful issue; if not, then at his decease to H's grandchildren. At the death of H, M is not married, but he afterwards marries and has lawful children. Upon the birth of the first child of M the remainder vested in the child, subject to open and let in the after-born children as they severally came into being; and the remainder in favor of the grandchildren was defeated. The grandchildren were therefore not necessary parties to a suit by the guardian of M's children for the sale of the real estate.
Cooper v. Hepburn & als., 551

LIMITATIONS—Statute of.

1. The act, Code, ch. 149, § 5, p. 591, limiting actions on store accounts to two years, does not embrace wholesale dealings of importing and wholesale merchants, but applies exclusively to the store accounts of retail dealers with their customers.
Wortham & Co. v. Smith & Sampson, 487

2. There being no evidence before the jury to show whether the account filed was for dealings by wholesale or by retail, other than what appears from the face of the account, proved to be correct, if the items of the account indicate that the sales were by wholesale and not by retail, they should be so regarded. Idem, 487

3. A plea of the act of limitations should state on what act the defendant relies. Though if it appears that the plaintiff could not probably be mistaken as to the act relied on, the appellate court will not reverse the judgment for the failure of the plea to specify the act. Idem, 487

LIS PENDENS.

The doctrine of lis pendens only applies where there is a suit to affect the property purchased, and can have no effect upon it unless a decree may be made in the suit to affect it, nor until such decree is made.
Davis v. Christian & als., 11

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

1. The improper motive, or want of proper motive, inferrible from a wrongful act based upon no reasonable ground, constitutes of itself all the malice deemed essential in law to the maintenance of the action for malicious prosecution.
Spengler v. Davy, 381

2. In an action for maliciously suing out an attachment against the effects of the plaintiff, the declaration alleges, that the attachment was sued out "wrongfully and without good cause," instead of "maliciously and without probable cause." Though this was irregular, it was cured by the verdict. Idem, 381

3. What is justifiable, probable cause for suing out an attachment against the effects of a debtor. See Attachments, No. 4, and Idem, 381

MANDAMUS.

An inspector of flour refusing to inspect flour by boring through the head of the barrel with a half inch auger, he will be compelled to do it by mandamus from the court.
Delaplane v. Crenshaw & Fisher, 457
Same v. Haxall, Crenshaw & Co., 457

MURDER.

Deceased strikes the prisoner's father with his fist, and a fight ensues, when the prisoner, who sees it, comes up, and catches the deceased by the collar of his coat behind, and strikes the deceased from behind with a pocket knife, wounding him in the right side. The prisoner, who was about seventeen years old, had lately left the school of the deceased, and had used language on more than one occasion before the affray, and also used language after it, but before it was known deceased was dangerously wounded, which evinced hostility to him: held, the killing is murder.
Bristow's Case, 634

NOTICE.

1. On a motion against a sheriff and his sureties for his failure to pay the taxes due to the commonwealth, it is not necessary that the notice should state on what bond of the sheriff the motion will be made.
Monteith, sheriff, & als. v. The Commonwealth, 172

2. The notice to the sheriff and his sureties being of a motion for a balance of the land, property and free negro taxes of 1857, and the judgment being for a balance due upon these and also for the license tax; this is error. Idem, 172
684 *3. What sufficient notice of protest for non-payment of a negotiable note. where the endorser is dead and there is no representative of his estate at the time the note falls due. See Promissory Notes and Bills of Exchange, No. 4, and
Boyd's adm'r v. City Savings Bank, 501

OFFICE JUDGMENTS.

See Judgments.

PARENT AND CHILD.

1. A father has property of his infant children in his possession, and during his life does not apply to the court to have any of the profits of that property applied to their support, nor does he make any charge against them during his life. His estate will not be allowed any thing for their support without the clearest proof that justice requires it.
Evans v. Pearce & als., 513

2. In such a case the father will be treated

Digitized by Google

as a guardian; and his accounts will be settled on the principles applicable to guardians' accounts. Idem, 513

3. Upon a devise to a daughter for life, and at her death the property to be equally divided among her children: an illegitimate child of the daughter will take with her legitimate children.
Bennett & als. v. Toler & als., 588

PARTIES.

Who not necessary parties in bill for sale of infants' lands. See Limitations of Estates, No. 1, and
Cooper v. Hepburn & als., 551

PARTNERS.

1. Though as a general rule, a partnership, whether for a definite or indefinite period, is terminated by the death of one of the partners; yet it may be continued longer by express agreement between the partners, or under the provisions of the will of the deceased partner, with the consent of the surviving partner. But in the latter case, if the testator merely direct that the partnership be continued after his death, the responsibility of his estate will be limited to the funds already embarked in the trade: though he may make it cover his whole estate, if he chooses so to direct.
Davis v. Christian & als., 11

2. Testator directs his partnership with C to be continued if C will consent to it, and gives him full power over his interest in the partnership for carrying it on; and also authorizes his executors to sell all his estate to enable C to carry on the business to greater advantage, or to pay the debts which may be due and owing from the partnership at any time during its continuance. The effect of this provision is not to give the executors a mere discretion to sell the real estate or not, at their pleasure, during the continuance of the partnership, but to create a trust in favor of creditors of the partnership. Idem, 11

3. Real estate may, in equity, be converted out and out into personalty by the agreement of the partners, or the manner in which it is conveyed to them. So real estate bought with partnership effects for partnership purposes, though conveyed to the individual partners, is thereby converted into personalty, at least to the extent that may be necessary for the purpose of paying the debts of the partnership, and adjusting the accounts between the partners. Quære: If it is converted to any further extent, or out and out. Idem, 11

4. But every such conversion of real estate into personalty, whether express or implied, complete or partial, is equitable only; and the property can only be conveyed as real estate, and by each partner, in order to pass the whole to the grantee.
Idem, 11

5. Partnership effects may be applied, by the concurrence of the partners, to pay an individual debt of one of them, if the other receives a sufficient consideration therefor, though they may be unable to pay all their partnership debts.
Marks & als. v. Hill & als., 400

6. H and N form a partnership, each to put in twenty-five hundred dollars. N borrows the money on his own note with security. H is unable to borrow on his own credit; and with the consent of N gives the note of the firm for the amount. They fail, and agree that both notes shall be paid out of the partnership assets; and the assets are conveyed in trust to secure these debts as well as other partnership debts. The agreement is upon a sufficient consideration, and valid against partnership creditors not secured by the deed.
Idem, 400

PLEADING AT LAW.

In an action for maliciously suing out an attachment against the effects of the plaintiff, the declaration alleges, that the 685 *attachment was sued out "wrongfully and without good cause," instead of "maliciously and without probable cause." Though this was irregular, it was cured by the verdict.
Spengler v. Davy, 381

POWERS.

1. It seems that a power given to executors by name, if the will does not point to a joint exercise of it, may be executed by the survivor.
Davis v. Christian & als., 11

2. A power given to executors will survive, though a discretion is given to them in regard to the exercise of it.
Idem, 11

3. Where a discretionary power to sell is given to executors, a purchaser from them, if he acted bona fide, will not be affected by the manner in which they exercised their discretion. And if the power is for the payment of debts generally, the purchaser is not bound to see to the application of the purchase money. Idem, 11

4. What notice will or will not be sufficient to affect a purchaser with notice of a fraud by his vendor in making the sale under a power. See Vendor and Purchaser, No. 2, 3, 4, and Idem, 11

POWER OF ATTORNEY.

M gives J a power of attorney to sell her lands in the county of R, with power to J to appoint other agents or attorneys. J executes a power to C to sell the lands, but the power only authorizes C to act in the name of J, and it is signed by J in his own name, without any reference to his principal. This power does not authorize C to convey the land as attorney of M.
Stinchcomb v. Marsh, 202

PRACTICE AT COMMON LAW.

1. If the term of a Circuit court lasts more than fifteen days, all office judgments in which no writ of enquiry is ordered, become final judgments on the fifteenth day; and cannot be afterwards set aside by the court.

Digitized by Google

Enders' ex'ors v. Burch, 64

2. When a court authorizes executions to issue upon judgments recovered during the term, the judgments become final judgments from the time when execution may issue, and cannot be afterwards set aside by the court. Idem, 64

3. If the court sets aside such a judgment and quashes the execution which has issued thereon, and gives leave to defendant to plead, there may be a supersedeas from the order, and the whole will be reversed. Idem, 64

4. In an action against a telegraph company, the line of which extends through several states, though it appears that some of the defendants live out of the state, this is not cause for arresting the judgment against the company. If it is good ground for objection to the jurisdiction of the state court, it must be taken by plea in abatement before the defendants plead in bar. Code, ch. 171, § 19, p. 648.

Washington and New Orleans Telegraph Co. v. Hobson & Son, 122

5. What bill of exceptions to the opinion of the court overruling a motion for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict is contrary to evidence, must show. See Appellate Court, No. 2, and Idem, 122

6. When point must be saved, and how record must show it. See Appellate Court, No. 3, and Idem, 122

7. An instruction which is susceptible of two constructions, one of which is erroneous, and which may therefore mislead the jury, should not be given.

Va. Central R. R. Co. v. Sanger, 230

8. Where evidence is offered which is only admissible in connection with other evidence which the party states he intends to introduce, if the court has any reason to believe, that the evidence is offered merely to produce an improper impression on the jury, and with no intention to introduce the other evidence, the party may be required to reverse the order of his proofs: but this is a matter to be left in a great measure to the discretion of the court which tries the case.

Alderson v. Miller, 279

9. If in such case, the evidence offered is admitted, and the party fails to produce the other evidence, the court may instruct the jury to disregard that introduced. Idem, 279

10. A witness who is present being unable to state the facts to which he was called to testify, because the party had failed to inform him as to the object for which he was called, a continuance properly refused.

Spengler v. Davy, 3381

11. A cause which had been pending in a County court for more than a year, is called for trial, and a motion by the defendant for a continuance is overruled; and then he moves the court to remove the cause to the Circuit court. The motion is properly overruled. Idem, 81

12. In a civil suit (whatever may be the law in a criminal case), after the 686 judge *presiding at the trial has given an instruction to the jury, the counsel should not be allowed to discuss before the jury the same matter which the court has already decided.

Delaplane v. Crenshaw & Fisher, 457
Same v. Haxall, Crenshaw & Co., 457

13. If on the trial of a cause, the evidence is documentary, and presents a question of law which is not plainly against the defendant, he is entitled to demur to the evidence, and the court should compel the plaintiff to join in the demurrer.

Boyd's adm'r v. City Savings Bank, 501

PRACTICE IN CHANCERY.

1. A suit to enforce the mechanic's lien under the statute, Code, ch. 119, § 2, p. 510, may be brought before all the installments are due, and the court may in its decree provide for them.

Iaege, &c., v. Bossieux, 83

2. In a controversy between parties claiming under distinct liens, before decreeing a sale of the property, the court should determine the priorities as between them. And it is error merely to decree a sale and direct the proceeds to be brought into court. Idem, 83

3. The wife of the grantor having joined in the first lien, but not in the second, the property should be sold out and out, and applied to pay the first lien. And the wife being a party in the suit, and having a contingent dower interest in the remainder, the court should make a proper provision to compensate that interest out of the surplus proceeds of sale, if any, before any part of it is paid over on the second lien. Idem, 83

4. A copy of a paper is filed with the bill, and though noticed in the answer, is not objected to. It is received as evidence by the commissioner who settles the accounts, and no call is made for the original before him; but there is an exception without date endorsed upon it as being a copy. The exception either came too late, or was waived by the party. Idem, 83

5. A judicial sale of land is partly on a credit, and the purchaser pays the cash payment, and executes his bonds with security for the deferred payments; and the sale is confirmed by the court. When the bonds become due the purchaser fails to pay them. He may be proceeded against by a rule upon him to show cause why the land shall not be sold for the payment of the purchase money; and upon that proceeding a decree may be made for the sale of the land.

Clarkson v. Read & als., 288

6. In a bill by creditors to set aside a deed of trust for payment of debts, on the ground that it is fraudulent on its face, the bill does not ask for an account, but there is a prayer for general relief. Though the deed is sustained as valid, the plaintiffs are entitled to an account.

Digitized by Google

Marks & als. v. Hill & als., 400

7. On sale of infant's real estate. See Infants, No. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and
Cooper v. Hepburn & als., 551

8. When decree should provide for payment of purchase money by plaintiff. See Appellate Court, No. 6, and
Mustard v. Wohlford's heirs, 329

PRACTICE IN CRIMINAL CASES.

See Criminal Jurisdiction and Proceedings.

PRESUMPTIONS.

1. When presumptions cannot be admitted. See Customs, No. 4, and
Delaplane v. Crenshaw & Fisher, 457
Same v. Haxall, Crenshaw & Co., 457

2. How presumption of slavery from African descent may be repelled. See Suits for Freedom, No. 5, and Fulton's ex'ors v. Gracey & als., 314

PROHIBITION.

In prohibition a variance between the affidavit and declaration, not being a matter to bar the proceeding, cannot be taken advantage of by demurrer to the declaration.
Warwick & Barksdale v. Mayo, mayor, 528

PROMISSORY NOTES AND BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

1. A writing for the payment of money or other purpose which is not required to be by deed, having a scroll at the foot thereof, with the word "seal" written therein, but which is not recognized in the body of the instrument as a seal, is not a sealed instrument.
Clegg v. Lemessurier, 108

2. Evidence aliunde is not admissible to prove that a scroll at the foot of a writing was intended as a seal. Idem, 108

3. "The trustees of N and A will pay to B the sum of one thousand and eighty dollars, with interest from 15th March 1850, out of any money in his hands belonging *to me, A" is not a bill of exchange, nor does it import a valuable consideration, or a promise by the drawer to the payee to pay if the money is not paid by the drawee.
687
Averett's adm'r v. Booker, 163

4. An endorser of a negotiable note dies intestate before it falls due; and when it falls due it is regularly protested for nonpayment; and no person having then qualified as administrator on the estate of the endorser, the notary on the same day deposits in the post-office at Lynchburg, where the note had been made payable and was discounted, the notice of protest, directed to "the legal representative" of the endorser, "Lynchburg;" the endorser having lived in that place, and his family still living in the same house. The notice is sufficient.
Boyd's adm'r v. City Savings Bank, 501

PUBLIC OFFICERS.

In general it is not necessary to prove the written appointment of public officers. That one has acted as such officer and been recognized by the public as such, is sufficient evidence that he has been duly appointed until the contrary appears. And the case is still stronger where the official character has been recognized by the appointing power.
Callison v. Hedrick, 244

RAIL ROAD COMPANIES.

For the liability of rail road companies in the carriage of passengers, see Carriers, passim, and
Va. Central R. R. Co. v. Sanger, 230

RELIGIOUS CONGREGATIONS.

1. The act, Code, ch. 77, § 8, p. 362, does not authorize a devise of land for the use of a religious congregation, but only a conveyance by deed.
Seaburn's ex'or v. Seaburn & als., 423

2. A fortiori the act does not authorize a bequest of money to be expended in building a church at a specified place, or for the support of the pastor of the church.
Idem, 423

REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

See Courts.

SALES.

1. To constitute fraud in a sale, it is not sufficient that there shall be false representations by the vendor; but he must know at the time he makes them, that they are false; or at least he must make them as statements of facts within his own knowledge, when he has no knowledge on the subject.
Mason v. Chappell, 572

2. Any affirmance of the quality of the article at the time of the sale, intended as an assurance to the purchaser of the truth of the fact affirmed, and acted on by the purchaser, is an express warranty. But no affirmation, however strong, will constitute a warranty unless it was so intended.
Idem, 572

3. Where a specific article is ordered and furnished, though the purchaser states the purpose to which he intends to apply it, there is no implied warranty on the part of the vendor that it is suitable for the purpose; and he will not, in the absence of fraud or express warranty, be held liable, however unfit or defective it may turn out to be. Idem, 572

4. The mere fact that an article sold does not answer to the representations made respecting it, is not ground to assume that it was not the genuine article sold, so as to entitle the purchaser to recover for a

Digitized by Google

failure by the vendor to comply with his contract. Idem, 572

5. The mere fact that an article proves to be worthless, will not entitle the purchaser to recover back the price paid. Idem, 572

6. As to sales by infants, see Infants, No. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and
Mustard v. Wohlford's heirs, 329

7. As to sales by sample, and what constitutes a perfected contract so as to pass the title, see Contracts, No. 4, and
Haxall, Brothers & Co. v. Willis, 434

8. As to sale of infant's land, see Infants, No. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and
Cooper v. Hepburn & als., 551

SEALED INSTRUMENTS.

1. A writing for the payment of money or other purpose which is not required to be by deed, having a scroll at the foot thereof with the word "seal" written therein, but which is not recognized in the body of the instrument as a seal, is not a sealed instrument.
Clegg v. Lemessurier, 108

2. Evidence aliunde is not admissible to prove that a scroll at the foot of a writing was intended as a seal. Idem, 108

SHERIFFS.

1. The act of March 15, 1856, Sess. 688 *Acts 1855–56, ch. 8, § 2, p. 8, extending the term of the sheriff from July 1, 1856, to January 1, 1857, is constitutional.
Commonwealth v. Drewry, 1

2. The act does not embrace two subjects in the sense of the constitution, article 4, § 16. Idem, 1

3. The sheriff elected in May 1854, executed his official bond, and entered upon his office and continued to act until January 1857, but did not execute a bond under the act of March 15, 1856. His successor elected in May 1856, executed his official bond in June following, but did not enter upon his office until January 1857. If the said act was unconstitutional, still the first sheriff held over after the 1st of July under the constitution, article 6, § 23; and having collected the state taxes of 1856, his sureties in the bond of 1854 are liable for them. Idem, 1

4. On a motion against a sheriff and his sureties for his failure to pay the taxes due to the commonwealth, it is not necessary that the notice should state on what bond of the sheriff the motion will be made.
Monteith, sheriff, & als. v. The Commonwealth, 172

5. M is elected sheriff of S in May 1854, and gives bond as such. In July 1856 he gives bond under the act of March 15th, 1856, extending the time for which sheriffs should hold office, to January 1, 1857. In May 1856 he is re-elected sheriff for a regular term of two years commencing the 1st January 1857; but he does not give his official bond under that election within sixty days from his election, nor until the 12th of January 1857, when it is executed by himself and his sureties. This bond recites his election for two years from the 1st of January 1857, is acknowledged in open court, and ordered to be recorded; and M is permitted by the court to qualify as sheriff and act as such: held:

1st. If M is not sheriff de jure he is sheriff de facto, and as such is bound for his acts. Idem, 172

2d. The sureties of M in his last bond are estopped by the recitals thereof from saying M is not sheriff, and the bond is binding upon them. Idem, 172

3d. M having professed to enter upon his office and act under his last election, it cannot be held that he continued to hold over, and act under his first election, on the ground that his successor had not qualified, so as to subject his sureties in the previous bonds. Idem, 172

6. The notice to the sheriff and his sureties being of a motion for a balance of the land, property and free negro taxes of 1857, and the judgment being for a balance due upon these and also for the license tax; this is error for which the judgment will be reversed in the appellate court. Idem, 172

SLAVES AND FREE NEGROES.

1. D sells slave to H at half his value, with a condition that when H is repaid from the earnings of the slave, H shall emancipate him. When H is so repaid, D may enforce the condition against H.
Shue v. Turk, sheriff, 256

2. H having been repaid his advance, emancipates the slave: but H is then insolvent. His creditors cannot subject the emancipated slave to satisfy their debts. Idem, 256

3. The slave having been emancipated and registered as a freeman; if an execution is levied upon him by the creditors of H, he may obtain relief by habeas corpus. Idem, 256

4. A resident of Ohio being in the county of R on a visit, there acquires a slave and emancipates him. That was a sufficient residence in R to authorize the recording of the deed in the clerk's office of that county. Idem, 256

STATUTES.

1. The act of March 15, 1856, Sess. Acts 1855–56, ch. 8, § 2, p. 8, extending the term of the sheriff from July 1, 1856, to January 1, 1857, construed in
Commonwealth v. Drewry, 1

2. Article 4, § 16 of the Constitution, construed in Idem, 1

3. Article 6, § 23 of the Constitution, construed in Idem, 1

4. The act, Code, ch. 151, p. 600, § 1, 7, 9, in relation to attachments, construed in Pulliam, &c. v. Aler, 54

Digitized by Google

5. The act, Code, ch. 171, § 44, 45, p. 652, in relation to office judgments, construed in
Enders' ex'ors v. Burch, 64

6. The act, Code, ch. 177, § 21, p. 674, in relation to judgments on which executions are directed to issue, construed in
Idem, 64

7. The act, Code, ch. 127, p. 533, in relation to the appointment of guardians, construed in
Ham v. Ham, 74

8. The act, Code, ch. 119, § 2, p. 510, in relation to the mechanic's lien, construed in
Iaege, &c., v. Bossieux, 83

9. The act, Code, ch. 171, § 19, p. 689 648, *in relation to objections to the jurisdiction of the court, construed in Washington & New Orl. Tel. Co. v. Hobson & Son, 122

10. The act, Code, ch. 188, § 3, p. 717, in relation to the lien of a fi. fa. construed in
Evans, trustee, v. Greenhow & als., 153

11. The act, Code, ch. 176, § 4, p. 661, in relation to certificates of the auditor, construed in
Ushers' heirs v. Pride, 190

12. The act of 1838, Sess. Acts, p. 19, § 9, in relation to sales by commissioners of delinquent lands, construed in
Miller v. Williams & al., 213

13. The act, Code, ch. 7, § 6, p. 349, in relation to damages for land taken for public road, construed in
Callison v. Hedrick, 244

14. The act, Code, ch. 174, § 1, p. 657, Sess. Acts 1850-51, p. 34, in relation to the removal of causes from the County courts, construed in
Spengler v. Davy, 381

15. The act, Code, ch. 181, § 3, p. 680, in relation to jeofails, construed in
Idem, 381

16. The act, Code, ch. 77, § 8, p. 362, in relation to conveyances for use of religious congregation, construed in
Seaburn's ex'or v. Seaburn & als., 423

17. The act, Code, ch. 88, § 20, 36, in relation to the inspection of flour, construed in
Delaplane v. Crenshaw & Fisher, 457
Same v. Haxall, Crenshaw & Co., 457

18. The acts, 1 Rev. Code of 1819, ch. 108, § 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, p. 409; Sup. Rev. Code, ch. 104, § 2, p. 134; Code, ch. 128, § 2, 3, 4, 5, p. 535-6, in relation to the sale of infants' lands, construed in
Cooper v. Hepburn & als., 551

19. The act, Code, ch. 178, § 8, p. 676, in relation to sales under decrees, construed in Idem, 551

20. The act, Code, ch. 198, § 10, 20, p. 744, 745, in relation to betting on elections, construed in Shumate's Case, 653

STATUTES—Construction of.

1. The general terms of a statute will be restricted, to carry out the intention of the legislature.
Spengler v. Davy, 381

2. The act, Code, ch. 98, § 10, p. 744, in relation to betting on elections, to be construed as a remedial statute.
Shumate's Case, 653

SUITS FOR FREEDOM.

1. In a suit for freedom, the declarations of the testator of the defendants, made some fourteen or fifteen years before the trial, that the plaintiffs were then free, and declarations made some twenty odd years before the trial, that they would be free at the age of twenty-eight years, are competent evidence for the plaintiffs: And this though the testator had but a temporary interest in the negroes.
Fulton's ex'ors v. Gracey & als., 314

2. The plaintiffs claim their freedom as being the children of a negro woman named Nan. The registry of Nan as a free woman, and the certificate of the clerk of the county court in which Nan was registered, to the correctness of the registry, and the affidavit of the person to whom Nan had been bequeathed for the time she was to serve, by a person under whom the testator of the defendants claimed the plaintiffs, of the fact that Nan was free, which affidavit was acted on by the court, and was filed in the clerk's office when the registry of Nan was directed by the court, are competent evidence for the plaintiffs. Idem, 314

3. Quære: If a register, made and certified according to law, is not prima facie evidence of every fact therein stated, in any controversy involving the freedom of the negro registered, or of any other persons claiming freedom under such negro. It is at least evidence of the negro's freedom at the time it was made. Idem, 314

4. In a suit for freedom, the plaintiff must make out his title against all the world. The admissions of the defendant that the plaintiff is free, is evidence against the defendant, whether he ever had any interest in the plaintiff as a slave or not, or whatever such interest, if any, may have been. But it is only presumptive evidence, liable to be repelled by proof that the plaintiff is the slave of the defendant or some other person. Idem, 314

5. The presumption of law is that a person of African descent is a slave: but that presumption may be repelled by any evidence tending to show he is free. A deed by which the mother of such person is conveyed to another for a certain number of years, and then to be discharged from further service; and her children born before that time to serve till twenty-eight years, and then to be discharged from all service; though such deed not having been recorded, cannot confer freedom, yet it tends to 690 repel the presumption *of slavery, and is competent testimony.
Idem, 314

6. Entries by the testator of the defendants in a book, of the ages of the plaintiffs, made along with the ages of other slaves owned by the testator, are not competent evidence for the defendants, to show that

Digitized by Google

some of the plaintiffs who were the children of another plaintiff, were born before she attained the age of twenty-eight years, and that the children had not attained that age; even if such fact were material to be proved. Idem, 314

7. When person claiming to be free, may assert it by writ of habeas corpus. See Slaves and Free Negroes, No. 3, and Shue v. Turk, sheriff, 256

SURETIES.

1. The sureties of a sheriff estopped by the recitals in the bond, from saying he was not sheriff. See Sheriffs, No. 5, and Monteith, sheriff, & als. v. The Commonwealth, 172

2. Sureties of a sheriff, in what bond liable. See Sheriffs, No. 3, 5, and Idem, 172

Commonwealth v. Drewry, 1

TELEGRAPH COMPANIES.

1. In an action against a telegraph company for damages sustained by the plaintiffs by the alteration of a message sent on their line, whereby an order to the plaintiffs' factors in Mobile, to buy five hundred bales of cotton, was altered to twenty-five hundred, but not charging negligence in the company, an instruction that the defendants are not responsible as common carriers, but only as general agents, for such gross negligence as in law amounts to fraud, is not authorized by the pleadings; and is properly refused.
Washington & New Orl. Tel. Co. v. Hobson & Son, 122

2. In such case the factors having bought two thousand and seventy-eight bales of cotton before the mistake in the message was discovered, if the company is liable to the plaintiffs for the damages arising from the alteration of the message, the commissions of the factors upon the purchase of the cotton are a part of the damages for which the company is liable; and the plaintiffs are not bound to accept any offer of the company to pay the damages which excludes these commissions. Idem, 122

3. In such case, if the company is liable to the plaintiffs for damages arising from the alteration of the message, the measure of these damages is what was lost on the sale at Mobile, of the excess of the cotton above that ordered, or if not sold there, what would have been the loss on the sale of the cotton at Mobile in the condition and circumstances in which it was when the mistake was ascertained; including in such loss all proper costs and charges thereon. Idem, 122

4. When the mistake was ascertained a part of the cotton was on board of a ship to be sent to Liverpool, a part was under a contract of affreightment to the same place, but not on board. The whole should have been sold as it was at Mobile; and the plaintiffs having sent it to Liverpool and sold it there, the loss to the company is not to be increased by this act of the plaintiffs, but must be based upon an estimate of what it would have sold for, a part on shipboard and a part under contract of affreightment. Idem, 122

5. If the plaintiffs sent the cotton to Liverpool for purposes of speculation; with the intention of taking to themselves the profits, if any, and in the event of a loss, visiting the loss on the company, they are not entitled to recover for any loss sustained upon it. Idem, 122

6. But if the plaintiffs sent the cotton to Liverpool, not with the purpose of taking the profits, if any, but only to indemnify themselves out of the proceeds to the extent of the cost and the obligations incurred by them, they do not thereby lose their right to recover from the company the damages they would have sustained if the cotton had been sold in Mobile. Idem, 122

7. The plaintiffs, if they intended to hold the company responsible for the excess of the cotton purchased, should, as soon as they were apprised of the purchase, have notified the company of such intention; should have made a tender of such excess to the company on the condition of its paying the price and all the charges incident to the purchase; and also, that in case of its refusal to accept said tender and comply with its conditions, they would proceed to sell such excess at Mobile; and after crediting said company with the net profits, would look to it for the difference between the amount of such proceeds and the cost of the excess, including all proper charges. And upon the failure of the company, after notice, to accede to their offer, they should have proceeded accordingly. Idem, 122

691 *TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.

1. The trustee and beneficiaries in a deed to secure bona fide debts, without notice, are purchasers for valuable consideration, within the meaning of the exception in the statute, Code, ch. 188, § 3, p. 717; and will be preferred to an execution creditor of the grantor in the deed, as to a chose in action thereby conveyed.
Evans, trustee, v. Greenhow & als., 153

2. A provision in a deed of trust to secure creditors, that the trustee may continue the business and replenish the stock, if intended merely as a means of realizing the trust fund, and with a view to winding up the business, is not fraudulent per se, so as to avoid the deed.
Marks & als. v. Hill & als., 400

3. In such a case a provision in the deed that one of the grantors shall attend to the business, but he being under the control of the trustee, who may at any time on his own motion, and shall at the request of the creditors, sell the property, is not fraudulent per se, so as to avoid the deed. Idem, 400

4. In a bill by creditors to set aside a deed of trust for payment of debts, on the ground that it is fraudulent on its face, the bill does not ask for an account, but there is a prayer for general relief. Though the deed is sustained as valid, the plaintiffs are entitled to an account. Idem, 400

Digitized by Google

5. What charitable trusts void. See Charitable Trusts, passim, and

Seaburn's ex'or v. Seaburn & als., 423

6. When court of equity will sustain a deed by husband settling wife's property upon her.

Poindexter & wife v. Jeffries & als., 363

TURNPIKE ROADS.

1. The plat or map of the survey and location of a turnpike road, with the certificates thereon by the surveyor, returned to the clerk's office and recorded in pursuance of the statute, is evidence of the line of the road as located, in an action by the owner of the land against a contractor for entering thereon and injuring the land: and a partial mistaken change in the name of the road will not exclude them as evidence.

Callison v. Hedrick, 244

2. An act authorizes the construction of a road from M to L, and the road was located and the plat thereof returned to the clerk's office; and an owner of land through which the road was to pass did not apply to the County court within the year to have her damages assessed. The road was in fact made but a part of the distance, and stopped; and at the next session of the legislature a company was incorporated to construct the remainder of the road. The company is entitled to make their road upon the location made under the previous law; and the owner of the land not having applied for damages within the year from the return of the plat, is concluded from recovering them. Idem, 244

3. In such a case, if the road is changed in any part of it, from the location made, the owner of the land may recover damages for that. Idem, 244

VARIANCE.

In prohibition a variance between the affidavit and declaration, not being a matter in bar of the proceeding, cannot be taken advantage of by demurrer to the declaration.

Warwick & Barksdale v. Mayo, mayor, 528

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

1. Where a discretionary power to sell is given to executors, a purchaser from them, if he acted bona fide, will not be affected by the manner in which they exercised their discretion. And if the power is to sell for the payment of debts generally, the purchaser is not bound to see to the application of the purchase money.

Davis v. Christian & als., 11

2. To convict a purchaser of a fraudulent participation in a breach of trust by an executor having authority to sell, the evidence of notice of a fraudulent intent on the part of the executor, ought to be very strong. The purchaser has a right to presume, in the absence of all direct or plain proof to the contrary, that the executor is exercising his power fairly and faithfully in conformity to his duty. Idem, 11

3. A purchaser having constructive or actual notice of a pending suit, can only be held chargeable with knowledge of the facts of which the record in the suit, as it existed at the time of his purchase, would have informed him. If these facts inform him that the vendor is committing a fraud in making the sale, he becomes a party to the fraud. But he cannot be charged with a knowledge of facts afterwards brought into the cause. Idem, 11

4. The doctrine of lis pendens only
692 applies *where there is a suit to affect the property purchased, and can have no effect upon it unless a decree may be made in the suit to affect it, nor until such decree is made. Idem, 11

5. The trustees and beneficiaries in a deed to secure bona fide debts, without notice, are purchasers for valuable consideration within the meaning of the exception in the statute, Code, ch. 188, § 3, p. 717: and will be preferred to an execution creditor of the grantor in the deed, as to a chose in action thereby conveyed.

Evans, trustee, v. Greenhow & als., 153

6. Y sells land to M and is to convey it when the first payment is made. Before this payment falls due they make an arrangement by which M executes his bonds with Y as his surety to S, for a debt due from Y to S equal to the whole purchase money of the land; and the bonds of M are surrendered to him and destroyed. M becomes insolvent and conveys the land to secure creditors; and afterwards Y is compelled to pay the bond to S. Y not having parted with the title, may subject the land in equity to the payment of the purchase money.

Yancey v. Mauck & als., 300

7. As to sales by infants, and their avoidance thereof, and the effects of such avoidance, see Infants, No. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and

Mustard v. Wohlford's heirs, 329

VENIRE.

See Jury.

WARRANTY.

1. Any affirmance of the quality of an article at the time of its sale, intended as an assurance to the purchaser of the truth of the fact affirmed, and acted on by the purchaser, is an express warranty. But no affirmation, however strong, will constitute a warranty, unless it was so intended.

Mason v. Chappell, 572

2. Where a specific article is ordered and furnished, though the purchaser states the purpose to which he intends to apply it, there is no implied warranty on the part of

Digitized by Google

the vendor that it is suitable for the purpose; and he will not, in the absence of fraud or an express warranty, be held liable, however unfit and defective it may turn out to be. Idem, 572

WILLS.

1. In construing wills courts are not bound to give a strict and literal interpretation to the words used, and by adhering to the letter defeat the manifest object and design of the testator.
Hill & wife v. Huston's ex'or and others, 350

2. Upon a devise to a daughter for life, and at her death the property to be equally divided among her children; an illegitimate child of the daughter will take with her legitimate children.
Bennett & als. v. Toler & als., 588

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google